On Saturday, before the fourth Sunday in August, our meeting at Bell Bower opened. I did the preaching myself until the succeeding Thursday, when Rev. J. Cude Rousseaux came to my assistance and remained through Sunday. He did all the preaching after his arrival, except one very able sermon which was preached by Rev. W. H. Coleman, presiding elder of the Shreveport District. I left the Bell Bower meeting at the close of the service Friday night, leaving both Brothers Coleman and Rousseaux there, and up to that time we had received 7 members by profession of faith and 3 by letter.

Now a word about the two young men who assisted me in my last two meetings. Some of the people at Longstreet say that Young is the greatest preacher in the land, and he is indeed an excellent preacher. And some of the congregation at Bell Bower pronounced Rousseaux the finest preacher that they had ever heard, and he is unquestionably a man of unusual pulpit gifts. No preacher will make a mistake to get either of these brethren to assist him in a meeting.

On last Friday Brother Coleman, our presiding elder, preached at Bell Bower at 2 o'clock p. m., and to say that he preached a great sermon is putting it mildly. After the preaching service, our third quarterly conference was held with good reports from each church in the charge. We have a new woman's missionary society which was organized by Mrs. R. E. Bobbitt during our meeting at Longstreet. At the close of the service last Friday night, we had received 102 members during the year, and I feel sure that when I hear from the last four services at Bell Bower, the number will have grown.

I have assisted the following brethren in meetings this year, with good results and pleasant associations at each place: Rousseaux at Zolite, George at Girard, Bamberg at Downs-ville, Sloane at Harmony Chapel, and I am now with Holladay at Coushatta. Some of these meetings have already been mentioned in your columns. With best wishes to the Advocate, I am yours faithfully,

FRANCIS R. POWER.

MILLSAPS COLLEGE NOTES.

By G. L. Harrell.

The work on the new building is progressing as rapidly as could be expected in view of the recent rains and the delay in receiving materials. It will be a matter of interest to all the old students of the college to know that practically every brick of the old building went into the construction of the new one. Where they could not be used otherwise, they were crushed in a large machine and used in the concrete work of the new building.

The James Observatory has been placed in commission again and will be used regularly in connection with the work of astronomy during the next session.

We are now very near the opening of the session and the outlook for a good attendance is promising. There is no doubt, however, but that the strained financial conditions, due to the European war, will reduce the enrollment in all our institutions and we will of course be among those who suffer from that cause. As this is true, let every friend of Millsaps College rally now to the support of the institution and make an effort to induce some boy to come to Millsaps for his education.

In this connection it will be of interest to note that the alumni are taking a more active part in the way of organizing for work. The president of the Alumni Association has recently appointed a committee consisting of one member from each class to work for a closer union and greater co-operation among the alumni. It is hoped by this means to impress upon those who have attended the college the debt that they owe their Alma Mater, and to inspire them to come to a great reunion when the college celebrates its quarter centennial about three years from now.

Professor B. E. Mitchell, the new Professor of Mathematics and Surveying, is spending the few days of his vacation in Vinita, Okla.

Professor H. C. Henderson, who comes to assume the work of Professor Noble during his leave of absence, spent several days on the campus recently. He left on the morning of August 26, for Slaughter, La., where, on the 27th, he was married to Miss Elizabeth Upton, daughter of Professor and Mrs. L. L. Upton and granddaughter of the sainted Rev. T. J. Upton, for a long time a member of the Louisiana Conference. Professor and Mrs. Henderson will be at home on Millsaps Campus after September 12.

Dr. Kern is spending the latter days of the summer in the home of his father in Winchester, Va.

Drs. Watkins and Sullivan have been engaged during the entire vacation in canvassing for students. Perhaps the most extensive campaign that the college has ever made for patronage has been carried on this summer.

Dr. Swartz is now busy having the various athletic grounds put in shape, especially the tennis courts.

Judges Whitfield and Reed have been out of the city on their vacations.

Professor Lin has been doing some work at Cornell during the summer, but will be on hand at the opening to take up his additional duties as Secretary of the Faculty.

Professor Ricketts, the oldest member of the faculty in point of service but the youngest in spirit, spent a part of his vacation with relatives in Greenville, S. C. On his way home he paid a visit to the farm of his son, Edwin, near Birmingham, Ala. He reports having had a most delightful trip and is now ready to begin the work of the new session. I am sure that every student who has attended Millsaps College during the last twenty years will join in wishing a long life and health to Robert Scott Ricketts.

MATHERVILLE, MISS.

Dear Brother Meek: This is my fourth year on this charge, and thus far it has been the most satisfactory year of the quadrennium. Two nice little churches have gone up since the Annual Conference. One is at Threadville, the credit for which should largely be given to Brother Davis, as he had the enterprise already on foot when this congregation was added to my charge. It yet needs to be painted, which will be done shortly. The other Church is at Salem and has Sunday school rooms attached, and is, so far as I know, the only country church in the Meridian District that has. It has also been given two coats of paint. Besides the construction of these two churches, some repair work has been done on the parsonage.

We have held three meetings and yet have five to hold. We have been assisted by Rev. H. E. Raley, Rev. B. L. Sutherland, and Rev. J. W. Thompson. Under Raley's preaching, there were six accessions on profession of faith and the Church was greatly revived. When Brother Sutherland wrought with me, great good also was accomplished. Both of these meetings closed too soon. The third meeting lasted eight days and was a success from the first service. We usually had from 25 to 50 at the altar, and 27 persons joined the Church. On Wednesday a very fine boy, about 18 years of age, stepped up on the platform and stated to the people that he had been fighting a call to the ministry. We had him preach twice before the meeting closed, and my! how the people fell down at the altar and found the Lord! Brother Thompson left me on Thursday night. I preached Friday morning, and among those at the altar, was one of our local preachers. That night he gave a message from the pulpit and the Lord most wonderfully used him. About 40 came to the altar and were definitely blessed.

The meeting throughout was remarkable. People found the Lord before the preaching hour in the prayer services. The young preacher settled the question of his call to the ministry in the woods at home. Sometimes as many as five, ten, or fifteen persons would be shouting at once. A number of family altars were established, a prayer meeting was organized at the church, and another Sunday school was started in connection with the one that they already had. It would be hard to estimate the number of conversions, of which there were many, and quite a number of Christians were baptized anew with the Holy Spirit. For all this, we give God the praise.

FARMERVILLE, LA.

Dear Dr. Meek: I have been thinking for at least six months that I would write the Advocate, giving a few dots in regard to my work, but have just put it off from time to time, until now; so here I come.

In the first place, allow me to congratulate you upon your success in giving us such a splendid paper, which I enjoy to the fullest. When we came on the work last December from Texas we found it somewhat disorganized. The parsonage had been burned and that, too, without a dollar of insurance. Several of our most substantial members had moved away and things generally looked gloomy.

One of the first things we did was to solicit funds with which to rebuild our parsonage, an undertaking in which we succeeded beyond our fondest expectations. The people, in spite of their poverty, responded to our appeal nobly. The response came from all the people—Methodists, Baptists, Methodist Protestants and Presbyterians, as well as non-members. So we got busy and by doing a large part of the work ourselves we soon had the building finished to such an extent that we could occupy it. So we moved into it, but continued our carpentering until we have at last finished one of the nicest and most convenient parsonages in the Conference. And what is best, we only owe a little over $200 on it.

We are trying to re-organize the work as best we can and have made some progress along all lines. Three out of our four meetings have been held to date: one at D'Arbonne, one at Marion, and the other at Farmerville.

The one at Farmerville resulted in very little visible good, but at the other two there was much good accomplished. We had splendid audiences, at both the day and evening services. Five were received into the Church at D'Arbonne by baptism, and three at Marion by vows.

Rev. E. L. Cargill assisted me at Marion, and allow me to say that the preaching was excellent and that Brother Cargill carried away with him the respect, love, and esteem of all. Rev. W. T. Currie did the preaching at D'Arbonne, as has already been reported. He is splendid help.

We have received 19 members up to date, 10 by letter and 9 by vows, and have organized one woman's missionary society with 22 members. Our finances are short owing to two reasons, viz: our membership is largely made up of women and children, and we have had to call upon them so heavily for funds for the parsonage and its furnishings.

Upon the whole, we expect to make a good report at Conference and we ask the united prayers of the readers of the Advocate in our behalf. Allow me to say in conclusion that we serve an excellent people.

Your Brother in Christ,
A. J. COBURN.

THE MISSIONARY SOCIETY OF CAPITOL STREET CHURCH- JACKSON, MISS.

We want the readers of the Christian Advocate to know something of the splendid work that is being done by the Missionary Society of Capitol Street Church, Jackson, Miss.

With a membership of 165 and a corps of efficient officers we hope to accomplish great things in our Master's service. We hold a meeting every Monday afternoon and these meetings are always an inspiration for better work. The first Monday is given over to business. The program for the second Monday is taken from the Missionary Voice. The Mission Study Class meets the third Monday. We have just completed our study of "Mexico Today" and have taken up Bible study for the remainder of the year, beginning with the Book of John. Our Third Vice President has charge of this work. We have a social meeting every fourth Monday and a free-will offering is always made. Our social meetings are well attended as we extend an invitation to all the ladies of the church, a number of whom, we are sorry to say, are still not members of the missionary society. We hold all our meetings in the church parlor. When the occasional fifth Monday comes around we meet with the City Federation of Missionary Societies.

At the last business meeting our Home Treasurer's report showed that $386.55 had been spent and reported to the Conference treasurer for the first and second quarters; $87 had been sent to the Conference treasurer for the Foreign Department for these two quarters. Our Home and Foreign pledges are raised by taking $1 per member out of the treasury of each department. These pledges are increased by special pledges from the membership. We still support our Bible woman in Korea.

Our local work, in charge of the efficient Fourth Vice President, with the assistance of a number of capable committees, is progressing splendidly. A good portion of the funds for the local work is raised by free-will offerings. Aside from meeting our many other obligations, we contribute monthly $5 each to the Methodist Orphanage and the Travelers' Aid and Benevolence Society.

I desire to make special mention of the beautiful work that is being done by our First and Second Vice Presidents. The Junior Division, the "King's Jewels," was organized about two years ago under the leadership of the First Vice President, Miss Alma Marshall. They have now an enrollment of 90, and are an enthusiastic band of little workers. Their dues are 5 cents per month, and they have pledged $15 for the year. They hold two meetings each month; at one of them using the regular program in The Young Christian Worker, the other is a story hour, which has proved to be very beneficial and pleasing to the children. At the close of each quarter they have a social combined with a mite box opening. They heartily enjoy these social meetings and make a liberal offering. This brings the little ones together in a social way; it also teaches them early in life the joys of systematic giving.

Our Young People's Missionary Society is under the management of our Second Vice President, Miss Marian Marshall, and is doing a splendid and far reaching work. Our girls of to-day are our women of to-morrow. They have a membership of 30, and have a good attendance. The society holds two meetings each month: one a business meeting, and at the other they carry out a program from The Voice, which they vary, always making them inspiring and uplifting. They have the boys as honorary members, and this of course adds in interest. They make a free-will offering on their pledge at the social meetings, which are held every three months. They have remitted the Conference treasurer for two quarters $15 as the regular amount, and $11 besides on their pledge.

This is quite an important part of our work and is calling for prayers and special attention from the Conference and local auxiliaries. May the good women put forth every effort toward doing their part in making this great and beautiful work what our Master would have it.

MRS. JOE FORD, Pub. Supt.

A NEW RECORDING SECRETARY.

It is with sincere regret that we learn that Mrs. T. M. Clark, the newly elected Recording Secretary for the North Mississippi Conference, has been forced to resign for personal reasons. We shall miss her wise counsel and efficient service. We truly hope that the time will soon come when she can see her way to accept service again on our executive board. We welcome to our body the new secretary, Mrs. M. C. Guerry, of Artesia, and trust that our association will be mutually pleasant.—North Mississippi Bulletin.

HOME DEPARTMENT.

Mrs. Ross's report for the second quarter of our present fiscal year shows the collections as follows:

From Conference Societies, $26,742.95
From other sources, 5,203.40

This report shows a shortage of $5,552.47 when compared with the report of the same quarter of 1913. This would be distressing did we not note that two conferences failed to get in their reports at all and that we had a gift of $5000 through a legacy last year.

But, looking back, we find that there has been a gradual loss from the Conference collections since 1911. What does it mean? Read these figures:

	Collections by Conferences	Other Sources	Total
1911.	$35,726.50	$ 3,695.33	$39,421.83
1912.	26,168.96	741.84	26,910.80
1913.	27,191.55	10,307.27	37,498.82
1914.	26,742.95	5,203.40	31,946.35

The cost of the work has increased as every department has grown, and, in addition, we have assumed the support of Holding Institute, which calls for an appropriation of $10,000 annually. We beg auxiliaries to bring the fact of this growing deficit before the September meeting and use it to create larger effort for members and money.—Missionary Bulletin.

WHAT THE AUXILIARY MISSION- ARY SOCIETY HAS DONE FOR ME.

In getting up material for the "Woman's Edition of the New Orleans Advocate, we received more than could be found space for. Below is a communication sent us by Mrs. S. M. Thames, who says:

"The following expresses so fully my own experiences since I first entered my name as a member more than 10 years ago, and no doubt there are many others to whom this same pleasure has been accorded, as month after month they have met to be with one accord with Christ, our Leader, and with each other, so I decided to pass it on for the encouragement and inspiration of the many who feel indifferent about attending the meetings and say I will pay my dues and stay at home."

"It means an afternoon out, a pleasant walk in the open air and bright sunshine, which is so cheering and invigorating to the tired housewife. It means a chance from the busy routine of household duties and cares to a social hour, a friendly handshake, a hearty exchange of thoughts in conversation for mutual benefit, drawing me nearer to my sisters in Christ, uniting us as one family, and lastly bringing me in closer touch with my dear Savior and his blessed work."

"It means that I make one more at the meeting, and my presence cheers, strengthens and inspires others to be present; also that I am encouraged and inspired by them to lend a helping hand in the work. It means that I step out of self for a while, at least, and think of others and what I can do to brighten their lives, or bring them to a saving knowledge of the "One altogether lovely." It means that I have never yet attended a meeting and returned to my home feeling sorry that I went, but always have felt that I have passed an oasis in the desert, or stopped for a draught from a wayside spring, and having been refreshed, went on my way rejoicing."

"It means that the auxiliary is the channel through which my bark sails out to home and foreign lands laden with my efforts, my money and my prayers, which I trust will aid in brightening dark lives, relieving the suffering, raising the fallen, and reaching the perishing through the gospel of Christ Jesus, our Lord."

"May the local auxiliary be a growing power for the advancement of Christ's Kingdom."

"E. F. W. CRANSTON, R. I."

THE BLUFF CREEK (LA.) CAMP MEETING.

Dear Mr. Editor: I am just back from the Bluff Creek Camp Meeting which began on the night of August 28 and closed on Sunday night, September 6.

Bluff Creek camp ground is situated in East Feliciana Parish, about twelve miles south-east of Clinton, La. The beginning of the campaign was not auspicious. The people were discouraged and the attendance on the services was small. Only a few campers were on hand at the start, but, as the work progressed, the situation changed, and in a few days great throngs of earnest folks were attending the services and the interest rapidly increased until a great meeting was in full blast.

Some of those who have attended every camp meeting held on that sacred spot since the camp meeting was originated twenty-four years ago, pronounce the one just closed "one of the best, if not the best, ever held here." There were present several of the preachers of that section, some of whom remained with us throughout the campaign, and all of whom took more or less part in the work.

The meeting was characterized by a good, healthy spiritual atmosphere. Special emphasis was placed on experimental Christianity and Church loyalty, and it was freely predicted that the services would result in much more satisfactory work among the churches affected by the camp meeting than has been realized heretofore.

Special attention was directed to the matter of the dedication of the children to God in holy baptism and quite a large number of them were thus dedicated. The New Orleans

Christian Advocate came in for its share of attention, as is evidenced by the good list of subscribers enclosed herewith. Many persons were received into the Church—all on profession of faith.

A spirit of deep conviction was prevalent and a multitude professed to have been converted, and there was much rejoicing among the saints of God.

Brother Roberts, the pastor of the East Feliciana charge, was present throughout the camp meeting, and as an expression of their appreciation of him and his labors, the people gave him a handsome silver offering the last night of the meeting. Brothers Craig and Lipscomb were also present during the whole of the campaign and rendered faithful and efficient aid. They are both held in high esteem in those regions.

Brother H. G. Roberts, of Crenshaw, Miss., a member of the North Mississippi Conference, was a most welcome visitor at the camp, and by special invitation preached several strong sermons, much to the delight of his many friends there.

After a day or two of rest, I will go to Silver City, Miss., for a meeting with Brother R. F. Witt.

With love for all the readers of the Advocate, I am, Yours sincerely,

THOS. J. NORSWORTHY.

Yazoo City, Miss., Sept. 8.

EXCHANGE YOUR OLD BODY FOR A NEW ONE.

You can do it in three weeks and thereby regain your health. This article is written by a physician who has seen it demonstrated in numerous cases and explains how it is done.

Listen: If your weight is one hundred and thirty-three pounds your body contains eighty pounds of water, for, according to standard medical books, the human body contains sixty-seven and one-half per cent of water. Now disease is invariably caused by impurities which we call poison, and these are readily dissolved by the right kind of natural mineral water. Drink ten gallons (eighty pounds) of Shiver Mineral Water (use no other water for twenty-one days), and you will have exchanged your old body for a new one, so far as the soluble part of it is concerned. The impurities will be dissolved and pass away. If you suffer with dyspepsia, indigestion, rheumatism, gall stones, kidney or liver disease, uric acid poisoning, or other conditions due to impure blood, accept Mr. Shivar's liberal offer which appears below. Read the following letter carefully; then sign and mail it: Shivar Spring.

Box 17G, Shelton, S. C.

Gentlemen:

I accept your guarantee offer and enclose herewith two dollars for ten gallons of Shivar Mineral Water. I agree to give it a fair trial, in accordance with instructions contained in booklet you will send, and if the results are not satisfactory to me you agree to refund the price in full upon receipt of the two empty demijohns which I agree to return promptly.

Sunday School

LOUISIANA NOTES.

By Wilmer Williams.

There is some talk of attempting to hold an institute in the Alexandria District and more thoroughly organizing it.

Prof. Honeycutt, who has been Superintendent of the Rayville school, spent a few days in Alexandria and told one of the schools here how Rayville is measuring up to the standard. He said you could hardly walk down the street without some one inviting you to Sunday school. His school has nine classes, an attendance of nearly 100, and seems to be carrying out all requirements.

Quite a large number of the small schools have ordered the Graded Course of Lessons to begin the first Sunday in October. Of course, most of the city schools already use them. Now, Brother Superintendent, what are you going to do when these lessons arrive? Are you going to take them home and give them a few nights' study, beginning with the Beginners' Teacher's Text Book and read carefully through all that entitled "FOREWORD" until you thoroughly understand the system, and then do the same with the Primary Teacher's book and the Junior's, so that you will really be able to superintend the teaching of your school? or will you do as I saw one do: Give them a casual glance more through curiosity seemingly and then pass them out to the teachers, and when a new teacher comes to you a few Sundays hence and asks something, tell her you don't know; that you have not been using them long, and are not familiar with them, and she says she doesn't know either and would rather not undertake the work? If you pursue the latter course, you will likely soon find yourself short of teachers and decide to order the old lessons next time. Then you will ask, "What are the advantages of the Graded Lessons?" and remark, "The teachers say they are too hard and require too much preparation."

This is absolutely untrue; just the reverse is the case. Each lesson has been prepared for the teacher—a little sermonette in a sense. All that one has to do is to read carefully through it and give it a little study, with the privilege, of course, of adapting it to one's own special needs. Most teachers have no reference library, and many have very poor reference Bibles. Or even if one had these helps, much time would be required to search out what was needed. The text writer had all these advantages and has done the work for the teacher.

With the uniform lessons, there was nothing for the teacher except a little in the Sunday School Magazine, and many never used that. Then you say there is nothing for the beginners and primaries, but a little story paper. That is just it. Did you ever consider the difference between teaching a lesson and hearing one? In the Elementary Department there must be more teaching than reciting. In the older classes the other rule may apply. Formerly a child carried home a little card or paper for next Sunday's lesson with half a dozen questions on it and a verse or paragraph; mamma asked the questions, a few were understood, and the child ran out to play, thinking no more about it till next Sunday, when the teacher asked the questions and finished in five or ten minutes, and then sat and talked about whatever she chose until school was dismissed, the children becoming very restless. On the other hand, in the graded course, the lesson is taught by the story method. All like a story, and if properly told, a strong impression is made and it leaves something to think about. The same paper is taken home and the child asks mamma or someone to retell the story or read it again.

But if you absolutely cannot find time yourself, Brother Superintendent, I suggest that you appoint some one who has time and is studiously inclined to acquaint himself with the whole course so that he will be able to assist the teachers.

I have never seen a school yet where the Graded lessons were properly used that did not largely increase in attendance and interest.

NEWS AND NOTES.

By Miss Elizabeth Kilpatrick.

Here are some interesting activities planned by classes of "Older Girls" for their winter's work. One class has organized a large class of smaller girls in a home close by and will teach them at Sunday school and give pleasantly planned picnics and other out-of-door joys. Quite a number of such classes have enjoyed well planned camps together, where they have done Bible study, renewed their personal consecration, and planned an entire year's social service and "play" activities.

Another young teacher states that organizing has done wonders for her class and they have three goals for the winter: First, to have 25 working members by Christmas; second, to do something specially needed for Dr. Mumpower at our new mission station in Africa—Dr. Pinson will decide that for them; third, to be the pastor's right hand, not only in the church, but in aiding the community. They have already emphasized to the janitor the need of a sure enough clean church, and the pastor and the pew are smiling at the immediate and visible results. They have put new racks on the pews for literature and envelopes for collecting moneys, and their efforts have inspired the boys' class to put in new hymn books. The teacher naively remarked, "We never have had a quiet, restful, worshipful atmosphere in our church and we are quite determined to bring it about; and thus they will add to their budding young womanhood a graciousness and winsomeness we need to emphasize in our teaching for girls. All the girls' classes in a town or city or circuit should form a girls' council, in which they can meet three or four times a year and discuss plans, problems, and forward movements for the betterment of girl life.

Of course, every class and every school is preparing for Rally Day—one of the most helpful "special" days in our calendar of many good days. Our people have so much cause to be thankful on this day. This first September day should bring to the minds of the officers of every Adult Bible class the purpose to win back all the sheep who during the summer days have been lured away from the fold.

NORTH MISSISSIPPI NOTES.

By Rev. V. C. Curtis.

Miss Wygul, District Secretary of the Aberdeen District, has submitted to an operation for appendicitis, but is improving rapidly. During her illness Miss Horn, of the Holly Springs District, kindly consented to take her place.

We had a good day at Pittsboro, on the Calhoun City charge. The different phases of the work were presented, and a Teacher-training class, Cradle Roll and Home Department were organized. Brother Gault, the pastor, expressed great interest in the work.

We spent two days at the South Union camp meeting, which is held under the auspices of the Chester and Ackerman charges. Brother Smylie was the leading preacher, but they gave the Sunday school secretary time to present his work. A large audience had the patience to listen to him and his assistant for more than two hours. Plans were laid to organize the several departments in the Sunday schools that were represented.

Brother E. H. Rook and his workers had well advertised our coming at McCondy, on the Buena Vista

School of Theology of Our New University

ATLANTA, GEORGIA.

This school, established by order of the last General Conference, and owned and controlled by the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, will open its doors for students on September 23, 1914. Full courses leading to the degree of B. D., and special courses, leading to a Certificate in Theology, will be offered.

A faculty composed of men of accurate scholarship, evangelical spirit, and proved efficiency and power as preachers, has been organized.

Every facility will be provided for the adequate instruction of the young ministers of the Church. Scholarships are now available for worthy men who need such assistance; and the Bureau of Self-Help will be at the service of students desiring to pay part of their expenses by outside work.

charge. A very interesting program had been prepared and was well rendered. Two full days were well spent there. Notwithstanding the rain, the people came in large numbers to the night service. We had the pleasure of having Brother J. W. Bell, the presiding elder, with us here and at the next place. Brother A. A. Martin added interest to the occasion, preaching a strong sermon on the second evening of the meeting.

Our next point was Boone's Chapel, on the Okaloosa Circuit. It was the time also for the third quarterly conference. The meetings came at the same time by previous arrangement. They had no Sunday school at this place, but on Sunday morning we planned the organization of one, with 82 members. Brother Gean, the pastor, seems to be enthusiastic as to the future of the school. Brother Bell rendered us valuable assistance at each point. We are always delighted to have the presiding elders make the itineraries with us.

TO THE PASTORS AND OFFICIALS OF THE ALEXANDRIA DISTRICT.

Dear Brethren: I am very anxious to aid you to the extent of my ability during the fourth round. Will you kindly announce your quarterly conferences repeatedly and secure the best attendance possible, and when I am with you on the Lord's day, arrange your matters to the end that I may present the claims of one or more of your benevolent collections? And as you have been greatly blessed with revivals and an increase in your membership, see that your people abound also in the grace of liberality. To the official boards, a word of exhortation I would speak. My brethren beloved, the Church in her efforts to save the world is very dependent upon you for aid and co-operation and generous contributions just now. Will you not for His sake and for the enrichment of your own life and future good, put forth your best efforts to make the EVERY-MEMBER CAMPAIGN a glorious success? I am persuaded that both our pastors and officials will take heed to these words and apply themselves with diligence to these things of common interest. Yours in the work,

H. W. MAY.

PASTOR'S SON RELIEVED FROM EPILEPSY.

Epilepsy has long been a bugaboo among American mothers.

There are two forms of this disease, one which is accompanied by unconsciousness and falling fits, and the other where the spasm is so fleeting that it is hardly recognizable. Both of these forms will yield to persistent treatment with Dr. Miles' Nerveine.

The Rev. J. A. Schuler of Severy, Kan., had a little boy who suffered from epilepsy. After three years of fruitless treatment it was decided to give Dr. Miles' Nerveine a fair trial and the result was this letter:

"I want to thank you for the inestimable benefit Dr. Miles' Nerveine has been to my son who was afflicted with epilepsy. He had suffered for three years prior to taking treatment with this remedy. He has never had an attack since the first dose he took of Dr. Miles' Nerveine. He has so improved in general appearance and looks that you would not know he was the same boy. The medicine is everything that it is claimed to be. We had tried everything else we could think of but failed to benefit my son until we used Dr. Miles' Nerveine."

Parents who have children who suffer from epilepsy, St. Vitus' Dance and other like ailments should avail themselves of this remedy which has been successful before the public for the past thirty years.

If the first bottle does not prove the remedy up to your expectation your druggist will refund your money. MILES MEDICAL CO., Elkhart, Ind.

POLITENESS

Dear Doctor Mack: It has been a good while since I have written anything to you. As I hear from you every week, I suppose that I ought to write to you once in a while. There is one thing that I wanted to write a little to you about and ask you a question about it. This is politeness.

I know a young man who went to occupy a very responsible position with a large corporation before he was thirty years old. He was always a polite fellow. You never saw a man who could beat him smiling and being agreeable. He is just naturally polite. While he knows his business thoroughly, I have always had a kind of feeling that he came to hold the position that he now has just because he was so polite. I know one thing: he certainly has made no mistake by cultivating such a habit, or disposition. If it has gotten to be that.

Did you ever go into a store where there was a gruff, gruff fellow who seemed to be out of sorts with the whole world who came to wait on you? Or did you ever go to a place where all the clerks just walked all over you and did not seem to see you or to care whether they sold you anything or not? How did you feel when you went out of that place? I suppose that you felt like I have felt when I have gone into such places. I have felt just like I would never go back to that place for anything again even if I had to do without it. Then I suppose that you have gone into a place where they just stood in your way when you came in. They were as courteous as could be. You have felt that they certainly did treat you finely there and that you were going back there again the next time you wanted anything in their line. I have had just such experiences. You know, I always did think that politeness went along way. It is a good thing to have, anyhow. Don't you think so, Doctor? I do.

I have often thought about that parable of our Lord when he told about the fellow going to the wedding feast when he did not have on the right kind of clothes. I always did think that fellow did not have any politeness about him. What do you think about it, Doctor? He just simply did not have the common ordinary politeness about him to put on the kind of clothes that everybody knew that he was expected to wear to a wedding. That got next to the old king. He was not going to have anybody at that feast who showed such discourtesy to him and to his guests; so he just bundled him right out and would not let him enjoy the good things at the feast and have a good time with the other people. A little politeness would have gone a long way with that fellow. It would have kept him from being humiliated and would have kept him at the feast, too. Most people are too polite for that in our day. Nobody would think about going to an ultra-fashionable affair with soiled linen and without being dressed in the kind of clothes that custom and good taste say that he ought to wear. Proper politeness and respect for the feelings and opinions of others goes a good long way in this world. Don't you think so, Doctor? I do.

But there is one thing about this that I cannot understand and I would like for you to help me out if you can. I have seen people who were just as polite as could be. They have seemed to be the very personification of courtesy itself. They have been members of the Church. Then, though they were always so careful not to wound the feelings of other people and do just the things that common politeness said they ought to do, I have seen those very people pay no attention to the rules and regulations of their Church at all. They were very careful about the rules of polite society, but did not care anything about the rules of the Church. Can you tell me why that is, Doctor?

Then I have seen those same people break the laws and rules of God just like they were nothing. They desecrate the Sabbath; they love the world; they follow the lusts of the flesh and there are some of them that will lie; they commit all kinds of sins. They have been invited into the Kingdom of God. If a preacher asks them whether they are Christians they will say, "Yes." Then if the preacher tells them anything about these things that are so impolite toward God, they get mad. They will forget their politeness again. Why do you suppose people are so polite with each other and then just forget all about their manners when they come to have anything to do with God?

I have been thinking about this a good deal and just believe that the reason for it is that these people think that they are going to get into the wedding feast of the Son of the Great King without putting on the wedding garment that he says for them to put on. That is what I think about it. What do you think about it, Doctor? Do you suppose that they are going to get put out of that feast? I have always thought so. I wish that they would be as polite with God as they are with each other.

It is a puzzle to me how some people are so polite with other people and then are so impolite with God. Then these people expect to enjoy all that God has made ready for those who are polite and respectful toward him in everything. Can you tell me why people seem to think that politeness pays in dealings with men, but does not pay in dealing with God? You know a lot and I know that you can give me a reason for this. I just suppose that it is because they have not been born again like Jesus said they ought to be. What do you think about it, Doctor? Your ever faithful

WILLIAM.

WHAT MAKES A NATION GREAT?

Not serried ranks with flags unfurled,
Not armored ships that gird the world,
Not hoarded wealth, nor busy mills,
Not cattle on a thousand hills,
Not sages wise, nor schools, nor laws,
Not boasted deeds in freedom's cause—
All these may be, and yet the State
In the eye of God he far from great.
That land is great which knows the Lord,
Where songs are guided by his Word,
Where justice rules 'twixt man and man,
Where love controls in act and plan,
Where breathing in his native air
Each soul finds joy in praise and prayer—
Thus may our country, good and great,
Be God's delight—man's best estate.

—Alexander Blackburn.

SEEKING TO MITIGATE ITS HORRORS.

The Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in the United States is striving to lessen the cruelties of the terrible strife now raging in Europe. To this end, an appeal has been sent to the Free Church Council of Great Britain, the Protestant Churches of Scotland and Ireland, the Established Church of England, the Evangelical Lutheran Churches of Germany, the Evangelical Churches of France, the Greek Catholics of Russia, Greece, and the Balkan States, and the Roman Catholic Church, requesting that, through church services and the religious press, all Christian families having kindred in the various armies be urged to write them personal letters exhorting them, whatever may be the provocations of the enemy, to reduce in every possible way the horrors of war. Copies of this appeal have also been sent to the American Ambassadors to all the countries involved in the present conflict. This impresses us as a wise and timely movement, which may possibly exercise a far-reaching influence for good. At any rate, those projecting it deserve commendation for seeking to extend the restraining hand of Christianity to the crimsoned fields where passion and violence work appalling wreck and ruin.

DR. F. B. MEYER ON THE THEATER.

There are not a few church members who insist that there is not only no harm in attending the theater, but that there is real profit in it. Among the eminent Christian ministers of this day none is more noted for his saintliness than Dr. F. B. Meyer, of London, and perhaps none has had a wider opportunity for observation. Therefore, his opinion as to the spiritual helpfulness or harmfulness of any practice ought to carry considerable weight. In a sermon at the recent Bible Conference at Winona Lake, Indiana, Dr. Meyer said:

"I have never gone to the theater, except when I have been invited to go and pronounce upon the character of some unclean play being put upon the stage. In such instances I have gone, and in co-operation with the papers, have been able to stop the further presentation of the objectionable plays! I don't see how Christians can listen to the dialogues and witness the scenes in the average theater, any more than I can imagine the returned prodigal son asking for a dish of swine husks to eat while he was having his dinner on the fatted calf. If I find a child fighting with a dog for a bone I wonder if the child has been well fed, and so I wonder if Christians are fed with the right kind of spiritual food when I see them running after the theater."

ESTOPPED BY THEIR OWN ACTION.

Apropos of the report that certain gentlemen in the employment of the Vanderbilt Board of Trust will come to the eight original patronizing Annual Conferences and undertake to induce them to enter into some sort of relation with the Biblical Department of the University, it may not be amiss to call attention to the fact that such a course of procedure has been rendered impossible by the Vanderbilt Trustees, unless they shall meet and rescind the action taken at their meeting last June. Why do we make this affirmation? Because in an editorial published in the Vanderbilt University Quarterly (April-June, 1914) which obviously was written by Chancellor Kirkland, who undeniably completely dominates the Board of Trust, the power of the General Conference to transfer its rights in the University back to the Annual Conferences, without the consent of the Vanderbilt Trustees, is explicitly denied. And, furthermore, the Board at its June meeting, instead of giving its consent to the proposed transfer, formally and officially declared that the General Conference no longer had any rights in the institution, but had completely forfeited them. Now, what is forfeited is lost and cannot be transferred; so, according to the official declaration of the Vanderbilt Board of Trust, the Annual Conferences have no legal right whatever to act in the matter. Hence, if any representative of the Board of Trust, either authorized or unauthorized, should come to these Conferences, they should first be asked to show that the Vanderbilt Trustees concede that the rights lately held by the General Conference have been validly transferred to them, thereby giving them the acknowledged power to enter into negotiations with them. Until this is done in an OFFICIAL AND AUTHORITATIVE MANNER, manifestly there is no legitimate basis upon which any Annual Conference can negotiate with the Vanderbilt Board of Trust or those acting for it. Such is the barrier which these gentlemen have erected in their own way, and such is the only method by which they can remove it.

BROTHER RAMSEY'S APPEAL.

Rev. J. W. Ramsey's brief article, entitled "An Appeal to Methodist Ladies," which appeared in the Advocate of last week, in our opinion, directs attention to an important matter and ought to meet with a prompt and general response. The announcement of the Ladies' Home Journal that it will begin in its October number to conduct a series of dancing lessons, is a straw that shows which way the wind is blowing. Nor is it the only periodical published for women that is evincing a disposition to pander to the dancing craze. The Woman's Home Companion is also undertaking to instruct its readers in the Terpsichorean art, and The Delineator has lately given editorial endorsement to the tango and other new dances.

We look upon the course of these journals as one of the results of the Churches' having ceased to antagonize vigorously this vicious and hurtful form of amusement. The same tendency that these periodicals are exhibiting is manifest in our schools and colleges. We could name institutions on whose campus even an occasional ball was not allowed a few years ago, where dancing is now permitted to be taught the students. As we see it, the general trend is in the wrong direction, and it is high time that we were doing something to counteract it. Therefore, we heartily second Brother Ramsey's suggestion requesting the Christian women of Southern Methodism to write the Ladies' Home Journal on this subject, and we hope that they will also include the other publications that we have mentioned.

As has been said, the coming of this class of periodicals containing such matter into the hands of our girls and young ladies is certain to exercise a wide-reaching influence for harm. So, it seems to us that, by every token, our pastors and the spiritual people in our churches ought to begin anew to bear faithful and open witness to the hurtful effects of the dances that bring persons of the opposite sexes into improper contact with one another, and kindly but firmly to antagonize them everywhere and at all times. Should they not do this, in our judgment, we may expect society in America to become more and more like that of decadent France in looseness and sensuality.

AN IMPORTANT MEETING.

Let it be noted that the meeting of the Louisiana Conference Board of Education has been changed from Sept. 30 to Oct. 6, the place of the meeting remaining the same—the First Methodist Church of Alexandria. This conference is one of great importance, and it is earnestly hoped that every member of the Board will be present and also that many of the friends of Centenary and Mansfield Colleges will attend. The truth is, the time has come when we can stand still no longer in our educational work in Louisiana, and when we must go forward. It is absolutely essential that Centenary College, in which the hopes of Louisiana Methodism are so largely centered, shall be strengthened in its resources and equipment without further delay. To consider ways and means of doing this is the object of the announced meeting in Alexandria. This is the most urgently needed work now before our people in this State, and they should at once begin to concentrate their minds and hearts and hands upon it.

OUR SILENCES

What silence we keep year after year
While those who are most dear to us and dear
We live beside each other day by day
And speak of things which never seem to say
The full sweet word that has within our reach Beneath the common ground of common speech

That out of sight and out of reach they are These dear familiar friends that loved us so
And, hidden in the shadows they have left Alone with loneliness and sure bereft
We think with vain regret of some kind word
That once we might have said and they have heard

A CHARGE TO YOUNG MINISTERS

By Rev. Samuel F. Collier, ex-President of the British Wesleyan Conference.

Dangers in the Path.

(1) The power of Paul's triumph also lay in the knowledge of the peculiar temptations and difficulties of the ministerial life.

The Pastoral Epistles abound in warnings and exhortations, revealing the Apostle's mind. He would not have Timothy and Titus become casuists. To be forewarned is to be forearmed. All vocations have their peculiar perils. No vocation is better with more subtle temptations than the ministry—temptations of the study, pulpit, home, social life. We need to be on our guard lest we become zombies in the service of God. It has been said there is no ministry where it is so easy to be sure of a place and yet lose one's own soul as in the Methodist ministry.

Let me remind you of some dangers in our path. It is well for us to remember that familiarity with sacred things may prove our undoing. The holiest may become the commonplace—the form may be retained without the fervor—we may become the victim of professionalism, and lose the spirit and passion, the reality and certainty, the purpose and power that ought to distinguish our work. The Bible may become a museum of texts. Holy Communion may even be formal. We may talk theoretically about religious experiences when we have ceased to enjoy them ourselves. We may deceive ourselves into thinking we possess what we so often talk about: exhort to pray, and pray little ourselves; plead for the study of God's Word, and make little use of it devotionally; persuade to service and to witness, while we are lazy and indifferent in our own life. Beware of losing the sense of reality in your ministry. "Stir up, kindle into a flame" the gift within you. Let the fire blaze so that your soul glories in every duty. Watch and pray daily against the spirit of formalism.

The Self-Centred Man.

Beware of a self-centred life. Many things combine to make a minister self-centred. The publicity of his life, the fact that so much of the life of the Church centers in and around him is not without peril. If he is popular the kindness of the people, their expressions of affection, their deference to him, will increase the temptation. If he is not popular, criticism, depreciation, opposition may make him self-conscious to his peril.

The self-centred man develops pride, imperiousness, arrogance. He is apt to become masterful, self-opinionated, resentful of criticism, and tactless and impatient with others. Such men assert their authority rather than make themselves worthy of respect and obedience. They cannot do anything with their people, they say. They are not of the sort. Let me remind you that Jesus Christ came into this world not to be ministered unto, but to minister. The self-centred life wants not to minister, but to be ministered unto. The self-centred man is a man to be despised. He plays for his own hand, and is often disloyal to his colleagues. He is apt to live as if the Church was made for him, and not he for the Church. He loves the limelight and despises the quiet yet vitally important paths of service, such as pastoral visitation. God save you from becoming self-centred men. Live the unselfish life.

Keep your original sympathies fresh. Interest yourselves in all that concerns the welfare of the people. God has no use for men who have lost interest in redeemed humanity.

Another peril may be found in the devastating influence of organization. Our Church is a great organization. It cannot be organized too well. It may be badly organized. Do not let machinery get the better of inspiration, or you will become a mere lackey. Keep the true purpose of the organization always before you. See to it that the Church and the associates of the Church are not an end in themselves, but always a means to an end. Let the spirit of aggressive evangelism permeate the whole. Remember Wesley's words: "Your business is not to care for this or that Society, but to save as many souls as you can." Let nothing short of this satisfy you. Keep this passion alive. To invite to service, to gather an audience, to increase a membership, is only satisfactory as men and women are led to Christ himself. Make all organized effort tend to this end: the salvation of the people. That does not mean that you must be seeking to evangelize the outside and forget your own Church. Only as you prove that you can bring about this will you be likely to impress the world today.

Social Temptations.

Now let me say a word to you to beware of the peculiar temptations of social life. The open door into the homes of our members, the friendly terms on which we may be, the enjoyment of recreation with them, the generous kindness of the laity, all mean peril to us. If we are not careful to remember that we are first the minister, then the friend. We may be both, but we must, for our work's sake, make up our mind that nothing in the relationship shall hinder our life's purpose "by all means to save some." You may put yourself under such obligation that your independence is gone, and your mouth is muzzled. Your association with their recreations may smother all spiritual fellowship. You will come to speak the language of the world. You may so give yourself over to accepting invitations for this or that in the social life of the people that if you do not keep your own purpose always to the front you will come to tolerate doubtful things.

My friend Dr. Morgan tells of a minister who had in his congregation a business man with whom he was very intimate. He was a member of the congregation, but not of the Church, and had not professed any personal relationship with Christ. After three years' fellowship the minister became anxious about his friend, and determined to speak to him. For this purpose he called at his office in the city, and asked for an interview. There he so stammered in his effort that the business man said, "Well, what do you want? What's the matter?" "I am anxious about you," was the reply. "We have been close friends, and you have been very kind to me, but I have never spoken to you definitely as to your relationship with Christ. I came to ask you if you have really given yourself to Christ?" "Why have you not said that before? I have been waiting three years for you to speak to me," said the man of affairs; and then he added: "Take my advice. Always define your spiritual relationship to your people before you enter into social relationship with them." Was there ever better advice given? It is easy to accept such a relationship that you dare not and cannot speak a spiritual word to them. Let your people think of you first as the "called of God" to minister to their spiritual life. Forbid that they should smile at the idea of your exhorting them to earnest life, or marvel if you sought to pray in their home. Define your spiritual relationship with all before entering into social relationships with them.

Self-Discipline.

3. Paul's Remedy of Self-discipline is ours.

There are other temptations that will occur to us—they are peculiar to us as individuals, but Paul's remedy is: "I buffet my body," etc. The trained athlete is in his mind. They do it for a corruptible crown, but we for an incorruptible (1 Cor. 1x. 25). He writes to Timothy, for

Timothy needed a tonic. He counseled him to "take heed" to himself and his doctrine. He was to take heed to both, but especially to himself. There is a temptation to take the easy road, to become lethargic and easygoing and lax. The advice to spare yourselves is of the devil. No preparation can be too severe for a work of this kind. The Christian manhood in you will give effect to your appeal.

No preparation can be too severe for a calling so high. It is the man behind the gun that counts. The man counts nowhere more than in the work of the ministry. Character influences every tone and action. Christian manhood gives effect to your appeal. "What you are, speaks so loud," says Emerson, "that I cannot hear what you say."

Brothers, you are separated for the ministry, separated by the Holy Ghost, separated from everything that would interfere with your doing the work God has called you to do. That separation must be real. There must be concentration on your life's work. No success is attained in any vocation without self-discipline.

Exercise yourselves in godliness, and again, Paul urges people to endure hardships.

"I buffet my body," says Paul. The lower nature must be subjugated to give the higher nature full play. There must be a discipline of self which is not mere self-repression, but which will make for self-expression, not to kill individuality and suppress personality, but create, develop, and sanctify it.

There must be discipline in the use of our time. The days are at our disposal. No timesheet, except one of our own making, governs us. We need to discipline ourselves in method, in habits of punctuality, accuracy, regularity, and the like, lest we waste our time and other people's. Let us business men say that he has better business habits than you, that he is more correct than you. He may be cleverer in business than you, but not in those habits that make a correct man, let alone a Christian man. Count your hours a sacred trust. Review each day's work in prayer. Bring it to the Master's eye. In the light of that day have your programme prepared for the next. Sometime ago there was a dearth of candidates for the Anglican Church, and a Bishop said there was no dearth of men, but a dearth of suitable men.

There must be definiteness of purpose in our ministry. The Apostle did not run uncertainly, did not fight as one that beats the air. He had a fixed purpose—"this one thing I do." Do not be mere driftwood. Learn to concentrate. Determine to do the work you are called to do, and do the work of the day in the day. Let nothing draw you away from the great purpose of your life.

Soul-Culture.

Be rigorous in your attention to soul-culture. Let nothing crowd out the duty and privilege of prayer and meditation on the Word of God. Christ ordained that his Apostles "should be with him, that he might send them forth." This is ever the right order. A prayerless ministry is a tragedy. Yet it is so easy to neglect soul-culture, so easy to find excuse in the multitudinous duties that clamor for attention. Discipline yourself in this. However pressed for time, never economize in respect to your time for communion with God. A constant, watchful fight is necessary to prevent our slurring this duty. Other duties, meetings, etc., have to receive attention or the people would know of the neglect. Habits of soul-culture are above all necessary; we must have rigid discipline over ourselves in this private and important business of soul-culture.

I congratulate you on your vocation. There is no calling so full of privilege, so rich in joy. I congratulate you on your acceptance into the Methodist ministry. No Church gives better opportunity for the real work of the ministry. Justify your ordination. Be loyal to your Church. Be true to its distinctive teaching and to its distinctive organization. Fling yourself into your work with the abandon of a whole-hearted passion. No half-measures will suffice. Body, mind, and soul must be sanctified to this work. Determine that you will never be a castaway—rejected, disqualified—but a triumphant and crowned victor. Like Paul, "Count not your life" (Acts xx. 24) of any account or dear to myself—so that I may accomplish my course and ministry. The responsibility of speaking to you has burdened me. I have faced no duty this year with the same feeling of anxiety. I covet your best for God and the Church.

I have lived long enough to know that unless a man takes himself seriously in hand, with both hands, he will fail. I have seen a man, once in the ministry, asking for a night's lodging on the street. I have found men well groomed, making their way in life, but making no way in the work of God. I have known other men, whose names have been in the homes of the people and whom little children have called blessed, and who, in their later years, have said, "I have finished my course, I have kept the faith, henceforth there is laid up for me a crown of life." May that be your crown, too!

THE TIME HAS COME TO SHIFT THE EDUCATIONAL CENTER OF THE WORLD.

By Bishop Warren A. Candler.

For fifty years, if not longer, Germany has been the educational center of the world. Thither have gone for university training thousands of students from every land in Christendom, and very many from such countries as Japan, China, Turkey, and India. From our own country and from Latin-America have gone many thousands of young men annually.

The German universities are now closed. Members of their faculties and many of their students have been slain in the dreadful European War. Even with the coming of peace these institutions can not be the same again for many years to come. This is equally true of the universities in Belgium and Austria. Let the outcome of the war be what it may, the nations of Central Europe must endure greater poverty than ever during the next twenty-five years.

No students from our own country nor any from the countries of Latin-America can now enter any European university without incurring risks which they will be slow to take. They could not be sure of getting enough money sent them in emergencies to provide for their expenses. It is doubtless true that the number of students from the Americas in even the Scottish and English universities will be greatly reduced.

All these facts go to show that the time has come to shift the educational center of the world from Europe to North America. The editors of our newspapers and magazines have been insisting that the center of the world's commerce must inevitably come to our country. In this they are probably correct. But the shifting of the educational center of the world is a far more significant and important thing.

For many years too many students have been educated in the atmosphere of militarism which has prevailed in every part of Europe, and especially in Germany. This has not been wholesome for the world. Moreover, there has been in the German universities a most damaging rationalism which has impaired the force of religion among students who have attended the institutions of that unhappy country. The atmosphere of our country is, not only more pacific than that of Europe, but it is also more evangelical. Our people who are connected with the American Churches, for the most part, have not been cursed with either rationalism or ritualism.

If we will now equip our universities adequately, we can not only arrest the tide of student life which has been going from us to German universities, but we can draw to our own institutions many thousands of students from Latin-America. These students, living with our people for a time, acquiring our language, and seeing our friendly spirit, would return to their own countries to bless both our land and theirs. Educated men, scattered throughout Latin-America, would create bonds of sympathy and good understanding between their nations and ours. The immeasurable value of such a result can not be overstated.

The students from Mexico, Central America, the West Indies, and the South American countries, in which the climate is somewhat like that of our Southern States, would prefer to attend institutions in the South. The opening of the Panama Canal will tend to send them directly to our section, if we will prepare for them. It is, therefore, highly important for us to make our universities great and good as quickly as possible. In this matter an opportunity is before us of great value and an obligation is upon us of the most sacred character.

In the South the Methodists are very numerous, and they are financially able to do things of this sort, as perhaps is not any other denomination in the Southern States, unless it may be the Baptists are able to do as much. By a train of events, which need not now be set out in detail, our Church has at the present moment the best chance to make a great university in the South that any Southern Church has had since the foundation of the American Colonies. If our people will rally to the two universities, for which our Educational Commission has planned, one in Dallas, Texas and the other in Atlanta, Georgia, we can do a great work for ourselves and for the world at large of the most far-reaching influence. Both our duty and our interest impel us to act in this matter promptly and generously. The facts in the case are so plain that argument is unnecessary to show what we should do.

The wealthy institutions of New England, New York, Pennsylvania, Illinois, Michigan, Wisconsin, and California are better prepared than are our institutions to meet the demands of the present hour; but in many respects most of the larger institutions in these States are as rationalistic as the German universities. Certainly they can not exert a religious influence of as evangelical a character as can the Methodist colleges and universities. We do not wish rationalism to be propagated in the South nor in Latin-America.

Let the Methodist people now act promptly, vigorously, and generously. The hour has struck for a great forward movement and we must not fall below the manifest purpose of God concerning us in this momentous period of the world's history.

APPOINTING THE MINISTERS: THE ENGLISH PLAN AND OURS.

It is well known that with the Wesleyan Methodist Church of England the plan of assigning the ministers to their charges is not the same as ours. There the matter is in the hands of a Stationing Committee, who take into consideration "invitations"—some of them made two or three years in advance—and appointment to special localities. But the schedule of this committee is brought into the open Conference for a second and then a final reading, and each minister can, if he desires, represent his own case publicly if dissatisfied.

This plan has had many admirers, and has been recommended for adoption in our own Church. But, according to the Methodist Recorder, the official organ of the Wesleyans, the plan is not working with universal satisfaction over there. When the stations are considered in open Conference, and the "invitations" and appointments to special localities are under deliberation, "the private circumstances of men," says the Recorder, "become the subject of heated argument: worse still, ministers, forgetting that the circuits have not the same opportunity of semi-public discussion, advocate their own ease, and now and then insist, because of family circumstances, in being appointed to neighborhoods which they freely indicate." "It is easy," it continues, "to recall scenes caused by this advocacy, which leave painful impressions on those who witness them," and it asks, "Is there not a more excellent way?"

The Recorder then describes our own method in the Methodist Episcopal Church, and defends it against the charge of tyranny in the episcopate by showing how free is the consultation between the Bishop and his advisers in the cabinet, how the Bishop and district superintendents may be interviewed privately by any pastor, and how the acts of the Bishops, if suspected of arbitrariness, are reviewed at the General Conference by the Committee on Episcopacy. "The charge of tyranny," remarks the Recorder, "might as well be urged against the men whose duty it is to pronounce a final judgment on any dispute."

The conclusion that the editor of the Recorder comes to is this: "It is impossible for us to adopt the American plan. We are too democratic, too enamored of personal liberty to submit to Bishops and their modified veto." But it contends that, though the difficulties in altering its present system are great, some attempt ought to be made to prevent the repetition of scenes witnessed in the recent Wesleyan Conference (that of 1910.) "It is not just," it says, "that a man, by personal pleading, should turn out another man, whose claims are equal to his own, from a circuit, but who is absent from the Conference or shrinks, through superior delicacy of feeling, from advocating his own case."

If this is a true description of what actually occurs across the water, we, for our part, would have no such liking for it as to wish it introduced in our own Church. To our mind it would be vastly more objectionable and disagreeable than any occasional exhibition of ignorance, carelessness, short-sightedness, arbitrariness, or lack of good judgment and common sense in any Bishop. However it works across the sea, it would be with us the source, we should imagine, of ill-feelings and heart-burnings without end—of divisions among brethren, destroying fraternity and the spirit of unity and co-operation.—Western Christian Advocate (Cincinnati.)

"BLEST BE THE TIE."

Not one in a thousand who sings the old hymn, "Blest Be the Tie that Binds," knows its history. It was written by the Rev. John Fawcett, who in the eighteenth century was the pastor of a poor little church in Yorkshire, England.

In 1772 he felt obliged to accept a call to a London church. His farewell sermon had been preached, six wagons loaded with furniture and books stood by the door. His congregation, men, women and children, were in an agony of tears.

Looking up, Mrs. Fawcett said: "O John, John, I cannot bear this! I know not where to go!"

"Nor I," said he, "nor will we go. Unload the wagons and put everything back."

His letter of acceptance was recalled, and he wrote this hymn to commemorate the episode.—Home Herald.

Church News

There are, in round numbers, 15,000 Sunday school teachers in the Methodist Episcopal Church.

Nashville, Tenn., has a Cumberland Presbyterian pastor whose name is J. R. Goodpasture. Is not that rather a suggestive combination for a preacher?

There are more than 7,000 Southern Methodists in Dallas, Texas, and our Sunday school enrollment is over 6,000. The number of pastoral charges is sixteen and their aggregate property holdings amount to $627,385.

The Tulip Street M. E. Church, South, of Nashville, Tenn., of which Dr. W. B. Ricks is pastor, after an interior overhauling which is said to have greatly improved its appearance, had an interesting "home-coming" service on Sunday, Sept. 13.

The health of Dr. H. M. Hamill, the Superintendent of the Sunday School Training Work of the M. E. Church, South, has not been robust for some months, and he has lately been recuperating at Tate Springs, Tenn. We hope that he will soon completely regain his physical strength.

Dr. Daniel Steele, the noted New England Methodist preacher and author, passed to his reward on Sept. 2. Perhaps the best known of his many books is "Love Enthroned." The commentary on the Book of Joshua in "the Whedon series" is from his pen. He was nearly 90 years of age.

The Methodist Missionary Training School at Nashville, Tenn., had an auspicious opening on Sept. 16. President W. F. Quillian stated that eighteen States were represented in the enrollment. This school maintains a kindergarten department which commands a good local patronage.

It is stated that the Southern Methodist Church will within the next few months spend $20,000 in Tampa, Fla., in strengthening its missionary equipment in that city. The plans in contemplation embrace a new building for our Italian Mission in Ybor City. The Home of the General Board of Missions is backing this forward movement.

Dr. J. W. Lee, pastor of St. John's Church, St. Louis, one of the foremost authors and preachers of the M. E. Church, South, will give a lecture both at the St. Louis and Missouri Conferences of the Methodist Episcopal Church on "The Mission of Methodism in the World To-day." He will deliver these addresses at the request of Bishop W. P. Thirkield, who will preside. These two eminent ministers have been friends for a quarter of a century.

Bishop E. D. Mouzon has been made Acting Dean of the Theological School of the Southern Methodist University at Dallas, Texas. Upon him, in co-operation with the Board of Trustees of the institution and Dr. Hyer, its President, will devolve the task of selecting a theological faculty. One professor, Dr. W. D. Bradfield, has already been engaged, and the Texas Christian Advocate states that the Trustees may at their next meeting complete the entire list.

The Pacific Methodist Advocate (San Francisco) of Sept. 10 says: "A company of missionaries of our Church took passage on 'The Sihwa' for China last Saturday (the 5th inst). They were as follows: Miss Lochie Rankin, who has spent thirty-six years in China; Miss Mildred E. Bomar, who has been in the field twenty-two years; Miss Emma S. Lester and Mrs. Pilley, who have served seven years; and Miss Roubie F. Holman and Miss Elizabeth A. Love, who are new recruits."

The twelve States in the American Union having the largest number of Roman Catholics are, according to the latest "Official Catholic Directory," as follows: New York, 2,884,723; Pennsylvania, 1,684,220; Illinois, 1,461,634; Massachusetts, 1,395,892; Ohio, 781,179; Louisiana, 535,000; Michigan, 582,500; Wisconsin, 578,195; New Jersey, 565,000; Missouri, 470,000; Minnesota, 461,950; Connecticut, 438,483. It is claimed that there are 16,067,985 Catholics in the United States.

Dr. S. Edward Young, pastor of the Bedford Presbyterian Church of Brooklyn, N. Y., has announced that a Presbyterian lady, whose name he is not yet at liberty to make known, has given the entire amount necessary to build a narrow gauge railway to the ruins of ancient Antioch, in Pisidia, Western Asia, and also a sum sufficient to carry on the work of excavation begun there, which is expected to throw considerable light on New Testament history. This exploratory work is being conducted under the direction of Sir William Ramsay, the distinguished archaeologist, who has secured permission from the Turkish Government.

The Baltimore Southern Methodist says: "We learn that Andrew Carnegie, Esq., has offered $10,000 to our congregation at Easton on the condition that the congregation raise $1000 for a pipe organ. We congratulate Brother Stump and his people." We think that they are rather to be commiserated. How any Southern Methodist pastor and congregation could gain their consent to stretch out itching palms to this noted skeptic when they know of the warfare he has waged against the Christian colleges of the United States and how he buried into the Vanderbilt lawsuit and hung up $100,000 for a verdict against our Church, is quite beyond our comprehension.

The magnificent new institutional plant of the Trinity M. E. Church, South, of Los Angeles, Calif., was opened on Sunday, Sept. 29. The program of exercises planned for the occasion will extend through the whole of this week. This structure is the most expensive in Southern Methodism, having cost between a half and three-quarters of a million dollars. The pastor of this congregation is Rev. C. C. Sealeman, and the business manager of the new plant, which will carry on various kinds of work, is Rev. R. P. Howell. We have not seen the order of services that was arranged for the opening, but we are under the impression that both Bishop Waterhouse and Bishop Mouzon were among the speakers.

Bishop Nuelson, of the Methodist Episcopal Church, who is in Switzerland, and who has charge of a large share of the work of that denomination in Europe, has announced that he will remain in his Episcopal district while the war continues, but that he will send his family to the United States if the way opens for him to do so. The Bishop says: "It (the war) is a disaster more terrible than words can express. It will impoverish the nations immediately concerned, and will affect others as well. I fear that the whole question of financial support in our Swiss and German work will have to be postponed for a generation or two. . . . Let me urge our good people in America to pray earnestly that this terrible war, with all its untold suffering, may speedily cease."

The Northwestern Chronicle, a conservative Roman Catholic paper, affirms that the Romish Church is making little or no progress in some of the most important dioceses in the United States. It says: "The great archdiocese of New York was reported in the Catholic Directory of 1904 as containing 1,200,000 Catholics, and in the Directory of 1914 as containing 1,219,600 Catholics, while in the decade past 200,000 Catholic immigrants have landed at the port of New York. Then, according to the official report, there were 200,000 Catholics in the archdiocese of Cincinnati in 1904, and 200,600 in 1914. The total increase is nothing. Take the fine old Catholic diocese of Savannah: ten years ago it reported 20,000 Catholics; to-day it reports 18,340, a loss in ten years of 660. Comment is unnecessary."

CENTENARY COLLEGE OPENING.

Centenary College opened on Wednesday, September 16, with an attendance numerically equal to that of last year at the opening, and with a superior quality of students. Addresses were made on the occasion by Revs. H. W. Bowman, W. H. Coleman, T. H. Morris and Dr. Geo. S. Sexton. The work has begun most satisfactorily, and the general feeling is one of hopefulness.

We have in our faculty three sons of Mississippi Conference preachers—J. S. Johnston, H. T. Carley and W. W. Moore, Jr. Our new man, Prof. Moore, is making a most favorable impression.

Revival services will be held early in the session, and religion will be given the central place which it must have in our schools.

Rev. W. H. Coleman, who is vitally interested in the cause of genuine Christian education will preach the opening sermon on Sunday in the First Methodist Church.

We have a student matriculated from East Feliciana Parish which, I trust, is a favorable omen.

Prof. B. D. Battle, who was in Germany when the war broke out is at his post of duty. Sept. 18, 1914. R. H. WYNN.

WANTED SIX THOUSAND DOLLARS.

October 17, 1914, is Work Day for the Methodist Orphanage at Jackson, Miss.

We appeal to every friend in Mississippi to help us on this day. We are expecting $6000, and we urgently need it to pay what we did not pay this summer and to support our 215 children this winter. We want to pay cash for all we buy; and we want not only voluntary, but cheerful gifts.

We believe that children are the greatest heritage on earth, and that it is the duty of the Church to take care of children who are destitute and to try to make worthy and useful men and women of them. There is no greater work on earth than turning such children from the paths of sin, dishonor, and destruction.

It takes over $20,000 per annum for our current expenses. We want means enough to take care of every destitute child that knocks at our door. We know that your heart beats in sympathy with this desire, but it takes money to do this. The poor children in your orphanage need your money and would be blessed by it. Make a sacrifice, if necessary, on October 17 and help us. If all our friends will give us their co-operation we will have no trouble in getting the $6000.

Do not say "war times," the "boll weevil," etc., are such that you cannot give. These very times and circumstances make it all the more necessary that you should give. The more poverty there is, the more needy children there are. Will you close the door in their faces? Let every one at least give us the value of his labor for one day. Remember that October 17 is the time.

W. M. WILLIAMS.

Manager of Methodist Orphanage.

P. S.—We respectfully request every newspaper in Mississippi to copy this notice and to continue to publish it until October 17.

GOOD NEWS FROM GRENADA COLLEGE.

With an enrollment at the beginning equal to that for the entire year in the past, with the exception of last year, Grenada College has begun its sixty-third session. Others are coming daily and we expect to have every room taken in two weeks. We never had a finer nor more delighted student body, and the new members of the faculty have impressed every one with the superiority of their character and training. A number of patrons came personally to place their daughters with us and all expressed surprise at the beauty of the campus and buildings, as well as at the excellent accommodations provided for students. Junior and Senior Hall, just now ready for use, is not excelled in elegance and comfort by any dormitory for girls in the South. It is a great addition to our plant.

The Y. W. C. A. reception under the electric lights on the campus yesterday evening was a picture to delight the heart of any one who loves youth and beauty or who feels that we serve God the better by being bound in closest ties of love and fellowship with our fellows. It was the welcome of the old students to those away from home for the first time, and no mother would have lost sleep if she could have seen the happy circle of girls on the campus.

Personally, I feel that Grenada College never had more friends nor a more promising future. We thank God and take courage, determined to have a Christian college whose influences shall all be wholesome and refined and whose standards shall be equal to the best in every respect.

Cordially,

J. R. COUNTISS.

FROM THE MONTROSE TRAINING SCHOOL.

Dear Doctor Meek: I am sorry I failed to report earlier concerning the opening of the Mississippi Conference Training School at Montrose. We had a splendid beginning, 141 students being present, and new students are still coming. Dr. A. F. Watkins, of Millsaps College, "dropped in" on opening day, and made us a good speech as also did Dr. Featherston and Rev. H. F. Tolle.

We have two Choctaw Indians in school here. They are preparing themselves to teach the remnant of the Choctaws living in the eastern section of the State. We have one young man preparing for the foreign mission work, and four young preachers. I never knew pupils to get "down to business" better than these have.

One young preacher walked and led a cow 22 miles to get to school, making the trip in one day. He has a wife and two children—all willing to make sacrifices for him to enter school. We could have a hundreds more pupils if we could find a way to help on their expenses. I am doing my best for as many of them as I can. I am proud of our faculty; all are faithful and earnest. We want you to come to see us.

J. S. PURCELL.

LOUISIANA BOARD OF EDUCATION.

The date of the meeting of the Louisiana Conference Board of Education has been changed from September 30 to Tuesday, October 6. The meeting will be held in Alexandria, La., and will convene at 7:30 p.m.

It is stated that there are in the United States 1,278,679 German-born males twenty-one years of age and over.

Damascus is said to be the oldest city in the world with a continuous history, and it is still a thriving business center.

According to a recent report, the number of public school teachers in the United States is 533,606. Of these, 100,328 are men, and 433,278 are women.

The national debts of the leading warring nations of Europe are thus estimated: France, $6,511,000,000; Russia, $4,223,000,000; Germany, $5,000,000,000; Austria-Hungary, $3,700,000,000; England, $3,620,000,000.

Francisco Carbajal, who for a brief time was President of Mexico, has been in New Orleans for some weeks. He states that he will devote the next few months to writing a history of Mexico covering a period of two years.

It is reported that a $4,000,000 contract has been signed with Eastern capitalists providing for the construction of an interurban electric railroad from Shreveport to Monroe, La., by way of Minden, Arcadia, and Ruston, a distance of 97 miles.

Besides their board and clothing, the annual pay of a soldier in the armies of the leading nations of the world is said to be as follows: United States, $180; Great Britain, $86.15; France, $20.40; Germany, $18.80; Austria, $8.12; Russia, $3.78.

A bill to abolish the alley slums in Washington City has finally passed both Houses of Congress, thus fulfilling the dying request of Mrs. Woodrow Wilson. The measure, however, will not become completely effective until the expiration of four years.

A Paris statistician estimates that the present war in Europe is costing the nations engaged in it $54,000,000 daily. This means that if the conflict should continue for a year it would entail upon them an expense amounting to the enormous sum of $19,755,000,000.

Col. Roosevelt spent last week and the first of this week making stump speeches in the Middle West, visiting the States of Kansas, Nebraska, Iowa, Illinois, Missouri, Indiana and Ohio. President Wilson announced some days ago that he would not make any political addresses this fall.

The British Parliament has adjourned until October 27. When it was announced that the measure giving home rule to Ireland and the Welsh church disestablishment bill had received the royal assent, the only finishing touch needed, great enthusiasm was manifested, and "God Save the King" was sung by all factions with much feeling.

It is claimed that the European war will place $100,000,000 in the pockets of the grain-growers of Nebraska and that the present crop, though by no means the largest on record, will sell for more than any ever raised in that State. Thus it will be seen that the same influences that are injuring Southern farmers, are enriching those of the Northwest.

The construction of the Panama Canal cost the United States approximately $240,000,000. This sum of money, which has been invested in a way to bless the world for generations to come, would not finance the European war for five days. It is probable that more treasure is being wasted in the present titanic conflict between the nations of the Old World than in any other human undertaking in the history of mankind.

The State of Maryland has recently been honoring some of its historic heroes and heroines. On September 9 a tablet was unveiled in Baltimore in the house in which the original star-spangled banner was made by Mrs. Mary Pickersill. Later, at Frederick a five-day celebration was held in honor of Francis Scott Key, who composed the song, "The Star-spangled Banner," one hundred years ago, and a monument to Barbara Frietchie, whose memorable achievement Whittier immortalized in verse, was unveiled.

The new Pope is said to have written recently a letter to King George V in which he expressed great sympathy for the English people in the war now raging and characterized Great Britain as "the guardian of peace and the master of justice." Mr. Carnegie pronounced the Kaiser the keeper of the world's peace for the past two and a half decades, a short time since; so it now seems that the two sovereigns are about even in honors.

A writer of the Christian Intelligencer (New York) claims that thousands of persons are killed through fear, sympathy, and shocks from heartrending sights and news in countries that are at war. The famous American physician, Dr. Benjamin Rush, of Philadelphia, is said to have written an interesting volume on this subject when our awful civil conflict was raging in the sixties.

The National Republican Congressional Campaign Committee has announced that it will not issue a campaign book this year. This is the first time that the Republicans have failed to bring out such a publication on election years in a long while, and it is being construed as a confession that they have no hope of controlling the next Congress. The recent election in Maine, in which a Democrat was chosen Governor, was decidedly unfavorable to them, and still more so to the Progressives.

Miss Margaret Hyatt, a gifted young botanist of California, recently discovered near Deer Creek, in Butte County, a dogwood tree of the variety known scientifically as Cornus Torreyi. Only one other specimen of this tree has been found in the world's history and that was in some remote part of the continent half a century ago. That specimen was lost and scientists have been hunting for another ever since, but without success. Miss Hyatt sent twigs of the tree that she found to the State and Leland Stanford Universities.

A late United States Census Bureau Bulletin shows that of all workers for gain in our country 21.2 were females in 1910, as against 18.3 per cent in 1900. Women physicians and surgeons number nearly 14,000, and 1300 women are lawyers. The number of children between the ages of ten and fifteen engaged in gainful occupations is 1,900,225, nearly 20 per cent of all the children of those ages. There was, however, during the decade a marked decrease in the number of children employed in non-agricultural pursuits.

Dr. C. C. Bass, an eminent New Orleans physician, in an address to the Orleans Parish Medical Association on September 14, claimed that a cure for Riggs' disease of the gums has been discovered. He announced the remedy to be the injection hypodermically of the active principles of ipecac into the system of the patient. Dr. Bass has for some time been distinguished for his research work, having received a medal from the American Medical Society for the cultivation of the malarial plasmodium. In his experiments with Riggs' disease, he had had the assistance of Dr. M. M. Johns, of the medical faculty of Tulane University.

METHODIST SUNDAY SCHOOL AGENCIES VS. INTERDENOMINATIONAL SUNDAY SCHOOL WORK.

In the Advocate of Sept. 16, Brothers Williams and P. O. Lowrey reply to the articles written by Brother Alford and myself relative to the attitude which we as a Church should assume toward what is known as the Interdenominational Sunday School work; and I must say that it is strange to me that, while contending for the continued co-operation of our Church with that "movement," they did not recognize the fact that in both of their articles they presented as good, if not better, arguments for withdrawing from it than did either myself or Brother Alford. This, however, is what usually happens in the support of a weak cause.

Brother Williams says: "However, as to withdrawing from the interdenominational work, we would have nothing to gain but censure from such a course and much to lose indeed." I stated in my article that the Baptists are rapidly withdrawing from it and organizing County Associations of their own. Has any one censured them or questioned their right to do so? No; not so far as I have heard, and, as for myself, I have for them nothing but commendation for their action. Brother Williams says that by a similar action we have "much to lose." It seems a pity that he did not tell us what we should lose. So far as my observation goes, we would lose nothing except a lot of superficial enthusiasm which gets the money and then evaporates till more money is needed. He says further that we have "nothing to gain." As I see it, we would gain the concentration of energy, money, time, thought, and everything else, toward the cultivation of our own field instead of a dissipation of all these in the direction of fields not our own, which, it appears to me, would mean a great deal to us.

Brother Williams says again that "the interdenominational forces are doing a great missionary and evangelistic work." I have no disposition to question this statement as it refers to Louisiana—his may be missionary territory; but as for Mississippi, I contend that the Churches are able to take care of this work—especially is this true of Methodism. However much we may have needed the evangelistic and missionary forces of the interdenominational agencies in the past, there is no longer any need or room for them since the Methodist Church is able to stand alone and take care of her own in both branches of service indicated above.

Brother Lowrey says: "It would seem unwise to hinder others till we set in motion agencies that will do the work." In the first place, I am not proposing to "hinder others," but, while bidding "others" godspeed, I am earnestly contending that we should look upon our own fields which are "already white unto the harvest." It could be said with as good reason that we are "hindering others" because we do not unite in the Sunday school work of other Churches instead of having Sunday schools of our own. Is any one going to rise up and call us narrow and selfish and say that we are "hindering others" because we have our own Sunday schools? In the name of all that which has been called loyalty, do we commit the sin of "hindering others" when we stand by that which is our own? If so, then Brother Lowrey will have to mark me off his list of those who do not sin.

After the above astonishing statement, Brother Lowrey proceeds to tell us that the General Conference of 1910 "added a Superintendent of the Wesley Bible Class Department to the working force of the General Sunday School Board and provided for the appointment of Field Secretaries in the several Annual Conferences, since which time new life has been awakened * * * *," as a result of which the new Discipline will show quite an advance in Sunday school activity." Had he tried, he could not have produced a better argument for the substantiation of my contention—that we, as a Church, are neither infirm nor aged; and, being able to stand alone, we do not need the enthusiasm generated by outside agencies.

Both Brothers Williams and Lowrey intimate that we owe much to the agencies of the interdenominational work for the training and enthusiasm of the past; but is the cripple who was once dependent on his crutch for locomotion to lean on that crutch forever, just because it once gave him aid? Surely, no. Should we, then, because of any help it may have rendered us in the past, remain dependent upon and continue to support the interdenominational work? No; but duly appreciating what it may have done for us in the past, and bidding it godspeed in destitute fields, let's wave to it our hands in a last farewell while we devote all our energies to the new Sunday school agencies of our own Church. This we must do if we would be loyal Methodists, and this we will do by the help of God.

JOHN W. RAMSEY.

The Board of Education of the North Mississippi Conference will meet at Wlnona, Miss., Wednesday, September 30, at two o'clock p.m. All the members of the Board are urged to be present. R. A. MEEK, Chairman. T. H. LIPSCOMB, Secretary.

THE WAR OF NATIONS.

By Rev. J. L. Greenway.

The call to arms sounds loud and far, its echo all men hear:
The world appalled in horror stands, and hearts are gripped with fear.
Along the lines the gathering hosts in bristling armor stand,
And pour their hell of shot and shell to devastate the land.

The peaceful Belgians dare to stand, and guard their hearths and home Against the proud usurper's power, who seeks to seal their doom.
The right of might is then invoked, the strong crush down the weak.
And thus this people, without cause, in blood and carnage reek.

Her fruitful fields are ploughed by shot; with blood her soil is drenched;
The slaughtered dead like windrows lie—the suffering most intense.
Her homes destroyed and lands laid waste, few cattle in the fold:
Her greedy foe demands the toll of forty millions gold.

Onward moves the murderous legions, on to strike the hour of doom,
On through peaceful lands and peoples, bringing naught but death and gloom.
Mercy is not asked nor given; death, destruction, this they reap;
On the battle-field of carnage, there they die like slaughtered sheep.

Thus they come in teeming millions, with the sword and gun;
Men of various tribes and nations, with the Slav and Teuton,
With no time to pause or ponder o'er the fate of child or wife;
Die ye must—it's so commanded. How cheaply held is human life!

Why this blood and awful carnage? Why must brother slay his own?
Why must millions, inoffensive, thus be caused to weep and groan?
Why these widows and their children made to suffer want and care?
Why this fearful pall of darkness, leading on to black despair?

Ye men who sit on monarch's thrones, and claim to rule by right divine,
Why let ye loose the dogs of war, and make the nations pline?
Ye talk of peace, and plot for war; your words are all a sham;
Your acts bespeak the hypocrite and not the genuine man.

Ye stand like Judas with his kiss, proclaiming "God your trust,"
And crucify the Prince of Peace upon your cross of lust.
In your pride and thirst for glory, Satan binds you with his spell;
While ye pray for help from heaven, to perform the deeds of hell.

Is the cause for which ye struggle worth the price ye have to pay?
Is your grievance of such nature not to bear the light of day?
If your cause is such a just one, why not trust your brother-man?
In the court of arbitration he for truth and right will stand.

Ye who boast of civilization, stand for progress of the race;
On the principle of justice, will ye not now take your place?
Take the golden rule of Jesus, making it a rule of life,
And the brotherhood of nations will forever end all strife.

THE PREACHER—HIS STYLE OF PREACHING.

By Mr. W. A. Belk.

One writer has said, "The style is the man." Another has said, "Only weaklings who are afraid to be natural and who are destitute of substantial worth, become conscious imitators or affect artificial peculiarities." And still another writer remarks, "I must be myself, imitation is suicide." It is always interesting to me to sit and listen to a public speaker. It is also interesting to notice the difference in speakers. No two men can look alike, walk alike, or act alike. It is interesting to study each man's own individuality as he appears before the public as a speaker. We learn that there are about four different kinds of discourses, namely, description, narration, exposition, and argument. Description is said to be "the portrayal of an object by means of language." How often have we sat and listened to "word painting" by some man gifted along that line until we felt lost in "description" and longed for just one original thought to vary the monotony! He could paint all right, but none of his paintings were new. He only dipped his brush and rubbed where others had marked the lines.

Narration has been defined as "a recital of incidents or events in an orderly sequence." I recall my father's telling me one day the story of the little Israelitish girl when I was a very small lad. It impressed me. He often told me instructive Bible stories in such a way as to impress them on my mind. The following Sunday I heard a sermon by a Methodist preacher, long since gone to heaven, who told that same story from the pulpit, but told it in the form of a sermon. I wondered then whether he was preaching or not—and I still wonder. He simply narrated the facts but did nothing more. Later in life I heard another preacher narrate the same story and then he deduced some practical truths therefrom.

Exposition is defined as "explaining the nature or meaning of things." The purpose of exposition is to form a picture, and the methods of doing this are various. It may be done by pointing out its effects, by indicating its resemblance to other things, and the like. It is closely akin to description.

Argumentation "is the process of establishing the truth or falsity of a thing." I have now in mind a good Presbyterian minister who preaches entirely by this method. He never indulges in any thing but cold argument. He is clear and logical, but dry and tedious. I have in mind others who mix all four of these styles. I am writing this little article that perchance some young minister may examine himself and see if he can discover what his NATURAL style is. You know Pope has well said, "Know thyself." If a public speaker can ascertain his "style" and then cultivate that style, he may hope to become an attractive speaker so far as his "style" will admit. If a man never stops to study himself and his individuality, then indeed he will hardly be able to "know himself" or to be able to guide himself before an audience.

Now for a moment let us turn to those preachers who have achieved reputation as speakers. Speaking for myself, I have never heard a speaker who was more pleasing and edifying than Bishop Galloway. He came as near combining all four of these "styles" as any one I ever heard preach or speak. But God has not made many Bishop Galloways. The majority of us are rather "one talent" men and should "stick to our bush." Russell H. Conwell speaks with an ease and grace and yet at the same time with a natural awkwardness that appeals to his listeners. His style might be classed as a mixture of narration and description. Sam Steel combines narration, description and exposition in such a way as to leave the argument apparent and useless—it is too plain not to be seen. His points stick out at the end of his paragraphs like huge bristles.

Bishop Hugh Miller Thompson's style was spirited but entirely argumentative. Bishop Wilson climbs gradually by combining narration and description until he finally sweeps out on the mountain top with a torrent of argument unanswerable. Bishop Candler combines all four of these styles in a strong and effective way, but not in so pleasing a manner as did Bishop Galloway. Talmage loved to dwell on the descriptive. I think his sermon wherein he describes Yellowstone Park is great. Our own Bishop Murrah sweeps along like a big, heavy stream and combines narration and argument in an effective and pleasing way.

I trust our young ministers will just lay themselves up on the shelf and step off a few feet and study themselves and see wherein lies their strength. I have always thought that David was both wise and fortunate in knowing just where his capacity lay. With Saul's armor on he was unable to fight; but with his sling he was effective. Each man has a capacity and an individuality of his own. Let him study it out and then follow it to success.

Holly Springs, Miss.

FINE OPENING AT MILLSAPS.

Millsaps College opened for the 1914-15 term most auspiciously this morning, with the largest attendance of new students, about 55, in the history of the institution, while practically all of the old students returned to the campus.

The opening exercises, held in the preparatory school at 9:00 o'clock to-day, were very interesting. Prominent men from various parts of the State, and one from Birmingham, Ala., rendering inspiring addresses before the large number of persons who gathered in the auditorium.

The exercises were presided over by Dr. A. F. Watkins, president of the College. The opening prayer was offered by Rev. L. M. Lipscomb, of the North Mississippi Conference.

Rev. N. B. Harmon, of Yazoo City, of the Mississippi Conference, read the Scripture lesson, and Dr. Watkins then delivered an address, welcoming both old and new students, telling them what he wanted them to do and to abstain from doing. He expressed regret that the new main building was not ready for occupancy, and thanked the head of the preparatory department for the use of its building for the opening program.

Rev. J. A. Bowen, of Birmingham, North Alabama Conference, was introduced by Dr. Watkins and made an inspiring address. He urged the young people of Mississippi to prepare to become useful when they grow up, and gave some advice that if followed will result in making better men and better women in the State.

One of the features of the exercises was the singing of "The Alma Mater" by the old students. Dr. Hardin, presiding elder of the Jackson District, in behalf of the Churches of the city, invited all of the students to attend religious services in the various churches and welcomed the students to the city. Prof. R. S. Ricketts, of the preparatory school, talked to the students for ten minutes, advising them how they should conduct themselves in the school. Judge Richard Reed, of the Supreme Court, who lectures to the law class at regular intervals, welcomed the law students and outlined plans for the year.

Pastors of different churches welcomed the students and invited them to attend Sunday services. The exercises closed with a benediction by Rev. H. P. Lewis, of Jackson—Jackson Daily News.

THE RACE.

When Clinton stepped from the train at the little country station, the first face he saw was that of his cousin Raymond, a straight, manly-looking boy of twelve, with clear gray eyes that lighted joyfully as he looked into Clinton's merry brown ones.

"Hello, Raymond! How are you? Better use your lorgnette if you don't know me," laughed Clinton, noting the slightly puzzled look that had come into Raymond's eager face.

"Hello yourself, Clinton Concord! Of course, I know you, though you have changed," declared Raymond. "O, but we'll have great times this summer."

"Don't doubt it. Here's my Saratoga. That your auto over there?" asked Clinton, indicating a bay horse hitched to a spring wagon.

"Yes—our auto-truck," grinned Raymond.

The trunk was soon in the light wagon, and old Joe's head was turned toward the village. For weeks both boys had been looking forward eagerly to this summer vacation which Clinton was to spend on his uncle's farm as he had done two years ago. As old Joe jogged leisurely along—Joe always took his time for doing things—the cousins had much to say to each other. In the first lull of happy plans, Raymond asked, "Clinton, what's the matter? Have you been sick?"

"What's the matter?" repeated Clinton, looking straight ahead. "Why, nothing. What makes you ask such a question?"

"Two years ago you looked so strong and could race and row and climb any thing—"

"Well," interrupted Clinton, confidentially, "I'll show you that I can 'race and row and climb' some things yet."

"All right, you'll have chances," Raymond replied in a relieved tone. "Don and Fred Duvol—you remember them, don't you?"

"Yes."

"They're coming over this afternoon, and we're going to the cove, fishing. Want to go along?" Raymond asked, turning his twinkling gray eyes on his cousin's face.

"I suppose I can if I have to," said Clinton, with a grave face and well-assumed reluctance.

Raymond laughed heartily. "We shan't exactly force you to come, but we'd be willing to have you. I have to get some things from the store," he continued, as he reined Joe up to the big maple near the grocery. "Will you come in or sit here?"

"I'll sit here if you think it's safe. If your fiery steed tries to run away, I'll hold on with all my puny strength," bantered Clinton, looking teasingly first at Raymond, then at the steady old farm horse that had already settled himself into a comfortable position, as though expecting a long wait and thinking he might as well take a nap or two.

There were so many customers that Saturday morning that Raymond had to wait some time. When, package laden, he stepped up, just in time to see Clinton toss a partly burned cigarette far out into the street.

"Oh," thought Raymond, with sudden understanding, "so it's cigarettes! I thought Clinton had more sense."

Raymond was a wide-awake boy, and neither Clinton's droll stories nor funny remarks could make him forget. As they neared home, he asked abruptly:

"Clinton, do you smoke cigarettes?"

"Certainly, my boy, would you like one?" was Clinton's flippant reply.

"What makes you?" questioned Raymond, gravely ignoring the proffered cigarette.

"Just a little habit of mine. Doesn't hurt me a bit. All the boys do it," Clinton answered lightly. "Hurrah, there's the farm," he added gaily a moment later.

Clinton received a hearty welcome from Aunt Margaret, Uncle Robert and his seven-year-old cousin Maxwell.

"You are just in time, boys. Dinner is ready," announced Aunt Margaret. "I hope you brought a good appetite with you, Clinton. I remember your fondness for an old-fashioned boiled dinner and boiled Indian pudding," she continued, looking fondly at the boy whose alert, pleasant ways had given them all so much pleasure during his former visits on the farm.

"Think you can keep up with Raymond?" asked Uncle Robert, smiling genially as he handed Clinton a plate heaped as only the father of growing boys knows how to heap it.

"Wait and see," chuckled his nephew.

After dinner Clinton was taken to see the Jersey calves, Raymond's pet colt—a handsome little bay named Venus—and Maxwell's rabbits and white leghorn chickens—some of them fluffy little balls of down.

Before any of them realized it, three o'clock had come, and Don and Fred Duvol were on hand with their fishing tackle.

"This beats the parks," the city boy exulted, when they reached the dense green woods that bordered the west side of the road for nearly half a mile. "I say, boys, let's race to the big oak."

The others agreed, and soon they were all speeding over the smooth, shady road. At first Clinton led, but soon his breath began to grow short, and Don and Raymond forged ahead. Soon Fred passed him. For a little while Don and Raymond ran side by side. Then, inch by inch, Raymond gained: Raymond reached the big oak with Don at his heels, and Fred not far behind. Looking back, they saw Clinton struggling to keep up with his sturdy little cousin.

"Well, I never!" exclaimed Don in astonishment as they watched Clinton's slow advance. "He's thirteen—a year older than we are. What ails him?"

"Cigarettes," said Raymond, shortly.

"Why, he beat us both two years ago," Don continued.

"He didn't smoke then," Raymond answered.

"Two years ago he was taller and stronger than either of you," said Fred, thoughtfully.

When Maxwell and Clinton reached the oak, there was silence for some minutes, then Don said:

"Clinton, if that's what cigarettes do for a fellow, I shan't want any."—May Elizabeth White, in Union Signal.

BEDROOM CONUNDRUMS.

If you woke up in the night thirsty, what would you do? Look under the mattress and find a spring.

What would you do for a light? Take a feather from a pillow; that is light enough.

What would you do in case of fire? Go to the window and watch the fire-escape.

If you wished to write a letter? Take a sheet.

If you wished a dinner? Take a spread.

If you were feeling sad, what would you do? Look on the bed for a comforter.—The Presbyterian.

WHEN ANIMALS SLEEP.

Elephants sleep standing up. When in a herd a certain number will always stand watch, while the others sleep, for the big powerful beasts are timid and cautious at night and will not go to sleep unguarded.

Bats sleep head downward, hanging by their hind claws.

Birds, with few exceptions, sleep with their heads turned tailward over the back and the beak turned beneath the wing.

Storks, gulls and other long-legged birds sleep standing on one leg.

Ducks sleep on open water. To avoid drifting ashore, they keep paddling with one foot, thus making them move in a circle.

Foxes and wolves sleep curled up, their noses and the soles of their feet close together and blanketed by their bushy tail.

Owls, in addition to their eyelids, have a screen that they draw sideways across their eyes to shut out the light, for they sleep in the daytime.—Our Dumb Animals.

SMALL CAUSES OF WAR.

The cause for which all Europe has taken arms, says our Parliamentary correspondent, is not worth the bones of a single soldier. Neither has been the cause of almost any other war in history. Nine hundred years ago a dispute between Modena and Bologna over a well bucket began a war which devastated Europe. A Chinese emperor once went to war over the breaking of a teapot; Sweden and Poland flew at each other's throats in 1654 because the King of Sweden discovered that his name in an official dispatch was followed by only two et ceteras, while the King of Poland's had three. The spilling of a glass of water over the Marquis de Torey led to a war between France and England, and a small boy, by throwing a pebble at the Duc de Guise, led to the massacre of Vassy and the thirty years' war.—London Chronicle.

Never say harsh things if kind things will do as well.—J. R. Macduff.

Editorial

A MISTAKEN NOTION.

A minister writes us as follows: "After serving as pastor in the M. E. Church, South, for a number of years, I have found a place where some of my people claim that a Methodist church, properly deeded and dedicated, is the common property of the public and should be used by the public for political meetings and other secular gatherings of various kinds."

The persons referred to by our brother need to study the Book of Discipline a little. Every properly written deed to a Southern Methodist house of worship contains the following clause: "In trust, that said premises shall be used, kept, maintained, and disposed of, as a place of divine worship for the use of the ministry and membership of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, subject to the discipline, usage, and ministerial appointments of said Church as from time to time authorized and declared by the General Conference of said Church, and by the Annual Conference within whose bounds the said premises are situated." And when the officers of a church present it to the officiating minister for dedication, they are required to use the following language: "We present you this house to be set apart from all unhallowed or common uses for the worship of Almighty God."

This clearly shows that the law of the Church does not permit a community to use one of its houses of worship for any kind of a secular meeting. Also, the Bishops, who are the duly constituted interpreters of the law, have handed down the following decision which completely covers this question: "A presiding elder decides that such trustees of our houses of worship as are deeded to the Church, according to form of discipline, have no right, by virtue of their offices, to permit such houses of worship to be used for schools, courthouses, or any other than church purposes. Appeal was taken to the Bishop, who sustained the presiding elder, and his decision was approved by the College of Bishops." (Paragraph 483, page 270, of the 1910 Discipline.)

The fact is, as is explicitly stated both in the book of the Discipline and in an episcopal decision (paragraph 548), the right to say what meetings shall be held in a church does not belong to the trustees or members of the congregation, but to the pastor. But the pastor has no right to go contrary to the law and permit secular gatherings to assemble in one of our houses of worship. Should he do this, however, it does not devolve upon the stewards or the members of the Church to oppose and correct him; he is responsible to the Annual Conference for his acts of administration, and in such a case the utmost that would be required of the local officials and church members would be to bring the matter to the attention of the presiding elder, and, if necessary, to the attention of the Annual Conference.

But are not our pastors in this respect given too much authority and power? We do not think so. In our opinion, in nothing is the Methodist Church more apostolic than in maintaining the dignity, influence, and responsibility of the pastoral office. One filling that position in the early days of Christianity was far from being a mere figurehead under the direction of the congregation that he served. On this point Dr. Richard Watson, in his "Institutes," says: "The term pastor implies the duties of both instruction and government, of feeding and ruling the flock of Christ, and as presbyters or bishops were ordained in the several churches, both by the apostles and evangelists, and rules are left by St. Paul as to their appointment, there can be no doubt that these are the 'pastors' spoken of in the Epistle to the Ephesians, and that they were designed to be the permanent ministers of the Church; and that with them both the government of the Church and the performance of its leading religious services were deposited."

So far from thinking that the power vested in our pastors is inimical to the welfare of the Church, we are inclined to the view that their failure rightly to claim and exercise it and the disposition to lessen it that is developing in some quarters, constitute to-day one of the gravest perils of Methodism. It will, we fear, be a sad day for us if it should ever come to pass that the men called of God to preach and set wholly apart to the work of extending his kingdom, are not given a large share in the work of molding the policies and executing the government of the Church. Such men are more apt than others to be under the immediate direction of the Holy Spirit, without whose wisdom and guidance all our planning and efforts will amount to little.

ONE THAT WAS, PASSED OVER.

The Supreme Court of Tennessee in its decision in the Vanderbilt case evinced extraordinary ingenuity in trying to show that the men who projected that institution did not intend to found a Methodist school. In its efforts to do this it put strained and unheard-of constructions upon some of the Memphis Resolutions and other portions of the charter, as well as upon some of the other important papers bearing upon the case. It declared that the committee appointed by the Memphis Convention did not act in a representative capacity in taking out the charter, though their names were explicitly recorded therein as representatives of their Conferences; that though Commodore Vanderbilt gave his money to the "corporation known as the Central University of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South," this did not imply ownership by the Church, but was merely intended to indicate the character of the institution; and that when other Conferences than those which were supposed to be represented in the Memphis Convention were invited "to co-operate with us," that that invitation was not to join in with the Annual Conferences that had sent the delegates to the Memphis meeting, but with those delegates themselves acting as a company of private individuals.

But great as the Tennessee judges undoubtedly are as expositors of charters and documents, like most men skilled in that art, they seemed to know what to skip. There were some things that even they apparently preferred not to go up against. Bishop Hoss in his brilliant review and analysis of the Court's decision, published in the last Bulletin of the General Board of Education, says:

"It is a source of surprise that Judge Turner, whose gifts as an expositor have thus been so signally exhibited, did not try his hand on the third of the Memphis Resolutions, which he also admits to be properly a part of the charter. This resolution reads as follows:

"That it (the Central University of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South) shall consist at present of five schools or departments—viz: (1) a theological school for the training of OUR young preachers who, on application for admission shall present a recommendation for admission from a quarterly or Annual Conference and shall have a standard of education equal to that required for admission on trial into Annual Conference, and instruction to them shall be both from the theological and literary departments; (2) a literary and scientific school; (3) a normal school; (4) a law school; (5) a medical school.

As Bishop Hoss suggests, the theological department was an integral part of the university that was being established; indeed, it seems to have been the uppermost thing in the minds of the men who were taking this action. Now it is perfectly obvious that in eliminating the Methodist Church from the framework of the institution, the Court must include its elimination from the theological school also. And if that has been done, as manifestly it has, so far as the decision of the highest judicial tribunal in Tennessee can effect it, to borrow Bishop Hoss's interrogations, "Then what persons does it (the third Memphis Resolution) mean by 'OUR preachers'? Just anybody's? And what does it mean by Quarterly and Annual Conferences? May these terms include Presbyterian Synods and Baptist Associations?"

We dare say that the careful reader of this third resolution will not be disposed to discount the intellectual acumen of the Tennessee jurists because they passed it by unnoticed. There are some statements of truth that are so clear and outstanding that it is well-nigh impossible to obscure their meaning or break their force. In such cases, if one is going contrary to them, the wise thing to do is to let them severely alone. Through all the years to come this unexplained resolution which was declared by the Court to be a part of the charter, but which was utterly invalidated by the opinion that it handed down, will stand as a silent witness to the outrageous wrong that was done the Southern Methodist Church under the sanction of law.

OUR ORPHANAGE "WORK DAYS."

Both of the Methodist Orphanages in our patronizing territory have announced their "Work Days" for 1914. They have named the same date this year—OCTOBER 17.

The appeals of Brothers Vaughan and Williams in behalf of these noble institutions should touch the hearts and open the purses of all our people. There is no greater work than this, and to neglect it and let it languish for the want of funds would be a deep and lasting reproach to us. Let every pastor in Louisiana and Mississippi call attention to these "Work Days" from his pulpit next Sunday, and let every Methodist in the two States co-operate in making a big success of them. Particularly applicable to the assistance given to orphan and needy children are the meaningful words of the Master: "Inasmuch as ye did it unto one of the least of these my brethren, ye have done it unto me."

DO NOT MISS IT.

Do not fail to read the article appearing in this issue of the Advocate concerning the English method of assigning preachers. Every now and then some brother falls out with our way of doing things and begins to proclaim that we ought to adopt the plan of the Mother Church. To all such, we respectfully commend this article. The fact is, of all the branches of Methodism ours is most like the original type. The lesson that we need to learn, is to beware of discontentment and to know when we are well off.

PERSONAL AND OTHER NOTES.

Rev. W. L. Blackwell writes: "The New Prospect Camp Meeting, on the Vandave charge, will begin October 15, 1914, at 7:30 p.m. All persons interested are cordially invited. Those coming by railway should stop at Ocean Springs and secure a conveyance from there."

In a personal note to the Editor on the 18th inst. Prof. G. L. Harrell, of Millsaps College, says: "We are very much gratified with the attendance upon this session of the College. Dr. A. F. Watkins will go to Nashville, Tenn., next Monday to attend a meeting of the General Board of Missions."

We wish to state that we do not desire any additional communications concerning "Song Books" and the question of denominational versus interdenominational Sunday school work. We think that these subjects have been pretty well threshed out and that nothing new is likely to be said in any further discussion of them.

Last Sunday being Episcopal day at the union Protestant church in Mandeville, La., and the Episcopal rector having gone to Bogalusa to preach, Dr. J. T. Sawyer filled the Mandeville pulpit both in the morning and at night. He was greeted by good congregations who gave close attention to his earnest and helpful messages. The Doctor gives the gospel to any people who desire his services, and is happy in doing so.

A note from Rev. T. W. Adams, presiding elder of the Port Gibson District, states that he is still tussling with la grippe and has been forced to retreat again to Brookhaven, where Sister Adams can look after him. There may be some diseases that are misnamed, but grippe is not one of them, for it certainly "grins" one and holds on. We trust, however, that the worst is over with our esteemed friend and that there are happier days immediately ahead.

We are pleased to know that Rev. W. W. Mitchell, our pastor at West Point, Miss., who some weeks ago was operated on for appendicitis, is rapidly recovering his strength and has the promise of being able to take up his work again at an early date. Brother Mitchell has a strong grip upon the worthy congregation that he is serving, and may be counted upon to build the long-talked-of new church in the Queen City of the Prairies in the near future.

Rev. C. R. A. Brantley, who is serving the Indianola Missions, writes as follows: "We have lately held meetings at Fairview and Faison, at which places we had the assistance of Rev. J. W. Wood and Rev. J. H. Ingram. The sentiment of the entire people in these communities was that the two brethren referred to could preach. They are both godly men and strong expounders of the Word. Eternity alone can reveal the good that was accomplished. We are going forward in this charge. Pray for us."

Rev. J. W. Faulk, writing from Minden, La., reports a very fine meeting at Evergreen, one of the appointments on the Sibley charge, in which most of the preaching was effectively done by Rev. E. G. Wood, of Pollock, La. As a result of this series of services, a church was organized with 54 members, and plans are being formed to erect a house of worship this fall or winter. Brother Faulk has had 71 accessions on his work this year. One who is in a position to know says that he is a hard worker and invariably brings things to pass in his field of operation.

Col. J. M. Johnson, of Acona, Miss., recently visited his sister, Mrs. R. T. Jones, of Greenwood, whose health for several months has been far from good. Mrs. Jones is the youngest and Col. Johnson the oldest of the children of the late Rev. Stephen Johnson, who was one of the pioneers of Methodism in Central Mississippi.

Rev. R. T. Pickett, of Pelahatchie, Miss., sends us the following notice: "The Shiloh Camp Meeting will begin on October 2 and continue for seven days. Everybody is cordially invited to come and enjoy the services. Some of the best talent in the Mississippi Conference will do the preaching and the singing will be in charge of a competent leader. Pelahatchie is the nearest railroad station."

Mrs. J. S. Pigatt, of Slaughter, La., has had severe affliction in her family this year, her father having been called home on July 2, and her mother having been ill for several months. We regret to know this, and we pray that this friend of the Advocate and any others who may be sharing with her the sorrow and anxiety resulting, may have continually with them the presence of the great Comforter.

Rev. C. B. Carter, presiding elder of the Ruston District, has recently been on a ten days' trip to Dallas and Fort Worth. Of his presence in the Lone Star State, the Texas Christian Advocate says: "Rev. Brisco Carter, one of the presiding elders of the Louisiana Conference, but formerly a member of the North Texas Conference, made us a delightful visit. He still feels a keen interest in Texas."

We are indebted to the following friends, to whom acknowledgment has not been made elsewhere, for two or more subscriptions that have been sent in since the last issue of the Advocate: Rev. W. B. Allison, Perth, Miss., 2; Rev. W. R. Harvel, Athens, La., 2; Rev. Chas. E. Downer, Foxworth, Miss., 4; Rev. R. T. Pickett, Pelahatchie, Miss., 3; Rev. T. A. Ferguson, Collins, Miss. (Williamsburg charge), 4.

Miss Clara Chalmers, daughter of Brother C. O. Chalmers, the Publisher of the Advocate, left last week for Nashville, where she entered the Methodist Missionary Training School, it being her purpose to devote her life to mission work. Miss Chalmers has been the book-keeper in the Advocate office for the past three years, and her giving up of that position is a great loss to our working force. She is a consecrated and most superior young lady.

Writing under date of Sept. 14, Rev. T. D. Lipscomb, of Donaldsonville, La., says: "At present my wife and I are assisting Brother Woodward in a revival at Ferriday. We have had 9 accessions and others have said that they will join the Church before we close. About 15 have professed religion, and 40 or more have pledged themselves to live more consecrated lives. Brother Woodward is faithful and true and is in high favor with his people."

Rev. R. T. Nolen writes as follows: "This is my third year on the Lake City and Lintonia charge, though the name has not been continuously the same during my incumbency. We have held four revival meetings this year, in which we were assisted by Rev. J. W. Price of Benton, Rev. W. A. Terry of Madison Station, Rev. B. E. Meigs, of the Franklin Street Church of Jackson, and Rev. D. M. Miller of Drew. All these brethren are good gospel preachers and are efficient helpers in a revival. I have received since Conference 28 persons into the Church and the charge is in a fair, good condition."

Dr. John A. Kern, who for several years has been one of the leading professors in the Biblical Department of Vanderbilt University, has severed his connection with that institution and has accepted a place at Randolph-Macon College. Of all the men who have taught in the Vanderbilt Theological School within the past decade, with the possible exception of Dr. Tillet, Dr. Kern is the most widely known as an author. We are pleased to know that the Church will continue to have the services of this able instructor, and we congratulate Randolph-Macon upon having engaged him as a member of its faculty.

Mrs. J. E. Freeman, of Sherard, Miss., reports the recent death of Mrs. Eugenia Brown Griffin, of Farrell, Miss. She says: "She was a devoted Christian, a faithful friend, and a reader and great admirer of the New Orleans Christian Advocate. She leaves three daughters and one son and a host of friends to mourn their irreparable loss." We sincerely regret to be apprised of the decease of this choice servant of the Master, and we extend sympathy to the bereaved and pray that the Heavenly Father may graciously comfort and sustain them.

After several weeks spent in Chicago, Mr. J. B. Streater, who is one of the foremost laymen of the North Mississippi Conference, is again at home at Black Hawk.

We are informed that Rev. H. T. Young, who recently was transferred from the Texas Avenue Church of Shreveport to Arcadia, La., has been given a cordial reception by his new congregation, and that he has made a most favorable impression.

Dr. and Mrs. W. H. LaPrade, after visiting the family of their son, Rev. W. H. LaPrade, Jr., at Atlanta, Ga., have returned to their home at Hazlehurst, Miss. We are pleased to state that Dr. LaPrade's health is reported to be much improved.

An organization to raise money to help the European war sufferers has been effected at Biloxi, Miss., and without any special solicitation of funds, $100 has been secured. These humanitarian workers will co-operate with the American Red Cross Society.

We are sorry to learn that Rev. R. F. Harrell, our pastor at Centerville, Miss., has recently been quite ill. We have had no late news as to his condition, but we trust that he is much better ere this, and that he will soon completely regain his health and strength.

Rev. Anatole Martin, who spent last Sunday in New Orleans in the interest of the French Mission work, was an appreciated caller at the Advocate office on Monday morning of this week. He stated that his work at Bourg, La., is progressing in an encouraging manner.

Vienna, La., has recently had quite a successful meeting, which was conducted by the pastor, Rev. S. H. Frazier, who resides at Bernice. Brother Frazier came to Louisiana last spring from Millsaps College. He is a choice young man and is rendering excellent service in the field of which he has charge.

Through the kindness of Rev. W. W. Holmes, we have a copy of the first number of "The Signal," a four-page missionary leaflet which will be issued by our General Board of Missions every two months and placed free of cost in the hands of every pastor in the Southern Methodist Church. This folder will come laden with missionary information fresh from the field, and it is to be hoped that our preachers will give it the careful reading that it deserves. We congratulate our Mission Board upon this movement, which we have no doubt will be productive of great good.

By request of Rev. H. M. Johnson, of Harleston, Miss., we publish the following notice: "The Salem Camp Meeting, which is located within the bounds of the Americus charge, will begin on Wednesday night before the second Sunday in October and continue through Sunday, October 11. Most of the preaching will be done by Rev. J. S. Purcell, President of the Mississippi Conference Training School at Montrose. All preachers are cordially invited to attend." Brother Johnson states that he has had good revivals in the churches of his charge and that the work is progressing favorably.

Judge E. V. Hughston, of Greenwood, Miss., was not elected Chancellor in his district in the recent Mississippi State primary, being comparatively unknown personally in the territory comprising it; but his own county, Leflore, gave him a rousing majority, and if the people elsewhere had been as well acquainted with him as those among whom he lives, we feel sure that the result would have been quite different. Judge Hughston is a capable and resourceful lawyer and a high-minded Christian gentleman. He is a leading layman in our Church at Greenwood and was a useful member of our last General Conference.

President R. E. Bobbitt, of Mansfield College, in a letter to the Publisher, says: "Despite the war, we have as many girls as we had last year at this time, and the prospect is that we will have several more by October 1. Our faculty and girls have bought a bale of cotton, being, so far as we know, the first college in the country to join the 'Buy-a-Bale Movement.' Hurrah for Mansfield and Louisiana! We heartily congratulate President Bobbitt, the faculty, and the young ladies upon such an exhibition of patriotism and for setting the other schools of the United States this good example. There is nothing like keeping abreast of the times."

From the Lincoln County Times (Brookhaven, Miss.) of last week, we take the following: "Mr. P. H. Saunders, of New Orleans, a director of the First National Bank of Brookhaven, has resigned the office of president of the Commercial Bank and Trust Company of Laurel, Miss. Mr. Saunders was recently chosen a director in the Federal Reserve Bank of Atlanta, Ga., which, together with his large financial interests in New Orleans, prevents him from giving the time to the Laurel institution which he feels that it deserves." We are gratified to note that Mr. Saunders' abilities as a financier are being given increasing recognition. He is a member of the Rayne Memorial Methodist Church of this city.

Rev. E. L. Cargill began a series of revival services at Rochelle, La., on September 19. He has with him to do the preaching Rev. E. G. Wood, of Pollock, who is quite an efficient pastor-evangelist.

Rev. T. H. Dorsey, of Water Valley, Miss., assisted Rev. J. G. Johnson in a revival meeting at Black Hawk, Miss., last week, where he did some earnest and searching preaching. We are not at this time informed as to the results of the labors of these brethren.

Rev. J. M. Morse, the pastor of the Capitol Street M. E. Church, South, of Jackson, Miss., has lately had under way a revival campaign, with Rev. W. M. Sullivan, of Shubuta, Miss., occupying the pulpit. These brethren are both earnest and capable workers, and the Jackson Daily News stated last week that the services were being well attended and that they were awakening considerable interest.

In spite of our earnest exhortations, some of the brethren are continuing to pour communications in upon us on Tuesday and Wednesday, accompanied with the request, "Please get this in this week's issue of the Advocate." We simply can not do it, brethren. To do so, we would have to stop our working force engaged in making up the paper and go to setting type again, thus delaying the issuance of the Advocate and getting it into the hands of the people later. It is to be feared that, like the "Foolish Virgins," some brethren will be too late in the day of judgment and will be found knocking on the partly closed gates after they have been finally and forever closed. Is it not just as easy to be on time?

Just as we are about to close our forms, Rev. G. A. Morgan, our pastor at Opelousas, La., writing under the date of Sept. 21, sends us the following notice: "Mrs. C. M. Porter died at her home here last Thursday afternoon at 5 o'clock from convulsions. She was sick only a few hours. She leaves a husband and three daughters. Brother Porter carried the body to Starkville, Miss., for interment by the side of her father, Rev. Robert Gilderoy Porter." We greatly regret to chronicle this sad occurrence, and our heart goes out in tender sympathy to the bereaved. May Divine grace be vouchsafed to sustain them in this trying hour!

Rev. H. G. Hawkins, the President, writes: "The Memphis Conference Female Institute at Jackson, Tenn., opened its 72d session on September 16, with an encouraging enrollment. The number of boarding students actually in the dormitory by the night of the first day was greater than the school had at any time last session. Of course, others have engaged rooms and will enter during the next few days. The school has a competent, earnest faculty, and is assured of a splendid student body for the 1914-15 session. Tennessee, Kentucky, Arkansas, Mississippi, Indiana, Florida and Texas are represented in the student enrollment."

What is known as "French Mission Sunday" was observed by the Southern Methodist Churches of New Orleans last Sabbath, the object being to increase interest in the work in the French mission field in Louisiana and to raise funds to help it along. The arrangement of the services was under the direction of Rev. J. G. Snelling, the District Missionary Secretary, and among the special speakers of the occasion were Rev. Martin Hebert, Rev. C. V. Breithaupt, Rev. Anatole Martin, Miss Iles, a deaconess working in the French mission field, and Rev. George D. Parker. These speakers were heard in most of our churches in the city either at the morning or evening hour.

Rev. J. W. Lee, our pastor at Lake Providence, La., who officiated, sends us the following announcement: "Married, at the residence of Mr. and Mrs. E. E. Williamson, at Milliken, La., on September 18, 1914, Rev. Theo. Marvin Bradley, of Shelby, Miss., and Miss Josephine Ingram, of Rosedale, Miss." Brother Lee adds further: "The bride is a most estimable and charming young lady and was visiting friends at Milliken when Brother Bradley came down and claimed her hand. She is very much loved and admired in this section of the country." The Editor has known the groom intimately for a number of years and regards him as an exceedingly choice and promising young minister. We extend to the young couple our most hearty congratulations, and wish them a long, happy and useful life together.

A note from Rev. T. W. Dye, of Coldwater, Miss., written on Sept. 17, stated that Sister Dye was in Memphis with her sister, Mrs. Mattie Garrett, who was critically ill at a hospital in that city. We regretted to be informed of Mrs. Garrett's illness and we trust that ere this her condition has greatly improved. Brother Dye stated that he himself has for some time been troubled with an annoying throat affection. We noted a few weeks ago that he was named as one of the delegates from the Sardis District to the Annual Conference, and we hope that we may have the pleasure next December of looking into his face and gripping his hand at Starkville, where there are many people who remember him most pleasantly.

HAROLD, the sixteen-year-old son of J. J. and Mrs. Cynthia A. Stevenson of Olive Branch, Miss., died at the Baptist Hospital in Memphis on August 20, following an operation for appendicitis. He had been a member of the Methodist Church for four years. He was considered one of the best of boys, and as he lived, so he died. His was a triumphant death. A few hours before he died he read the Twenty-third Psalm and prayed a beautiful pathetic prayer. After that, he said to his father: "Papa, I am going home tonight. Not to our home at Olive Branch, but to my heavenly home, and Jesus is coming to take me to that home." These were about the last words he uttered. What a great consolation to his family, and what an unquestionable testimony to the completeness and sufficiency of the Christian's faith! "Let me die the death of the righteous, and let my last end be like his."

T. H. PORTER.

The entire community was made sad by the death of Brother BERRY E. SELF on May 6, 1914. He was born on Feb. 24, 1864. He professed faith in Christ and joined the Church several years ago under the pastorate of Rev. V. C. Curtis. He was happily married to Miss Julia Ellis on Nov. 27, 1905. He was a good husband, a good neighbor, and was useful and helpful in his community. He loved his Church and was a friend to the preacher. Just awhile before he died his health improved and he felt that he was going to get well. Sunday came and he went to church. At the close of the service he said to his pastor: "I want to say something to the people." He said: "I want to thank you all for your kindness to me when I was sick. I want to beseech you all to live close to God and be ready when the summons comes. I am nearer to God now than ever before. All the week the chorus of song No. 3 in Revival Praises has been ringing in my soul." He asked his wife, our organist, to play it. She and the congregation sang it, and then he said, "I have that peace in my soul to-day."

He is gone. Oh, how we miss him! But we sorrow not as those who have no hope. We have the sweet hope of the resurrection. We shall see him again when this mortal shall have put on immortality.

W. J. BURT.

EDMO LIVINGSTON HARMON was born in St. Landry Parish, La., on Oct. 29, 1840, and died at Crowley, La., on Sept. 3, 1914. He married Miss Mary Eugenia Hayes on Dec. 7, 1865. In early manhood Brother Harmon joined the Plaquemine and Brulee Methodist Episcopal Church, South. His country home was near this Church, which was one of the best known churches in Southwest Louisiana. His home was always the preacher's home. On one occasion, Brother Manly, our blind preacher, was asked to help in a revival at the Plaquemine and Brulee Church, and his answer was, "I will come if you will let me stay at Brother Harmon's home." No doubt the following former pastors remember the hospitality of "Uncle Edmo and Aunt Mary": Rev. J. F. Wynn, Brothers Porter, Isbell, Davis, Brown, Schuhle, Carter, Nesom, and others.

Bro. Harmon had no children of his own, but he and Aunt Mary reared two nephews and two nieces of hers. One of the nephews, Henry Bascom Chevis, died in young manhood. His brother, W. C. Chevis, of New Orleans, is a leading steward at Rayne Memorial Church and a noted journalist. His nieces were at his bedside when he died. Brother Harmon was buried from the church in Crowley and a large number of his relatives, friends and loved ones came out to pay their tribute of appreciation to one of God's faithful servants: "Well done, thou good and faithful servant!"

C. D. ATKINSON

Once again the death angel has invaded our fast thinning Confederate ranks and carried away from us our friend and brother, Dr. SION HENRY LAWRENCE.

Dr. Lawrence, the son of Thompson and Cary Buchanan Lawrence, was born in Jonesboro, N. C. on May 10, 1844. Dr. Lawrence moved to Benela, Miss., in 1872, where he taught school and engaged in the mercantile business until he began the practice of medicine in 1876. He was married to Miss Addie Buchanan on Feb. 7, 1877. There were born to them seven children. Two died in infancy. The five surviving are Edre, Sion, Oscar, Clara, and Ethelyn. A great and good man has fallen. Dr. Lawrence was a man of strong convictions, with the courage to stand by them. He was upright, honorable and sincere. His integrity was not questioned by those who knew him. Those who knew him best loved him most. He was a model husband, a kind, indulgent father, and a true friend. I received him into the M. E. Church, South, by letter in 1882. During nearly all of his church life he was a steward and was ever faithful to the trust. I was his pastor at different times for eight years and always found him true to God and his cause.

Dr. Lawrence was a man of many interests. He was a member of the Mississippi Medical Association, a bank president, a trustee, and the secretary of the Board of Trustees of the Calhoun County Agricultural High School, a merchant and a Mason. He was a member of the James Gordon Camp of Confederate Veterans, at Pittsboro, Miss.

Dr. Lawrence died at his home in Derma, Miss., on Jan. 26, 1914. The good wife has lost her best friend, and no children ever lost a better father. The town of Derma will miss him very much. He sweetly sleeps in the cemetery at Benela, awaiting the resurrection morn. Weep not, wife and children! Let us all live so as to meet him in the sweet by and by.

R. P. GOAR.

MRS. MARY BLISS HIGH.

(An extract from a tribute contained in the Tupelo Journal of Sept. 4, 1914.)

Died, at her home on Church Street, in this city, at 5:30 o'clock Monday afternoon, August 31, 1914, Mrs. Mary Bliss High, in her 65th year.

Mrs. High was the daughter of the late A. H. and Louisa Raymond and was born at Richmond, Miss., and was reared at Verona. On the 12th day of May, 1869, she was married to H. E. High and moved to Tupelo, Miss., where the family have since resided. From this union one son, S. J. High, who still survives, was born. There was never a union that was more congenial, or from which years of more complete happiness followed. Her home was her sanctuary where love prevailed at all times.

Mrs. High was a great lover of flowers and the place of her residence was constantly adorned with the choicest selections. How often has the sick room been enlivened by the choicest contributions from her flower garden, while the saddened home has been made to feel the kindly touch of her responsive nature.

In the neighborhood she was a helpmeet that all were at liberty to appeal to and it was her greatest pleasure to respond in every way to the sick and needy. She was a true and loyal friend, and in return she held the love and confidence of all who knew her.

Mrs. High became a member of the Methodist Church during her girlhood. She was a charter member of the Methodist Church and Sunday school in Tupelo. Her presence at all services and her active participation in all of the affairs of the church manifested her great love for the cause and her zeal in the work. For many years the Aid Society gathered once a week at her home, and there through her counsel and aid great help was extended to the causes of the Church.

In her death the husband and son have sustained an irreparable loss, the Church one of its most ardent and faithful members, the city one of its most beloved women. The sympathy of all go out to the bereaved ones.

EPWORTH LEAGUE NOTICE.

Dear Fourth Vice-Presidents of the Epworth League: The Board of Missions of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, has set aside Sunday, Sept. 27, as "Mission Study Rally Day." The Board is especially desirous that all Leagues observe the day. We want missions to be emphasized this year as never before. Last year approximately 40,000 Southern Methodists studied Missions by text-book. We can easily make it 60,000 this year. Shall we do it?

To this end, we would urge that each individual League observe "Mission Study Rally Day" as outlined in the September Era, and we trust that as a result at least one Mission Study Class will be organized in each chapter. Study Missions, get interested in Missions, and Christian stewardship will follow.

Let us make "Mission Study Rally Day" a great day. If you cannot observe September 27, observe one Sunday in the near future as "Mission Study Rally Day."

I shall appreciate a letter from each Fourth Vice-President who reads this letter.

Yours for a missionary League,

HARRIET LEECH.

Fourth Vice-Pres., Miss. Conf. League.

CHURCH EXTENSION HAND BOOK

The Church Extension Hand Book for 1914 has just come to my desk. It is beautifully gotten up, a mine of information, and a wonderful record of thirty-two years of achievement in building.

A total of $4,305,989.17 invested, including donations and loans, to $994 churches and 2370 parsonages. What record can surpass it? The bare figures speak eloquently of years of laborious toil by the Secretaries and their staff, and of self-denying effort by our preachers and people. No other agency could, in a little less than a single generation, have rehabilitated our Church as she rose from the ashes of a devastated civilization. Then what better base line could be built from which we may work for, and hasten on; the coming of the Kingdom of God?

The Church and the home are the two focal centers and re-enforcing points of Christian civilization and personal life. What could be more potential for good than A GREAT LOAN FUND OF ONE MILLION DOLLARS to be constantly at work by day and by night, building churches and parsonages? The Secretary already reports $560,582 on this fund. One dollar from 500,000 men and women, or one-fourth of our membership, would put us at the million mark, and immensely strengthen his hands.

Let us not as a Church, "seek for ease, which is the portion of babes, not of men." Seek for tasks, hard tasks, for the doing of which strength is needed, and in the doing of which strength will come.

W. R. LAMBUTH.

A DREADFUL TRIO.

There are three common diseases, Scrofula, Catarrh and Consumption. The first and second commonly go hand in hand, and sometimes the third joins them—a dreadful trio!

Why call attention to them? Simply to tell what will cure scrofula and catarrh and prevent consumption, according to incontrovertible evidence. It is Hood's Sarsaparilla.

In the fall the progress of these diseases is most rapid, and we should advise that treatment with this great medicine be begun at once.—Adv.

Tidings From the Field

Rienzi Circuit, Miss.

Dear Dr. Meek: Allow me a little space in your valuable paper for a short report of my work. Up to this time, I have held only two of my own meetings. My people at these places asked me to conduct the services myself, which I did. The Lord wonderfully blessed us. As a result 19 souls were saved and added to our Church. I assisted Brother E. C. Sullivan in a meeting at Marvin Chapel, on the Kosciusko circuit, where my father and mother sleep. There we had 10 additions to the Church. To God be all the glory.—B. P. Fullilove, P. C.

Oak Grove Charge, La. Conf.

On the fifth Sunday in August we began a meeting at old Midway Church with Brother J. A. Taylor, a local preacher on this charge, to do the preaching and the pastor to lead in the singing and exhortations. Brother Taylor is a faithful, humble, submissive, local preacher, farming for a livelihood, but a man who is an honor to Methodism wherever he goes. He is well informed on the doctrines of Methodism and the Bible mode of baptism. He is good help in private homes, leaving the people with whom he comes in contact more spiritual and better informed. For 8 days he fought sin in every form and in a forceful way. As a result of the meeting many souls were brought to Christ and 56 were received into our Church, 9 into the Baptist Church, and 8 children were baptized. The Oak Grove charge is gradually building up. We have received since Conference 108 members into the Church and raised $1000 for the improvement of the parsonage and churches. With two more meetings to hold, we hope to accomplish much more ere the Conference year shall close.—G. D. Purcell, P. C.

Houston, Miss.

We are moving along in our fourth year in this rapidly growing town, which is situated in a splendidly developing territory. Our people are building good roads in four directions from the town. They are costing about $5000 a mile, being graded, crowned, and rockbed. They are up to the best standard. We have received 130 members during the four years of our pastorate. Our people have added 5 new Sunday school rooms to the church, so that of 11 classes in our Sunday school, only 3 are forced to recite in the main auditorium. The church improvements have amounted to some $1600. Our Sunday school is a joy. Five young men have been licensed to preach and exhort, and two others are candidates. One of the five is a supply and will go to college next year; another is now at Millsaps College, and another is in the high school and will go to college next year. The other two are in the high school and conduct prayer meetings, lead in public prayer and do other training work as opportunity offers. It will be only a short time now until we meet at Starkville. May the Father of us all keep us faithful and true.—R. P. Neblett.

Vaughan (Miss.) Charge.

Dear Brother Meek: On Thursday before the first Sunday in August we began our meeting at Deasonville and continued eight days. We had a splendid meeting. Seven were added to the Church and the whole church was drawn closer to God. A work was accomplished that will stand. Strong men were caused to take a stand for God and the Church. These men are standing by their pastor, as they promised to do, and are doing great good in helping to put down evil. May God bless them! Rev. J. W. Ramsey, of Mendenhall, did the preaching. Brother Ramsey is a fine preacher and is not afraid to call sin by its name. On the third Sunday in August we began our meeting at Fletcher's Chapel. Rev. B. E. Meigs, of the Rankin Street Church, Jackson, did the preaching. His sermons were fine and to the point. He does not compromise with sin in the least. He preaches what he believes to be the truth, regardless of whom it hits. We had a good meeting. The fifth Sunday marked the beginning of a fine meeting at Vaughan Station. Rev. T. H. King, of Bogue Chitto, did the preaching with power. I think this was one of the best meetings we have had. Every service was marked by the presence of the Holy Spirit. The preaching was the kind that brings the Church closer to the Lord. Our people are more in harmony with God since the meeting. Souls were saved and the church was spiritually refreshed. We begin on the second Sunday in September a series of services at Dover. Rev. M. L. White, of Flora, is to assist me there. "We are marching on the upward way." Pray for us.—J. B. King, P. C.

Benton, Miss.

Dear Dr. Meek: If you will be so good as to allow me space in the Christian Advocate, I will report some of the visible results of our revivals. We have held all four. On August 9 our first revival began at Midway Church. Brother Osmond S. Lewis, of Brandon, did all the preaching and did it to the satisfaction of all. The Church was considerably revived. There was 1 accession to the Church and others are expected to follow. On Thursday night, August 13, we held the first service of our revival at Benton. Rev. J. W. Ramsey, of Mendenhall, preached every sermon, and the meeting resulted in 5 accessions on profession of faith. Brother Ramsey did some very fine preaching of the very highest evangelistic order, and very spiritual. On August 22 we held our third quarterly meeting on the Benton charge in Tranquil Church, and the revival continued for 6 days following that meeting. Rev. P. D. Hardin, our presiding elder, did all the preaching, and God blessed every message to the good of the Church and sinners. We had 5 accessions on profession of faith and 1 by certificate, the Church was wonderfully revived, and many were awakened to a sense of their responsibility. Our fourth and last meeting began in the Zeiglerville Church on Sunday morning, August 30, at 11 o'clock. We had the able assistance of Rev. M. L. White, of Flora, and the meeting was a success in every way. Oh, how Brother White did preach! (You know, Dr. Meek, he is the only White preacher in the Mississippi Conference). We certainly had a very fine revival, one of the best I was ever in. It helped the preacher in charge a great deal; he now feels more spiritual than ever before. We had 46 accessions on profession of faith, and a good many reclamations. The church has been wonderfully built up by the revival—not only numerically, but spiritually. My work is moving along well, all things considered, and we are profoundly grateful to our Heavenly Father, the Giver of every good and perfect gift.—J. W. Price, P. C.

MISS TUCKER TO BE AT KENTWOOD.

Beginning on October 11, we are to have Miss Emma L. Tucker with us in an evangelistic meeting at Kentwood, La., who will have an excellent singer with her. As far as I know the workers of our Church, she ranks as one of the greatest spiritual forces in it, and carries a blessing to every church in which she works. It is possible that some of the other pastors would like to secure her services while she is in this section. If so, they may write me and I will forward their letters to her. P. O. LOWREY, Kentwood, La.

LOUISIANA NOTES.

By P. O. Lowrey.

A recent happy Sunday school event was the graduation of a Teacher-training Class of ten at Plattenville, the site of the Baker-Wakefield Cypress Co. Mrs. H. L. Baker, the teacher of the class and the wife of the chairman of the Louisiana Conference Sunday School Board, served a nice banquet on the occasion. Rev. T. D. Lipscomb and family and Miss Olive Baker being present as guests of honor. Miss Olive is a Mansfield College student and a member of Prof. Bobbitt's college Teacher-training Class, and Brother Lipscomb is pastor at that point, which is on the Donaldsonville charge.

Beginning on the fourth Sunday in September with an appropriate missionary program, the Kentwood Sunday school will observe the week in a general rally during which time attractive programs will be rendered on the several phases of Sunday school work, and the following addresses will be made: "The Value of the Sunday School to the Future Church," by Mr. H. A. Strickland of Kent's Mill; "Sunday School Teachers and Teaching," by Prof. W. A. Peters of Cheshrough; "Sunday School Organization and Management," by Prof. Caldwell of Kentwood; "Home Co-operation in Sunday School Work," by Prof. Sholar of Greensburg; "Organizing and Teaching Adult Classes," by Rev. J. F. Foster of Amite; "The Teen-age Problems and the Primary Work" (each one address), by Miss Susie M. Juden of New Orleans. The pastor will preach the opening sermon on the fourth (Missionary) Sunday, and Mr. Van Carter will have charge the closing day, the first Sunday in October, and will install the officers and teachers at the evening service. On this last day certificates of promotion will be given, class changes made, cradle roll babies baptized, and a Sunday school love feast held (emphasizing the fraternal side of Sunday school work) at the Sunday school hour, and at eleven o'clock the prepared Rally Day program of the Sunday School Board will be rendered by the school, with an address by Mr. Carter of New Orleans. The Baptist and Presbyterian pastors will each conduct devotional services during the rally, and each of their choirs will furnish a night's program of special music. The Osyka (Miss.) quartette will furnish music for three of the services, and the Kent's Mill Sunday school for one. During the week the whole town will be canvassed for new scholars, one person being in charge of each Avenue with side streets, the women working the residences and the men the business sections. This membership committee will report at each night's service and such scholars as have been secured will be introduced and a brief recognition service carried out, and those enrolled will be put in charge of their several teachers. As one means of enlisting the church membership and inviting friends, neat programs, with the names of all the officers and teachers of the school, will be printed and mailed out; these may also be kept as a souvenir of the occasion.

WILLIAMSBURG CHARGE, MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

I think that a report from all of my meetings on this work would not be time lost, as I have finished them all for this year. So I will begin with the first and report them as they came. Brother P. H. Howse came to me at Santee on July 22 and preached there four days, and in his usual strong way he did an effective work. God was with us there. We had a good revival among the members of the Church, and all were greatly revived, made better, and drawn nearer to God and to each other. There were no additions. On July 26 Brother G. H. Galloway, of Hattiesburg, came to me at Good Hope and faithfully labored with us there for six days, the power of God being felt by the people in every sermon. It is needless to tell you that Brother Galloway was loved by all the people, for that goes without saying; and I feel that the work that he did for the Church there will be of lasting good. We organized a Sunday school and established some family altars, as fruits of the meeting. There were 9 who professed conversion, and 3 joined the Church. Brother Galloway gave special attention to the necessity and possibility of living a life above sin, using the First Epistle of John as his authority. From it he would give special exhortations before each sermon and all the congregation was led to see things in a new light, not excluding the pastor. Again, on September 15 we began our meeting here in the old town of Williamsburg. We had with us Brother M. M. Black, one of the best preachers that we have in the Mississippi Conference. I was somewhat surprised to see how Brother Black won the hearts of the people in such a short time, but I soon found out the reason. He proved himself to be a man of God, exerting wonderful power in every sermon. He did some great preaching and a fine work, and the results go to prove it beyond all doubts. During the meeting we received 22 into the Church, some by baptism, some by faith, and one came to us from the Presbyterian Church. It was a hard fight for the Master, but we were brave and fought manfully on, and God gave us a wonderful victory. We have just closed our meeting at Oak Vale, where Brother W. J. Dawson was with us. He served that people, or rather some of them, sixteen years ago, and every one who knew him was glad to see his good face again. He came to us with the same strong power that you always find him in possession of, and good results followed. We had a splendid meeting there and on the first day there were 3 who joined the Church. There was a good feeling from the very beginning. Four united with the Church, 1 by letter and 3 by baptism. I feel that the church is much stronger than it was before, and more ready and able to serve God. Nearly every one made a promise to be more faithful in the future. I feel now that we have had a very successful year in all respects at every Church. Of course, our success has not been as great as I should like to have seen it, but God has been with us and I feel that he has blessed my feeble ministry all the year.—T. A. Ferguson, P. C.

Dear Brethren: The Lord is graciously blessing us in the glorious work of his great Church. Let us show our gratitude by doing our utmost for a record-breaking report at the Fourth Quarterly Conference. Let the pastors and the officials carefully note the questions to be answered at this conference and he prepared. We have already had several hundred accessions this year: shall we not work and pray for at least one thousand by Conference? Our District headed the list on benevolent collections last year, having paid 93 per cent of the assessment: let us make it 100 per cent this year. With brotherly love,

MISSION STUDY.

Remember that October is the month for a mission study campaign.

Organize a mission study class in every auxiliary—adult, young people, and children's.

Every woman, young person, and child should be enlisted in the study of the conditions of life in our own land, and in lands across the sea. It will mean broader intelligence, wider sympathies, and enriched spiritual life.

A forward step in mission study has been taken by the selection for the year 1914-15 of a general topic applicable to both home and foreign missions. The topic and the slogan selected are "The Social Force of Christian Missions" and "Christ for Every life and All of Life."

This theme is being treated in the following books, which will be found interesting and helpful:

"The New Home Missions." By Rev. H. Paul Douglas.

"The Social Aspect of Foreign Missions." By Dr. W. H. P. Faunce.

The books are the logical outcome of a nation-wide, a world-wide development of a new social thought, born of a new consciousness of what Jesus Christ intended to teach when he said, "Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself."

"The New Era in Asia." By John Sherwood Eddy. A study of the Christian problems in Asia leading us to understand the movements and tendencies of Asia as a whole.—Missionary Bulletin.

AN INTERESTING LETTER.

Dear Mrs. Harrell: When I last wrote you I was planning to go to Junaluska, but was so afraid that something might prevent at the last moment that very little was said about it until I was ready to go to the depot. After thirty hours upon the road, we arrived safely at this beautiful place in the heart of the mountains. A week spent there was most inspiring and helpful. The association with returned missionaries, secretaries and members of the Council, together with deaconesses and Conference officers from many States, at this great gathering of missionary workers, was more pleasant and profitable than I can say. We can get more joy from the Master's work than from any other source. One missionary who was especially interesting to me was Mrs. Calahan from Japan; she has been there twenty-four years, and is at home now for two years until her youngest boy is old enough to leave in a college. We traveled together eighteen hours and the time I had the privilege of spending with her was worth the trip.

At this great missionary Conference each program was full of interest. The mission study classes were well attended. I took "The Child in the Midst," which is a beautiful study of child life; and which shows that still there is a dark side of child life in foreign lands, and it points out our responsibility to these little ones and their ignorant mothers. Any auxiliary could have an interesting class among the ladies if this book were obtained and used; such pretty charts could also be made upon the subject.

A great deal was said at Junaluska about the Week of Prayer, urging every auxiliary to observe it, as the combined forces are so much needed now while all the work is so much upset by this dreadful war.

I enjoyed the beautiful mountain scenery, but it is not more attractive than the Gulf as I sit watching the waves play on the beach.

Lovingly,

MRS. R. E. JOHNSON.

Gulfport, Miss.

NOTES FROM THE HATTIESBURG DISTRICT.

Through a mistake, the report for the Foreign Department for this district was left out of the minutes of the Conference at Laurel. The total of all finances for 1913 was $4751.40, instead of $4125.77 as given.

We have 28 adult auxiliaries, 21 Junior departments, and 5 Young People's societies—54 organizations. All of these are doing good work.

During 1913 twenty-three boxes were sent to the Orphans' Home. Total cash and value of the boxes was $908.25. Eight boxes were sent to the Wesley Houses. Total cash and value of the boxes $123.60.

One little auxiliary of only four members raised $154.35 during the fourth quarter, $122 of which was used to send two girls to the Vashti Home.

One auxiliary of ten members sent in a financial report for 1913 of $297.95; of this amount $56 was used to help pay the pastor's salary, $17 went to the Mississippi Conference collections, $6 to the preacher who assisted in their revival meeting, and $20 to the district parsonage. And this year these workers are supporting a girl in a school in China. They have also added three Sunday school rooms to their church, and have remodeled their parsonage. This same auxiliary has a very fine Junior Department. These Juniors picked cotton last fall and sent $2.50 that they earned in this way to the Orphans' Home, and paid $10.60 for little chairs for the Primary Department of the Sunday school. They, too, are helping with the support of the girl in China.

Another society of only a few members has added two Sunday school rooms to their church this year. There are many others who have done the finest kind of work, one auxiliary paying during the second quarter of 1914 $850 on the church to which it belongs; another gave $99 on the church and sent a box, valued at $72, to a girl from our Orphans' Home at college. There are in our bounds many heroic women whose hearts are in this glorious work.

I should like to thank the loyal, faithful ladies of the Hattiesburg District for their co-operation and strong support given me through the past quarter, which was my first quarter as district secretary. Almost every report reached me promptly, and splendid reports they were, showing that God's work is not suffering in the hands of our women. I should like to make an appeal, too, on behalf of our Conference pledges. Let us every one pay unto the Lord our vows, and may the end of this present quarter find it all in hand! To Mrs. J. R. Ellis, my kind and considerate predecessor, I desire to return thanks for all that her aid, her sympathy, and her prayers have meant to me. May God abundantly bless us all and make us a blessing, and may his work go forward in our hands!

MRS. W. R. RAWLS,

Dist. Secretary.

TO MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE WORKERS.

In the second quarter's report of the Council Treasurer we find that the Home Department of the Mississippi Conference has paid only $5.90 to the Scarritt Endowment fund during the quarter, and in the Foreign Department only $7.70 has been paid. These amounts are far from what they should be. Every auxiliary in the Conference is asked to pay only $2 a year from each department to this endowment fund. If the auxiliaries in the Mississippi Conference alone would do their duty this fund would increase several hundred dollars.

The presidents of our auxiliaries hold very responsible positions. Much depends on their wise guidance.

Many auxiliaries would be glad to do more than they are doing if they only knew of the requirements. At our Annual Meeting, which was held in Laurel the last of April, with only a few exceptions, the auxiliaries, through their delegates, pledged a certain amount to the support of the work in the Home Department and a certain amount to the Foreign Department. Those who have charge of affairs in the Mississippi Conference thought that we were as good as our word; so they planned according to our promises. Now the responsibility is upon us. Will we meet it? There is only one more quarter after this month. Have you paid all your dues? Is three-fourths of your pledge in the hands of the respective treasurers? This is not our work, but it has been entrusted to us by him who is able to save to the uttermost.

MRS. J. L. NEILL.

SOME NORTH MISSISSIPPI REVIVALS.

Dear Dr. Meek: I spent the week following the fourth Sunday in July with our faithful and efficient pastor, Rev. M. L. Ward, of the Wheeler charge, at Hodges chapel, where God graciously blessed our people and gave us 9 additions to the Church. A noble people this is. Also it was my pleasure to be with this pastor and his people at Shady Grove, beginning the first Sunday in September. God met with us from time to time and wonderfully blessed us. The church was revived; there were some 25 conversions and 20 additions to our membership. To God be all the glory! The pastor of the Wheeler charge is in high favor with his people, and they are a fine flock. There seems to be there a spirit of development along all the lines of Church work. Brother Ward is one of the busy pastors of the Corinth District. Some few years ago he was my pastor and I loved him then, and love him still.

This $1 Cane Stripper Does Five Men's Work

Here's the "Boss" Cane Stripper, the hardest working hand on the place—does five men's work. Strips off every leaf close to the stalk. Length 3½ feet. Long enough to reach the tallest stalk, but not unhandy. TRY IT AT OUR RISK. It's what you want. If your dealer doesn't keep it, try it out at our risk. Just send $1 and we will ship it parcel post, prepaid. Try it out thoroughly on your own work. If you don't find it the best investment you ever saw and that one man with it can do as much work as five men by hand, then send it back at our expense and we'll refund your money. ### BLUFF CREEK (LA.) CAMP MEETING.

Dear Dr. Meek: The Bluff Creek Camp Meeting closed on Sept. 6. Many of the oldest tent holders and members of the Association said that this was the best camp meeting that has been held for many years, and one of the best ever held at that place. Rev. Thos. J. Norsworthy, the evangelist, did most of the preaching. He is a man of God, fearless, earnest, filled with the Holy Spirit, and a great preacher. He is a loyal Southern Methodist, teaching, preaching, and living up to the doctrines of the M. E. Church, South. He is true to his brethren in the ministry and a great friend to the New Orleans Christian Advocate, speaking of it many times in high terms, urging the people to read it and securing subscribers to it. God wonderfully blesses and uses Brother Norsworthy. There were more than 100 professions of religion, 15 accessions to the Church, and 20 children and one adult were baptized. Almost all of the professions were made by church members. While there were some wonderful immediate results, we believe that the greatest good accomplished was the fact that as a result of the camp meeting men, women, and children have gone home with the determination to live better, to be better husbands, wives, sons, and daughters, to be better church members and workers, to give more liberally, to be more loyal to their home church and to the Church of God everywhere. Family altars were established and many people promised to pray for each other. We believe that the fires kindled within the hearts of men, women, and children in this meeting will continue to burn, catching as it were from heart to heart and home to home until they shall be mingled with the fires of God's love on the eternal shore.

Hundreds and hundreds—I believe we may safely say thousands—of souls have been born from above on this sacred old camp ground. The fruits borne in this camp meeting this year refute the false idea "that the camp meetings have seen their day and are a thing of the past." We had conversions at the "mourners' bench" (and ought to have them at all "mourners' benches"); so we are not ready to discard the altar. The Bible was preached and accepted in the "good old-fashioned way"—the way all our preachers should preach it, and the people would then accept the truth and a great revival of religion would sweep the world, and none of our preachers or people would ever be heard to say, "I don't believe in revivals."

Donaldsonville, La.

COLUMBIA, LA.

Dear Brother Meek: We have just held the greatest revival of my life at Vivian, where my brother, J. A. Alford, is the pastor. The singing was led by Rev. J. S. Duke, of Jackson, Miss. There were 70 names given for membership, and all were received but 6. Two or three went to the Baptist Church because of their belief in the immersion theory of baptism, and 2 or 3 were considered too young to receive adult baptism. Fully 64 became members of our Church. I believe 43 were received by baptism, the others having already been baptized. A few were received by certificate, a few by restoration, and perhaps 2 or 3 from other Churches. The greater part of the number joined by profession of faith in Christ and were, for the most part, young people just grown or in their teens. It was an inspiring scene when this large class lined up across the spacious building (an old skating rink) and declared for a godly life. We were forced to leave the church and seek a place to accommodate the large crowds. For two weeks the meeting was well attended day and night, often taxing the seating capacity of the building used, in which had been placed the pews out of the Methodist and Presbyterian Churches, in addition to the stationary seats around the walls. It was estimated that 400 to 500 people attended at some of the night services. The Methodist and Baptist churches of the town had planned to have their revivals at the same time. The Baptists received 40 or 50 members, making considerably over 100 members added to the two Churches. Our pastor and his people in this little "Oil City" are happy and hopeful. . . . Prior to this meeting, it was my privilege to assist Brother C. A. Schultz at Barlow, Miss. Old people, as well as the pastor, declared it was the best revival they had witnessed in many years. Before going to Mississippi, I held my meeting at Boeuf River, assisted by my father, who lives at Magnolia, Miss. He did the preaching at the day services and the pastor had charge of the night work. We received 12 new members which make 60 additions on the Columbia charge this year. . . . We have two more revivals to hold. On the third Sunday in October we will have with us here at Columbia Rev. Dan Kelley, one of the regularly appointed evangelists of the Mississippi Conference. I have seen 150 people unite with our Church during this Conference year in meetings held on my work and with other brethren. We give God the praise and take courage. I desire the prayers of my brethren for even greater things in the work of establishing the Master's kingdom.—J. Martin Alford.

IN DEFENSE OF THE NEW SONGS.

Having just read an article in the New Orleans Christian Advocate of Sept. 10 from J. F. Campbell in regard to songs, I must reply.

Now, I am no gifted writer or speaker, nor do I care to enter into a lengthy discussion or argument about this thing. But I feel that the "new songs," as he calls them, need some defense, hence I will give my ideas concerning the same.

Please bear in mind I am not going to "knock" the old songs, because there are some of them that are just as dear to me, probably, as they are to Brother Campbell. In those days of long ago, we didn't have so many songs to select from, nor could we read music then as generally as we can now; consequently when we learned a song we kept singing it until we almost felt that it was written by inspiration; and also, the old songs our mothers sang are dear to us and will be as long as we are able to hear them.

But this would be a very dark and gloomy old world to me if you should set me down with a Methodist Hymnal and tell me I must never sing or hear sung anything except the songs that it contains. It is true that there are some songs in our new books that are not very good for church, Sunday school, or anything else; but if you will take our Methodist Hymnal and read the poems carefully, I think you will find some thoughts expressed that will not meet your approval in every respect.

Now, the one who wrote the song, "I Shall Know Him," probably was expressing his own sentiments and did not take into consideration the other fellow's ideas. It would be utterly impossible to write a religious poem which would meet the approval of all denominations; so one can't expect to please everybody. But if you will take the words of such songs as "Hold to God's Unchanging Hand," "In That House of The Soul," "Hallelujah, We Shall Rise," "My Hope is Centered There," and many others I could mention, and compare them with the old songs, I believe that you will agree that music is on the upgrade. If you have never heard these songs or sung them, you don't know what you have missed.

And just think if we should use nothing but the Methodist Hymnal we would be deprived of the great and glorious privilege of listening to and singing some of the good old soul-stirring songs.

Let's not "knock" the new songs

School of Theology of Our New University

ATLANTA, GEORGIA.

This school, established by order of the last General Conference, and owned and controlled by the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, will open its doors for students on September 23, 1914. Full courses leading to the degree of B. D., and special courses, leading to a Certificate in Theology, will be offered.

A faculty composed of men of accurate scholarship, evangelical spirit, and proved efficiency and power as preachers, has been organized.

Every facility will be provided for the adequate instruction of the young ministers of the Church. Scholarships are now available for worthy men who need such assistance; and the Bureau of Self-Help will be at the service of students desiring to pay part of their expenses by outside work.

WATCH YOUR HEART IF YOU WISH HEALTH.

Weak hearts are more common than weak stomachs, lungs, eyes, backs, or kidneys. Every time your heart misses a beat your life is being shortened. Heart disease, taken in its early stages, is quite easy to relieve; but every day that treatment is delayed the relief becomes more difficult.

Dr. Miles' Heart Remedy taken in conjunction with the Nervine, or alone, has proven very efficient in relieving heart disorders.

The Rev. Geo. W. Kiracofe, of Keller, Va., in this connection stated as follows:—

"It has been many years since I was cured of heart trouble by Dr. Miles' Heart Remedy and Nervine. I am just as sound as a dollar in that organ today. Before I took these remedies my breathing had been short and at times difficult; there were sharp pains about my heart, accompanied by fluttering which would make me feel faint and languid. The least excitement or worry would unnerve me. The trouble grew steadily worse. Doctors' prescriptions did me no good. But since using Dr. Miles' Remedies all symptoms were removed and have never returned since."

If you suspect that you have heart trouble avoid all dangerous delays.

It costs you nothing to try these remedies if you are not benefited. All you have to do is to return the empty bottle to the druggist and he will refund your money.

Rheumatism

A Home Cure Given by One Who Had It

In the spring of 1893 I was attacked by Muscular and Inflammatory Rheumatism. I suffered as only those who have it know, for over three years. I tried remedy after remedy, and doctor after doctor, but such relief as I received was only temporary. Finally, I found a remedy that cured me completely, and it has never returned. I have given it to a number who were terribly afflicted and even bedridden with Rheumatism, and it effected a cure in every case.

I want every sufferer from any form of rheumatic trouble to try this marvelous healing power. Don't send a cent; simply mail your name and address and I will send it free to try. After you have used it and it has proven itself to be that long-looked-for means of curing your Rheumatism, you may send the price of it, one dollar, but, understand, I do not want your money unless you are perfectly satisfied to send it. Isn't that fair? Why suffer any longer when positive relief is thus offered you free? Don't delay. Write to-day.

IN MEMORY OF OUR MOTHER.

On Wednesday morning, July 29, 1914, the pure spirit of Mrs. Carrie Cobb Ellis, wife of Rev. H. Ellis, and our precious mother, took its flight to God who gave it.

Hers had been a life of noble self-sacrifice from her girlhood. Gifted as an author, she laid her talents upon the altar and used them for her Master's glory.

As the Corresponding Secretary of the Foreign Missionary Society of the Northwest Texas Conference, she traveled extensively organizing societies and aiding in many ways in creating a missionary spirit. She was truly a missionary at heart and her interests and prayers were world-wide. Her heart went out for the lost both at home and abroad, and though she never went to foreign fields she was a home missionary in word and in deed. As a token of appreciation of her work in the cause of missions, Mrs. Hayes, the president of the Foreign Missionary Society of the Southern Methodist Church, gave to her the watch of her daughter who laid down her life in the foreign field.

As the wife of a Methodist itinerant, whether in the station, on the district, or upon the circuit, she made a pleasant home for her husband and children. It was a home where the young life of the community loved to gather and her influence for good was largely felt among the young people. They came to her knowing that they would always find a sympathetic friend and adviser. But—

"When such a lovely story,
As that of her life appears,
It crowns all womanhood with glory;
And when it fades there's no room for tears.

The good her life has wrought will perish never,
And though the worker be laid away
to her rest,
The work remains forever.
Would we could do the work she aside hath lain,
Take up the song where she broke off
the strain."

Her prayers were prevailing and many souls found Christ through her intercessions. One, speaking of her, said, "I had rather hear her pray than to hear a sermon." All felt that "God was there when mother prayed."

"Farewell awhile, thou sainted one,
Earth narrows up—the mother gone—
We sorely miss thee!
Ascending with the rising sun,
The course of life serenely run,
A beautiful life and duty done,
Redeemed, transplanted to the throne,
The victory won, the jeweled crown,
The eternal Sabbath now begun—
And yet we miss thee!"

In the Bible she loved so well was left this fragment of a poem, the swan song of the parting spirit. Though unfinished, we feel that it is completed in heaven and the prayer is answered:

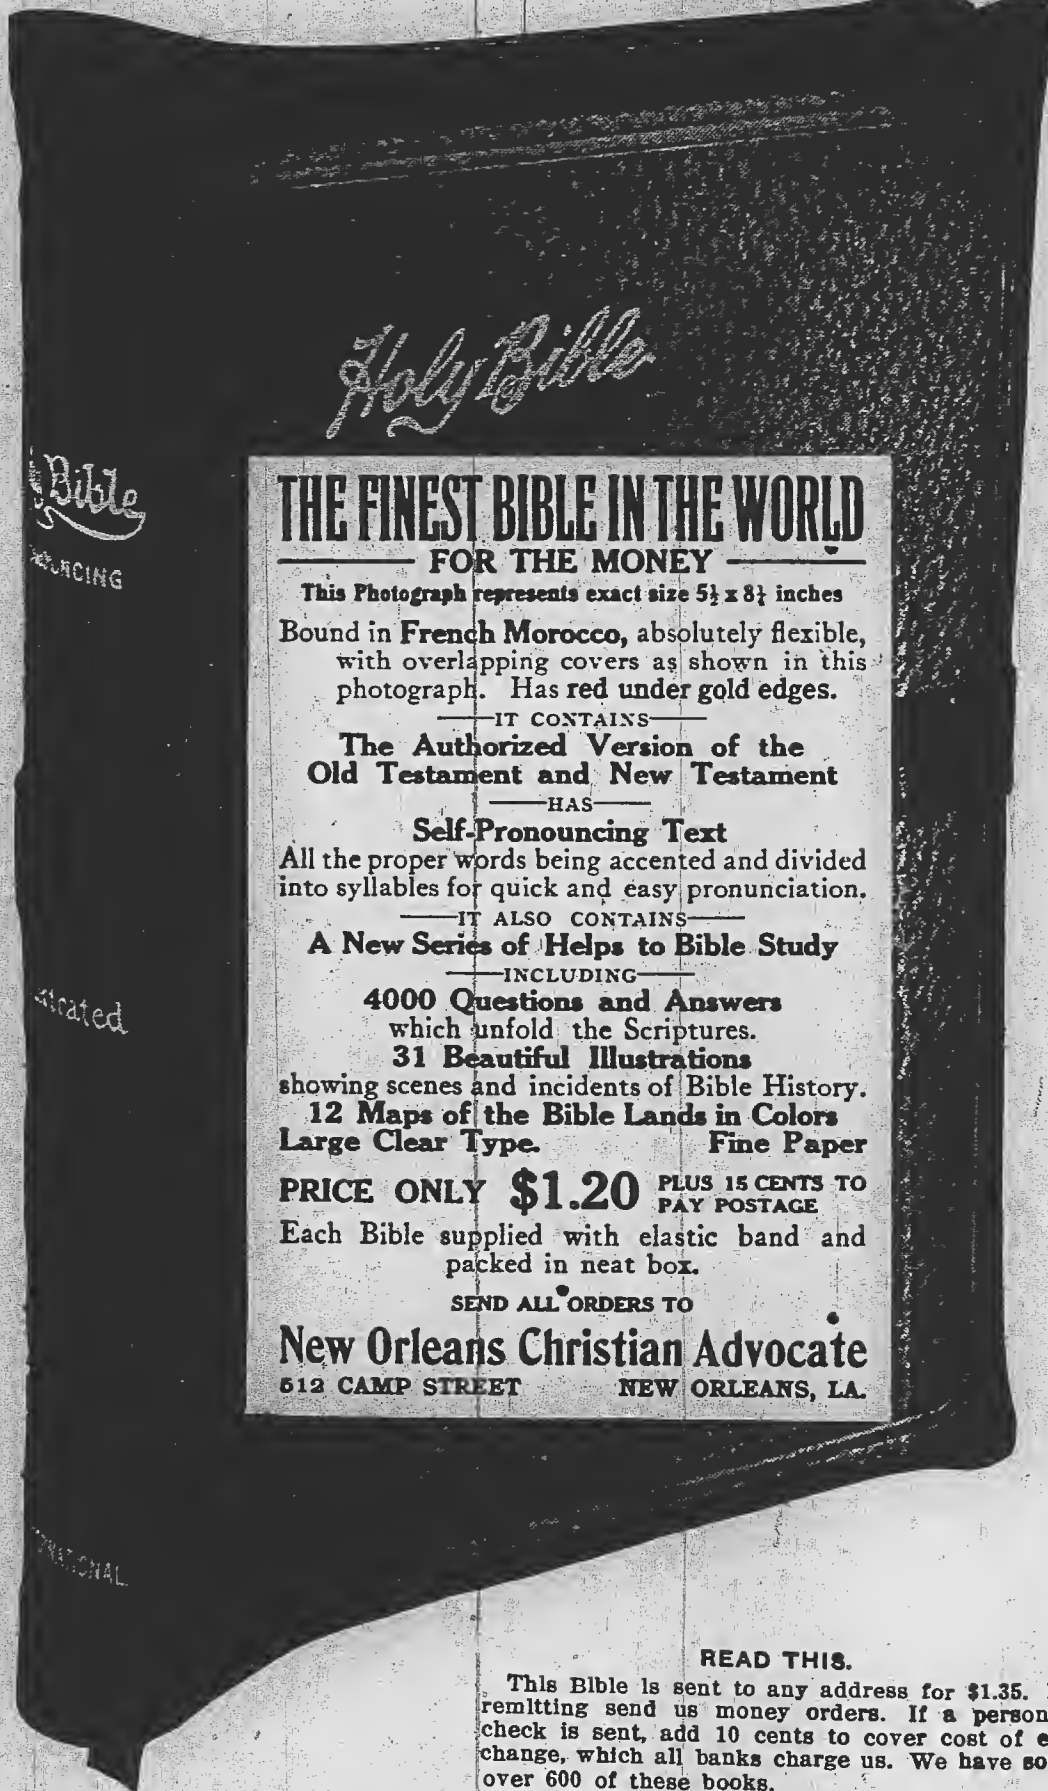

"Receive the heart I give to thee,
From every sinful thought set free;
Cleanse me, Oh, God, from every sin
And make and keep me pure within.

Inspire my thoughts, control my tongue,
Renew my youth and keep me young,
That I thine instrument may be
To win immortal souls to thee.

And every day and every hour
On me a Pentecostal shower
Pour forth, until I be imbued
With all the righteousness of God.

Fill me with righteousness, Oh, Lord,
According to thy promised word
Who after righteousness doth thirst,

WHAT TWO BOYS HAVE DONE.

The Baltimore & Ohio Railroad has established a new rule; hogs must be showered, it declares.

Two South Carolina boys have had much to do with obtaining for the hogs a belated square deal. Also they have dealt a blow at the high cost of living and the high cost of hogs—ham, bacon, pork chops, lard and sausage. "Jerry" Moore raised 256½ bushels of corn from one acre of land. "Terry" Dill, a sixteen-year-old Greenville County boy, at a cost of 3.8 cents a pound, raised a 308-pound pig. "Terry" says he keeps the pig absolutely clean, and that the animal "keenly relishes the daily attention" which he gives him.

"Terry's" pig was not the heaviest pig raised, but the boy, on the basis of cost, won out over his nearest rival, whose pig was heavier, but was raised at a cost of 5.5 cents a pound. "Terry" weaned the pig himself, built the pen, sheltered it from the north wind and got all the sunlight that was possible. He "manicured" the pig daily and kept a daily record of everything that happened. The pig liked the manicuring immensely and demonstrated the theory of the Harvard professor that every pig would be a gentleman if he had a chance. The pig caught cold and became hoarse, and "Terry" swabbed out his throat with kerosene and grease; the pig registered a 91-pound gain in one month.

The Baltimore & Ohio Railroad and the Harvard professor have done much to give the pig a square deal, but it remained for a sixteen-year-old boy to demonstrate that the pig is worthy of the "uplift."—Baltimore News.

The longer you read the Bible, the more you will like it; it will grow sweeter and sweeter; and the more you get into the spirit of it, the more you will get into the spirit of Christ.—Romaine.

Editorial

"None that approach his throne shall find A God unfaithful or unkind."

Dr. Dinsdale T. Young, President of the British Wesleyan Conference, in a sermon a few days since, defined "grace" as "love that overleaps deservings." A better definition we have scarcely seen.

A correspondent speaks of a certain man as a "pillow" in the Church. His faulty orthography led him to say something that he did not mean, but, after all, the changed metaphor is not a bad one. There are in our congregations persons who are spiritual sleep producers.

An individual who is capable of resorting to deception to carry his point, whether he be a preacher or layman, is in a state of grave peril. The mildest form of duplicity has in it the germs of all possible evil. There can be no worthy character that is not founded on sincerity; so when that begins to weaken any sort of moral collapse is liable to follow.

We are not surprised that "Pastor" Russell has a considerable following. His favorite tenet seems to be that "there is no hell." That is a sweet message to people who are living in sin and who do not desire to forsake its alluring paths. It tends to quiet an uneasy conscience and to drive the skeleton from the feast. The Brooklyn fakir is not the first man who has won popularity by annihilating gehenna from the public platform.

Praise should be often upon the lips of God's people. Read the lives of the greatest saints and notice how much they were given to ascriptions of adoration and the expression of gratitude. It is not enough that one should feel appreciative and grateful in his heart; he should frequently body forth his feelings in words that others may know of the abounding goodness of the Lord. In dwelling upon this point, Dwight L. Moody used to bring into service the following illustration: "If you had a child that was deaf and dumb, you would think it a great misfortune; do you ever think of how many such children God has?"

The Brooklyn Eagle, in a cartoon, represents war as a blind Samson with giant strength breaking into pieces the pillars of industry, commerce, finance, and culture which are pictured as upholding the temple of civilization. The conception is a striking one, but the pillar of Christianity, civilization's mightiest prop, should also have been included. Nothing suffers more where strife and violence prevail than the cause of Christ, and nothing so damages the social order as when it is weakened and set back. The world-wide prevalence of the Christian religion in its full depth and purity would transform earth into a paradise, radiant with millennial glory; on the other hand, its utter absence would convert it into a veritable hell scarcely less horrible than that depicted in the Divine Revelation.

HOW SAINTS ARE MADE.

"Oh, I wish I had your faith!" cried the girl who was twenty-three. The woman who was seventy smiled into the troubled face.

"Hasn't your education taught you not to wish foolish things?" she asked, with her voice full of tenderness. She was one of those who never have lost the key to youth, because they never have forgotten how it feels to be young.

The girl looked at her in astonishment. "Why, what do you mean? I thought that you, at least, would think it the most important wish in the world!"

"Child, would you think it wise to cry out that you wanted to play the violin like Elizabeth Dare?"

"Why, no—yes—I mean, it would be all right to wish, only you'd have to have the ability, and then practice six hours a day."

"Well?" her friend prompted her.

"You mean faith is like that?"

"I mean that every child of God is born with the ability, but that it has to be cultivated by practice. Faith is a laboratory course, not a lecture course. You could listen to sermons on faith from now till you die, and still not have a particle of faith yourself, just as you could take a score of courses in agriculture and not raise an ear of corn—unless you went out and planted it. My faith that you envy has come from going through all kinds of hard places—through sickness and anxiety and losses of many kinds—with God. Again and again I've come to a place in my life where I could see no way out, and I've cried, 'God, You are taking care of this—help me to keep my hands off!' It wasn't easy—no great thing is easy. Sometimes I failed miserably, but I kept on trying. And God never failed. Whether the outcome was joy or sorrow, he was always there. And gradually I became more conscious of him—gave things to him more quickly, kept my hands off more easily, till now—now I never think of trying to manage for myself. It is my first thought to carry things to him."

There was silence in the room for a few minutes. Then she spoke again, softly:

"Go and build your own faith, child—build it, bit by bit, out of your own experience as life brings it to you. God will give you the proofs of what you want—of himself, of answer to prayer, of immortality—if you really seek them. But they will be your proofs, not mine—learned through your experiences, through the years. You never can have another's faith any more than you can live another's life. But you can have your own if you will."

The above discussion, taken from The Youth's Companion of September 24, is such an impressive setting forth of a great truth that we have given it a place on our editorial page. As we frequently have had occasion to say in these columns, the time element is an important factor in the making of a saint. A great Christian character in which the rich, ripe fruits of the Spirit may be seen in their beauty and symmetry is not developed in a few weeks or months; nor is it something fashioned in the skies and supernaturally let down and fastened upon the soul, as a shining armor might be manufactured in a distant city and sent to be worn by a warrior bold. Regeneration, the "new birth," is instantaneous, though the process leading up to it may stretch back over a considerable period of life. But the goal of majestic sainthood is attained only by a march across the years, with the varying experiences incident to this earthly existence. To be sure, by co-operating heartily with the Holy Spirit in his work of teaching, strengthening, and perfecting us we may lessen the time that it takes to effect the transformation that is being made—a well cultivated tree or plant always grows faster than one which is neglected—but there must be left a season long enough for God's re-creating and sanctifying agencies to exercise rightly their influence.

This world is a training place for God's children where, disciplined by suffering, sorrow, and disappointment, and led along the way by his hand, they are to learn to know him and he made fit to dwell with him forever in the sky. What a vast difference there was between Paul in the beginning and at the ending of his career! He learned to know something of Christ on the road to Damascus—that he was the Son of God, the risen and reigning Lord, who could give peace to the soul and whose authority was not to be resisted—but how small and imperfect was the knowledge that he then had compared to that which he possessed after the strenuous years in which the Master had kept him, and guided him, and had so often flooded his heart with light and joy, showing to him both in his own life and that of others his wonderful patience, tenderness, and love, and unfolding increasingly before him his glorious purposes! So it is to some extent with every faithful Christian in his career on earth. And it may be that even in Heaven we will learn more and more of Christ—that it will be the forthflashing of new glories in his marvelous personality that will keep the "ten thousands times ten thousand, and thousands of thousands" before his throne breaking forth into rapturous praise—crying, "Worthy is the Lamb that was slain to receive, power, and riches, and wisdom, and strength, and honor, and glory, and blessing!"

PROHIBITION WINS IN VIRGINIA.

By a majority of approximately 40,000—practically a vote of two to one—the prohibitionists carried the State of Virginia in the election held on September 22. This splendid victory, though not unexpected by persons informed as to the situation in the Old Dominion, is a cause for general gratulation and rejoicing. Perhaps the most surprising outcome of the contest was the excellent showing made by the temperance forces in the cities, most of which they carried; and even in Richmond, Norfolk, and Alexandria the wet majorities were greatly reduced. Of a total urban vote of 40,977, the "drys" received 21,146. The law thus approved by the people will go into effect on November 1, 1914.

Much of the credit for this magnificent triumph is due to Dr. James Cannon, Jr., the Secretary of the Anti-Saloon League of Virginia, who is gifted both as a speaker and organizer and is a great fighter in any cause that he espouses. We are happy to see another Southern State outlaw the saloon, and we trust that the time is not far distant when in all the broad land of Dixie there will not be a single dramshop. Let the moral people in the commonwealths that are still cursed by this iniquitous traffic press the battle and hasten the coming of that glad day.

BECAUSE.

(That it takes the experiences of life, often sorrowful and crushing, to perfect our characters and fit us to minister with sympathy and tenderness to others, is a great and important truth. How beautifully is this view set forth in the following touching lines:—Editor of the Advocate.)

Because of one small, low-laid head all crowned
With golden hair,
Overmore all fair young brows to me a halo wear;
kiss them reverently. Alas! I know
The pain I bear.

Because of dear but close-shut, holy eyes
Of heaven's own blue,
All little eyes do fill my own with tears
Whate'er their hue;
and motherly I gaze their innocent,
Clear depths into.

Because of little pallid lips, which once
My name did call,
No childish voice in vain appeal upon My ears doth fall;
count it all my joy their joys to share
And sorrows small.

Because of little dimpled hands
Which folded lie,
All little hands henceforth to me do have A pleading cry;
clasp them as they were small wandering birds
Lured home to fly.

Because of little, death-cold feet, for earth's Rough road nmeet,
d journey leagues to save from sin or harm
Such little feet,
and count the lowliest service done for them
So sacred—sweet!"

GOD SEEKS INTERCESSORS.

By Andrew Murray.

"And he saw that there was no man and wondered that there was no intercessor."—Isaiah 9:16.

"I have set watchmen upon thy walls, O Jerusalem, which shall never hold their peace day or night. Ye that are the Lord's remembrancers, take ye no rest, and give him no rest, all day long."—Isaiah 62:6, 7.

"And I looked, and there was none to help; and I wondered that there was none to uphold."—Isaiah 63:5.

"And there is none that calleth upon Thy name, that stirreth up himself to take hold of Thee."—Isaiah 64:7.

God needs intercessors. He cannot carry on his rule of the world without them. An insight into the place and the power they have in the divine plan will help to train and encourage us for taking our part as intercessors. When God created man he gave him the world to be his possession, and under God, to rule over it and to bless it. All that was to be done upon earth was to be done through man. Through sin man's rule and power became one of curse instead of blessing.

Christ came to carry out God's original plan. As man he is seated upon the throne of heaven, that through him, and his body, the Church, man should again hold rule and bless the world. Christ made us kings and priests unto God; the men and women who yield themselves wholly to God are able to exercise mighty influence on those around them. To them the power of the kingdom of God upon earth has been committed. God places his omnipotence at their disposal. It is in prayer that this power is specially exercised. As priests we have access to God to receive his power and blessing; as kings, in the likeness of him who came meek and lowly, we have power to conquer, to rule, and to bless. In the wonderful partnership into which God has taken up man with himself, in the rule of the world, he allows man to say what he would have done, counting upon God to fulfill his desire.

When Christ ascended the throne, he promised his Church the mighty power of the Holy Spirit to overcome the world. Ten days of prayer and intercession proved how the Spirit comes in answer to prayer. Peter's words, "We will continue steadfastly in prayer and in the ministry of the Word," prove how prayer for all time is the power to bring down the blessing of heaven to earth. When believers get an insight into the real meaning of prayer, and believe Christ's promise that, in response to prayer, mountains can be cast into the midst of the sea, they will begin to understand how their highest privilege is to seek training for the work of intercession. For the work of missions there will not only be needed men and money, but far more, the power of intercession, taking hold of God's strength, taking no rest, giving God no rest, until he answers the cry and the faith of his people in a way he has never yet done.

The future of the Church, the future of the world with its millions of heathen, depends upon the measure to which the Church gives itself to prayer. How sadly the Church has lost her faith in prayer and her gift of praying effectively! When the Father sent down the Spirit of his Son into the hearts of his children it was with the understanding that all they were to be and do was only possible through the Spirit. The Spirit would be their power of prayer. (Romans 8:26). How little believers prove that they know that the Holy Spirit is the pledge of their being able to pray as they ought! Shall we not unite in pleading with God to give us the spirit of wisdom that we may know what a fullness of the Spirit there is to take possession of us?

WHY I GO TO CHURCH ON RAINY SUNDAYS.

I attend Church on rainy Sundays because God has blessed the Lord's Day, and hallowed it, making no exception for rainy Sundays.

I expect my clergyman to be there. I should be surprised if he were to stay at home for the weather.

By staying away I lose the prayers which bring God's blessing, and the sermon which might have done me great good.

On any important business rainy weather does not keep me at home, and church attendance is, in God's sight, very important.

Among the crowds of pleasure-seekers, I see that no weather keeps delicate people from the ball, the party, or the concert.

Among other blessings such weather will show me on what foundation I am building. It will prove how much I love Christ; true love rarely fails to meet an appointment.

Those who stay from Church because it is too warm, or too cold, or too rainy frequently absent themselves on fair Sundays.

Though my excuses satisfy myself they still must undergo God's scrutiny and they must be well grounded to bear that.

There is a special promise, that where "two or three" meet together in God's name, he will be in the midst of them.

My faith is to be known by my self-denying Christian life, and not by the rise or fall of the thermometer.

I know not how many more Sundays God may give me, and it would be a poor preparation for my first Sunday in heaven to have slighted my last Sunday on earth.—Southern Churchman.

NATION-WIDE PRAYER FOR PEACE,
OCTOBER 4.

A Call to the Churches of America.

In connection with the President's request that Sunday, October 4, be observed as a day of prayer for the restoration of peace in Europe, a committee representing more than fifty foreign missionary societies of North America has issued an address to the American Churches. We summarize below the substance of this address, and request that it be read in each of our churches at the beginning of the prayer service on October 4.

The personnel of the committee, made up as it is of the most prominent missionary leaders of the Continent, including John R. Mott and our own Bishop Lambuth, will lend great weight to the address, which briefly is as follows:

While Americans are exempt from the horrors of war, we are painfully conscious of its effects upon our entire national life. It is impossible for half the population of the globe to be involved in such a conflict without profoundly affecting the whole race. Among the many deplorable results, not the least is the fact that whole nations are in danger of misinterpreting Christianity. We therefore venture to suggest the following considerations for your thought and prayer:

Strict neutrality should be observed, and Christian people should earnestly endeavor to develop such a public sentiment as will make future wars impossible.

The Churches should make clear the distinction between the teachings of Christ and some of the characteristics of modern civilization. A more persistent effort should be put forth to make the spirit of Jesus effective in national as well as individual relationships.

Our missionary work should be maintained at its full strength. The prevailing conditions which make missionary work difficult make it the more necessary. Some financial embarrassment is inevitable, but it is not serious enough to justify us in neglecting this, our paramount privilege and obligation. No concession should be made to the spirit of retreat. On the contrary the very difficulties which confront us should make the Church the more determined to go forward.

We therefore earnestly hope that Sunday, October 4, will be observed as a day of special prayer in every Church and Christian home, that daily meetings for intercession be held during the week preceding or following, that union meetings be held on Sunday afternoon or evening, and that prayers include the following subjects:

That the mind of Christ may prevail, and speedily bring about a just and lasting peace.

That all who are ministering to the physical and spiritual needs of the soldiers—chaplains, physicians and nurses, be given needed grace and strength.

That the war may not retard the progress of the Kingdom but that it may be over-ruled to its extension.

That our people may interpret the present opportunity in terms of spiritual obligation and privilege, to the end that this greatest war of the world may be made the occasion of a great world-wide revival of religion.

That we humbly confess our own sins and seek a fuller understanding of the divine purpose for our national and social life.

That the growing and beautiful international and interdenominational Christian fellowship may not be broken.

That the blessing of God may rest upon the President of the United States and the Secretary of State in this time of special responsibility.

That the spirit of Christ may more thoroughly pervade the life of nations; that national jealousies may be abated, that pagan and selfish elements in our civilizations may be eliminated, that all men shall realize that they are brothers, and that we may confidently look forward to the time when the kingdoms of this world shall become the Kingdom of our Lord.

DOWN IN "OL' MISSISSIP."

By Gulliver.

I spent most of the month of August of the current year (1914) at Nettleton, Miss., preaching in a meeting under the auspices of a Union Committee which arranges for a meeting every year conducted by preachers of different denominations in rotation. This being Methodist year, and Brother J. A. Lowe being the Methodist member of the Union Committee, he invited me on behalf of his colleagues, and Rev. W. M. Young, the pastor of our Church at that place, to come over and help them.

Going from a high prairie country noted for its strong and continuous breezes to a wooded region of low altitude and with a very humid atmosphere, and with little or no breeze, rendered my visit very uncomfortable so far as these items were concerned; but from every other standpoint my sojourn there was most delightful. Brother Lowe and his excellent wife are justly held in very high esteem there, and no man in our connection, perhaps, who sustains a local relation to the Church is more deservedly popular among the preachers and people of Northern Mississippi. The fact is, Lowe is a prince in Israel and I have written his name on that meager list of close, beloved, personal friends, of which no man has any too many. Public men are making acquaintances all the time; but after a man passes 50 he makes few friends. So, when one does have an opportunity to enlarge his private list, if he is wise, he will not fail to embrace it. I met a great many good people at Nettleton. Most of them are named Roberts; and those who bear other names are generally akin to the Roberts family. The Wiygul, Trapp and Frances families are well represented in our Church there and are among the finest people in Mississippi. I am indebted to all of them for appreciated courtesies. Brother McInnis, pastor of the Presbyterian Church, and his excellent wife endeared themselves to me very much. They are refined, cultivated, religious people. My experience is richer for having known them. Brother Young, the pastor, is a fine young fellow between 50 and 60 years of age, and is much beloved by the people of all denominations. He lives at Amory, where he has a magnificent church in course of construction. Quite a number of the Amory people attended the meeting very often.

But one of the most noted and interesting characters whom I met at Nettleton was Capt. J. G. Sisk. He is between 80 and 90 years of age, but walks about like a Comanche chief with a hundred scalps dangling from his belt. And if rumor has it right, the old man has the scalps; for he was not only a brave officer in the Confederate Army, but during the Reconstruction Period, was cognizant of the disappearance of several carpet-baggers and a number of "bad niggers." He refuses to talk in a way to implicate himself; but from what I learned on reliable authority, he was one of the most prominent leaders of the Ku Klux Klan in Northern Mississippi. He says he is trying to get to heaven now, and I believe that the old Captain will make it; but I am just as sure in my conviction that in times past he has sent or helped to send quite a number of people, black and white, in the other direction. He is much beloved in the community in which he lives. I became very fond of him.

Nearly everything was strange to me in Mississippi. Our people out here in Texas are going at the hop-skip-and-jump rate all the time, and everything here is new. Over there the people take their time, and nearly everything presents the appearance of having been long established. Old houses, old farms—yea, and so many old people. I am accustomed to preaching to large congregations, but I never preached to a congregation before in which there were so many old men and women. And these old people seem to be healthy and contented. Why, it is nothing to meet a man or a woman 75 or 80 years of age. One old man with great-grandchildren married a pretty young woman and skipped out in an automobile while our meeting was in progress. Being connected with nearly everybody, on one side or the other, this unusual escapade stirred up things considerably; but like such things always turn out, when the couple get back from their wedding tour, everything will settle down and move on in the usual leisurely way.

Those people over there certainly do live. I never saw such dinners! Everywhere I dined the table was loaded to the guards with the very best products of the richest fields, orchards and gardens. Chicken! Why, I was compelled to cut out fried chicken three days before I left Nettleton. I never imagined that I could ever get enough of fine, fat, fried, half-grown Plymouth Rocks, covered with cream gravy. Over here in Texas the chickens roost too high for any man but a millionaire to be able to gorge himself. Think of it! We pay 65 cents for a small fryer. Over there, you can get three for half a dollar.

The fruit crop is a failure over here. There I ate apples, peaches, pears, figs, and the largest, sweetest watermelons a man ever put his tooth in.

I visited two or three old ante-bellum "big houses", which were surrounded by the old-time "nigger quarters," that interested me very much. Here lived the old master and the old mistress in a comfort and luxury that threw the futile barons of the Middle Ages far into the shade. These men were real princes; and their black vassals were as loyal and more helpful than the serfs of the old-time lords in Insular and Continental Europe.

But Ichabod is written upon these palaces, and their glory has departed forever. The houses are tumbling down, and the magnificent lawns that stretched out in front of them are cut up into gullies, grown up with briars and tangled underbrush. In some cases, negroes now own these places, and the sons of the old servants occupy the "big houses" of the masters. These scenes of one-time wealth and luxury, now dismantled and dilapidated, are mute but eloquent reminders of the instability of human grandeur and the evanescence of earthly glory. One walks among and about these ruins as among the tombs of a buried past, and imagination bodies forth the forms of those who one time flourished there, and seems to feel the touch of vanished hands and to hear again the voices that are forever still.

In mentioning our meeting at Nettleton I should not forget the welcomed services of Prof. J. B. Burns, who led our choir—a choir of splendid voices, and whose spirited singing added much to the success of the worship. Brother Burns is an agronomist, biologist, botanist, horticulturist, and all that kind of thing. He was trained at the A. & M. College of Mississippi, and is a most learned "bugologist." He thoroughly understands soil building, and any community or county who should employ him to teach their farmers how to make two blades of grass grow where only one grew before, would make a splendid investment. Professor Bigham, of Water Valley, Miss., was present during the meeting and showed me many courtesies—especially in kodaking certain scenes and persons whose shadows I wished to preserve.

I visited the site of Old Camargo, once the head of navigation on the west fork of the Tombigbee River and a fine town. Nothing is left of it now but a few fragmentary sidewalks, and here and there a cluster of cedar trees. In the old, unkept cemetery nearby,

"where the rude forefathers of the hamlet sleep, there are some sleeping who were not rude. Among these are General Featherstone, the hero of the Seminole War, and Rev. Addison Lea, one-time president of Aberdeen Female College, who died of consumption in 1853, in the town of Camargo, and about whom no one in the community seemed to know. One old man declared he was present at the funeral 61 years ago, but knew nothing further of the deceased than what is hereinabove recorded. Brother B. T. Clark, however, of Tupelo, informed me that this Brother Lea had five sons and two daughters, some of whom live in Winchester, Tenn., and others in Louisville, Ky. If any of them should read these lines, I would suggest that they remove the dust of their father to some less weird and better-kept place. Brother Clark says that the Rev. Lea was a man of culture, as were all the members of his family. He died at the early age of forty.

One of the most interesting things that strikes a Westerner in visiting down in "Ol' Mississipp" is the relation of the Negro. Socially, of course, it is there as it is here; and civilly he has the same rights before the law; but politically he is a nonentity, a naught with the rim torn off—the little end of nothing, sharpened. Though the male black population are in the majority in that State, the white man is carrying his burden—doing all the voting and running everything else politically. The law in that State which provides that no man shall be allowed to vote who cannot read or intelligently construe the Constitution of the State, practically eliminates the Negro. He has just about ceased to go to the polls at all. He seems to have settled down quietly—accepting the situation philosophically. The white people treat him kindly, and he is deferential and polite to them. There seem to be perfect amity and agreement between the two races, each one recognizing and occupying his place. I heard several very interesting and amusing stories concerning the manner in which the Negroes were controlled by their employers, but space forbids their narration here. At some future time I may give the readers of the Advocate one or two of them.

In the meantime, allow me to say that I came away from Mississippi with a good taste in my mouth and a prayer in my heart that we all might meet again.

Wichita Falls, Texas.

THE PROPOSAL OF AN OLD SAINT.

By Bishop W. A. Candler.

Here is a letter from a pastor, concerning a generous gift of a dear old saint, which I think the whole Church should read. It is a most touching and generous thing which this consecrated mother in Israel proposes.

The letter from her pastor is as follows:

"Sept. 16, 1914.

"Bishop W. A. Candler, Atlanta, Ga.:

"My Dear Bishop: You will recall Mrs. _____ mother of Mrs. _____, both of whom were members of the Church at _____ when you were the pastor of that church.

"She still lives at the advanced age of 78 years. Her home is here with her daughter, _____ For some time she has been confined to a roller chair, having suffered a partial paralysis.

"But her physical condition can not suppress her active interest in the Church. She reads with the greatest interest everything that concerns it in the dailies; and the Wesleyan Christian Advocate is her delight. Thus she has followed the whole Vanderbilt affair from the beginning until now. Since you, her former pastor, have been made Chancellor of the New University, her personal affection, as well as Church loyalty has been enlisted.

"Now out of her reading, her thoughtfulness, and her prayers, a beautiful idea has been born and she has asked me to write you about it. Her motherly heart wants to found a 'Woman's Fund to Aid Young Men'—this is her name for it. She starts it with $2 and says: 'They are educating girls; I want to help the boys. Southern women should aid Southern young men who are striving for a Christian education. While I am 78 years old, I have prayed for things to come out right, even in all the trials through which our Church has passed in the Vanderbilt controversy, and I have been and am still as interested as if I were but sixteen years old.' Thus she spoke to me when putting the money in my hands for you. Who knows to what this gift may grow? She entrusts it to you, for your use as a nucleus for a fund to aid young men who are striving to get through our new University. She wants you to project any plans along this line that you may consider wise. Her trust in your wisdom is perfect.

"She is without property and this is a very liberal gift from her. It brings with it a vast wealth of love, of faith, and of prayer. yours, _____"

I give to the Church the proposal of this saintly woman. Such a fund as she proposes would help thousands of young men. A great number of worthy young men wish help from a Loan Fund, although unwilling to accept aid as a gift.

Might not such a loan fund be raised upon the foundation this aged and consecrated woman has laid?

If any good women wish to join her in this plan, I will receive such contributions as may be sent to me and see that every cent is safely kept and sacredly devoted to this object.

A HAPPY ADJUSTMENT.

Mr. James S. Noel, a wealthy capitalist of Shreveport, La., has leased the James S. Noel, Jr. Memorial Church to the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, for a term of ninety-nine years, the consideration for the lease being the sum and price of $2500. The lease stipulates that the building shall be used exclusively as a church for the glory of God in the name and under the doctrine of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, that it shall be kept in good repair and properly insured, that a pastor shall be annually appointed, and that the building shall always be known and designated as the James S. Noel, Jr. Memorial Church. At the expiration of this lease, the property shall become vested in the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, in full and absolute ownership, and shall be maintained as a place of religious worship, or if sold, the proceeds shall be used for the purchase of another church to be conducted under the name of the James S. Noel, Jr. Memorial Church; it being the intention of the lessor to perpetuate in loving memory his dead son by this tribute to his memory and to the cause of Christianity and the worship of Almighty God.

At a meeting of the Quarterly Conference held in the church on Sept. 25, Rev. E. K. Means, the pastor, presented this lease for acceptance by that body. On motion of Hon. B. F. Roberts, chairman of the Board of Stewards, the lease was accepted by a rising vote. Mr. C. W. Lane, chairman of the Board of Trustees, then presented a plan for the relief of the immediate debts of the congregation on the furniture of the building. This plan was promptly adopted, and the controversy over the Noel Memorial Church was ended and all its problems solved.

After adjournment, the Quarterly Conference moved in a body to the home of Mr. J. S. Noel and its members expressed their thanks and their high appreciation of his magnanimous action. A brief speech was made by Rev. W. H. Coleman, Presiding Elder of the Shreveport District, to which Mr. Noel made the curt and characteristic reply: "It's all right. Now let's all get to work and make a good church for the glory of God."

The building is beautiful, commodious and complete to the smallest detail, representing the conscientious Christian sacrifice of a man who "made a vow unto the Lord" that he would build a church to the memory of a beloved boy and for the worship of God. It has all the modern conveniences for the Sunday School, Epworth League, Missionary and other organizations; and a kitchen, dining-room, lecture rooms, library, rest-room, nursery, and everything conceivable for the comfort and accommodation of the congregation. This splendid structure was built at the sole expense of Mr. Noel at a cost of $80,000. It is located in the most beautiful residential section of Shreveport, and during the next one hundred years of its history it will feed the spiritual life of thousands of people who will delight to make it their church home.

Under the pastorate of Rev. E. K. Means, this church has met with growing success, and this happy solution of all its difficulties now presents Shreveport Methodism with one of the finest opportunities for usefulness in North Louisiana.

OPENING OF THE METHODIST TRAINING SCHOOL.

William F. Quillian, President.

The opening exercises of the Methodist Training School were held on Wednesday morning, September 16, at 10:30 o'clock. Strong addresses were made by Miss Ethel Brown, of Virginia, representing the class of 1915; Miss Mabel Head, Secretary of the Foreign Department of the Woman's Missionary Council, and Rev. W. W. Alexander, pastor of Belmont Methodist Church. Miss Brown gave the students a warm welcome and explained how through prayer and the indwelling of the Holy Spirit their work in the Training School would be rendered most profitable. Miss Head gave a striking survey of the present world needs. Mr. Alexander discussed "Leadership, what it is and how it may be secured." Musical selections were rendered by Mr. Allen Mitchell, Miss Eloise Reid and Mrs. Quillian. The President announced that students were enrolled from seventeen States and Mexico. Strangely enough three members of the faculty and four members of the senior class were detained on account of illness. Only one of these, however, on account of her own illness. Several students who had planned to return were compelled to change their plans by reason of the present financial uncertainty. Notwithstanding these unfavorable occurrences, we are glad to announce that up to the present time forty-eight students have been enrolled, and the indications are that the enrollment of the year will surpass that of last year.

Thoroughly Methodist.

It is our purpose that The Methodist Training

School shall be Methodist to the core. We recognize the extreme importance of keeping our institutions true to Methodist standards and Methodist policies. Our course of study has been somewhat revised, and while seeking the benefits of the highest and most modern scholarship, we are trying to avoid everything that is unfriendly to the great principles of our Church and its founder. Plans are under way for the enlarging and strengthening of this institution. We believe that it is a great mission to the South. We invite our people everywhere to unite with us in prayer that this institution may accomplish in the Kingdom of God that whereto it is sent.

SOME WORDS OF EXHORTATION.

Mr. Editor: Please let me second your editorial of last week urging the importance of the meeting of the Louisiana Conference Board of Education at Alexandria, Oct. 6, 1914. We are anxious to have the members of the Boards of Trustees of Centenary and Mansfield Colleges and others who are interested in our educational work to meet with us on that occasion.

Our Colleges have entered upon another session's work under what we consider, in view of the depressed financial situation, exceedingly favorable auspices. In this work we are still walking by faith, in the absence of any very visible resources. Our educational workers in Louisiana are with long-suffering patience waiting for Louisiana Methodists to respond to their urgent appeals for the patronage and support due our institutions of learning. The atmosphere of our Church is vibrant with agitation and inspiration in favor of Christian education under denominational control. Surely, the noble gift of Mr. Candler, and the noble sentiments expressed in the letter accompanying the gift, will reach the hearts of our people.

But how easy it is to indulge in glittering generalities and beautiful theories and fail to see their application at home! Louisiana Methodists have an immediate and urgent demand to meet. What is the worth of all our high-sounding phrases and belligerent defense of denominational schools if it does not crystallize into money and patronage for our church schools?

Money and Patronage from Louisiana Methodists are the two things we need for our colleges. Some like the late Captain Pharr have both and give both. I heard him say upon one occasion that the reason he supported and patronized Centenary College was that he had been brought face to face with the vow he had taken to support the institutions of his Church. We would respectfully commend his example to many of our people and not a few of our preachers. We have yet to find a man who could be enthusiastic in his support of one institution and patronize another of the same class. Mr. Editor, pardon this plainness; some of us feel that it is time to "speak out in meetin'." More than one laymen have called our attention to the fact that his pastor preaches loyalty to our Church schools and yet fails to patronize them.

While our editors and others have been out gunning for enemies to the Church's educational interest, they seem strangely to have overlooked a certain class of game. I refer to those institutions which are bidding for patronage on the ground of their Christian character and at the same time hold themselves strictly aloof from denominational control. These institutions are controlled by members of our Church and are patronized by many of our people, and, I might add, that they are extensively advertised in the columns of our church press. Mr. Editor, I venture to suggest that you can find them a little nearer your sanctum than Vanderbilt university. Personally, I would as soon run an independent Church as an independent institution of learning, claiming to be Christian.

This year the Baptists had an enthusiastic meeting of Laymen in Alexandria, which, I am told, planned great things for their College at Pineville. May we not hope to duplicate that meetings in enthusiasm and results for our educational work on October 6?

PAUL M. BROWN,
La. Conf. Sec. Education.

(We are in the heartiest accord with the sentiments expressed by Brother Brown in his splendid exhortation. We believe that it is the duty of Methodist people to support with their means and patronage the educational institutions of their own Church, and such has ever been our earnest appeal to them. We do not know what near-by schools are referred to as having been overlooked by us. If a private school of a Christian character is maintained as such and does not seek to sail under false colors, it would scarcely be proper for us to attack it publicly, though we do not hesitate to say that we do not think this is the class of institutions to which our people should send their sons and daughters. It was the campaign of misrepresentation that was being conducted by the Vanderbilt people, of which we have in hand abundant proof, that called forth our open and specific opposition. The advertising department of the Advocate is a business department, and the advertisement of any reputable school is carried at so much per inch. This is the rule, so far as our knowledge extends, of the entire religious press of the country.—Editor of the Advocate.)

CHURCH DEDICATION.

On October 25 Brother H. S. Spragins, our efficient and popular presiding elder, will dedicate our beautiful up-to-date new church at Gunnison, Miss.

Methodism has quite a history in this community. Somewhere about seventy-five years ago some faithful man of God floating down the Mississippi River, after the fashion of Tobias Gibson, or struggling along through the cane and mud, came to old Concordia landing to preach the unsearchable riches of the Gospel of Christ to the few citizens who had settled there; but, like the "Man of God" who went from Judah to Bethel by the word of the Lord to prophesy against the altar of Jeroboam, we who now live hereabout do not know his name, but his work abides and grows. The church we are preparing to dedicate is the fourth church building erected since then. A faithful band of men and women have lived here to keep the good work going on, and a number of consecrated children of God have gone to their reward from the communion of this historic church.

This (Concordia) Gunnison congregation has been fortunate in the character of preachers who have served it—a few we are able to mention; wish we could name them all, but their names are written in the Lamb's Book of life and the Lord will take care of his own. Some who remain in the active pastorate with us are: G. W. Bachman, J. W. Price, R. H. B. Gladney, A. H. Williams, J. R. Countiss, E. S. Lewis, and J. J. Brooks. Some are still in active work in other Conferences and other States: R. M. Standifer, T. Y. Ramsey, J. A. Whitehurst, J. M. Moose, and W. G. Harbin. Some are supernumeraries: W. S. Harrison and H. C. McCrehead. Some have answered to the roll call in the Conference above and are forever with the Lord: A. P. Sage, J. T. Truslo, J. C. Lowe, E. L. Spragins, M. D. Fly, I. W. Hickum, and J. W. Honnoll.

Dr. A. L. P. Green, of precious memory to all Southern Methodists, dedicated the church last removed. Oh, how these people of the Lord remember, love, and revere the men of God who have rejoiced with them along their pilgrim journey! Will as many of the former pastors and friends as can, come and let's have a gracious reunion with these good people? Remember that October 25 is the date. J. H. SMITH, Pastor.
Gunnison, Miss.

THE STATUS OF THE GREAT WAR.

Nothing decisive has taken place in the great European conflict within the past week. The two immense armies in France have been locked in a deadly embrace, neither of them being able to make any definite advance. The fighting at times has been furious and the loss of life has been terrible. In Prussia things seem to be practically at a standstill. The news from Austria has been conflicting, but the Russians seem to be making considerable headway. The two things that have most startled the public within the past few days have been the sinking of three British cruisers by a German torpedo boat in the North Sea, and the injury by German artillery of the beautiful and historic Roman Catholic Cathedral at Rheims, one of the most famous church edifices in the world. In the Far East the Japanese forces are drawing nearer to Tsing-Tau and are actively preparing for an assault upon it. Italy and Turkey are yet remaining neutral, but their entrance into the fight at any time would occasion little surprise. In figuring on the final outcome of the titanic struggle, it is well to remember that England controls the seas, enabling the Allies steadily to secure recruits and provisions, and that a long-drawn-out war is, on the face of it, unfavorable to the German cause.

Church News

All the presiding elders of the Kentucky Conference (seven) of the M. E. Church, South, are in their fourth years.

Rev. John B. Andrews, of Siloam Springs, Ark., is evangelizing in Missouri, having begun a meeting at Monroe City on September 20.

Dr. Gross Alexander, Editor of the Methodist Review, has lately been spending some time with his family at Long Beach, Calif., near Los Angeles.

The fall meeting of the College of Bishops of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, will be held at Charleston, W. Va., October 30 to November 2.

The lecture course at the Wesleyan College for Young Women, at Macon, Ga., for the coming session includes among the speakers Dr. Newell Dwight Hillis and Hon. R. P. Hobson.

The Central Christian Advocate says: "Bishop Cranston and Bishop Hoss are to deliver addresses at the Baltimore Methodist Pilgrimage to the famous Sam's Creek Circuit, in Maryland, on October 14."

Dr. Paul H. Linn, the President of Central College (Missouri), has secured $200,000 in cash and subscriptions for the further endowment of that institution, which he is laboring to advance to the half-million mark.

Rev. Abe Mukey, the noted Texas evangelist, who for some time has been in a poor state of health, is reported not to be improving. He has the sympathy and prayers of a host of friends and admirers in his illness.

The Churches organized in Spain under the American Congregational Board, the English Presbyterians, the German Lutherans, and the Swiss Reformers have been united in an informal way under the name of the Spanish Evangelical Church.

The Baltimore Southern Methodist of September 17 says: "Rev. John F. Coucher, D.D., entertained about 300 Methodists at his country home, Aito Dale, last Monday, where the rival claims of the Sam's Creek and John Street Churches were discussed."

Dr. M. S. Hughes, pastor of the Methodist Episcopal Church, at Pasadena, Calif., who was the brilliant fraternal messenger from his denomination to our recent General Conference, took part in the opening exercises of our magnificent new Trinity Church in Los Angeles.

Dr. Harnack, the noted German scholar and theologian, is reported to have characterized most severely England's course in entering the European war. This has led his admirers among the British clergy to send him a somewhat extended statement setting forth the English view of the principles involved.

Rev. John T. Wightman, of Baltimore, Md., celebrated his 89th birthday on September 9. Of him, the Baltimore Southern Methodist says: "Notwithstanding his advanced age, he preaches frequently to the delight of those who hear him and by his studious habits he keeps abreast of the thought of the day, whether it be along theological or other lines. He is gentle, cultured, scholarly—a rare man."

The Yale School of Religion embraces the following departments: (1) a school for training pastors and preachers; (2) a school for training foreign missionaries, whether laymen or preachers; (3) a school for training teachers of religion, apart from the preaching office, in church or college; (4) a school for the training of social workers; (5) a school of research in the history and philosophy of religion.

Bishop H. C. Morrison spent Sunday, Sept. 13, at Lakeland, Fla., where he preached an eloquent sermon to a large and appreciative congregation. Referring to him, the Florida Christian Advocate says: "The Bishop is looking well, but appeared strange to the eyes of those of us who had not seen him for some time, for the reason that he now wears a full beard which greatly alters his appearance."

The Pittsburgh Christian Advocate thus describes our new Trinity Institutional Church in Los Angeles, Calif.: "Trinity Methodist Episcopal Church, South, Los Angeles, Calif., has just completed what is said to be one of the largest buildings of its kind in America. It has nine stories and a roof-garden. As a building it is in class A, and is fire-proof. The auditorium seats 2300. The second and third stories are given over to social halls, ladies' parlors, library, and other similar uses. The other six stories are to be used as a first-class men's hotel, with 325 rooms. Altogether it is a great establishment."

WHITWORTH BEGINS WITH FLYING COLORS.

Rev. W. H. Lewis, our pastor at Brookhaven, Miss., wires us as follows: "A splendid opening at Whitworth. The many friends of the institution are rejoicing over its bright prospects. The $45,000 spent on buildings within the past three years has given a new impetus to the school. We have practically a new college. The session begins with a strong faculty and a fine student body."

This is, indeed, gratifying news. Whitworth has wrought nobly in the past, but its best days are yet to be. Genial, sympathetic, cultured, and possessed of executive ability of a high order, Dr. Cooper ranks with the best educators in the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, and his whole heart is in his work. The opening sermon of this growing institution was preached last Sunday by Rev. M. B. Sharbrough, of Columbia, Miss., who delivered a strong and stimulating message. The friends and patrons of Whitworth have a right to be proud of the record that she is making. May her course ever be upward!

NOT A MERE METAPHOR.

The following from The Presbyterian (Philadelphia) gives an interesting bit of information: "Dogs of war is not a mere metaphor. In the middle ages, mastiffs were used as auxiliaries in attack, and were equipped with mail studded with spikes and scythes, so that they could even attack cavalry. Henry VIII offered King Charles V of Spain 40,000 men and 4000 war dogs to fight against France. Of late, to a certain extent, a use has been found for dogs in the army to aid sentries in detecting the presence of an enemy."

ROBERT J. HARP—A TRIBUTE.

(An address delivered by Dr. R. H. Wynn at the funeral of the late Rev. R. J. Harp, in Shreveport, La., on July 25, 1914.)

It is not in accord with my temperament to indulge in extreme praise of the living or the dead, but under the circumstances which bring us together to-day, I feel that scarcely anything I might say that bears upon the life, labor, and character of Brother Harp would be in the nature of an over-statement or exaggeration. Even if I should give full rein to my heart and speech, it would be impossible for me to do even partial justice to the simple grandeur and dignity of our beloved father in Israel, who has now at last closed his earthly labors.

Brother Harp was born eighty-five years ago last April, in Lawrenceburg, Tenn. He was deprived of both a father's and mother's care at the early age of seven, but not too early to have received a splendid endowment in character foundations. That 'the child is father to the man' is illustrated by the incidents of his young boyhood that anticipate his character in his mature years. We see a foregleam of his gentleness in the incident which he remembered, and which is written by his daughter, of playing in the woods, coming upon a little fawn, which is not frightened at his approach, going up to it and putting his arms around its neck, the fawn following him home and growing up in his father's pasture.

We see the prophecy of his quenchless industry and independence of spirit in his early farm work and his ambition 'to plow like a man' when only eight years of age, his refusal to be dependent on others when eleven years old and going out to work for himself; his studying at night by a pine-torch and studying even while he plowed during the day, his speller in the plow-handies.

His life was a conspicuous refutation of the 'wild-oats' theory of manhood. He grew up in possession of a normal religious life and was ready to consecrate himself upon the altar of the ministry when only fourteen years old—a child-prophet actually preaching a sermon at this age and ready to enter the Conference, but considered too young. His record as a minister of the gospel in point of years has scarcely been duplicated in the history of the Church—having been a preacher of the gospel for seventy-one years, a regular member of the itinerant ranks for seventy years with only an intermission of a few years of local relations, which by no means should be subtracted. Where is there such a record, and the whole of it filled with painstaking, self-sacrificing, efficient service for the Master?

The history of his itinerant ministry from 1844

is exactly contemporary with the history of the M. E. Church, South, as a separate denomination, and practically also with the history of the Louisiana Conference which he helped to organize in 1846. He survived all his comrades in arms who entered the itinerant ranks of our Conference during the forties and fifties, with the exception of my own father, who was admitted on trial in 1857.

Brother Harp had a cyclopedic memory for the details of our history during this heroic period in the most difficult field of our Southern connection and by patient research he had accumulated a great store of data from which he was constructing a history of Methodism in Louisiana which would have been invaluable, but which, alas! was destroyed by fire and can not be replaced.

This is not the time for a review of the varied details of his life work, but I will simply state that his itinerant ministry at some time touched every section of this State—Shreveport, Lake Charles, New Orleans, Lake Providence, Alexandria—the four corners and center, and I will call attention to the fact that his ministry has had a unique and profoundly interesting relation to the city of Shreveport. When 18 years of age, he became the first station pastor of the Methodist Church here, continuing as such for two years and our Father in Heaven alone knows how, through all these years, his early influence has extended like a silver thread from one generation to another. After long years, during which his heart was full of pleasant memories, he was returned to Shreveport and the circle of influence was completed. There is scarcely a spot in all this section that has not been touched by his holy influence, while the efficient presiding elder of this district or pastor of some charge in town or country and since he has been on our honor roll of retired veterans. He was at one time pastor of the Texas Avenue Church and also the first pastor of Noel Memorial Church. His heart rejoiced to witness the material and moral progress of this city and was overjoyed to see the crowning achievement of this edifice, the successor of the little church on Market and Fannin Streets. Here he delighted to come and join in joyous worship.

In all this wonderful career he was never a seeker for place or position and in this particular conserved the highest ideals of a Methodist itinerant preacher. He entered cheerfully every sphere or mode of service into which he was called and with the most exacting and scrupulous fidelity, discharged every task at whatever cost. He never rested on his oars, very reluctantly giving up active work, expecting up to the very last to resume his preaching again, his wandering mind during his final illness being still burdened with the necessity of filling appointments to preach the everlasting gospel.

Brother Harp was a truly great man after Christ's standard of greatness. He consecrated all of his powers, which were of no ordinary kind, to unselfish ends. So much like Christ in spirit he seemed to me, that I have felt unworthy to unloose the latchet of his shoe. Those who knew him best are the readiest witnesses to the rare qualities of his life. His heart was full of brotherly love, one of his own home testifying that he did not even 'think evil.' Indeed, he lived the thirteenth chapter of First Corinthians as few others of us do.

He exhibited a rare serenity of life which was not disturbed by the most crucial tests, not when the iron of adversity for which others were responsible entered his soul, not when cruel flames licked up the historic treasures of a life time, nor when death more than once entered his home.

He belongs in the category of real sainthood—not of the medieval type, for he rejoiced in friendships, social intercourse and home companionship; not of the fanatic type, for he was chaste and temperate in speech, perfectly balanced in his emotions and unusually wise and sane in all his conduct; not of the Pharisee type, for he was utterly unconscious of the rare beauty and fragrance of his life; not of the effeminate type, for he bore distinguishing marks of genuine manhood.

It was really in his old age that all of us younger ministers knew him and we bear witness to-day that his life of physical and mental industry, of sacrificing devotion to the blessed gospel of Jesus, even during these years of increasing infirmity, puts us to shame. God help us to keep the faith of our fathers!

Brother Harp's life is a proof of immortality—not in terms of science which is impossible, but as valid an assurance as need be desired. Such a soul as his must inevitably continue to live and serve in a higher order. Already may we see him in the company of the redeemed who sing 'Worthy is the Lamb that was slain!' He has gone by spiritual gravitation to his place among the immortals, close up to the apostles and prophets and the Son of man himself.

"My Father! My Father! the chariots of Israel and the horsemen thereof."

MILLSAPS COLLEGE.

My Dear Dr. Meek: The new administration building of Millsaps College is approaching completion. Handsome, commodious, and well-appointed, it cannot but be a source of pride and pleasure to every friend of the College, and will more than compensate us for the inconvenience and loss occasioned by the fire last winter. We had indulged the hope that the opening exercises of this session could be held in the new chapel; but in this we were disappointed. We are, however, confidently expecting the completion and equipment of this part of the building by the middle of October, and by the first of November we are to take possession of the finished and furnished classrooms.

The opening exercises of the twenty-third session of the College were held Wednesday morning, October 15, in the auditorium of the Preparatory Department. A large number of students and friends of the College were in attendance, and words of welcome, congratulation, and good cheer were spoken by members of the faculty and visiting ministers. The promise was made by the President that upon the occasion of the opening of the new building a reception would be given and the public invited to rejoice with us in the completion of the structure. The Editor of the Advocate is hereby most cordially invited to honor the occasion with his presence and a speech.

Of course we are still suffering from the inconvenience of a lack of room, and it is impossible at this time to give exactly the number of students who have matriculated. Speaking generally, I would say that the number is fully equal to that of the beginning of last session. The students in the College Department number probably a few more than at this time last year. The law class, Judge Whitfield announces, is a little larger than at a corresponding time in any session of the Law School. The Preparatory School seems to show a slight decrease, though it is too early to say definitely. The College authorities were prepared to see a falling off in all departments on account of the prevailing industrial depression, and, in view of the general condition of unrest, the opening attendance is a cause for great encouragement.

Professor Mitchell, the new teacher in the department of Mathematics, is on hand and has made a most favorable impression. This we anticipated; for we were satisfied that the College was to be congratulated upon securing the services of this scholarly and experienced man. Mrs. Mitchell, we are sure, will prove a charming addition to the College community.

Professor Henderson, the Head Master of the Preparatory School, the son of an honored member of the Louisiana Conference and one of our old boys, is domiciled in the Preparatory dormitory with his gracious and cultured wife, and has entered upon his work with an energy and tact that give good promise for the future.

The renovated and thoroughly furnished Observatory is again in commission, thanks to the successful efforts of Professor Harrell of the Department of Physics. Professor Harrell has also undertaken to enlist the members of his class, the class of 1899, in the work of presenting to the College a handsome pulpit stand for the beautiful new chapel.

This class activity reminds me that Rev. J. L. Neill, an honored alumnus of the College, and at present the pastor of our First Church in Laurel, has undertaken to interest his class, that of 1906, in the equipment of the Mathematics room in honor of the late Dr. James A. Moore, for many years the head of this department in Millsaps College. This will be a beautiful tribute to the memory of this beloved and honored man.

Friday evening there was held in the chapel of the Preparatory School the annual reception given to the students by the Young Men's Christian Association. A large crowd was present and the occasion was thoroughly enjoyed. The Young Men's Christian Association is the most thoroughly organized and effective agency for religious work among the students, and its importance was recognized in the provision made for its activities in the planning of the new building.

The athletic interests of the students have not been overlooked. Dr. Swartz, the new Faculty Manager of Athletics, has taken hold of this work with commendable zeal, and the outlook is most promising for the various forms of college athletics.

The lively interest of our people in this great school is my justification for writing at such great length of the opening and prospects of the College. I wish our friends to know that Millsaps College is true to the best traditions of the Church, and that its future was never quite so full of promise as at present.

Jackson, Miss.

A. F. WATKINS.

"JONAH."

The above is the title to a very illuminating book review, found on page 176 of the January number of the Methodist Review, and signed by J. H. Stevenson, Vanderbilt University. Mr. Stevenson is reviewing a book by a certain Professor Brewer. He begins the review thus:

"According to Professor Brewer—and he has most scholars in agreement with him—the book of Jonah is not a record of actual happenings."

"Most scholars!" Humph! according to this, then, a scholar is one who says what part of the Bible is true and what part is not true. But read a few lines farther:

"More significant, perhaps, is the attempt to show that a man can live for a time within a whale. The present writer is unable to see what comfort or help this brings to those who are looking on every page of Scripture for the supernatural."

Who told the learned Mr. Stevenson that the average Bible reader was looking for the supernatural on every page of the Scripture? I hardly think this is true of us who, when we do find the supernatural, haven't a bit better sense than to believe it.

Now, there are some things in connection with this that I cannot understand. Is the Bible inspired? Is part of it inspired, and a part not inspired? If so, who is to be the judge of what is and what is not inspired? And if God is God, omnipotent, omnipresent, omniscient, is he not able, if he desired, to keep a literal man alive in the body of a literal large fish for so long a time as he desires? If we are to do away with the supernatural in part, why not do away with all? And if we begin to do away with part, who will be the judge of where we shall stop? "Most scholars!" Was it a literal fire that came down from heaven at the prayer of Elijah, and did it destroy a literal altar with a literal offering with the literal water? Was Daniel delivered from a literal den of lions? Were his three friends delivered from a literal furnace? And if we begin doing away with the supernatural, while we are about it, why not do away with the miracles of Christ—raising Lazarus from the dead, healing the sick, feeding the multitudes? Or why not go further and do away with the greatest miracle, that of his sinless life? And before we stop why not eliminate the resurrection of Christ?

A few more things I cannot understand: If we, as a religious denomination accept all the Bible, why is such stuff permitted to be published in our periodicals? Are any of these "most scholars" in the employ of our Church? If so, why are they not discharged, and that immediately?

It rather seems to me that the Bible as a whole stands or falls as a whole; that if any of it is true, all of it is true.—J. P. Chambers, in Texas Advocate.

ANOTHER WORD ABOUT SONGS.

It is presumed that many readers of the Advocate of September 10 read with approval the article, "A Word About Songs," by Rev. J. F. Campbell. His criticisms on some of the music and words of songs in common use to-day are very just. Especially do I endorse his protest against the chorus, "I shall know him by the prints of the nails in his hands." I cannot sing it and have frequently so said. There is another song that I hope I will never hear again: "It's just like Jesus to roll the clouds away."

Of these and others songs that I could name, it may be said that, while the music may be enchanting to the ear, the sentiments of the words are not helpful to the devout soul endeavoring to worship God in spirit and in truth. And yet they are often used in our prayer-meeting and preaching services, to the exclusion of the more appropriate God-honoring, and spiritually refreshing hymns and songs, expressive of the heart-felt experience of faith, hope, love and joy, begotten by the Holy Spirit.

Thus it is and will be where the selections are consigned to the organist and choir. The remedy is with the presiding elders and pastors, who should always be masters of the singing, as well as the other acts of religious service and public worship in our congregations.

Our Church schools can contribute greatly to the needed improvement in the use of songs in our churches by using in their religious exercises our standard hymnbook and teaching it to some extent.

To show how the home may also aid in this work, I quote from a recent number of the Nashville Christian Advocate, copied from "The Churchman," as follows: "If the mothers of a community can start a movement to popularize the old songs, putting them into the home, the schools, the social hours, and giving them a place above that of the cheap popular songs, it will be a long educational step. They have, all of them, an appealing note that will make them quickly interesting to children. It is not the fault of our boys and girls that dangerous sentimentality is the burden of their singing. They demand the lyric, the emotional in their adolescent development, and not recognizing this fact, we have left them alone to satisfy this need as best they could."

Let "The Methodist Hymnal" and "The Little Hymn Book" be used in every Church and home, and let all the people sing unto the Lord with the spirit and with the understanding also.

G. W. BACHMAN.

Winona, Miss., Sept. 15, 1914.

SOCIAL HALL OPENED.

The Mary Werlein Social Hall, adjoining the Mission, in Tchoupitoulas Street, New Orleans, was opened with appropriate exercises Tuesday evening, Sept. 22. An entertainment consisting of singing, recitations and games, combined in making the evening a thoroughly enjoyable one for those present. Refreshments were dispensed during the course of the program, and Rev. H. W. Jamieson, assisted by a bevy of young ladies, looked after the necessary arrangements incident to the success of the affair.

From now on, the Mary Werlein Social Hall will be kept open during the day and of evenings. It is the desire of the people behind the institution to make the hall a meeting place for the young girls and children of the thickly congested neighborhood adjacent to the Maginnis Cotton Mill. In addition to the social end of the enterprise, a gymnasium has been installed on the second floor, equipped with many devices and appliances helpful to health and physical well-being. The factory toilers of the neighborhood, especially the young women, will have an opportunity to gain the benefits of physical culture. A rest room for use during the luncheon hour also has been provided, along with shower baths and other adjuncts.

A free medical clinic will be operated in conjunction with the Mary Werlein Mission, Dr. Gayles Alken being the physician in charge. The advantages of this clinic may be had by all, and every effort will be made to have the people of the locality avail themselves of the medical attention to be had. The juveniles have been provided for in the way of recreative means, as a large play hall has been arranged for their romps and games.

Rev. H. W. Jamieson is the preacher in charge of the Mission and Mrs. Lily Meekins is the resident missionary. Miss Nannie L. Thompson is assistant to the resident missionary, and Miss Willie Lee Rowan has charge of the young women's work.

BILLY AND THE LAMB.

"Baa!" said the lamb and Billy thought
It knew his coat was from its wool.
"We didn't hurt you, Lamb," he said,
"Tho' Daddy cut a whole bag full;

"And Mother weaved it into cloth
And made it such a pretty red,
I didn't think you'd know it," but—
The Lambkin smiled and shook its head.

And this is what our Billy boy
Was sure he heard that lambkin say:
"God made me for you, little boy,
And let you take my fleece away.

"I'm glad to have you use it so,
And that's because I love you well.
I'll soon have plenty more, you know,
And you can have a lot to sell.

"Not what we keep but what we give
Is what we really have, my dear;
Remember this the years you live
And be a blessing everywhere.

"For love is giving, little boy,
Forgetting self the whole long day;
And all the joys that come from love
Will never, never pass away."

—The Shepherd's Arms.

THE STORY OF DAVID.

It was Sunday afternoon, the sun was setting low in the West, and the birds were singing their good-night songs.

"It's time for our Bible story now, Bessie," John said to his little sister who was playing near him; so they put Teddy in the doll's go-cart, picked up Miss Polly and the new doll and went into the sitting room to find mother. She was reading, but when she saw her little children she put down her book and said, smiling:

"Well, what do my little folks want?"

"We want you to tell us a Bible story, mother," said John.

"A Bible story," said Bessie.

Mother took Bessie on her lap, and John climbed on his favorite seat, the arm of her chair, and put his arm around her neck.

"What shall the story be about?" asked mother.

"About David," said John.

"Bout David," said Bessie.

Now John was only four years old, but he knew a great many stories from the Bible. He knew about Abraham, and Joseph, and little Moses in the basket, and Samuel; but ever since he was a very little boy his favorite story had been about
'Dady and de Baa Sheeps,' as he used to say.

"I like David, too," said Bessie. So mother began to tell about David, and this is what she told them:

"Once long ago in Bethlehem there lived a man named Jesse who had eight sons; all of them except the youngest had to go away and work; so David stayed at home and took care of his father's flock of sheep. In that country there were high hills, with big rocks, and stony paths, and sometimes a lion or a bear would come out and try to steal a lamb from the flock; so some one had to watch the sheep all the time to see that nothing hurt them, and to lead them to the nice green grass and the springs of cool water, and to the shade of the trees when it got hot. So David felt very proud and grown up when he first took the sheep out in the hills all by himself, and he watched them very carefully. They had plenty of grass and water, and if any one of the little foolish lambs ran away, David found it and brought it back. Sometimes one of the sheep would slip on the rocks and hurt itself, then David would put some oil on the place to make it get well. David had a harp and knew how to play on it, so he sat under a big tree and played lots of beautiful tunes until it began to get dark, and then David called his sheep to go to some safe place for the night. As soon as they heard his voice they came to him, for the sheep knew his voice and knew he would take care of them.
He took them to a nice, quiet place in the hills where the sheep would be safe, and where he could see the lights in the houses down in the village. He counted all the sheep to see if any were missing. Then he looked at each one carefully to see if there was any hurt place on it.

Presently the sheep were all ready for the night, and David began to feel a little lonely up there on the hillside all by himself. He had eaten the nice supper his mother had brought him in the afternoon, and now he lay down to try to go to sleep. You see, David had felt like a big man all day; but now it was dark, and he wanted to pick up his staff and run home to his mother and the rest of his family, but he thought, 'What would happen to these poor sheep if I don't stay here; but who will take care of me if I do stay?' David's mother had taught him to think about God and to say his prayers every night. So now he said his evening prayer and began to feel better. 'I'm not afraid now,' he said. 'I'll stay right here and be a good shepherd to these my father's sheep, and God will take care of me—why—why—the Lord is my Shepherd. I shall not want!' And with that beautiful thought in his heart he went to sleep. The next day while the sheep were eating David made that beautiful song about the Good Shepherd that everybody knows—"

"Oh, mother," said John, "is it the one I know, and may I sing it now?"

"Yes, dear; it's that very one, and you may sing it to Bessie, and when she gets bigger she shall learn it, too." So John sang all of the Psalm beginning, "The Lord is my Shepherd," which you know, too, I'm sure; and when he finished it he said:

"Mother, did David write any more hymns like that?"

"Yes, dear, he wrote a great many. We call them Psalms, and in lots of them he seems to remember how he took care of the sheep, and to feel sure God was taking care of him just that way. In one of the Psalms he wrote, 'I cried unto God with my voice and he answered me out of his holy hill. I laid me down and slept. I awakened, for Jehovah kept me.' When I was a little girl my mother taught me a verse David wrote, and I used to say it every night before I went to sleep. Would you like to learn it, too, to say at night?"

"Yes, mother," said John.

"Yesh, mudder," said Bessie.

"Well, this is it: 'I will both lay me down in peace and sleep, for Thou, Lord, only makest me dwell in safety.'"

John repeated this verse until he knew it, and Bessie said it, too, though she did not know what it meant.

"And now it is time my little lambs were having their supper, for the night has come and the stars are all peeping out."

"Will you tell us another Bible story next Sunday, mother?" asked John.

"Yes, dear, one every Sunday night," said mother.—Southern Churchman.

GREELEY, THE SPELLER.

(For the benefit of our young readers, we will say that Horace Greeley was the founder of The New York Tribune, one of America's greatest newspapers, and was for many years a recognized force in the public affairs of the nation.—
Editor of the Advocate.)

No winner of the old-time spelling matches, perhaps, ever excelled the boy Horace Greeley, who later became one of the most famous editors America has produced. He was, in fact, a spelling prodigy. What would the boys and girls of to-day, who grumble over their daily task of twenty words, think of a child not yet six years old who could actually spell every word in the language? That is what the young Horace is said to have been able to do.

His schooling began in his fourth year, and the art of spelling at once became a passion with him. In school and out he kept incessantly at its study. Hour after hour he would lie on the floor, spelling over all the difficult words he could find in the few books that the family owned.

The fame of his knowledge spread. Naturally,

Horace was the first one chosen at spelling matches. He had a lisping, whining voice and spelled his words with the utmost confidence.
Sometimes in winter, when the snow drifts were so deep that one of the big boys had to take him to the schoolhouse on his back, the little white-haired fellow would drop asleep between turns.
When his word came round his neighbor would nudge him anxiously; he would wake, spell his word and drop asleep again at once.

So great was the boy's reputation as a student of unusual powers, that the select men of a neighboring town, in passing a rule forbidding the attendance at the local school of any pupil from outside the township, honored him by adding the clause, "Excepting only Horace Greeley!"—The Evangelical.

RESTING PLACES.

"Lots of telegraph poles are going up," said Willie. "They are just so far apart from each other, and every time I go from our house to yours, grandpa, I stop and rest at each pole."

"There are lots of Sundays in my life," said grandpa, "and they are the same distance apart, and they are on the way to my Father's house.
Every time I come to one I stop and rest, too."

CONCERNING RENEWALS.

What about the renewal of your subscription to the Advocate? Please look at the label on your paper and see if you are in arrears, and if you are, kindly remit to us at once. We also earnestly ask the immediate assistance of our presiding elders and pastors in an effort to secure the renewal of our subscriptions in every charge. This is an important matter, as we are now dropping many names from our subscription files, which is a loss both to the Advocate and the Church. This is a time of great financial stringency, and we appeal to our friends to lend us a helping hand. Let us hear from you, brethren.

OPENING OF THE ATLANTA THEOLOGICAL SCHOOL.

The Theological Department of the new University at Atlanta had a great opening on September 23. The exercises were held in the spacious Wesley Memorial Church in the presence of a magnificent audience. There were 150 Methodist ministers in attendance, among them being Dr. T. N. Ivey, Editor of the Nashville Christian Advocate, Dr. E. B. Chappell, Sunday School Editor of the M. E. Church, South, and Dr. W. W. Pinson, Secretary of the General Board of Missions. The principal address was delivered by Bishop W. A. Candler; other speakers were the Hon. John M. Slaton, Governor of Georgia, City Attorney James L. Mayson, Dr. T. N. Ivey, and Dr. P. T. Durham, Dean of the Faculty. Though invited to sit on the platform, with a modesty that was beautiful, Mr. Asa Candler declined to do so and took an inconspicuous seat in the audience. Toward the close of the exercises, however, he was called out by Dr. Durham and made a few impressive remarks, but did not refer to his own gift. He spoke in the highest terms of the work of the Educational Commission and said he hoped that the Methodists throughout the country would help to make the institution great and useful. Scores of telegrams extending congratulations and best wishes were received from other Southern Methodist institutions, from individuals, and from schools of other denominations, among the latter being the Presbyterian Seminary of Richmond, Va., and the Garrett Biblical Institute (Chicago) of the Methodist Episcopal Church.

More than forty young ministers were on hand to matriculate the first day, and Dean Durham stated that there was good reason to think the number would be increased to over sixty in a week or ten days. Some of the young pastors who expect to enter will not be able to do so until after their Conferences meet, and it is not unlikely that by the first of January the attendance will reach seventy-five or eighty, which would be an admirable showing, considering the fact that this institution is expected to serve only one-half the Church. Vanderbilt University had last year only 101 students in the Biblical Department with the entire connection behind it.

The Atlanta Constitution stated that the faculty and theologues of the new school spent Wednesday evening, Sept. 23, in a prayer meeting at the Wesley Memorial Church, conducted by Dr. W. R. Hendrix, the pastor. A delightful reception was given the professors and students by the Methodist ladies of Atlanta last week, and last Sunday was a great day for those connected with the new institution, the formal opening sermon being preached by Bishop E. E. Hoss, and Bishop Denny occupying the pulpit at the evening hour.

The successful establishment and opening of this excellently endowed and equipped theological seminary should be a source of gratitude and thanksgiving to God among Southern Methodists everywhere, and they should remember it daily in their prayers. A Church has no more important work than that of training the men who are to fill its pulpits, and it can be rightly done only in an atmosphere that is deeply spiritual and which is wholesome and helpful in every respect; and it is our imperative and sacred duty to see that such an environment is maintained about our schools for the prophets in Atlanta and Dallas. We shall be a most stupid people, indeed, if we fail to profit by the sad and hurtful experiences of the past, and do better with the inspiring new opportunities which a favoring Providence has so graciously given us.

THE CALL TO THE CHURCH.

The days of the prophets have returned—the clerical war prophets. From many pulpits and upon many printed pages they are telling us what is to be in the future. One proclaims that this will be the world's last great war; another affirms that Christianity will find at the close of the strife such doors of opportunity standing wide open as have not been seen since the tragedy on Calvary. But we remember that he who is reputed to have been the world's wisest man said, "Boast not thyself of to-morrow; for thou knowest not what a day may bring forth." A struggle mightier far than that now raging between Germany and the Allied Armies is taking place on this planet between the Prince of light and the powers of darkness, and what the unfolding years may have in store no uninspired mind can tell. We should strive to be hopeful, but we cannot forget that sin has not only destroyed powerful nations, but that it once wrecked the whole world except a single family. It has yet a tremendous grip upon humanity and there may be far darker times ahead than we like to admit are possible.

At any rate, the present awful period should be one of heartsearching and prayer. Much so-called religion is counterfeit—is but sham and pretense. The true Christianity of Christ and the apostles is the only thing that can save any man or any people. Louder than the roar of Krupp's mightiest guns upon the sanguinary battlefields of Europe, should be the call coming from the disclosures of this tremendous clash in arms to the Church to turn away from pride, pomp, and parade, and to follow humbly the teachings of the Son of God, seeking the power that he alone can bestow and endeavoring faithfully to exhibit his spirit of humility, love, and helpfulness. There is no other upward path for mankind either in time or in eternity.

NO RIGHT TO SHUN THE BATTLE.

There are many people who are for "peace at any price" in the spiritual as well as carnal warfare. They had rather see evil left undisturbed than to be annoyed by the conflict that is required to overthrow it, and they call the man who would antagonize it "a pestilent fellow" and a "troubler of Israel," forgetful of the fact that Jesus, in referring to the necessary clash between right and wrong, said: "I came not to send peace, but a sword." The Christian soldier has no authority to enter into a truce with the forces of his Satanic majesty; he is sent to overthrow them, not to compromise with them. To be sure, he will encounter opposition if he does his duty; but what of that? Our Lord himself was sent to the cross because he would not be quiet and let things continue as he found them. The faithful man must "cry aloud and spare not," doing it, of course, in the proper way and with the right spirit, even though it should make of him a martyr. Nothing is nobler than martyrdom if it comes from fidelity to truth and duty.

PROSPECT OF IT NOT BRIGHTENING.

The Pittsburgh Christian Advocate reproduces, without comment, the following editorial utterance of The Continent:

"It is enough to make one's mouth water to think of the chance the Methodists of America have in the union movement proposed by the Southern section of the Church. The merger would include the main Northern body, the Southern body, the Methodist Protestant, and three Negro branches, making a total of barely under 6,800,000 people. We have no great lust for numbers, but if that possibility does not strike the imagination, we give up the case as hopeless. Blessings on us—we almost believe that if they would come together and then march up to the Presbyterian Churches with a rousing Methodist shout, we might come together ourselves! At any rate, we give a hearty Presbytero-Methodist 'Amen!' to the project."

This utterance sounds well, and it looks well copied in a Northern Methodist journal, but the fact is, the union of American Methodist Churches is yet in all probability far away in the future; indeed, there is no certainty that it will ever come. The plan of unification submitted by the Southern Methodist Church has, so far as we are able to judge, received almost a frost in Northern Methodist circles, and the element standing for the active invasion of the South seems to have about carried the day in our Sister Church. We shall soon know whether the Federal Council of Methodism is to be a really useful or merely ornamental tribunal, and if it should prove to be the latter, the talk of union will likely subside, for a while, at least. But even in that event there will be some consolation in knowing that the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, offered for adoption a fair, practicable, and fraternal plan of getting together, and that the responsibility for the continuation of overlapping work and wasteful competition among the spiritual sons of Wesley in the United States cannot be laid at her door.

MR. WALTER PRICE DEAD.

Writing from Macon, Miss., on September 22, Rev. R. O. Brown, our pastor at that place, says: "Hon. Walter Price, State Senator from Noxubee County, died here this afternoon. He was one of the most loyal and faithful of our official members and he will be sorely missed by our church and community. About a decade ago I was his pastor for three years, as I have been again this year, and I can say that I have never known a nobler, more unselfish, consistent man and Christian. His end was peace."

This announcement fills our heart with genuine sorrow. Such men as Brother Price are so rare that any State or community can ill afford to lose them. He was gifted in intellect, was a fluent and forceful speaker, was firm and sound in his convictions, and possessed a high order of physical and moral courage. As a business man he was a success; as a citizen he was without reproach and measured up to a high standard of usefulness, and as a churchman and Christian he was devoted and true. He served his day and generation well and has gone hence, leaving behind a record that eloquently attests his manliness and worth. May the earth lie lightly upon his low-laid form; and may the Heavenly Father tenderly keep those near and dear to him until they shall be called to meet him where death can separate loved ones no more!

MISSISSIPPI IN THE LEAD.

The first student to register in the Theological School of the new Atlanta University was Rev. J. W. Chisholm, of Jackson, Miss., who is an A. B. graduate of Millsaps College and a member of the Mississippi Conference. The Atlanta Georgian and News of September 24 contained a picture of this promising young minister immediately after his name had been entered upon the register, with Bishop Candler enthusiastically grasping his hand. This is quite a distinction, and we are glad that it came to a son of the Magnolia State. We confidently expect to see Mississippi do her full share toward the establishment and equipment of our new University. Indeed, since Emory College has become a part of that institution she owes it a debt that it will take much to repay; for it was Emory that gave to her L. Q. C. Lamar, who shed such luster upon her and who was the South's ablest public man since the Civil War. Surely, such a service should challenge the strong Methodism of Mississippi to show its appreciation in a generous and substantial manner. Brother Chisholm has placed the name of our State in the lead; let us keep it there by being first in the measure of patronage and support given this splendid young institution which has begun its career so auspiciously and which will mean so much to our Church in the coming years.

PERSONAL AND OTHER NOTES.

Dr. J. T. Sawyer, after living in Mandeville, La., for several weeks, has again become a resident of New Orleans. His address is the same that it was before he left the city—5655 Hawthorn Avenue.

Rev. A. R. Hoffpauir sends a cheering note from his new field at Jennings, La. The people have given him a cordial reception and made him comfortable, and he considers the outlook for the work quite promising.

Dr. I. W. Cooper, of Brookhaven, Miss., and Dr. J. M. Henry, of New Orleans, attended the meeting of the General Board of Education of the M. E. Church, South, held in Atlanta, Ga., the new "Hub of Southern Methodism," this week.

Rev. W. W. Wilson, pastor of the Pleasant Grove (Miss.) charge, favored us with some subscriptions to the Advocate a few days since, for which we thank him. He reports that he has had some good meetings during the summer and that his work is progressing favorably.

The presiding elders of the North Mississippi Conference met in Winona, Miss., on Tuesday and Wednesday of this week for a consultation concerning the work in their territory.

Rev. E. C. Sullivan, pastor of the Kosciusko (Miss.) circuit, has our thanks for a club of subscribers and for some generous words of encouragement. He is having success in his present field, as he usually does where he labors for the Master.

Rev. J. A. Goad, who is one of the true and solid men of the North Mississippi Conference, is having a large measure of success on the New Albany circuit. His Sunday schools are flourishing and he has had 43 additions to the Church since Conference.

Rev. J. F. Dring conducted a series of revival services at Tioga, La., last week, in which he had the efficient assistance of Rev. W. D. Kleinschmidt of Jena. The meeting opened with a good attendance and interest, but we are not informed as to the final results.

Remember that both our Orphanages have named as their "Work Day" Saturday, October 17. Let us make it the greatest occasion of the kind in the history of either Louisiana or Mississippi. What have you done to enlist your people in this movement, brother pastor?

In a business letter to our office, Rev. R. H. B. Gladney, of Kosciusko, Miss., adds the following note: "The work prospers here. I am receiving new members on profession of faith nearly every Sabbath. This is a church of young people, and it is forging to the front in every department of the work."

The congregations at the Parker Memorial Church of New Orleans are already showing the favorable influence of the approaching autumn in point of size. The attendance was excellent last Sunday, and Rev. R. H. Harper, the gifted young pastor, preached a notably strong and helpful sermon.

Dr. H. G. Henderson, of Lexington, Miss., passed through New Orleans last Saturday en route to Beaumont, Texas, where he is assisting Rev. W. J. Johnson, pastor of the First M. E. Church, South, of that city, in a revival meeting. While waiting here for his train, Dr. Henderson favored the Advocate office with a call, but the Editor was out and missed seeing him, much to his regret.

Rev. R. T. Pickett, of Pelahatchie, Miss., reports that progress is being made in his charge. Four revival meetings have been held, which resulted in adding 25 new members to the Church. He was assisted in these meetings by Rev. R. T. Ware, Rev. Amos Kendall, Rev. J. M. Corley, and Rev. J. T. McVey, each of whom rendered effective service.

In giving some directions concerning the mailing of his paper, Rev. J. M. Johnson, of Palsgrove, Ky., adds: "At the recent session of our Annual Conference I was returned to this charge, and we have been most cordially received. The Lord graciously blessed us last year, and we are expecting him to do even more for us during the year now beginning."

Rev. J. A. McKee, who is pleasantly remembered in Mississippi, has been returned to his charge at Walsenburg, Colo., for the fourth year. He will tell us something about his work and conditions in the West in the next issue of the Advocate. We are pleased to know that this young friend is having a fruitful ministry and that he is happy in the Master's work.

We acknowledge the reception of a card, bearing the post-mark of Gloster, Miss., which reads as follows: "Mr. and Mrs. John L. Rogittio announce the marriage of their daughter, Nettie Irene, to Mr. Robert J. Mullins, on Wednesday, September 23, 1914, Memphis, Tenn. At home after October 1 at Eufaula, Okla." We extend congratulations and best wishes.

We are informed that the first M. E. Church, South, of Alexandria, La., of which Dr. G. E. Cameron is the brilliant and eloquent pastor, is having a large and increasing attendance upon the preaching services. Mrs. Cameron, who has been visiting in Oklahoma, has returned home and will resume her Sunday school work, in which field of service she is highly proficient.

Rev. H. N. Brown, of Lake Arthur, La., in sending in some subscriptions, for which we heartily thank him, says: "We are in the midst of a campaign in which we are trying to keep Jefferson Davis Parish dry. Pray for us." We certainly hope that Brother Brown and those standing with him in this noble endeavor will succeed. This is no time for any parish to be turning its face backward.

A message received in New Orleans some days ago stated that the Vanderbilt Biblical School opened with 15 students in attendance. The Nashville Advocate, coming out several days later, reported that 20 young ministers had ma-tricated. When the fact is considered that this school has a large helping fund at its disposal, this showing demonstrates how completely it has been repudiated by the Church under its present management.

The sixth annual session of the Sunday School Association of the First District of Louisiana was held at Litcher on Sept. 24 and 25, with about 35 delegates in attendance. Among the speakers were Mr. H. L. Baker of Plattenville, Mr. Van Carter of New Orleans, Mrs. T. D. Lipscomb of Donaldsonville, and Rev. G. D. Parker of Brazil, who is at home on a furlough.

The following friends, whose good service has not been mentioned elsewhere, have our hearty thanks for two or more subscriptions to the Advocate, sent in within the past few days: Rev. J. A. Goad, New Albany, Miss., 10; Rev. R. V. Fulton, Greensburg, La., 6; Rev. O. S. Lewis, Brandon, Miss., 5; Rev. J. F. Dring, Pineville, La., 2; Rev. J. L. Smith, Gallman, Miss., 2; Rev. R. A. Sibbey, Jr., Sharon, Miss., 2; Rev. A. H. Williams, Shannon, Miss., 5.

Brother W. W. Ellis, of Fernwood, Miss., Secretary of the Mississippi Board of Pharmacy, sends the Advocate a statement announcing that the Board will meet in regular session in Jackson, Miss., to examine applicants for license to practice pharmacy on October 6, at 8 a. m. This notice, which is being generally sent to the druggists of Mississippi, also calls attention to some wholesome laws that are being ignored or violated. Evidently Brother Ellis as the Secretary of this important body is a live wire.

A message from Rev. L. A. McKeown, of Byhalia, Miss., written on September 23, stated that Sister McKeown was ill at the Lucy Brinkley Hospital in Memphis and that she would undergo an operation on Saturday, September 26. We have had no later news, which we trust means that Sister McKeown passed safely through the ordeal and that her case is progressing favorably. Let the many friends of these two faithful servants of the Master remember them at the throne of grace in this trying hour.

Some one, presumably Bishop W. P. Thirkield, has kindly sent us a copy of the Annual of the Ohio Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church recently held in Washington Court House, Ohio. It contained the pictures of the Bishops in attendance and of the presiding elders, gave a full program of the order of exercises for each day, and furnished a complete directory as to where the preachers were stopping and much other useful information. We have never known such a publication to be issued by an Annual Conference of the Church, South.

Brother W. W. Williams writes as follows: "The meeting at Pineville, La., closed on Sunday, Sept. 20. Large crowds attended, much interest was shown, and there were a number of accessions. Rev. J. B. Roy, of Buckner, La., a superannuated minister, demonstrated during these services that he has not forgotten how to preach. He is one of the most effective men in the pulpit that has been heard in Pineville for some time. It is certainly to be regretted that his health failed some years ago, as it was that, and not his age, that necessitated his retirement."

Read Rev. Paul M. Brown's ringing statement concerning educational matters in Louisiana which appears on another page. What he has to say is pertinent and well worth meditating upon. Let every one who is interested, that possibly can, be certain to attend the meeting in Alexandria on the evening of October 6. We must rally to the support of Centenary and Mansfield Colleges and seek to strengthen them and enlarge their influence in every possible way. Louisiana Methodism would be impoverished without these institutions.

Rev. J. S. Duke, whose address is 505 Tombigbee Street, Jackson, Miss., writes us as follows: "It has been my privilege to work in some excellent meetings this summer, and the Lord has graciously blessed my labors. I am open for engagements to lead the singing for any pastor or evangelist who may need my services during the months of October and November, and in case it should be desired, I will do the preaching as well as lead the singing. I think that I ought to know something about evangelistic work, as I have been associated during the past seven years with some of the best revivalists in the country."

Rev. J. B. King, of Vaughan, Miss., writes: "We have just closed a fine meeting at Dover, an appointment on this charge, during which I received 5 persons into the Church and 10 infants were baptized. I conducted the first services held, and Brother M. L. White, of Flora, came to my assistance on Monday and did the preaching until the close of the revival. His sermons were strong and helpful and accomplished much good." Brother King's letter brought us 18 subscriptions to the Advocate, with a check to correspond. We scarcely need to say that we appreciate this good work in behalf of the Conference organ.

Rev. J. W. Brown has lately had several excellent meetings in his charge (Tickfaw), in which he had the assistance of Rev. E. D. Phillips and Rev. A. A. Phillips. Both of these brethren were with him at Holden, where an interesting series of services was conducted. At Midway, a community where there is no church conveniently near, he was aided by Brother A. A. Phillips, and a movement was started to organize a church and construct a house of worship. The same minister also wrought with him at Red Oak, where considerable good was accomplished. Each of these meetings lasted about five days, and they resulted in about 20 conversions and 12 additions to the Church.

As is known to our readers, President Wilson has designated Sunday, October 4, as a day of prayer for peace throughout the United States. The American Red Cross Society has expressed the hope that wherever it is practicable a collection will be taken on that day to help the sick and wounded of the warring nations. Contributors may specify to what country their gifts are to go if they so desire. It would perhaps be well to let any funds raised for this purpose pass through the hands of Mr. J. D. Hamilton, Treasurer of our General Board of Missions, stating to him clearly what they are for, or in Mississippi they may be sent to Major R. W. Millsaps, of Jackson, Miss., who is a representative of the Red Cross Association.

Rev. J. B. Randolph, of Como, Miss., writes: "We have just installed our new pipe organ from Hillgreen, Lane & Co. It is a beauty. Prof. Boutelle, of Memphis, tested it for us and gave a recital in the church on Thursday night, Sept. 24, which was attended by a large and appreciative audience. He pronounced the instrument to be a fine one and all right in every respect. We are rounding out our fourth year in this charge with everything in good shape. This church has never in its history failed to meet its assessments in full. We hope to have our new house of worship dedicated before Conference. There is no indebtedness on it. The church and its furnishings represent an expenditure of approximately $20,000."

Rev. W. M. Young, of Amory, Miss., writing on Sept. 24, says: "I have spent eight weeks in meetings and have been in some great revivals. Week before last I helped Rev. M. A. Burns at Union Church, one of the appointments of the Nettleton circuit, where there were 17 accessions to the Church, 12 coming to us and 5 going to the Presbyterians. I will be with Rev. B. P. Fullilove next week in a meeting at Rienzi. The construction of our new church at Amory is going steadily forward, and the roof is being put on at this time. The structure will cost between $22,000 and $25,000. It will have 23 Sunday school rooms. We are hoping to get into it by the first of next year, and possibly earlier. Our Sunday school during the summer has averaged 140, and we expect to try to double the attendance when we get into our commodious new quarters."

Rev. J. A. McCormack and his good people have recently completed an elegant new preacher's home in the interesting little city of Franklinton, La. Speaking of it, Brother McCormack says: "It is a two-story building with eight large rooms; it also has a bathroom, a servant's room, and an attic. It is storm-sheeted and plastered and is worth about $3000, being by far the best parsonage in the Baton Rouge District. Mr. Sanford, of Zona, gave most of the lumber and other mill men near here gave the additional amount that was needed. Mr. Sullivan, of Bogalusa, gave the laths, and the railroad hauled all the material free. The money to build the structure was given by the people of Franklinton, and the ladies are now placing nice new furniture in it. I think that the Bishop would do well to send either Brother Foster or Brother Schulte to this charge next year, for I feel sure that this house would prove stimulating to an old bachelor." We heartily congratulate Brother McCormack and his choice flock upon having consummated this substantial and splendid enterprise.

The women of the North Mississippi Conference claim the distinction of having first suggested the idea of constructing a hospital to serve the Methodists of that State. At the eleventh annual meeting of the Home Mission Society, held at Pickens, its members enthusiastically voted to undertake the establishment of such an institution in Mississippi and $121 was contributed toward the enterprise. Later, however, these workers decided to co-operate with the movement started by Brother J. H. Sherard to build a hospital in Memphis that would have the support of several Annual Conferences, and the Woman's Missionary Society of North Mississippi now has in its treasury $1000 for the furnishing of a ward in the Memphis institution. We are grateful to Mrs. Walter Campbell, editor of the North Mississippi Monthly Bulletin, for calling our attention to this interesting bit of history. It affords us sincere pleasure to accord to the far-seeing women of our own Conference the place of honor which is justly due them as the pioneers in this philanthropic movement which is now coming to such a splendid culmination.

The death angel bore away from the home of his son, Emmet Laney, on August 22, 1914, the spirit of O. D.
LANEY, who was born on Oct. 13,
1838. After the funeral services, conducted by the writer, the Masons took charge of the body, which was buried in the Rocky Point Cemetery. Brother
Laney united with the Methodist Church in early life and remained an active and consistent member to the end of his life. His wife and four of the nine children born to them preceded him to the better world. He leaves behind to mourn their loss five sons, with their families, besides a host of friends and neighbors whose hearts are wrung with grief over his departure. Brother Laney has gone to receive his rich reward in that glorious city where there is no night. We tender our heartfelt sympathy to the bereaved ones, and can only commend them to a loving Savior who doeth all things well. May God grant them the assurance of meeting the father while he awaits the home-coming of those he left behind. May his presence there with the other loved ones who have gone on before make the thought of heaven more dear.

His pastor,

C. C. GRIFFIN.

Mrs. LUCY SKELTON was born on March 9, 1836, and died on Sept. 5, 1914. She professed religion while she was yet young and joined the
M. E. Church, South, living a consistent member of that Church till her death. She was twice married.
First to Mr. R. W. Bell, this union being blessed with 3 children, 1 son and 2 daughters. After Mr. Bell's death she married Mr. A. W. Skelton, and again became the mother of 3 children, 1 son and 2 daughters.
These 6 children, all of whom are grown, remain to mourn their loss.
Sister Skelton was an amiable woman and well beloved. She never tired in well doing, but was always ready to heed the cry of the needy and distressed. She scattered sunshine and flowers wherever she went. Her last illness was very severe, baffling the skill of the most learned physicians, but she bore her sufferings without murmuring. When the call came she was ready and said: "Let the Lord's will be done." She asked her Savior just to open his arms and let her sweep through the beautiful gate into his arms—into the New Jerusalem; and thus she passed to her reward. Her pastor,

E. C. SULLIVAN.

MEMORIAL RESOLUTIONS.

Since God in his infinite wisdom has seen fit to call home our faithful and devoted worker, Mrs. Robert Neal, therefore be it

Resolved, by the Woman's Missionary Society of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, at Starkville, Miss.:

1. That it is with a feeling of sincere and inexpressible sorrow that we chronicle the death of this devoted Christian worker.
2. That in her death, our Society and Church have lost a member whose very presence was an inspiration and whose example of a Christian's life will be a lasting heritage to her family and to us. Mrs. Neal was quiet and gentle, and although she was for many months a constant sufferer, she never murmured nor complained, but accepted what came to her with the patient resignation that comes only in living close to the great Master. She fought a good fight, finished her course, and kept the faith, and has now gone home to receive the crown of righteousness that was laid up for her.
3. That we extend our condolence to the bereaved family.
4. That these resolutions be inscribed on the minutes of our Society and that a copy be sent to the New Orleans Advocate for publication.

Signed: Mrs. R. K. WIER,
Mrs. C. R. BUNTIN.

CAPTAIN EDWIN CRIPPEN.

Captain Edwin Crippen was born in Utica, New York, on Dec. 4, 1824.
He had four brothers and three sisters, of whom only one, a sister, survives. His parents died when he was eight years old, and for a time he boarded with an uncle, Moses Benedict, who resided in Michigan, and attended school. At the age of 16 he went with his youngest sister to live with his oldest brother at Sidon, Miss., where he engaged with him in the lumber business. They floated timber down the Mississippi River in rafts, and sold it at New Orleans, then a small but thriving city.

Captain Crippen was married twice.
His first wife was Mrs. Garrett, a widow with several children, all of whom were reared to maturity. As a result of this union three children were born, all of whom are living. In the year 1861, when the Civil War broke out, he was a miller and, as such, was exempt from military service by law, but he was thoroughly in accord with the position taken by the Southern leaders and preferred to do his part upon the field of battle. He joined the Fifth Mississippi Regiment, a part of that division of General Forrest's command known as Rucker's Brigade, which was commanded by Brigadier-General Chambers. He first served as an orderly-sargeant, but upon the death of his captain, became commander of the company and served as such throughout the remainder of the war. He was in many fierce fights, notable among which was the battle of Colliersville, Tenn., where General J. Z.
George, then colonel of the regiment, was captured and his regiment forced to fall back; and he was also at Fort Pillow, where the Confederates were victorious and set fire to a number of Federal steamboats.

At the close of the war in 1865, he moved to Black Hawk, Miss., and became a farmer. Several years after the death of his first wife he married Miss Lou Johnson, a daughter of Rev.
Stephen Johnson of Carroll County, who lived but little more than a year.
One child, a daughter, was born to them, who died in infancy. His home having been broken up, Captain Crippen spent his last days in peace and quiet with his married children. He was kind, gentle, prudent, patient, unassuming, and a strong believer in Christ, in whom he fully trusted for salvation. He had his faults, but his virtues so outshone them that they were well-nigh obscured to those who knew him best. He lived to a ripe old age, lacking but a few months of reaching his 88th birthday. After an illness lasting about a week, he died in New Orleans on October 7, 1912, at the home of his daughter, Mrs. R.
A. Meek, surrounded by all his children.

In his death, those who were closest to him and who loved him feel an inexpressible loss, to which nothing but the blessed assurance that he was prepared to go, confirmed by his own testimony, can reconcile them. His life for years had been a benediction to all who had the good fortune to be associated with him. His bright and genial disposition cheered all with whom he came in contact and radiated sunshine into many dark places along the road of life. After his long pilgrim journey, we feel that he is at home at last in "the Father's house."

"We cannot say, and will not say,
That he is dead—he is just away."

AMERICAN MISSIONARY IN CUBA PRAISES PIANO CLUB.

The following letter just received by the Managers of the New Orleans Christian Advocate Piano Club shows the tremendous saving in price which you can secure by placing your order for a Piano or Player-Piano through the Club of One Hundred. Owing to the high import duty on new pianos we recommended to this Club Member that he select a slightly used instrument which could be shipped to Cuba at reduced rate of duty, and which cost him only one hundred and ninety dollars. Read Mr. Mullen's letter and you will see that, according to his estimate, the Club has saved him two hundred and sixty dollars. Here is the letter:

Guantanamo, Oriente, Cuba.

Aug. 3rd, 1914.

Ludden & Bates, Atlanta, Ga.:

Dear Sirs—The Piano came about the 23d or 24th and was in our home on the 27th. I was absent in Havana, attending an Institute, and did not get back till the latter part of the week.
So this is the first chance that I have had to answer.

We are very much delighted with the instrument, and are fully persuaded that we did a wise thing in buying from you. An instrument not a whit better would have cost us at least $450.00 down here. In fact, we were interested in such a proposition when we heard of your plan. In all that long trip, and in the hands, here at least, of inexperienced handlers, it does not seem to be in the least out of tune.

Sincerely yours,

W. M. MULLEN.

If your home needs a good Piano or Player-Piano we cordially invite you to write for your copy of the Club's handsomely illustrated catalogue which describes and pictures the many beautiful instruments and explains the great saving in price, the protective guarantees and the convenient terms. Hundreds of Club members have written letters similar to that of Mr. Mullen and we are sure that you would be also delighted with the Club and its instruments.

Tidings From the Field

Bernice, La.

The Bernice charge is moving on nicely under the pastorate of Rev. S. H. Frazier, and he is highly appreciated by all the people of this circuit. We sincerely trust that the Annual Conference will compliment us by sending him back to us as our pastor for 1915, as he has been so faithful and such a blessing to us this year. I very much enjoy the Advocate each week, and feel grateful to you for such a good paper. I wish you much success with it.—Harriet Akin.

Flora, Miss.

My Dear Dr. Meek: We have just closed a good meeting at Dover, Miss., and Brother King, I am sure, feels rejoiced over the results. He is a good man to help in a revival. Brother King baptized 9 children and received 5 persons into the membership of the Church. This has been a good summer with me. The Lord has been good to us. My meetings are all over now, and I am getting ready for Conference. We had the pleasure of having Dr. Fearn with us yesterday. He gave us a splendid talk on China, which was inspiring to my people. He is optimistic as to his work. He will be with us again before he goes back to the Orient. We are hoping to make good collections and report well at Conference. The Advocate is doing good work here in the homes in which it has lately become a visitor. You are giving us a good Methodist paper. God bless you.—M. L. White.

Poplar Creek, Miss.

Dear Dr. Meek: We have just closed our seventh meeting with the following results: We had 5 real good revivals, and good interest was manifested at the other two meetings. We have received 42 on profession of faith and 4 by certificate, making 46 to date. Victory has been the watchword and God graciously blessed the labors of the following brethren who faithfully assisted us: Rev. E. B. Sharp, of Webb, Miss.; Rev. J. J. Garner, of Kilmichael, Miss.; and Rev. E. C. Sullivan, of Kosciusko, Miss. They all preached the Word of God in its purity and with profit to all who heard them. Their earnest messages will continue to bring results for many days to come. We feel that the Everlasting Arms are underneath us and we take courage, hoping that this shall be the best year of the three years we have been here. Whoever comes this way finds a big-hearted and loving people. We hope to report "in full" at Conference.—T. L. Oakes.

First Church, Shreveport.

Dear Dr. Meek: You will remember that last year we had 2001 present on our Rally Day and had all the children from our Ruston Orphanage here as our guests, and that we raised over $1000 in our Sunday school that day for the Orphanage. We are going to repeat that plan this year, on October 18, by again bringing over the children and raising $500 to $1000 in the Sunday school for the institution from which they come. We did not want to go backward this year in our attendance, so we raised our attendance mark to 2500. I think we will have that many present all right.

The school has held up well during the hot summer months and we have recorded higher attendance marks for that period than ever before, and although we have a great Sunday school building containing four floors, with a total of 34 rooms, we are crowded. The enrollment of the school now is about 1500, with over 300 babies on the Cradle Roll.

Centenary College has had a fine opening and the session begins with bright prospects.

Cordially yours,
W. A. McKENNON,
Superintendent.

Greensburg, La.

Since our June report we have been steadily moving on. Brother P. O. Lowrey assisted me in a very successful meeting at Pine Ridge, where our people are now building a new church. . . . On Wednesday night, Aug. 19, Rev. J. F. Foster was greeted here at the M. E. Church with a large audience to hear his lecture on "Sunny Italy." Truly, we were delightfully entertained, as well as enlightened. We hope to have him with us again some time. During his visits here he was most of the time a guest in the lovely home of Brother and Sister W. L. Tillery, who are strong pillars in our Church. . . . On Sept. 5 our third quarterly conference convened at Center Church with Rev. H. W. Bowman, presiding elder, in the chair. Brother Bowman preached four excellent sermons while with us, but his Sunday night discourse especially was of a high order. He captured the hearts of all the people and thus started well the most successful meeting of my ministry. On Monday at 11 o'clock, Brother Wm. Powell, a local preacher, preached for us and gave us other appreciated service. On Monday evening my brother, J. Ben Fulton, of St. Francisville, La., arrived and continued the services until the night of Sept. 18. As he was a favorite former pastor of these people, the meeting was great from the beginning. While we only received 8 members, that was more than we expected, for nearly everybody was already a member of the Church. The great value of this meeting consisted particularly in the large number of reclamations and reconsecrations, caused by the conviction produced from the forceful presentation of the Word, and the power of Christ, our King. . . . On Sept. 16 I began a meeting at a new appointment, at Pine Hill, in a school building, preaching twice a day, beginning Wednesday at 11 a.m., and continuing 4 days. I received 22 members, all adults, of whom 12 were men, and organized a church. This organization was the result of the Sunday school and the regular preaching service established there this year. We shall expect soon to have a flourishing church at this promising point. . . . During the past 9 months we have enrolled 44 new names on our church registers and have yet 2 more meetings to hold. We trust that we may be able to report in full at Conference. However, on every side we hear the cry: "The war, the war!" "May the God of Jacob be our refuge."—R. V. Fulton.

MARRIED.

At Greensburg, La., on June 24, 1914, by Rev. R. V. Fulton, Mr. JAMES REYNOLDS and Miss GLADYS COLLINS.

At the Methodist parsonage at Greensburg, La., on Sept. 16, 1914, by Rev. R. V. Fulton, Mr. GEORGE OTIS VENABLES and Miss EFFIE STRICKLAND, both of St. Helena Parish.

Sunday School

LOUISIANA NOTES.

By Mr. W. W. Williams.

The writer will attend a meeting to organize a Sunday School Association in Winn Parish on Saturday and Sunday, September 26 and 27.

We understand from Rev. H. W. May, presiding elder of the Alexandria District, that arrangements have been made for a public school for the Indians near Forest Hill and Oakdale.

A Sunday school was organized at Midway, La., on Rev. J. Wilson Brown's circuit, this month with about 40 on the roll. Mr. Frank Hayno was elected superintendent and Mr. Richardson, assistant superintendent.

The Sunday School at James' Chapel under the able leadership of Mr. W. Stotzner, its superintendent, is doing nicely. The Children's Day program proved to be a splendid service. A special Sunday school sermon was preached by Brother Burgess, who is well informed on Sunday school work.

A Sunday school has been lately organized at Holden, La., with Mr. Mack Ballard, superintendent. It will meet in the Maccabees Hall until a Church can be built.

KENTWOOD ITEMS.

By Rev. P. O. Lowrey.

The Kentwood Sunday school observes a special feature each Sunday, the programs being in charge of special superintendents or committees. The first Sunday is used by the Cradle Roll and Home Departments; the second is Birthday Sunday; the third is Fishermen's Sunday (recognizing new scholars); the fourth is Missionary Day; and the fifth is Temperance Sunday.

Mr. H. C. Kreuger has been chosen to take the superintendency of the Kentwood Sunday school as successor to Mr. J. W. Cunningham, who has moved to Pelahatchie, Miss.; Mrs. Carey Crump has taken the place of Miss Fannie Patterson, who also has gone to Mississippi, as the Home Department superintendent; and Mrs. A. B. Morris will have charge of the Cradle Roll department, which has for the year been temporarily supplied by Mrs. Lowrey. Instead of meeting monthly as has been done during the year, the Workers' Conference now meets every week in connection with the Teacher-training class.

FAVORS CO-OPERATION.

Dear Dr. Meek: After reading the articles by Brothers Lowrey and Williams on our Sunday school work, I would like to say as a layman, Amen. Quite a large per cent of our success in modern Sunday school work is due to the interdenominational movement.

I believe that the greatest need of the Church to-day is brotherly love and co-operation among the different companies which make up the great army of the Lord; and I know of nothing that is doing so much toward that end as the Interdenominational Sunday School Movement and the Christian Endeavor forces. I am aware of the much-heralded cry: "Our Methodists are putting up the money," etc. That's all right, we are reaping a corresponding benefit. Even should the movement filter down to an all-Methodist movement, well and good. We will then have just what some of our people want—a strictly Methodist Sunday school movement. But as long as we can help the "other fellow" and get even small help from him, why treat him as an enemy in our stand against a common foe? We have all to gain and nothing to lose. The fact is we cannot have too much Sunday school education and agitation. There are quite a bunch of fellows who will give to the Interdenominational Sunday school work who won't give a copper to a Church Sunday school movement.

Let's try to rear and train a generation of Christians that love one another, but we cannot do it with strictly Church institutions. I am a Methodist, first, last and all the time; but, may God bless any Christian brother who will strike hands with me and say, "To the front!"

Bunkie, La. J. E. WILLIAMS.

NORTH MISSISSIPPI NOTES.

By Rev. V. C. Curtis.

The Pastors this year in their reports to the Annual Conference will be required to give the number of registered organized classes; the number of Teacher-training classes and the number of pupils taking either one of the prescribed courses; the number on the cradle roll, and the number in the home department. These are in addition to the items included in former reports. (See new Discipline and report-blanks to the Annual Conference.)

We hope that all the Teacher-training classes will be registered with Dr. Hamill right away. The books for either course can be had of Rev. G. W. Bachman, Winona, Miss.

All organized classes should be enrolled with Dr. Bulla without delay.

Sunday, Sept. 13, found us on the New Albany Circuit with Rev. J. A. Goad. We spoke at Mt. Olivet in the morning where we did some organizing, and then drove to Well's Chapel in the afternoon and there organized a Home Department, Cradle Roll, and Teacher-training class. There is a fine Sunday school spirit in this excellent charge. Goad seems to be a trusted leader of his people.

The people of New Albany are loyal to the Pope (Rev. S. L.). We spent Sunday evening with his congregation, who gave the Field Secretary a patient and attentive hearing. The various departments were already organized and they are moving forward under the leadership of their energetic pastor.

Monday evening, the 14th, and Wednesday evening, the 15th, were spent on the Ripley charge—at Blue Mountain and Ripley, respectively. Brother Eugene Johnson is rounding out his fourth year on this delightful charge. The people speak of him in the highest terms and are loath to give him up. His schools are well organized and the outlook is promising. Ripley is the home of that choice spirit, Dr. J. Y. Murry, whose many years of service as superintendent have been an inspiration to the Sunday school and the Church. Though confined to his rolling chair, he was present at the service on Tuesday night.

TREASURER'S REPORT.

Brother Holloman reports the following additional Children's Day collections:

Noel Memorial, $10.95; Longstreet, $8.60; Ponchatoula, $6.05; Lawtelle, $3.50; Clinton, $4; Lake Arthur, $5.20; New Iberia, $14.08; Pine Grove, $3.60; Jonesboro, $4; Bayou Scie, $3.40; Concord, $7.70; Carrollton Ave., New Orleans, $11.60; Slidell, $10; Sicily Island, $4.05; Boyce, $4; Pine Grove, $6.40; Baton Rouge, $5.

In sending in the above, Brother Holloman says: "The total receipts by me to date amount to $318.55, nearly $700 under our total of last year. Many of our highest and strongest schools have so far made no contribution, and I am in doubt as to our ability to pay our literature bill. Please report this in our Sunday School column in the Advocate. It would be well, too, to call on our people to observe "Rally Day" and gird up our loins for a great work this winter."

These suggestions need no comment. The time for the fall rally is here, and its opportunities are great, and the needs of the Sunday School Board's finances are as set forth above. That a Sunday school should take rank with the best in many things and then neglect or refuse to make some respectable contribution to the cause of Sunday school extension and betterment seems to us a peculiar inconsistency.

P. O. LOWREY.

GET RID OF HUMORS AND AVOID SICKNESS

Humors in the blood cause internal derangements that affect the whole system, as well as pimples, boils and other eruptions, and are responsible for the readiness with which many people contract disease.

For forty years Hood's Sarsaparilla has been more successful than any other medicine in expelling humors and removing their inward and outward effects. Get Hood's. No other medicine acts like it.

"A POINT NOT WELL TAKEN AND A PROTEST."

Dear Dr. Meek: I noticed and read in your issue of September 10th an article from Brother P. O. Lowrey. I would have known he "is a Methodist" by the way he extends unnecessary liberty to the depreciation of our Sunday school work. We Methodists have a peculiar way of interpreting the Scripture which says "In honor preferring one another."

In the first place, the Methodist Church has been a fruitful field for interdenominational work, which never did enter the field until the territory was no longer in need of such an agency. Then when it did enter it has never (in Mississippi) been an advanced factor, but has only co-ordinated work with denominations that were and are still able to do their own work. I am sorry that Brother Lowrey's observation has been so different from the facts as they are in this State.

My observation is that the interdenominational work is never more successful than when it finds the schools in fine condition and doing all kinds of work. In the Mississippi Conference it "works the workers," trains the trained, organizes the organized, publishes to the world as a whole what each church has contributed, and is looked upon as a great force, when if you hunt for the real missionary work which it has done in this Conference, where can it be found outside of the church or churches of some denomination?

Our brother tells us that we did not have "institutes" until four years ago. Well, well, that is news to me; I had not been in the Mississippi Conference but a few days—in those days gone far away—when lo and behold! I was officially notified that in the town of H. the Conference Sunday School Board would hold an "institute." This happened when I had never known what the "interdenominational work" was. And shall I ever forget the inspiration of those days? If I do, from rumors, I may be able to get it NOW from the interdenominational power-house. The cold facts are against my brother, except the personal incident he illustrates, with a few others possibly.

I do not desire to leave the impression that I am opposed to the interdenominational work. I am only opposed to the duplication of work that wastes energy and resources, as well as confounds the beginners, so that we often lose vitality from lack of concentration of interest.

Who is the man who dares to say that the Baptist Church, the Presbyterian Church, the Methodist Church, or any other Church, if it desires to do so, can not furnish its field with anything needed to succeed in this great work? Outside of a Christian Church in letter or spirit, a Sunday school can not "Go." Since this is true and since this Conference is not missionary territory (interpreted by interdenominational work), what is the use of the interdenominational workers duplicating the work done by the different Churches?

I do not object to inter-church work. That is conducive to added interest and additional information, enhanced by enthusiasm.

But I do object to calling these meetings "Beat Convocations," County Conventions, or State Associations, where the different Sunday schools of the different Churches meet for co-operation.

I am not against the collections necessary to carry out such ideas as are found practicable; but I object to a hudget of expenses of $3000 or $10,000 for interdenominational work, when in the Mississippi Conference in 1913, we paid on a 3 per cent assessment $249.07. Now if 'Our horse is a good horse, let's ride him,' if not let's swap him. "Oh, consistency, thou art a jewel," even in these days when "Hot Springs diamonds" are just as real!

My brother, I am not going to let you off as far as Mississippi is concerned with the idea that we have to close the eye of memory as to the fathers in hygone days who organized Sunday schools all over this country and many of whom died without knowing of this independent movement, the motive of which is very worthy, but whose assistance is not needed, if it must shadow the foundation work. Sir, will you allow me to say that a Sunday school without a church can not live; that a church without a Sunday school will not be permitted to live, and a church with a Sunday school which has to get outside help to live, had better die.

One more point, then I am through: Since a superintendent of a Sunday school, who had been so for 30 odd years, did not know that the interdenominational work was independent of any or all Churches, I take it for granted that many, if not the majority of the members of all the Churches, do not know it. Oh! says one you heg the question on ignorance that you assume exists without a real good cause. Well let's see; they get a council from all the Churches—men usually prominent therein. Why is this? "It is to lead" the forces of that Church. Twice two are four. Well who blames them? But where do they lead? In the same old way that each has led. The chief man in the Methodist Sunday School Board is sometimes an "executive officer," so on in ad infinitum. When our people know the real nature of the interdenominational work, they are going to "prefer" Methodist "Convocations, Conventions, and Associations." Can you blame them? or will you censure the Baptist or other Churches for the same "preference?"

I favor any force or forces, any law or requirement of the Church to work any or all plans by its authorized agents or officers to succeed in reaping its own sowings, in realizing its own visions, but I protest against taking the laurels that belong to those

Sunday school officers of the different Churches and their boards and bestowing them on those that excel only in advertising. Do you see my point? I am a Methodist and believe in the Methodist Church.

C. M. CHAPMAN.

How To Make the Quickest, Simplest Cough Remedy

Much Better than the Ready-Made Kind and You Save $2. Fully Guaranteed.

This home-made cough syrup is now used in more homes than any other cough remedy. Its promptness, ease and certainty in conquering distressing coughs, chest and throat colds, is really remarkable. You can actually feel it take hold. A day's use will usually overcome the ordinary cough—relieves even whooping cough quickly. Splendid, too, for bronchitis, spasmodic croup, bronchial asthma and winter coughs.

Get from any druggist 2½ ounces of Pinex (50 cents worth), pour it in a pint bottle and fill the bottle with plain granulated sugar syrup. This gives you—at a cost of only 54 cents—a full pint of better cough syrup than you could buy for $2.50. Takes but a few minutes to prepare. Full directions with Pinex. Tastes good and never spoils.

You will be pleasantly surprised how quickly it loosens dry, hoarse or tight coughs, and heals the inflamed membranes in a painful cough. It also stops the formation of phlegm in the throat and bronchial tubes, thus ending the persistent loose cough.

Pinex is a most valuable concentrated compound of genuine Norway pine extract, rich in gualacoi, which is so healing to the membranes.

To avoid disappointment, be sure and ask your druggist for "2½ ounces of Pinex," and don't accept anything else.

A guarantee of absolute satisfaction, or money promptly refunded, goes with this preparation. The Pinex Co., 235 Main St., Ft. Wayne, Ind.

SHANNON REVIVAL MEETINGS.

Dear Dr. Meek: We have just finished the 1914 special revival services for the Shannon pastoral charge. Thirty-five people have been added to the churches, during these meetings, three of whom were by transfer. Nearly all the others were received by profession of faith and baptism. By all indications as many more should have joined, and we gave a few to the other Churches. At the big Pleasant Grove community, Rev. S. L. Pope, the very interesting pastor at New Albany, assisted me with good success and with great satisfaction to the large congregations. Rev.

M. O. Beckham, the young minister of Houston, came over to Troy and joined in the meeting with four sermons and much very excellent help otherwise; and at Brewer Church, Rev. A. W. Langley, of Verona, rendered fine service with three sermons and useful work of other kinds, part of which was dodging the showers, for it rained daily and awfully out there during the entire meeting. Constant crowds, however, attended the services, and only one time did the storms gravely interfere—and "all's well that ends well."

The Shannon services and work of excellence by Dr. H. G. Henderson has been previously reported. The finest hospitality prevailed at all points, and the church membership generally and a large number of singers were enlisted in the work. The presence of Him who makes the revival was evident in each congregation, and the apostolic suggestion was recognized that, "Neither is he that planteth anything, neither he that watereth, but God that giveth the increase." A. H. WILLIAMS.

Shannon, Miss.

NOTICE.

The Annual District Meeting of the Woman's Missionary Society of the Hattiesburg District will be held at Lucedale, Miss., on Oct. 14 and 15. Each auxiliary in the district is urged to send a representative. Please send the names of your delegates to Mrs. G. E. Hicks, Jr., Lucedale, Miss.

Mrs. W. R. RAWLS, Dist. Secty.

A CORRECTION.

Our attention has been called to the fact that the article on "Christian Stewardship," which appeared in the Woman's Missionary Edition, credited to Mrs. D. C. Worrell was written by Mrs. A. F. Godat of New Orleans. We are glad to make the correction, and very sorry that we committed the error.

MISSION STUDY.

No department of an auxiliary is more important than that of the Third Vice-President, whose special work is to promote the study of Christian Missions, and a sense of our responsibility as God's stewards. It has been well said that "those who are down on missions are not up on missions." Ask any one who is opposed to missions what he or she really knows about them and you will find that they know very little. Those who are most zealous and useful are those who know the most. The importance of mission study is therefore paramount. It is only well informed Christians who can be depended upon at all times for any good work. The unreliable member is the ignorant member. "Know and you will think; think and you will feel; feel and you will pray; pray and you will work." As a knowledge of missionary activity and needs is so indispensable, the importance of mission study classes requires no further emphasis. No auxiliary is doing its best work that has not a live mission study class. As a rule, the better the mission study class, the better the auxiliary. That this is being felt more and more is shown by the constantly increasing progress of the work. The report of the Department of Christian Stewardship and Mission Study showed much progress last year, not only in Louisiana, but in our Church at large, in which we have now 992 Adult, 663 Young People's, and 208 Children's Mission Study Classes, an increase of 866 over 1912. This is by far the best report we have ever made.

In Bible Study Classes the interest has grown also—230 classes reported, and 114 Prayer Circles formed. Our own State has done its part. But favorable as these figures are, and as much progress as they show, there is yet much, very much to be done, and it behooves every Third Vice-President in Louisiana to do her best to maintain the high level already reached, and to do all in her power to push upward to still higher achievements.

The month of October has been designated as Mission Study Campaign Month, at which time special effort should be made to reorganize the Mission Study Classes in each Society that already has one, and to organize new classes where none have been heretofore. There should be classes for adults, young people and children. In January, 1915, a special effort will be made to stress the subject of Christian Stewardship.

Leaflets on both these subjects will be prepared and sent out in ample time.

The following course of study has been recommended for 1914:

Home Department, Adult: "In Red Man's Land," by Hon. Francis E. Leupp; or "The Social Aspect of Home Missions," by Paul H. Douglas; or "Missionary Women and the Social Question," by Mrs. Fred Smith Bennett; or "In Black and White," by Mrs. John D. Hammond. Young People: "The American Indian," by Thomas G. Moffett; or "The Social Aspect of Home Missions," Intermediates: "Good Bird, the Indian," by Gilbert L. Wilson; or "Winning the Oregon Country," by John T. Farls. Juniors: "American Indian Curio Box," with additional stories from "Good Bird, the Indian."

Foreign Department, Adult: "The Child in the Midst," by Mary Laharer; or "The Social Aspect of Foreign Missions," by Dr. W. H. Faunce; or "Educational Missions," by James L. Barton; or "The New Era in Asia," by Sherwood Eddy. Young People: "The Child in the Midst," or "The New Era in Asia." Intermediates: "Ann of Ava," by Ethel D. Hubbard; or "Turkey," by Mary Preston. Juniors: "Our World Family," by Helen Billings.

The books recommended for Bible Study remain the same as last year.

MRS. A. F. GODAT.

Third V. P. of La. Conf. M. Society.

What Louisiana Mission Study Classes Accomplished During 1914.

The Sildell Auxiliary has a class of twelve studying "The New America," and for awhile expect to study only our Home Mission literature. Mrs. J. W. Roberts, the third vice-president is diligently distributing leaflets on Stewardship.

Every member of the Winnfield auxiliary is a member of the mission study class. This is largely due to the efforts of the third vice-president, Mrs. A. L. McDonald. They have given special attention to the study of stewardship and have also formed a prayer circle. They have a junior division of eighteen members.

Mrs. F. E. Cowdin, the third vice-president of Rayne Memorial Auxiliary, New Orleans, reports that they have a mission study class of 21 out of a total membership in the auxiliary of 45. Mrs. Cowdin is herself the leader of the class, which, in the past season, studied "Mexico To-day," and the "New America," the result being an increased interest in the whole subject of missions.

Mrs. F. B. Sandridge, the third vice-president of Felicity Auxiliary, New Orleans, writes that they have a very interesting mission study class of seven. Its members are more vitally interested in missions than ever before, through its work, and during the past season they have studied "Mexico To-day."

At Alexandria they have a mission study class of 30 or 40 members. The leader, Mrs. G. E. Cameron, makes the study very interesting. Fourteen have signed the stewardship pledge cards, there being three new members this year. The books studied have been "China's New Day" and the "New America."

One of the best mission study classes is that at First Church, New Orleans. They have two meetings a month, one following the regular monthly meeting of the Missionary Society, with a light luncheon between; the other at the home of a member two weeks later. Mrs. S. H. Werlein is the leader, whose preparation of the subject is thorough. They have finished studying "New America." The method of presenting the subject is principally by lectures followed by a general discussion; sometimes certain members prepare specially to discuss portions of the topic for the day. Mrs. J. E. Selve, the third vice-president, says that the classes are intensely interesting and inspiring, and that she feels sure no member of the class will ever again look upon the immigrant in just the same way as she did before, but will always feel a sense of responsibility.

In regard to the work at Minden, Mrs. J. J. Holmes says that they have studied several books in the past with good results, and expect to begin a good work in the fall.

Mrs. H. S. Johns, the third vice-president of the auxiliary at Baton Rouge, writes that they have had a delightful study of "China's New Day." Their class meets once a month. During the summer they studied the Gospel of John, and will take up the study of Home Missions in the fall. Much good has been accomplished by circulating missionary stories and leaflets. They have about 20 in the class out of a total membership in the auxiliary of 45.

Our auxiliary at Amite City has had a very interesting mission study class for the past two years. The pastor, Rev. John F. Foster, has given them much help and encouragement. Its real value has been proved by the fact that they have met all their pledges for money except one, and they hope to meet that soon. Mrs. S. F. Turner, the third vice-president has worked hard for its success.

We are indebted to Mrs. A. F. Godat for the collection of the above material. Many other auxiliaries responded to her request, but it is impossible to publish more. All agree that mission study is both helpful and inspiring, and leads one to a clearer, broader vision of the world's needs.

A HEALING SPRING AT YOUR DOOR.

Here is a very unusual and peculiar offer—one that you rarely meet with. It evidences great faith on the part of its maker and inspires confidence. It is made by an earnest and enthusiastic man who not only thinks but knows that he is right. He proposes to give you the equivalent of a three weeks' visit to a Mineral Spring of most remarkable curative powers and he guarantees that you will be benefited, otherwise there will be no charge. His offer has been accepted by several thousand sufferers and his records show that only two in a thousand, on the average, report no benefit.

If you suffer with dyspepsia, indigestion, rheumatism, gallstones, kidney, bladder or liver diseases, uric acid poisoning, or other condition caused by an impure blood, take Mr. Shivar at his word and sign and mail the following letter:

Shivar Spring,
Box 17H, Shelton, S. C.

Gentlemen:

I accept your guarantee offer and enclose herewith two dollars for ten gallons of Shivar Mineral Water. I agree to give it a fair trial, in accordance with instructions contained in booklet you will send, and if the results are not satisfactory to me you agree to refund the price in full upon receipt of the two empty demijohns which I agree to return promptly.

(Please write distinctly.)

Note—The Advertising Manager of the New Orleans Christian Advocate is personally acquainted with Mr. Shivar. You run no risk whatever in accepting his offer. I have personally witnessed the remarkable curative effects of this Water in a very serious case.—Adv.

"The whole Church is responsible to the whole world for giving them the Gospel, and the budget plan is the only practical way of getting that responsibility distributed."

REVIVALIST TELLS OF RELIEF FROM PAIN.

St. John the Divine, in his vividly drawn picture of Heaven, as his closing and most convincing argument of its glories states: "And there shall be no more pain." Rev. 21:22. In making this assertion St. John felt that no more glorious prospect could be placed before the human mind.

Pain saps our strength in the battle of life. It is the strongest helper of disease.

Dr. Miles' Anti-Pain Pills bring wonderful relief from all pain. For the past 20 years these pills have been increasing in popularity, until now they are the most generally used remedies in use.

The Rev. R. M. Bentley, of Shelbyville, Ind., the popular revivalist, has the following to say about these pills:

"I feel it my duty to suffering humanity to say something in regard to Dr. Miles' Anti-Pain Pills. I consider them a God-send. For myself I fail to find words to express my gratitude for the relief that they bring. Hundreds of times when it seemed the pain was too great to allow me to go on the platform I have found in them a sweet relief. I have used them for over 10 years and always tell others about the benefit that can be derived from them."

If you suffer from any pain, purchase a box and if you are not perfectly satisfied return the empty box to your druggist and he will be glad to give you your money back.

CATARRH TRUTH

Told in a Simple Way

No Apparatus, Inhalers, Salves, Lotions, Harmful Drugs, Smoke or Electricity

Heals Day and Night

It is a new way. It is something absolutely different. No lotions, sprays or sticky smelling salves or creams. No atomizer, or any apparatus of any kind. Nothing to smoke or inhale. No steaming, or rubbing or injections. No electricity or vibration or massage. No powder, no plaster, no keeping in the house. Nothing of that kind at all. Something new and different—something instantly successful. You do not have to wait and linger, and pay out a lot of money. You can stop to-night—and I will gladly tell you how. I am not a doctor and this is not a so-called doctor's prescription—hot steam and my friends are cured and you can be cured. Your suffering will stop at once like magic.

I AM FREE—YOU CAN BE FREE

My catarrh was filthy and loathsome. It made me ill. It dulled my mind. It undermined my health and was weakening my will. The hacking, coughing, spitting made me obnoxious to all, and my foul breath and disgusting habits made even my loved ones avoid me secretly. My delight in life was dulled and my faculties impaired. I knew that in time it would bring me to an untimely grave because every moment of the day and night it was slowly yet surely sapping my vitality. But I found a cure, and I am ready to tell you about it FREE. Write me promptly.

RISK JUST ONE CENT

Send no money. Just your name and address on a postal card. Say: "Dear Sam Katz, Please tell me how you cured your catarrh, and how I can cure mine." That's all you need to say. I will understand, and I will write to you with complete information, FREE, at once. Do not delay. Send the postal card or write me a letter to-day. Don't think of turning this page until you have asked for this wonderful treatment that it can do for you what it has done for me.

CYPRESS CORNER, MISS.

Dear Advocate: My soul is lifted up in thanksgiving to our heavenly Father for the wonderful blessings he bestowed upon us in one of the best meetings we have ever enjoyed at Cypress Corner, which closed on Aug. 23. Cypress is on the wayside, only a small schoolhouse. We have a good Sunday school and a preaching service twice a month. Rev. N. L. Knight, of Wyatt, preaches on the second Sunday afternoon, and Rev. A. M. Bennett, who has lately married a noble Christian woman, preaches on the first Saturday night. Rev. M. E. Gabard, D.D., assisted Brother Bennett in a tent meeting at this place and we had a glorious revival. Before the meeting we were cold and indifferent, despite the persistent faithfulness of a few Christians; but our Heavenly Father, who is full of compassion, love, and long-suffering, heard and answered our prayers, and restored us to the joy of his salvation. The meeting continued 8 days. We had some 20 conversions and 16 united with the Church. Brother Bennett organized a church of 36 members. It is under the wing of McGehee's Chapel. I want to repeat that the Lord manifested himself to us in every service; our cups were filled to overflowing many times. Brother Bennett makes us a good pastor. He was faithful during the revival, doing everything he could to add to the success of the meeting. We call him a live wire. Rev. M. E. Gabard now lives at Nesbitt, Miss., but formerly resided at Columbia, Tenn. He is a brother of Rev. C. S. Gabard of Bethesda, Tenn., and a member of the Tennessee Conference. He won the hearts of our people, and made a lasting impression upon all who heard him. I pray God's blessings upon you and your paper.—S. C. Atkinson.

BUFORD (MISS.) CHARGE.

Embracing the second Sunday in August, our revival meeting was conducted at Hopewell Church, which was served by my father many years ago when on the China Grove charge. August 8 and 9 being the third quarterly conference occasion at Jamestown, Brother Robt. Selby, our presiding elder, preached two very able sermons at each place. We regretted we could not have him longer. However, Brother W. B. Jones came on Monday and labored earnestly until Friday night, preaching to attentive congregations. Our people were spiritually strengthened. There were 3 accessions, 1 by profession of faith, and 2 by certificate. On Saturday night, August 15, with the assistance of Brother J. L. Greenway, we began a meeting at Jamestown. The attendance, especially at night, was good. The gospel was presented fervently and was received with appreciation. There were 2 accessions by profession of faith and quite a number professed to be greatly stimulated and promised to live more actively for Christ and the Church. Sunday morning, Aug. 30, marked the opening of our meeting at Foxworth, which continued during the following week, closing on Sunday night, Sept. 6. The preaching was well done by Brother W. H. Saunders, who on each Sunday afternoon preached to the children. Their appreciation was evidenced by their attendance and attention. Considerable interest was shown even from the first service. There were 12 accessions, 3 by certificate and 9 by profession of faith. Twelve infants were baptized at these three meetings. Our Church here at Foxworth, which was built last fall, has recently received two coats of paint, as also has the parsonage, and both now present an attractive appearance. I am endeavoring to reach the goal of a satisfactory year's work for the Master's cause.—Chas. E. Downer.

TOPISAW CHARGE, MISS. CONF.

On the 3d Sunday in July we began the revival campaign in Topisaw charge at Sartintville. At the suggestion of the officials, the pastor himself conducted the meeting at Sartintville, and viewed from the standpoint of interest and attendance, it was a good meeting, indeed. A large, eager congregation assembled every day an hour before the appointed time for services. During the 5 days of the meeting at least 250 souls bowed at the altar seeking either to be converted or sanctified, and some received that for which they sought, most of the seekers being members of the Church. The next meeting was at the Sartintville Tabernacle. We could not stay throughout this meeting on account of getting ready for the one at Topisaw camp; there was some salvation work done at the Tabernacle meeting. Those who did the preaching at the Topisaw camp were Brothers H. P. Lewis, Sr., Ira B. Robertson, Robt. Selby, Luke Alford, B. H. Kleiser, J. W. Thompson, and W. W. Nelson. Brother B. W. Lewis, from Summit, had charge of the singing most of the time. We had, as we usually do at that place, large crowds. Some good preaching was done, and there were some good services, but not much real salvation work that we know of. The last meeting on the charge was at Holmesville, on Sept. 13-17. Brother W. W. Nelson assisted here with very few visible results. We have had 22 accessions thus far during the year, all of them coming in during the above meetings. Everything considered, the charge is in a fair condition spiritually and financially. The readers of the Advocate probably noticed our recent bereavement; but in the midst of it we have realized Isa. 26:3 and Psal. 4:6-7. So we meekly submit to our Father's will in giving our baby back to him, and we will still go forward cheerfully, and some glad sweet day we, too, shall reach the Holy City. We are on the way. Amen!—J. A. Wells.

NEW PROSPECT CAMP MEETING

The New Prospect Camp Meeting on the Vancleave charge, will begin October 15, 1914, at 7:30 p. m. All persons interested in camp meetings are invited to attend. Any of the pastors in reach of the campground are cordially invited to be present. The meeting will continue for about six days. All ministers will be entertained free of charge. Only actual expenses incurred to and from the campground will be defrayed. Preachers coming by railroad should stop at Ocean Springs and secure a conveyance from there to the campground. Those coming through the country in their private conveyances will be cared for also. Come praying, brethren, for the success of the meeting; and if you can't come, then remember us at the throne of grace.

FULL COLLECTIONS PLAN MEETS GENERAL FAVOR.

The appeal of the Board of Missions for full collections is meeting with an encouraging response. We have received hundreds of orders for the leaflet and collection envelopes. These orders have outrun our supply, and we are keeping three presses busy. They have run up to an aggregate of a hundred thousand, and are still coming in by every mail.

This indicates that our pastors are alive to the situation and that they are going to lead their people to meet the need of the hour. Many presiding elders are preparing to make full collections the burden of their fourth round. We have no fear but that the people will respond; the Church is loyal at heart, and will rally to the call of duty strongly sounded. We are greatly encouraged at the response. Let others fall into line and lead on to victory. The hour of difficulty is the opportunity of a real courage and devotion, and our people will not be found wanting.

A WORD FROM BROTHER SWEENEY.

Dear Dr. Meek: Since the little chat I had with you when you came to see me at the Presbyterian Hospital, I have put on 18 lbs. and am still mending. I feel like a new man; in fact, I believe that I am in better health than I have been for ten years. I had the privilege of preaching for Brother Barnette, our pastor in Colorado Springs, last Sunday at 11 o'clock, which was the first time that I have occupied the pulpit since our District Conference met at Ponchatoula. I feel deeply grateful to my many friends who have been so thoughtful and kind to me and my dear family in this time of need. I appreciate the many kind letters I have received from different ones. I will leave here on Sept. 28 and expect to arrive home in Wilson, La., on Oct. 1, at 4:30 a.m.

Yours fraternally,

F. N. SWEENEY.

DON'T RISK YOUR LIFE

Don't let a wound or bruise or sore go neglected. A neglected skin wound often leads to blood poisoning, a disease hard to cure and sometimes fatal. Treat the afflicted spot with Gray's Ointment; it quickly allays the pain, heals the wound, and frees you from all danger of troublesome after-effects. For nearly a century Gray's Ointment has been an indispensable remedy for all abrasions or eruptions of the skin; boils, ulcers, sores, burns, cuts, bruises, etc. "I have used it in my family for more than fifteen years and have not found any ointment equal to it," writes Mrs. E. E. Coleman, Mt. Jackson, Va. Only 25c a box, at druggists. For free sample, write W. F. Gray & Co., 806 Gray Building, Nashville, Tenn.

NOT AGAINST THE CHURCH.

In an article on page 12 of the Advocate of September 10, Brother Hilary Westbrook criticises independent camp meetings and intimates that those who support them are disloyal to the Church. He opposes them because they pull the people from the Church and not to the Church. I think Brother Westbrook is mistaken. I know that he is, so far as those camps are concerned of which I have knowledge. I have in mind four independent camps situated in our State, at or near McHenry, Frost Bridge, Raleigh, and Carthage. If I understand the situation, these camps are controlled by a board of trustees, and are independent, so far as their government is concerned, of the Church. They are interdenominational, but not anti-denominational. They pull down no Church, but are a help to all Churches whose members they reach. These camps draw the bulk of their support from the Methodist Church, and the Methodist Church in return reaps the greatest benefit. I am personally acquainted with nearly all the Methodists who attend and support the McHenry and Frost Bridge camps and know that they are as loyal and as useful to their Church as are the Methodists anywhere, and I am sure their pastor will hear me out in this assertion. If Brother Westbrook will give me the name of one Methodist who has been pulled away from the Church by an independent camp meeting run by the Holiness Association, I will give him the names and addresses of a dozen, yes, two dozen, who will testify that they are better men and women and better Church members because of these independent camp meetings. The camp meeting at McHenry, held Sept. 4 to 14, has just closed. Rev. R. A. Breland, a staunch and loyal Methodist, is president of the board of trustees and general manager. Rev. C. M. Dumaway, of Atlanta, was chief preacher; the Rev. Mr. Van Valkenburg, a superannuate Methodist preacher, attended and helped to do the preaching. The pastors from adjoining charges attended and assisted in the services. Our presiding elder was present one day. I attended most of the night services and got a very good idea of the meeting. The preaching was far above the ordinary. I several times saw 25 or 30 at the altar for prayer and a good many of them made professions (I am not prepared to say just how many). The interest and attendance grew daily; the last Sunday was the best day. The tabernacle was full, the congregation being made up of Methodists, Baptists, Presbyterians, a few Episcopalians and Catholics, and many who belonged to no church, and who attend no church. This camp reaches people whom the Church cannot or does not reach. Those who were converted were exhorted to join the Church of their choice and work for the Lord. There was no unpleasantness of any kind that I heard of. Every one seemed to enjoy the meeting; no one seemed to think that the Church was being hurt in any way. Nothing but good can come from such a meeting. H. P. KOPFER.

Editorial

"The path of sorrow, and that path alone, Leads to the land where sorrow is unknown."

Great preaching can only follow in the wake of great living. The man behind it is the largest part of any sermon.

The following from the Bible Champion (New York) is somewhat suggestive: "A trader passed a converted cannibal in Africa and asked him what he was doing. 'Oh, I am reading the Bible,' was the reply. 'That Book is out of date in my country,' said the foreigner. 'If it had been out of date here,' said the African to the European, 'you'd have been eaten long ago.'"

Few persons can hope to influence the world profoundly. The best that most of us can do is to be faithful in a small and obscure sphere; but such service is valuable in the Master's sight and will command a rich reward. And, after all, it is the united work of ordinary men and women that must be depended upon to effect the redemption of the race, so far as the human side of the task is concerned. The real strength of the Church is in the rank and file of its ministry and membership.

The hardest task that any man ever undertook is to play an insincere role in real life. He may do it successfully for a time, but his true attitude will become known sooner or later and he will stand exposed and discredited. Yet there are not a few who are given to attempting to pursue such a course, foolishly thinking that they can hood-wink others. It is far better for one to stand openly for what one believes in, even though it be unpopular, than to try to carry out such a farce. A man who is sincerely wrong in his convictions may command respect, but one who insincerely takes a position, even though it be right, will never be respected long. It is quite amusing how persons of the latter type are sometimes "smoked out," in spite of all their antecedent misleading affirmations. Few things contribute more to strength of personality than straightforwardness.

In reading the Journal of John Wesley we have been impressed with what a free and generous hand he sowed the gospel seed. Wherever there were any to hear it he poured forth the burning message of salvation, and if there was no immediate fruit, he showed no discouragement. On he went with unabated zeal telling the story of redeeming love. Every Methodist ought likewise be a witnesser for Jesus, a winner of souls. This is the work of the laity as well as of the ministry. What are you doing in your community? Are you reaching out after the lost? What of the outcasts and those in prison in your town? What of those who never come to Church? Are you praying for them and tactfully trying to help them? How swiftly they are passing to eternity! Oh, let us be diligent and put our whole hearts into this blessed work, which angels would be glad to do! There is not a moment to lose.

THE KIND OF EDUCATION NEEDED.

Within recent years there has been manifest in many quarters a disposition to extol secular education to the disparagement of that which is Christian, its advocates claiming for it a wider freedom and larger results in the pursuit of knowledge. This contention has been so constantly and persistently made that apparently it has created a profound impression upon the general public, and even some of our Church educators have become apologists for the policy of having schools owned and controlled by religious denominations, rather than earnest advocates of it. But time is the test of all things and secularized institutions of learning have now been at work long enough for us to begin to judge them by their fruits, and the showing that they are making is falling far short of justifying their claim of superiority.

A striking illustration of what may be expected of this kind of education comes from far-away Japan where the Government has been operating it upon a large scale. Referring to its influence there, Mr. Sherwood Eddy, in his admirable book, "The New Era in Asia," says: "This purely secular education had had its dangerous and inevitable consequences. The Minister of the Department of Justice, surveying with apprehension the increase of crime during the decade, reports that while crime among illiterates decreased from 41 per cent to 33 per cent, that among literates increased from 59 to 64 per cent." That official also gave out the following figures, which are somewhat more specific:

Crimes against the public good—illiterates.....	4 per cent.
Crimes against the public good—literates.....	28 per cent.
Crimes against the body—illiterates.....	13 per cent.
Crimes against the body—literates.....	16 per cent.
Crimes against property—illiterates.....	16 per cent.
Crimes against property—literates.....	20 per cent.

We scarcely need to comment upon these suggestive statistics. They forcibly show that the widely prevalent notion that a more general diffusion of knowledge is a certain cure for crime and most of the other ills afflicting the body politic is a mistaken and unwarranted one.

In our own country the secularized institutions of learning do not have the same opportunity to yield their legitimate fruitage that they do in pagan Japan, for the reason that, though it is more or less disparaged as an educational factor, the influence of Christianity is appreciably felt among their faculties and students. But there are not wanting discerning men in the United States, men who are not preachers and who are not especially zealous in their advocacy of the cause of the Christian religion, who declare that the absence of the Bible from our public schools and the lack of moral training in our higher institutions of learning are already causing results to follow that may well excite grave concern. The ringing utterance of the Hon. Bird S. Coler, a distinguished citizen of New York, on this subject some months ago was widely commented upon in the public prints, and it will be remembered that a veritable sensation was created a few years since by a series of articles appearing in one of our leading magazines describing the teaching and the conditions existing at some of our prominent secularized colleges and universities.

The influence of such a system of education is manifold and far-reaching. It affects the quality of our citizenship and has much to do with the texture of our entire social order. Ex-President Taft, in a recent issue of The Mother's Magazine, declared that "we are living in a flabby age," and in this we think that he is unquestionably right. The high ideals and sublime moral courage that characterized many of our public men in the past seem to be lamentably lacking in most of those now upon the stage of action. That this is attributable in some part, at least, to the lack of a pronounced religious training in our educational methods is, we think, highly probable, if not absolutely certain. The most serious decadence that can happen to any nation is a decline in the moral fiber of its people. The extent to which the rationalism enveloping the educational centers of Germany is responsible for the present titanic war in Europe is a question that might be investigated with not a little profit, as perhaps it will be by some future historian. We dare say that such a revival in the Kaiser's empire as that which Wesley kindled in England in the eighteenth century would have averted this terrible world tragedy. When moral influences and incentives cease to be potent in the lives and affairs of men there is no telling what disasters may be ahead. Man apart from the ennobling power of Christianity is as capable of committing unworthy, and even brutal, acts in this age as in any that has preceded it.

The value of Christian education lies in the fact that it deals with man as a moral and spiritual as well as a physical and intellectual being, and that it brings to bear upon that highest and noblest part of his nature such vitalizing and strengthening agencies as can come from no other source. Integrity and high moral purpose are indispensable elements of worthy manhood, and if they are lacking all other attainments are builded upon a foundation of sand. And as is the individual, so is the State, which is but the sum of such units. The history of the decline and fall of empires in the last analysis is little else than a record of the increasing moral deficiencies of the peoples of the past.

By Christian education alone can a noble and great civilization be created and maintained, and Christian education can be conducted at its best only by institutions under the control of the Church. No worse calamity could befall our nation or the world than for secularism to force the Church from its place in the field of education. The battle to do this is now on, and it behooves every Christian and every patriot to resist this attempt to the utmost of his ability. Our Commission on Education did not speak too strongly in its session at Eagle Nest, North Carolina, last summer when in its official report it said:

"We would emphasize the absolute necessity that is now upon the Church to have in each State at least one well-established central college strong enough to battle successfully against the secularizing tendencies in education that to-day threaten the welfare of the Church and American civilization. * * * The time has come when our Church must attend with the utmost fidelity to the right religious training of our young in the home, in the Sunday school, and in schools and colleges of our own, where even in the midst of the most exacting intellectual pursuits the fruits of Christian character are set high above every other consideration."

GOD UNDERSTANDS.

It is so sweet to know,
When we are tired, and when the hand of pain
Lies on our hearts, and when we look in vain
For human comfort, that the Heart Divine
Still understands these cares of yours and mine:

"Not only understands, but day by day
Lives with us while we tread the earthly way.
Bears with us all our weariness, and feels
The shadow of the faintest cloud that steals Across our sunshine, ever learns again
The depth and bitterness of human pain.

"There is no sorrow that he will not share,
No cross, no burden, for our hearts to bear
Without his help, no care of ours too small
To cast on Jesus: let us tell him all—
Lay at his feet the story of our woes,
And in his sympathy find sweet repose."

FRANCIS SCOTT KEY AS A CHURCHMAN.

By Rev. Wilber F. Watkins, Jr.

The fourteenth day of this present month, of September, was the one hundredth anniversary of the birth of our national song, "The Star-Spangled Banner." It was written, as every American knows, by Francis Scott Key. Most of us are accustomed to regard Mr. Key's name with more or less reverence as a staunch patriot and as the almost inspired author of our national song, but of the other aspects of his life we are generally very ignorant. We may know, perhaps, something of his eminence as a lawyer and an orator, but we know very little of the eminence of his character and life as a Christian gentleman and as a churchman. Francis Scott Key was a life-long and most faithful member of the Protestant Episcopal Church, and his services in and for this Church were many and most valuable. Indeed, he had been characterized as "one of the few great laymen of the American Episcopal Church." But first of all, Mr. Key was the highest type of a Christian gentleman. That distinguished Maryland lawyer, the Hon. Reverdy Johnson, wrote of him: "To the graces of his many accomplishments he possessed what is still more to his praise a character of almost religious perfection. A firm believer in the Christian dispensation, his conduct was regulated by the doctrines inculcated by its Founder, and this being so, his life was one of perfect purity." According to those who knew him best, he was gentle and unassuming, kind and courteous to all, true in word and deed, with a strong and steadfast faith, a profound humility, an ardent love for God and an unflinching charity for man. The best memorial he has left of the depth of his religious faith and character is enshrined in his beautiful "Hymn," beginning:

"Lord, with glowing heart I'd praise Thee,
For the bliss Thy love bestows;
For the pardoning grace that saves me,
And the peace that from it flows."

—Southern Churchman.

THE FALSE NOTE IN EUCKEN.

(In view of the extent to which Eucken is being discussed and commended in some of our periodicals, we consider this able editorial utterance as quite timely.—Editor N. O. Advocate.)

No more unsatisfactory and contradictory volume laying claim to serious consideration, has come from the press in a long time than that by Prof. Rudolf Eucken bearing the title "Can We Still Be Christians?" We would devote but little attention to it, were it not that there seems to have grown up a kind of Eucken cult which would take the ipse dixit of the Jena professor on whatever subject he speaks as the very law and the prophets.

Therein lies the misfortune of the whole affair, for one lays down this volume with the feeling that if the learned philosopher has correctly diagnosed the conditions, Christianity, as we understand it, has come upon a bad day. Its main positions as generally understood are no longer tenable, and a new Christianity is inevitable, if the churchman is not saved. And all this is stamped with the hall-mark of profundity and sent out with the imperious and influence that attach to the name of Eucken.

We regret to be forced to these remarks, for Professor Eucken, the philosopher, has made such a definite contribution to the thought-life of the twentieth century, placing under heavy debt to him the forces that have successfully routed the rationalism of the age. Moreover, there are not wanting those who have expected much from him from the standpoint of Christianity. Frankly, however, we must say at last that there is nothing to be expected there. Evangelical Christianity has nothing to hope from him. More, his influence is all on the other side. He must be met. And the Eucken cult must beware lest, finding in him clarity of thought in realms philosophic, they are trapped into his iconoclasm and his pessimism as to Christianity.

"Can we still be Christians?" asks Eucken. His answer is that "we not only can, but must be." So far so good. And this is the sentence which has been heralded about as his answer to the question. Yes, but, we continue, what does he mean by Christian? Here is what he says. We can and must be Christian, on the one condition that Christianity be recognized as a progressive historic movement still in the making, that it be shaken free from the numbing influence of ecclesiasticism and placed upon a broader foundation. In all candor, let us assert right here that in this very qualification is the real danger of Eucken's analysis of Christianity. His answer would seem to appeal on the face of it to the open vision, broad-mindedness, and love of truth that are supposed to mark progressive, scholarly men. How subtle! It is a veritable pitfall.

What does Eucken mean by his qualification? What is the Christianity that he has left after he has stripped it of what he deems superfluous for one cause or another? In a word, it is a Christianity without Christ. Jesus is left a personality to whom is given pre-eminent significance, whatever that may mean, but whose distinctively supernatural work, the Christ task, has been removed. "The fact," he writes, "which is more than all else responsible for the shattering of ecclesiastical religion is that the truth which it once championed as fundamental—that, namely, of the incarnation and the mediatorial office of Christ—is no longer tenable in the present phase of our intellectual development." That is the Christianity left on hand after Eucken has done his best. We must still be Christians, but really, what does Christianity mean under such circumstances?

Any one who has read some of Professor Eucken's other work will be greatly surprised at the position he now takes. Some time ago, in his "Problem of Human Life," he said: "Even the very necessary efforts for a renewal of Christianity, such as are being made to-day with ever increasing effect, do not need to break with Jesus; rather, even they place themselves in the service of the truth revealed by him, and with full conviction appropriate the saying of Peter, 'Lord, to whom shall we go? Thou hast the words of eternal life.'"

Can it be possible that this is the same Eucken that we quoted but a few lines above? What a flat contradiction! His efforts to renew Christianity are leading up a blind alley, we regret to note.

And let us quote again. Writing of the Semitic tendency to contrast God and man, while the Greek and Hindu minds are more concerned to unite the two, he says also in the work already mentioned, "Now in this direction it was the exaltation of Jesus to a divine station and honor which contributed most essentially to the triumph of Christianity by giving to that effort after the union of the divine and the human a controlling center and a perceptible intimacy. Moreover, whoever to-day objects to this tendency should not deny its great historical significance, its action in deepening, strengthening, and warming religious life." So he wrote some time ago. The union of God and man, the incarnate Christ, gave Christianity its triumphs. But now, behold, it is all false! Really, is it not wonderful what beneficent results can follow on the false, according to Eucken?

For much that we find within the covers of "Can We Still Be Christians?" we are thankful. His insistence upon the historicity of Jesus, his defense of the religious consciousness, his illuminating remarks concerning Christianity as the religion of the spirit, his advocacy of the place of the Church in the Christian community—all of this and much more is admirable. But after all this has been said, he leaves the devout seeker after God stranded on the sands of negation, and the believer looking for his Lord in a position from which he has been forcibly removed.

What is the net result of Professor Eucken's inquiry? We find it on page 206 of his work in the title that he gives a section of the third part of the book—The Indispensableness of a New Christianity. There we have it. A new religion is necessary. He frankly tells us that neither Roman Catholicism nor Protestantism offers any hope for reform along the lines he has in mind—and we are thankful that this is so—and so a new religion must be brought to pass. "Catholicism," he writes, "is too rigid for our purpose, while Protestantism is prevented from assuming the lead in this great movement, if only by reason of the irreconcilable opposition between its older and its newer types." And what does he desire in his new religion? "A spiritual life," he answers, "which both supports and uplifts the world." The personality of Jesus, as found in even the new Protestantism of to-day, as he calls it, turning "from the dogma to the personality of Jesus," "does not maintain a sufficiently broad and strong basis for a universal religion that is to establish and permeate the whole of life." "This personality," he says, "can only be estimated at its full significance in the setting of a wider context." "The doctrine of the atonement supplied this," he writes, "for the older thought." And for the new Christianity? There must be that spiritual life which both supports and uplifts the world!

In closing, Eucken says with much force that religion is the only antidote to the soullessness of modern culture and the starving of all inward life. Moreover, he adds, the present age "with its moral slackness, stands in urgent need of rousing and regeneration through the moral earnestness of Christianity." Then, we ask, why not let Christianity, with its divine Christ, its God incarnate in man, its atonement for sin, its message of comfort in the face of sorrow and death, why not let Christianity do its perfect work to-day as in the past? No, it must not be, for "the contact of the divine and human begets daimonic forces which work either for revolution and renewal, or for destruction and degeneration." And it is the task of a new Christianity, this new religion of which he is sponsor, whatever it may turn out to be, to get control of these forces. For, he asserts, the Churches "are far from being an unqualified help to religion, and in many respects are really doing it harm." How unfortunate it all is!

But here we drop the matter. We cannot do better in bringing these lines to a close than to quote a criticism of Eucken's whole position as a religious teacher by one of the leading Scotch writers of to-day, Dr. A. B. D. Alexander, in his "Christianity and Ethics."

"Yet with so much that is positive and suggestive (in Eucken) there are also some grave omissions. * * * We miss any philosophical interpretation of the nature and power of prayer, adoration or worship, or any account, indeed, of the intimacies of the soul which belong to the very essence of the Christian faith. While he insists upon the possibility, nay the necessity, of a new beginning he fails to reveal the power by which the great decision is made. While he affirms with much enthusiasm and frankness the need of personal decision and surrender, he has nothing to say of the divine authority and power which creates our choice and wins our obedience. Nowhere does he show that the creative, redemptive force comes not from man's side, but ultimately from the side of God. And finally, his teaching with regard to the personality of Jesus Christ, notwithstanding its tender sympathy and fine discrimination, does less than justice to the uniqueness and historical significance of the Son of man. * * * He leaves us in no manner of doubt that he does not attach a divine worth to Jesus, nor regard him in the Scriptural sense as the supreme revelation and incarnation of God. And hence, while the peerless position of Jesus as teacher and religious genius is frankly acknowledged, and his purity, power, and permanence are extolled, the mediatorial and redemptive implications of his personality are overlooked."

Hence for Eucken the philosopher all admiration, but Eucken, founder of a new religion, is certainly not a safe guide. Can we still be Christians in view of the opposition, intellectual, social and materialistic, of to-day? With Eucken we say, "Not only we can, but we must." Only, we add, ours is a Christianity not enervated by elimination and man-made by adaptation, but is the Christianity of him who "was manifest in the flesh, justified in the Spirit, seen of angels, preached unto the Gentiles, believed on in the world, received up into glory." Let the Eucken cult be alert at this point. His is not the shibboleth of all truth, notwithstanding his vast learning and positive contributions to philosophical thought. Christianity, the vital, spiritual Christianity of personal experience, resting upon a divine Lord and Savior, must combat his influence.—Zion's Herald.

BILLY SUNDAY ON THE SALOON.

"The saloon is the sum of all villainies. It is worse than war or pestilence. It is the cradle of crimes. It is the parent of crimes and the mother of sins. It is the appalling source of misery, poverty and sorrow. It causes four-fifths of the crime, and, of course, is the source of three-fourths of the taxes to support that crime. And to license such an incarnate fiend of hell is the dirtiest, most low-down, damnable business on top of this old earth.

"The saloons fill the jails and the penitentiaries, the poorhouses and insane asylums. Who has to pay the bills? The landlord who doesn't get the rent because the money goes for whisky; the butcher and the grocer, and the charitable person who takes pity on the children of drunkards, and the taxpayer who supports the insane asylums and other institutions that the whisky business fills with human wrecks.

"Do away with the accursed business, and you will not have to put up to support them. Who gets the money? The saloonkeepers and the brewers and the distillers, while the whisky fills the land with misery, poverty, wretchedness, disease, death and damnation, and it is being authorized by the will of the sovereign people.

"You say, 'People will drink it anyway.' Not by my vote. You say, 'Men will murder their wives anyway.' Not by my vote. You are the sovereign people, and what are you going to do about it?

In these days, when the question of saloon or no saloon is at the fore in almost every community, one hears a good deal about what is called 'personal liberty.' These are fine, large mouth-filling words, and they certainly do sound first rate; but when you get right down and analyze them in the light of good old horse sense, you will discover that in their application to the present controversy they mean just about this:

"Personal liberty is for the man who, if he has the inclination and the price, can stand up to a bar and fill his hide so full of red liquor that he is transformed for the time into an irresponsible, dangerous, evil-smelling brute. But personal liberty is not for that patient, long-suffering wife, who has to endure with what fortitude she may his blows and curses. Nor is it for his children, who, if they escape his insane rage, are yet robbed of every known joy and privilege of childhood, and too often grow up neglected, uncared for and vicious, as the result of their surroundings and the example before them."

THE SINGING IN OUR CHURCHES.

Dear Brother Meek: I have just finished reading "A Word About Songs," and the writer says if wrong he would be glad to be corrected. Now I should not like to undertake to correct anyone, but I thought another view of the case might help to explain why people like a change in songs. There is certainly such a thing as dead literature, and everything grows old, even a much-loved song. The human family need a constant change, and many a pastor is slowly killing his church because he fails to keep up with the procession. Our dear old Standard Hymnal should, I think, always be used in the regular preaching services and have an honored place in the Sunday school, one song after the lesson, being used to illustrate the truth taught therein; then let the children have their favorites. I have heard my little granddaughter sing as if she understood: "God Will Take Care of Me." I have always loved the music in the Church service better than any other part, and I greatly disapprove of doing away with the old hymns altogether; but let us try to keep from getting into a rut. Our musical faculties need the stimulus of something new. I heard a young lady remark about a certain Sunday school, "Well, I went to Sunday school and they're still singing 'Bringing in the Sheaves,' just like they were when I was a child." A new song brings us a new thought, and I almost feel as though I've found a new treasure when I learn a new song.

The greatest trouble with our preachers in using the Standard Hymnal is that they use four or five of the old songs that would be more suitable for funerals or some public calamity, just because the people know them instead of selecting some song better suited to their subject. Better let them hear a well sung solo, and suggest that they go home and learn it than to have them forever droning out something they have known always. As an instance of how little some of our songs are used, while others are worn threadbare, I have never heard but one preacher give out the song, "Jesus, My Savior, Brother, Friend, On Whom I Cast My Every Care." I was only 12 years old then, but I remembered the tune, went home and learned the words, but I don't remember ever hearing it again in Church.

And I hang on the memory peg "The Angel's Story" (No. 350 in the Standard Hymnal), as sung by Mrs. Barnum, in a certain meeting I attended at Lake Charles about three years ago. I had never heard it before and haven't (in public) since; although I speedily made it mine on reaching home. It is grand in sentiment and speaks the spirit of consecration, and should be known by all our young people as well as it is by our deaconesses.

How many of our country churches use that beautiful evening hymn, "Day Is Dying In the West?" Don't all speak at once. I don't hear any one doing so, but, maybe, there are some that do.

I hope all the preachers (who are not all born musicians) will say, "Is it I, Lord, who have thus betrayed the old songs of Zion? If so, help me bring out the new-old songs, and not be afraid of something just off the press if it is to thy glory."

And as for, "The Church in the Wildwood," you might say the same concerning "Work for the Night Is Coming." And my dear father, I believe, loved that the best of all the hymns. In the one beginning, "Arise, my soul, arise," the third verse starts with, "Five bleeding wounds he bears, Received on Cavalry," and how many, many, of God's children are longing to "know Him" in the body as they now know Him in Spirit! The song, "I Shall Know Him," was the favorite of one of our dear missionary girls, who was taken home soon after entering the field. One song will take hold of one person and do good, while another will suit someone else better; hence, the need of variety. And if there is anything in the investigations of country churches by Messrs. Gill and Pinchot (and we all know there is), we had better use every means in our power to revive an interest in the churches, and get people to trim their lamps, and get ready, to sing that new song with the great, blood-washed throng.

INFANT BAPTISM.

As we are all drawn nearer to each other by the natural bonds of affection, so we are drawn still nearer when these bonds of affection are cemented by Christianity. Every gathering, therefore, for the christening of a little child is truly a family gathering. It teaches us how closely we are members one of another. It teaches parents how deeply responsible they are for the growth of that little creature throughout its future education. It teaches brothers and sisters how by them is formed the atmosphere, good or bad, in which the soul of their little newborn brother or sister is trained to good or to evil. It teaches us the value of the purity of those domestic relations in which from childhood to old age all our best thoughts are fostered and encouraged. * * * In each such little child our Saviour saw; and we may see, the promise of a glorious future. In those little hands folded in unconscious repose, in those bright eyes first awakening to the outer world, in that soft forehead unfurrowed by the slightest ruffle of care He saw, and we may see, the undeveloped rudimentary instruments of the labor, intelligence, and energy of a whole life. And not only so—not only in hope, but in actual reality, does the blessing on little children, whether as expressed in the gospel story, or as implied in Infant Baptism, acknowledge the excellency and the value of the childlike soul. Not once only in his life, but again and again, He held them up to his disciples as the best corrective of the sins and passions of mankind. He exhorted all men to follow their innocence, their unconsciousness, their guilelessness, their purity. He saw in them the regenerating, sanctifying element of every family, of every household, of every nation. * * * When we think of the sweet repose of a child as it lies in the arms of its nurse or its pastor at the font, it may recall to us the true attitude of humble trust and confidence which most befits the human soul, whether of saint or philosopher.—Dean Stanley.

A GOOD LAW.

Ohio has a law providing for the pensioning of needy mothers. The fund for this purpose is raised by a special levy of 50 cents upon each $10,000 of taxable property in the State, and it is administered by the Juvenile Court where one exists, and where there is none, by the Probate Court. As soon as the law went into effect, there were 8000 applicants for pensions, some of them being widows who were earning as little as $5 a week, with several small children dependent upon them for support. We scarcely need to say that we think this is an admirable piece of legislation. In our opinion, every State in the Union ought to have a similar law. No unfortunate mother who is the bread-winner for little ones ought to be allowed to struggle unaided and forced to see her family suffer for the necessities of life in any Christian land.

A STATEMENT CONCERNING EDUCATIONAL MATTERS.

Adopted at Winona, Miss., on Sept. 30, 1914, and sent to the Advocate for publication by special order.)

In view of the recent educational happenings in our Church, which are so well known to the Methodist public that we deem it unnecessary to recite them, we, the Presiding Elders and members of the Board of Education of the North Mississippi Conference, in joint session at Winona, Miss., on this the 30th day of September, 1914, desire to make the following expression of our sentiments and convictions:

1. We heartily endorse the course of our recent General Conference, held in Oklahoma City, in handling matters pertaining to Vanderbilt University and in enterprising means and methods to meet the grave educational crisis which had arisen in the Church. It is our conviction that its action in declining to accept the merely nominal relation to the University accorded it by the Supreme Court of the State of Tennessee, thus refusing to stand sponsor for an institution in whose management it was given no real voice, was eminently wise; and we also thoroughly approve of the creation of the Educational Commission and the plan of procedure that was mapped out for it, including the transfer of the rights of the Church in Vanderbilt University back to eight original patronizing Conferences (the power to confirm trustees being held in the General Board of Education until said transfer could be made), and the instruction to establish two institutions of the grade of a university, one east and the other west of the Mississippi River. The recommendations to the former patronizing Conferences that each of them elect a commissioner to assist in effecting the aforementioned transfer, and that they seek, then, to enter the Federal Courts and legally enforce their rights, the whole Church bearing the expense of any such litigation that may be incurred, likewise have our hearty commendation.

2. The splendid work which has been done by the Educational Commission during the brief period of its existence challenges our admiration and inspires our confidence in the wisdom and efficiency of its future leadership. That within less than two months after its organization it was able to locate our eastern university in the most progressive city of the South and secure for it resources amounting to between $2,000,000 and $3,000,000, was nothing short of marvelous. Its action in naming the Southern Methodist University at Dallas as our connectional school west of the Mississippi River, we also consider a statesmanlike piece of administration, and we rejoice in the fine progress that is being made in launching that great institution, which already has an assured endowment of considerably more than $1,000,000 and which now has in process of construction buildings which, when completed, will be unsurpassed anywhere in the South.

3. We hereby express to Mr. Asa Candler, of Atlanta, Ga., our profound appreciation of his magnificent gift of $1,000,000 to our eastern university, the largest single donation ever made by a Southern man to the cause of Christian education. His munificent contribution, and the noble letter by which it was accompanied, will, we feel sure, touch and thrill the hearts of loyal Southern Methodists everywhere, and serve to rally them to the support of this splendid enterprise. The election of Bishop W. A. Candler to the chancellorship of our new schools has also greatly delighted us. A trained and distinguished educator, a great preacher who is devoted to the Church and who is sound in the faith, his connection with the institution is a guarantee that its foundation will be wisely laid, and that it will be committed to high ideals and made true to the best traditions of Southern Methodism.

4. The announcement that the Atlanta Theological School has opened with an actual attendance of forty-one, with the promise of more than sixty within the next few days, and a still larger patronage as the Conferences shall meet this fall, has greatly cheered and encouraged us. We commend this seminary, with its able faculty and its large resources, which are equivalent to an endowment of $500,000, to the patronage and support of all our preachers and people. All young ministers who possibly can should attend upon its courses of study and seek the best equipment to be had for their life-work; and the Church, in such cases as may be necessary, should furnish the means for them to do this. And we urge our presiding elders and pastors to bestir themselves to the utmost to influence any eligible young preachers with whom they may come in contact to avail themselves of the advantages offered by this newly-established seminary, which is upon a larger scale than any other that has ever been maintained under the auspices of our Church.

5. We would respectfully urge the authorities in charge of the theological schools of our two new universities to see that the men who teach in them are free from every taint of heresy and that they are thoroughly loyal to our doctrines and polity. The importance of this cannot, in our judgment, be too strongly emphasized. And the atmosphere enveloping these institutions should, by every token, be kept thoroughly spiritual and evangelical. Any other kind of school for the training of young ministers is more likely to prove a curse than a blessing.

6. In view of the effort that is being made to run the Vanderbilt Biblical School, as it is now held and controlled, as though it were a Methodist institution, we deem it advisable to warn our people against this misrepresentation. Under the present management there is no recognized connection between the Church and any department of Vanderbilt University. To be sure, we believe that we have equities and rights in that institution; but the Vanderbilt Board of Trust has utterly repudiated these rights and equities, having by formal resolution declared that they are destroyed and do not now exist. And unless we can assert them by legal process, they have indeed ceased to be. The severance between the Southern Methodist Church and the present administration of the whole of Vanderbilt University is complete. It is no longer ours in any of its departments, and never will be unless the strong arm of the law shall enforce our claims and make it so.

7. In consideration of this unwarranted attempt which is being made to operate the Vanderbilt Theological Department as a Methodist school, and of what such action would, furthermore, involve, we record it as our definite and firm conviction that the Church should not permit henceforth, so long as present relations obtain, the appointment of Methodist preachers to places in its faculty, or of young preachers as students to attend it. To do this would be, to some extent, to endorse the University as a whole with Mr. Carnegie's money that was used to help eject the Church in its coffers, and to encourage our young ministers to seek their training in an atmosphere that is known to be hostile to the Church, as well as unwholesome in other ways.

We, therefore, respectfully request our Bishops, and the Annual Conferences before whom this question may come, to stand resolutely against making such appointments, and thus safeguard the honor and interests of the Church. They may feel that this matter is entirely within their own hands, to be disposed of at their pleasure; but we would fraternally remind them that in an important sense they must act for the whole connection, that their decision will involve the reputation and welfare of the entire Church, and we appeal to them not thus to place Southern Methodism in copartnership with Vanderbilt University in the work of teaching, after she has been outraged and insulted by those in charge of its affairs.

8. In conclusion, we will say that, in our opinion, the educational outlook in our Church is now brighter than it has ever been before. The splendid course which the Church has pursued in refusing to stand for any other policy than that of the ownership and control of her institutions of learning has not only thrilled the 2,000,000 Methodists of the South, but it has also commanded the admiration of other communions throughout the nation. It has awakened a new and widespread interest in Christian education, and has inaugurated a movement in its behalf that bids fair to strengthen it in every section of our land and make its influence vastly more potent in the work of uplifting mankind. With our two universities hopefully projected and our many excellent schools and colleges, the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, fronts the future with confidence, and with a determination to so teach and train her sons and daughters as to make them men and women of the noblest and most useful types. But we must be up and doing if we are fully to meet our tremendous responsibilities and make the most of our inspiring opportunities. We would, therefore, urge our leaders to press with the utmost vigor, and with the least possible delay, the work of raising funds to equip and endow our two universities, which are to be the great life-giving centers of our whole educational system; and we invite them to make a canvass of our Conference for this purpose, and hereby pledge them our hearty cooperation.

A REVIVAL AT MAGNOLIA, MISS.

Dear Dr. Meek: On last Friday evening, Sept. 25, the Magnolia Methodist Church closed a meeting of twelve days' duration. On Monday evening, Sept. 14, Rev. R. L. Bunyard, pastor of the local Baptist Church, preached the sermon. This service was followed by a sermon on Tuesday evening preached by Rev. J. L. McKinstry, pastor of the local Presbyterian Church. These sermons were thoroughly evangelistic and well adapted to the opening of a revival meeting.

Beginning with the Wednesday evening hour and continuing to the close of the meeting, the preaching was done by Rev. J. A. Bowen of Birmingham, Ala., Conf. Evangelist for the North Alabama Conference. Three services a day were held the last eight days of the meeting (on Sunday four services), a service being held each afternoon specially for the children and young people. Apprehension was felt for the strength of the speaker in view of so many services each day, but as the services increased in interest and power there seemed to be a corresponding increase of his physical strength and preaching power. Such faith, such prayer and such tireless labor as is seen in the ministry of Brother Bowen is refreshing and inspiring. His preaching was earnest, evangelistic, sweet-spirited, uncompromising, characterized by a dignity that commanded respect and a fervor that won all hearts. It was the old-time gospel absolutely devoid of sensational methods.

Our Church has been greatly revived. On Sunday morning following the close of the meeting twenty-seven persons were received into the membership of our Church. Several others pledged themselves to unite with the Church of their choice, and some of these pledges have been redeemed already.

On the Sunday following the termination of the services we had the largest attendance in the history of our Sunday school. While not a union meeting in the sense that the other denominations were committed to it, the hearty cooperation of the other churches, pastors and people, was beautiful to see. Doubtless the membership of all these churches has been greatly strengthened.

We feel deeply grateful to all who contributed in any way to the success of the meeting; to Brother Bowen in particular, and above all to the Lord of the harvest who gave the increase.

Church News

The St. Louis Conference has 38,584 church members and a Sunday school enrollment of 34,112.

More students have matriculated at Trinity College (Durham, N. C.) this fall than ever before in the history of that institution.

The entire congregation of the Methodist Episcopal Church at Warner, Oklahoma, united with the Southern Methodist Church a short time since.

The Barnes Hospital of St. Louis, which belongs to the M. E. Church, South, will be dedicated in the near future. This institution is worth approximately $2,000,000.

It is reported that nearly 70,000 churches this year observed the first Sunday in September as "Labor Sunday." This is an increase of 20,000 over the number that observed it last year.

It is reported that Cardinal Merry del Val, formerly Papal Secretary of State, will be appointed Archbishop of Madrid, with a view to strengthening the connection between the Kingdom of Spain and the Vatican.

The Fifth Avenue Presbyterian Church of New York City gave for missions last year $96,991. Of this amount, $54,930 was for home missions, and $42,061 for foreign missions. Dr. J. W. Jowett is the pastor of this great congregation.

At its recent session, the Missouri Conference resolved to become one of the patronizing Conferences of the Southern Methodist University at Dallas and elected a trustee to membership in the Board of Control of that institution.

Mrs. J. L. Johnson, Jr., the wife of the President of the Woman's College at Hattiesburg, Miss. (Baptist), reports that ten mission study classes have been organized in that institution, and that the organization of others will follow.

"The Centenary Fund of the British Wesleyan Methodists, which is to be used in strengthening the missionary work of the Church at home and in the foreign field, has reached a total of $1,417,000. The amount asked of the membership of the Church was $1,300,000."

After an extended visit to the Pacific Coast, during which time he was kept busy at field work and holding Annual Conferences, Bishop Mouzon returned to his home in Texas some days ago, where he has been resting and giving attention to the duties devolving upon him in his home State.

After serving the Fourth Avenue Church of Louisville, Ky., for four years, Dr. Richard Wilkin has been transferred to the Virginia Conference, which will meet on November 11. The new pastor of Fourth Avenue is Dr. F. M. Thomas, who had finished his quadrennium on the Louisville District.

At the late session of the Louisville Conference five of the seven presiding elders were moved on account of the time limit. The membership of this Conference is now 58,125. The pastors' reports showed that there had been during the past year 3453 additions to the Church on profession of faith and 2235 by certificate.

Dr. John A. Rice has been transferred from Texas to the St. Louis Conference and stationed at St. John's Church of St. Louis. Dr. J. W. Lee has been made presiding elder of the St. Louis District, and Rev. H. P. Crowe appointed agent of Marvin College. Rev. J. M. Bradley has been transferred to the Southwest Missouri Conference and Dr. Theodore Copeland to the Mississippi Conference.

After a recent visit to the North Texas Female College, at Sherman, of which Mrs. Key is president, Dr. G. C. Rankin thus refers to Bishop Key in the Texas Christian Advocate: "The Bishop is looking well. He goes out some, but spends most of his time in the quietude of his home. His influence over the student body and throughout the community is as sweet and exhilarating as the perfume of flowers."

At the meeting of the General Board of Education in Atlanta, Ga., last week Dr. R. H. Bennett, of Virginia, was elected Secretary of the Correspondence School. Other ministers voted for were Dr. C. O. Jones of Georgia, Rev. C. M. Harless of Texas, and Rev. T. H. Lipscomb of Mississippi. Mr. Lipscomb commanded a strong and enthusiastic support, and had he been called to this service, he would have adorned the place and would have made his influence widely felt for good. The Board ordered the Correspondence School moved from Nashville to Atlanta, and declared in favor of naming our new eastern university "Candler University."

The Wesleyan Christian Advocate says: "Bishop Candler will preach Sunday, Monday, and Tuesday at the 148th anniversary services of the John Street Methodist Church of New York City, beginning on Oct. 25. The Methodists of that city will have the opportunity of hearing about the best preaching that Southern Methodism can furnish, and that is saying that they will have about as good as world-wide Methodism can give."

Bishop E. E. Hoss contributed to the New York Christian Advocate last week a brilliant article, entitled "The Methodist Situation in Atlanta and Some Other Things." He contended that the Atlanta case is now before the Federal Council of Methodism and that it is scarcely proper to try it in the public prints, as Bishop Hamilton and Dr. Eckman seem disposed to do. When Bishop Hoss takes up his pen, he never fails to give out something that is well worth reading and reflecting upon.

CENTENARY COLLEGE NOTES.

First Church, Shreveport, has been very diligent in the courtesies shown the students of Centenary College. Dr. Geo. S. Sexton is most helpful and generous in his interest and is demonstrating to the young people who attend the college, that our great Church is vitally concerned in this institution.

The Baird Class (of the Sunday school) is known throughout the State—and beyond—for its splendid work among the young people, especially among strangers who move to Shreveport. On Friday night, Sept. 18, they gave a very elegant and enjoyable reception to Centenary students.

Mrs. A. W. Baird, whose kind ministry to the young people has done so much to encourage them in the Christian life, received the guests, being assisted by a large number of the young ladies of the class. The guests assembled in the beautiful classroom to enjoy a program of unusual merit. Mr. A. W. Baird, teacher, was master of ceremonies and cleverly introduced the various speakers and artists. Dr. Sexton, always cordial and brotherly, won the boys' hearts and made them feel perfectly at home. In a well-phrased address, Dr. Welch, the assistant teacher of the class, also voiced a welcome to the student body. Response was made by Rev. R. H. Wynn, who expressed sincere appreciation of the attractive social function, on his own behalf and for the boys.

After the close of the literary feast, the guests were invited to the handsome parlors where refreshments were charmingly served and a pleasant hour spent. The boys were profuse in their expressions of appreciation and came away feeling it was impossible to be a stranger more than once at First Church.

The Epworth League, likewise, has set itself to furnishing wholesome and helpful social diversion for the young men and women of the church and has planned a reception for Centenary boys to be given in the parlors Friday night, Oct. 2. It is their intention also, to arrange for a good literary entertainment monthly. It is hoped that the students will avail themselves not only of the social pleasures offered by the League, but that they will also profit by attendance upon the splendid devotional meetings on Sunday evening.

The Senior Epworth League of the Noel Memorial Church will conduct the evening service at that church, Sunday, Oct. 3, observing the request of President Wilson for special prayer for peace. Prof. B. D. Battle, of Centenary, who was studying this summer in Heidelberg, Germany, when the hostilities broke out, will recount conditions existing in the war zone as he saw them. Some of the old opera chairs formerly used in First Church have been moved to the chapel to replace the benches. They are in good condition and furnish the chapel well.

IN MEMORY OF DANIEL E. KELLY.

On Monday night, August 31, 1914, Daniel E. Kelly, Sr., fell asleep in Jesus, and on Tuesday afternoon the body was laid to rest in the family burying-ground five miles east of Gloster, Miss. The funeral service was held in Woodland Church, being conducted by Rev. Mr. Simmons, a Methodist minister and long-time friend of the family, assisted by the Revs. Daniel and Forman.

Woodland was dear to Mr. Kelly, and his very life is woven into its history. It was there in young manhood that he took his wife and children to worship; there that his children dedicated their lives to God's service, and there, through all the years, that he mingled with his friends. How fitting that in death he should lie there for awhile! As I sat and listened to the service, I felt that it was all that he would have wished it to be, and I wondered if God grants it to his saints to know these beautiful things, and if even then the spirit of our departed friend was not there rejoicing in the thought that his life had not been spent in vain. The house was filled with his friends—men, women and children from all the ranks of life, some of them from a distance, but, mostly, they were his neighbors—all bowed in one common grief. The flowers attested their love—not costly florist's emblems, but home-grown blossoms, woven into wreaths by loving hands. The young people of the neighborhood sang the simple old hymns that he loved: "Nearer my God to Thee," "Sweet by-and-by," and "Shall we Gather at the River?" The talks were made by those who knew and loved him, and who blessed God for the privilege. There was no account of wonderful deeds of valor—only the simple story of a man who had spent his life quietly at home, loving and serving his people, for, excepting the four years spent in the Civil War, the whole seventy-nine years of his life were lived out there in the neighborhood of his birth.

Twenty-five years ago, when I first met Mr. Kelly, he was in the prime of manhood, being prominent in church and community affairs and the leading spirit in the happiest home it was ever my good fortune to know. He was a man whom one trusted instinctively; gentle as a woman, and fine as only a Christian gentleman can be—a man of superior judgment, to whom the whole neighborhood looked for counsel. His life and his home spoke eloquently of his religion—it was so easy to recognize there the blessedness of godliness. The hungry, the thirsty, the needy and the stranger, never looked to him in vain. He was everybody's friend, and everybody was his friend. How sweet to him will be the Savior's "Come ye blessed!"

As the years passed on, multiplied sorrows were his portion, and suffering and pain, but mercy compassed him about, and he was never utterly cast down. The loving kindness of the Lord satisfied him with long life, and gave him to see his children, and his children's children, grow up into manhood and womanhood, going about the world teaching God's love and truth. What better could any child of God ask? And what greater heritage could any man leave to his children than the record of a well-spent life; the memory of a beautiful character; of kindly deeds and counsel; of a love that never wavered—a legacy that fadeth not away, but multiplieth treasure in heaven. * * * "Blessed are the dead which die in the Lord. They rest from their labors, and their works do follow them."

ON SINNING AGAINST ONE'S LIGHT.

It is dangerous to sin against light. It mars one's ideal; casts a shadow over one's remembered past; blunts the conscience; burdens the memory; debases the affections; strengthens evil habits; weakens one's influence; grieves the Holy Spirit; opens the door to temptation; pleases evil spirits, and greatly impairs one's will-power. Don't sin. Don't yield to temptation. Don't unlock the door when you know that temptation is waiting for an opportunity. Break the spell of apathy and of worldliness by a breath of prayer.—Bishop J. H. Vincent.

AT SUNSET.

By Jane C. Crowell.

Behind the royal clouds of gold
Along the western sky
What mysteries would swift unfold,
What glories blind the eye!

They hang as hung the temple veil.
Beyond, man shall not see.
Yet here as at the altar-rail
Souls meet with Deity.

Too soon the priest withdraws, and night
Puts out the afterglow.
But who stood pure within that light
God very God shall know!

GREAT PREACHING.

In undertaking to discuss this important question I am quite as well aware of my limitations for the task as I am of the bigness of the subject that I am presuming to write upon. Hence, did any motive save that of helping to advance Christ's kingdom prompt the writing of this article, it would be but egotism to submit this manuscript for publication. That there are some who will criticize the position taken in this article, I doubt not; but could I command language to clearly convey my thoughts, I am sure the critics would be few. For, after all, the difference between most of us is a difference of the terms used to convey thought, rather than a difference in the thought itself. Therefore, before criticism is passed, I trust that all who may read what I shall have to say will seek to grasp clearly the thought I am seeking to express.

Everything considered, I think I am justified in saying, there should be some standard by which to so gauge a sermon that its right to be classed as a great sermon would pass unchallenged. Of course, it is a patent fact that no man, or set of men, has a right to class sermons according to his fancy and then pass to oblivion all which do not happen to conform to his notion. Since men will class one sermon as great, and another as inferior, there should be some acknowledged standard by which to gauge sermons. That there is a difference in sermons preached by different men, and even by the same man, as to that, no sane man will deny. The question raised, therefore, does not indicate that there is no difference in the relative value of sermons; but it does raise the inquiry as to what is the right standard by which to gauge sermons. All thoughtful men can readily see the need of a standard of measurement here, as well as everywhere else that comparisons are made. Without a standard of goodness no one can intelligently say of one man that he is better than another man. The words "good, better, and best" pre-suppose the existence of a standard by which to class the first man as good. So, too, in order that one may intelligently pass upon the relative worth of sermons there must be some accepted standard by which to gauge them. And, furthermore, the standard must be one that is acceptable to Christians.

Why a standard that is acceptable to Christians, rather than one that is acceptable to all men? Because a man's answer to the question, "What is great preaching?" is wholly dependent upon the view-point from which he regards preaching. The view-point of the Christian is altogether different from that of the man of the world. The man of the world naturally regards sermons from the worldly-wise point of view—that is, from the view-point of rhetoric, oratory, the logical marshaling of facts, the fund of information dispensed, or some other of its purely human attributes. The Christian, on the other hand, regards a sermon from the spiritual view-point—that is, its power to awaken a sinner from the error of his way and to stimulate a believer to greater activity in the work of the kingdom. Of course, when judged from the worldly-wise view-point, there are many standards that may be laid down by which to gauge sermons; spiritually judged, however, there can be but one standard by which to gauge them. Unfortunately, for the highest interest of the Kingdom of God, there are far too many laymen and preachers who regard sermons from the worldly-wise point of view, rather than from the spiritual standpoint. Such men are too much concerned with the decoration on the plough-handles and not enough with the character and nature of the plough itself. The plough is an instrument of culture to be used in the highest interest of civilization, and not an object to be admired for its beauty; so, too, is the sermon an instrument in God's hands to be used for the highest interest of God's kingdom, rather than something to be admired. Besides, if sermons are for worldly-wise admiration, why hobble one's mind with the doctrines of Christianity? If one's ability to exalt one's self, humanly speaking, be the standard by which to gauge sermons, one had best not be hampered by the doctrines and teachings of Christianity. In the Bible man is clearly taught, "Not to think above what is written," also "Not to think more highly of himself than he ought to think; but to think soberly, according as God has dealt to every man the measure of faith." If the pulpit, then, be a forum in which men are to get to themselves glory (as the world estimates glory), the Bible should be discarded, while unbridled learning and vaulting ambition should be sought after as the monitor of those who teach sacred things.

The sermon and the man delivering it are each supposed to have a vitally close relationship to God. The message is supposed to come from God, while the messenger is regarded as his ambassador. The message, though made possible through the amazing and sacrificing love of God, is no less an "ultimatum" to the sinner than was England's "ultimatum" to Germany. The value of a sermon, then, is wholly dependent upon its spiritual contents, and not upon the beauty of its human decorations.

Looked at from the view-point of its spiritual import, no sermon is even passably good that is not calculated to produce conviction, awaken the sinner from the error of his way or stimulate the believer to greater activity in the work of the kingdom, no matter how much admiration and praise it may evoke.

Furthermore, sermons that awaken admiration and praise because of their literary or oratorical qualities, rather than because of the conviction and deeper consecration to God that they produce, are complete failures. As some one has wisely said: "That only is a success which adequately accomplishes the purpose whereunto it was created, ordained, or made." The purpose (and the only purpose) whereunto preaching was ordained is the conversion and salvation of the world.

What, then, is GREAT PREACHING? It is such a presentation of eternal spiritual truth, by the power of the Holy Spirit, as is calculated to produce conviction and regeneration in the heart of the sinner, and to stimulate the believer to greater activity in the work of the kingdom. The greatest sermon ever preached is the sermon that has produced the greatest spiritual fruit. Who, then, but God can pass accurately upon the relative greatness of sermons?

In conclusion, I will say that during the past few years all our denominations have to far too great an extent gone daft over worldly-wise discourses, and other worldly-wise means and methods of doing Church work. The spiritual, and its methods, have been largely shelved, while the material, and its means, are given the right of way too much in our churches. Some of the church leaders have sought by questionable methods to procure their advancement, instead of looking to God for his leadership in their lives. And some preachers, that they might be counted successful, have stooped to worldly-wise means for increasing church and Sunday school attendance, rather than humble themselves before God and seek the success that he approves. For illustration, just recently in a city of some ten or twelve thousand inhabitants in one of our Southern States the Methodist, Baptist, Presbyterian and Campbellite Churches organized their Sunday schools into baseball teams. No boy could play who had not for two successive Sundays been in attendance upon Sunday school.

First, the good Presbyterians and the Campbellites matched their teams. My! you should have witnessed the excitement, rivalry, banter, and ill-feeling that were exhibited on the grounds and in the grandstand. Next, the Baptists and the Methodists matched their teams. Soon after the game commenced it was apparent that the Baptists stood alone; the Presbyterians and the Campbellites were loudly rooting for the Methodists. While the church members were spitting fire at each other, and the players were trying each to put the other out of the game, the sports were off in one corner secretly betting as to which would win. Well, the Baptists, with all the odds against them, won the game. Now I venture the assertion that while those churches may have increased the numerical attendance in their Sunday schools during the baseball season, they lost in spiritual power. I venture the further assertion that not a single soul was led nearer to God during the playing of that series of games. The only way to advance God's Kingdom is by faith, through prayer, and the studious following of the leadership of the Holy Spirit. He who builds on any other foundation is close akin to the man whom Jesus described in Matt. 7:26-27.

OCTOBER 17, 1914.—WORK DAY FOR THE METHODIST ORPHANAGE, JACKSON, MISS.—WANTED $6000.

We want all the newspapers in Mississippi to please publish this until Oct. 17, 1914.

We want every friend in Mississippi to tell the other fellow about this day and also to help us himself.

We are expecting $6000. We need it to pay what we did not pay in the summer, and to support these 220 children this winter. We want to pay cash for all we buy. We want only voluntary and cheerful gifts.

We believe children are the greatest heritage on earth. We believe the saving of destitute children places them on a plane where they can enjoy work and become more useful and happy.

There is no greater work on earth than turning such children from the paths of sin, dishonor and destruction. It costs much less to care for the destitute children and make good citizens of them, than it does to support the criminals they might make. Who pays the cost?

It takes over $20,000 per annum for our current expenses.

We want enough to care for every destitute child that knocks at our door. We know your heart sympathizes with us, but it takes more than sympathy; it takes money. The poor children need your money and will be blessed by it. Make a sacrifice of time, heart, and money, on Oct. 17, 1914. These children belong to you, to me, and to every other good man and woman in Mississippi.

If all our friends would give us their co-operation on this one day we would have no trouble in getting the $6000.

Oh, you say "war times and boll weevil." "I can't give anything." But do you know these very same circumstances and conditions make it more imperative that you should give? The more poverty there is, the more needy, destitute children. Will you close the door in their faces?

Let us every one give what we make or the value of what we make on this one day—October 17, 1914. W. M. WILLIAMS, Manager.

A THOUGHT FOR THE WEAK.

I know a land where the streets are paved
With the things we meant to achieve.
It is walled with the money we meant to have saved.

And the pleasures for which we grieve,
The kind words unspoken, the promises broken,
And many a coveted boon
Are stowed away there in that land somewhere—
The land of "Pretty Soon."

The road that leads to that mystic land
Is strewn with pitiful wrecks;
And the ships that have sailed for its shining strand

Bear skeletons on their decks.
It is further at noon than it was at dawn,
And further at night than at noon;
Oh! let us beware of that land down there—
The land of "Pretty Soon."

—Ella Wheeler Wilcox.

DOER AND WAITER.

"There," exclaimed Paul, "that's the third time I've called George, and he isn't ready yet. I'm tired of waiting and have a good notion to go on without him."

But George did not join his friend for half an hour; when he did, he was greeted chidingly: "Well, here you are at last, old poky. I've had an endless wait for you. What have you been doing?"

"Why," George cried, in some surprise, making a dive for his watch and referring to it, "it still lacks five minutes of the time we agreed to start to the lake. There was plenty of time to prepare Monday's lessons, and I used it for that."

"Monday's lesson can wait till I get back," retorted Paul. "When I have such a walk planned as the one to the lake I can't do anything else but think about it and wait for the starting time to come."

"Time is short for the doer," George observed, thoughtfully, "but long for the waiter."

Time is often lost, just as Paul lost his on that Saturday morning, by idly waiting for the hour to arrive to begin a pleasure. Time, which is often wasted by waiting, if intelligently used, will serve a two-fold purpose. It will prevent theedium of watching the slow-moving hands of the clock and it will serve the useful purpose of accomplishing things. Men ever have achieved worthy ends by using waste time.

Elihu Burritt, while working at the forge, learned ten languages, and became an influential factor in promoting international peace. William Carey, while cobbling shoes, gained the foundation of Eastern languages, which made him famous as a translator and missionary. D'Aguesseau, the French chancellor, wrote a learned literary work of three volumes during a few minutes he was obliged to wait each day for his meals. Henry Ward Beecher read the whole of Irving's several volumes "Life of Washington" in the snatches while he waited for the family to answer the summons to meals. Hugh Miller was a stone-mason who used his spare time observing the formation of the rocks, and produced brilliant books, chief among them being "The Old Red Sandstone."—Youth's World.

A LESSON IN PATIENCE.

"We'll set to work now, Essie," said grandma, after school, "and see if we can't get an hour or two on your party dress before supper-time. How pretty it is, to be sure," she added, shaking out the shimmering pink folds.

It was a cool, crisp September afternoon, when work seemed like play, and the shining needles were soon flashing busily in and out. But only a few minutes had passed when Louise's voice called from the library: "O, grandma, I've tried to play this piece over and over, and I just can't get the time right. Won't you please come and count it for me?" And a moment later grandma's cheery voice echoed back from the library. "It is a hard kind of time, I remember trying it when I was a girl," she said; "but it's so bright and pretty when you do get it that it pays for the trouble. One—two—three; now, deary, isn't that better?"

"The child is improving every day, Essie," said grandma a few minutes later, picking up her sewing.

Again for five long minutes the needles flashed on their way; then Rob's curly head appeared in the sitting-room door.

"I've been working at this problem ever since school," he said, fretfully, "and it just won't come out right. Don't you s'pose you could help me a little, grandma? I never did understand long division."

"It's been a good many years since I studied long division," said grandma smiling, "but sit ye down here, my lad, and we'll try. There you are, she added, after the brown head and the gray had bent over the slate together for a few minutes. "Who says we can't do long division?" And her smile was as delighted as the child's.

"We won't get done very fast at this rate," said Essie, frowning at Rob's disappearing figure.

"I have one sleeve almost basted," said grandma.

Just then little Ted's voice was heard in a shrill scream from the back yard: "O, I've stepped on a piece of glass and my foot's a-bleed-in! O! O! O!"

Of course grandma was out in the yard in no time with a soft bandage and her favorite liniment. "The poor little fellow has got a pretty bad hurt," she said, when she came back at last.

"How can you have so much patience, grandma," said Essie, "always running from one thing to another, with never five minutes to call your own?"

"Do you think I have, child?" asked grandma, her dark eyes shining with pleasure. "Well, I didn't always have as much as I have now; but you see, deary, I've lived a long time and I've learned that sometimes the little things that bring comfort and happiness to others and smooth out the hard places mean more in the Lord's sight than the big task we lay out for ourselves. We'll get the dress done before the party, never fear, but we'll not neglect the music and the problems and the dear little cut feet, either."

Just then Ted's round face appeared in the doorway, with the traces of tears still on the rosy cheeks. "My foot's better, some," he said, "but I'm awful thirsty and I can't reach the bucket."

"Bless his heart, I expect he is," and away hustled grandma, leaving her little sermon only half finished.—The King's Builders.

LETTERS THEN AND NOW.

The postman brought Alice a letter from her cousin, who lived so far away that she had visited Alice but once.

"How did people get letters before there were railroads?" Alice asked when she had read every word over twice.

"Sometimes they were carried by men on foot or on horseback," said mother. "In an old, old country, far across the ocean, men were always waiting at certain places to carry messages for the king. The first carrier would ride his horse to the second post, as it was called. Then he would give the message to the man waiting there, who would dash away to the next post. That is the way we get the name 'post office.'"

"Didn't they carry letters for any one but the king?" asked Alice.

"Only for the king and for the people who helped him to rule," said mother. "If you or I had lived then and had wanted to send word to any of our friends, we should have had to hunt up some one to carry the letter."

"I'm glad I'm living now," said Alice. "Were there other ways of sending mail?"

"Sometimes a note was tied under the wing of a carrier pigeon," mother told her. "The bird would fly home with it very quickly. Many letters have been carried by men mounted on camels. In the far North mail is yet taken down to the boats or railroads on a sledge drawn by strong dogs. In our own country letters were once carried by stagecoach. At first they were taken only once a month."

"What a long time to wait!" sighed Alice. "I shall answer Emily's letter right away."

"In those days," mother went on, "there were no pretty envelopes. The sheet of paper was folded with the writing inside and sealed with wax. There were no stamps, either. The one to whom the letter was sent had to pay for it before the postman would let him have it to read."

"I'm glad that Emily won't have to pay to get my letter," said Alice as she opened her box of pretty paper, a birthday present. "Will you help me to spell the hard words, mother?"—Martina Gardner Owen.

THE MINISTER'S WIFE.

The minister's wife ought to be selected by a committee of the Church. She should be warranted never to have the headache or neuralgia; should have nerves of wire and sinews of iron. She should never be tired. She should be cheerful and intellectual, pious and domesticated; she should be able to keep her husband's house, darn his stockings, make his shirts, cook his dinner and copy his sermons. She should keep up the style of a lady on the wages of a day laborer, and be always at leisure for "good works" and ready to receive morning calls. She should be secretary of the Band of Hope and president of the Missionary Society; she should conduct the Bible classes and mothers' meetings; she should make clothing for the poor and gruel for the sick, and, finally, she should be pleased with everybody and everything, and never desire any reward beyond the satisfaction of having done her own duty—and other people's, too.—Conservator.

MEETING OF THE PUBLISHING COMMITTEE.

The Publishing Committee of the New Orleans Christian Advocate will meet in the Advocate office (512 Camp Street) in New Orleans on Thursday, October 29, 1914, at 11 o'clock a. m.

J. M. HENRY, Chairman.

THE LOUISIANA EDUCATIONAL CAMPAIGN.

Rev. Paul M. Brown, Secretary of Education of the Louisiana Conference, writes as follows: "We are planning to begin next Sunday, October 11, a campaign in the city of New Orleans in the interest of our educational work in Louisiana. The great theme of Christian Education will be discussed in all our pulpits in the city at the 11 o'clock hour, and at night there will be a great educational rally at the First Methodist Church. Among the speakers from a distance who are expected to be heard on this occasion are Dr. Plato Durham, Dean of the new Atlanta School of Theology, and others connected with that institution."

This is the movement of vast importance, and it is certainly to be hoped that all our pastors and people will give it their hearty and enthusiastic support. Our two schools in Louisiana must be strengthened if they are to meet the needs of Southern Methodism in this fast developing State, and it is our conviction that this is at present our most urgent and imperative duty. And much depends upon the outcome of this effort in New Orleans. It is true that there are few Methodists in this city who possess large means and that most of our churches here are more or less burdened with debt, but we cannot afford to disregard this appeal. On the contrary, we should, if necessary, make great sacrifices to place Centenary and Mansfield Colleges upon a better and more secure basis. The welfare of the Methodism of the entire commonwealth is largely dependent upon these institutions, and not to go to their rescue in this time of need would be a well-nigh fatal mistake. Let every one give and work to the full measure of his ability, and our educational situation will soon wear a different aspect. We cannot afford to think of failure in this crucial hour.

THE CHRISTIAN'S FUTURE ALWAYS BRIGHT.

Are you discouraged? If you are a Christian, you need not be. God is your Father, and his power is unlimited, the resources of the universe are at his command, and never was an earthly parent so tender and loving as is he. The way that lies before you may seem dark, but you will not have to walk it alone, and at its end is the heavenly home where all strugglings and sorrows will cease. Let nothing tempt you into doubting whether God watches over you, or cares as to what befalls you. We are assured in the Divine Word that "the steps of a good man are ordered by the Lord"—that the very hairs of his head are numbered. Nothing but his own infidelity to the Master can really harm him. Even death, which most men count the greatest calamity, only calls him to his triumphant coronation and reward. The truth is, we do not see what we call the sorrows and joys, the defeats and successes of life, in their true relations and proportions—in their eternal perspective. As one has strikingly said: "Our view is a peep-out from the valley; God's view is a vision from creation's mountain top."

DECLARES SHERMAN NEVER SAID IT.

Falsehood may not be eternal like truth, but it is wonderfully long-lived. Start a lie to going, and it is exceedingly difficult to overtake and destroy it; indeed, in many cases it seems to be utterly impossible to do so. We have been hearing all our life that General Sherman said, "War is hell," and have believed that he made the utterance and have sometimes so represented him. But we note that in a recent issue of the New York World Mr. H. I. Hoffman, on what appears to be good ground, affirms that the famous Federal commander never used any such expression. He says:

"Who is not tired of hearing that constant repetition 'As Sherman said, War is hell?' When this inelegant metaphor, then already centuries old, was started anew on its travels, it was, 'As Sherman said to the women of Atlanta, War is hell.' It was based on Sherman's official reply to a protest sent to him by the mayor of Atlanta (not the women of Atlanta) against his (Sherman's) order for the permanent removal of all the inhabitants of Atlanta. Here are his words, with his partly disclosed purpose:

"I cannot discuss this subject with you fairly, because I cannot impart to you what I propose to do, but I assert that my military plans make it necessary for the inhabitants to go away, and I can only renew the offer of my services to make their exodus in any direction as easy and comfortable as possible. You cannot qualify war in harsher terms than I will. War is cruelty, and you cannot refine it. * * * You might as well appeal against the thunder-storm as against these terrible hardships of war. They are inevitable."

The writer well remembers hearing the whole of this order read officially at the time, on parade before Atlanta, but not trusting to a memory of fifty years, has had recourse to the official record."

May we not learn from this incident the important lesson of being accurate in our statements and careful as to the reports that we put in circulation? Especially do we need to guard against exaggeration and the giving out of half-truths. The latter possess more vital tenacity than complete falsehoods and are often more damaging in their effects. Much to be commended is the man who, whether he talks in public or in private or writes for the press, is careful to keep his utterances in harmony with the facts.

CHRISTIANS ONLY IN NAME.

One of the most striking things in the present European war is the extent to which some of the noted leaders in the conflict have affected to be religious and have claimed for their plans the Divine sanction. It is bad enough to inaugurate a reign of wholesale murder under any circumstances, but it is nothing short of blasphemy for one to presume to assert that in doing so he has the approval of the Heavenly Father. God may overrule this awful conflict and make it contribute to the ultimate good of humanity—he does undoubtedly sometimes make the wrath of men to praise him—but that he approved of the starting of this fearful struggle, or that he will hold those responsible for it guiltless, the revelations given of the Divine Nature will not allow us to believe. No, no; Satan is for the time being in the ascendancy on the continent of Europe; and this is an hour of darkness similar to that which existed when the sinless Christ, the world's greatest benefactor, was lifted up on the cruel cross. It matters not that the conspicuous actors in the present terrible world tragedy are seeking to pose as Christians (those who are least like Jesus are not infrequently found among his nominal disciples, as in the case of Judas)—they are in reality dominated by the spirit of the Evil One. The brilliant Bard of Avon, whose insight into things seemed at times to be almost inspired, has told us that—

"When devils will their blackest sins put on,
 They do suggest at first with heavenly shows."

FUNDAMENTALLY DIFFERENT.

Why some scientifically-inclined people attack religion I never could understand. Suppose every form of religion was blotted out, where would be the gain? Science could not take its place—for it is ever changing.—Prof. Lionel S. Beale.

The above statement is quite true; yet there are many in this day who are given to insisting that religion should be as changeable as science, and who are ever striving to make it so. Herein lies the delusion of the so-called progressive theologians: they fail to note the fact that science is made up of discoveries of the finite mind, and that hence it must forever be imperfect and variable; whereas religion is based upon a revelation from God, and that therefore its great essential truths must always be the same. And in this stability lies the strength of Christianity. The earth and the heavens may pass away, but the Word of the Lord abideth forever.

BISHOP WATERHOUSE COMES EAST.

Bishop R. G. Waterhouse passed through New Orleans last Tuesday, en route to Houston, Miss., where he will preach next Sunday. He was looking well and was in fine spirits. From Houston the Bishop will go to the Holston Conference. He stated that the brethren may know his address on the dates that he is holding Annual Conferences by noting the list of episcopal appointments published in the Church papers, and that between times he may be addressed at Emory, Va. The Conferences that Bishop Waterhouse will hold are as follows: Holston, Bristol, Tenn., October 14; Western North Carolina, Shelby, N. C., Nov. 11; North Carolina, Washington, N. C., Nov. 15; North Mississippi, Starkville, Miss., Dec. 2.

PERSONAL AND OTHER NOTES.

Writing under date of September 23, Rev. E. G. Wood, of Pollock, La., says: "We closed a very successful meeting at Rochelle, La., last night, where Rev. E. G. Cargill is pastor. I am booked to assist Rev. J. J. Kelly in a meeting at Trout, La., beginning on October 2."

Rev. L. M. Lipscomb, of Sardis, Miss., who is one of the ablest preachers in the North Mississippi Conference, has lately assisted Rev. T. M. Brownlee in an interesting and helpful meeting at Indianola, Miss. Brother Lipscomb has been much in demand for evangelistic work during the past few months.

Rev. J. D. Wroten, our worthy young pastor at Tunica, Miss., sounds an optimistic note concerning the outlook in his charge. He says: "All things are moving on well with us here, and we feel that a good winding up of the year's work is in sight." We acknowledge our indebtedness to Brother Wroten for looking after the interests of the Advocate in his field.

Rev. T. L. Oakes, of Poplar Creek, Miss., says: "In the recent report of my meetings appearing in the Advocate mention was not made of the valuable assistance given me by Rev. J. G. Johnson, of the Black Hawk charge. This oversight, of course, was wholly unintentional. Brother Johnson made a fine impression upon the people in the community where he aided me."

In a communication bearing date of Sept. 29, Rev. R. F. Harrell, of Centerville, Miss., says: "I am glad to state that after a spell of fever lasting three weeks, I am able to be up and about again. I hope to be in a condition to fill my pulpit next Sunday morning." We are pleased to know that Brother Harrell is convalescent, and we trust that he will soon fully regain his former strength and vigor.

In a business letter to our office, which brought us several subscriptions, Rev. W. W. Graves, of Homewood, Miss., added the following note: "The work is moving along reasonably well in this charge. We have had some very gracious revivals in which a number of souls were saved in the old-time way. Our meeting at Lake will begin on October 15 and continue for ten days. We will have with us Rev. L. J. Miller, of Nashville, Tenn."

Rev. J. W. Chisholm, of Jackson, Miss., who had the honor to be the first student enrolled at our new Atlanta School of Theology, wrote us on Sept. 26 as follows: "Everything is encouraging at our new theological seminary. The building is comfortable, and the faculty is quite unique in its combination of intellect, Christian experience, and brotherly interest in the student body. Forty-one have registered up to date and more than 20 others are expected."

In a recent issue The Grenada (Miss.) Sentinel, in a somewhat extended reference to the work of Grenada College, among other things, said: "The enrollment the first day was the largest in the history of the college—an institution which has grown in the confidence of the public, a growth thoroughly justified by the improvement and general work of the college in every department. * * * Grenada and the general public may feel absolutely assured that they are getting at Grenada College the benefit of talent that is hardly excelled in any school for women in the South. Mr. Countiss will move his family into the Ray residence in a few days and some of the faculty will take up quarters in the Kimbrough residence, both properties having been recently purchased by the college in order to accommodate the boarders in the college proper."

From a recent issue of the Texas Christian Advocate, we take the following: "Presiding elders, pastors and other workers who heard Miss Kilpatrick at Epworth invited her to visit their districts, charges, or Sunday schools for special institute work. Before leaving the State, Miss Kilpatrick referred all such requests to the editor of the Sunday School Department. She will probably be in Texas either in October or December. Miss Kilpatrick is one of the Field Secretaries of the North Mississippi Conference and a worker of nation-wide reputation. She is conversant with all phases of Sunday school work, but her specialty is the organized class."

Many schools need her and would do well to secure her services."

Rev. M. H. Honeycutt filled the pulpit at Girard, La., for Rev. A. D. George, on Sunday, Oct. 4.

Rev. V. D. Skipper will assist Rev. H. W. Ledbetter of West Monroe, La., in a meeting beginning Sunday, Oct. 11.

Rev. Paul M. Brown, of Shreveport, recently held a very successful revival for Rev. A. D. George, at Charleville, La.

Rev. H. W. Lee, the popular pastor of Lake Providence, is being assisted in a protracted meeting this week by Rev. A. Inman Townsley of Rayville, La.

Mr. Frank S. Williams, a son of Rev. W. M. Williams, of Jackson, Miss., who has been teaching in Canton, China, for the past three years, is now connected with the faculty of Soochow University.

Rev. A. A. Bernard, of Eunice, La., has our thanks for a club of 8 subscriptions from his developing charge. Of his work he says: "I am having a good year and hope to make a creditable report at Conference."

Remember that Saturday, October 17, is "Work Day" for our Louisiana and Mississippi Orphanages. Let every Methodist in the two States give his earnings for that day to one or the other of these noble institutions.

The new Methodist Episcopal Church, South, at Talisheek, La., will be dedicated on the first Sunday in November. The pastor of that congregation is Rev. T. V. Peters, who is one of the growing young ministers of the Louisiana Conference.

Dear brother pastor, have you taken advantage of the liberal proposition of our Publishing House and ordered those Disciplines—1914 Edition? You could do nothing better for your people. Our Book of Discipline ought to be in every home in the Church.

The many friends of Dr. A. F. Smith in Mississippi, where he filled the Galloway Memorial Church of Jackson for four years with great acceptability, will be delighted to know that he has re-entered the traveling connection and has been stationed at St. Paul's Church in St. Louis.

We are indebted to Brother J. A. Clardy, one of Mahen's (Miss.) substantial merchants, for a club of 10 subscribers from his community. We scarcely need to say that we appreciate the good work of this worthy layman in behalf of the Advocate. We shall not soon forget his kindness.

Rev. R. A. Bozeman writes as follows from Atlanta: "I am in the School of Theology here and find everything that could be asked for in the way of a great institution. We had two great sermons last Sunday (Sept. 27): one by Bishop Hoss, and the other by Bishop Denny."

We are indebted to the following friends, to whom acknowledgement has not been made elsewhere, for two or more subscriptions sent in within the past few days: Rev. H. E. Carter, Leakesville, Miss., 3; Rev. J. W. Thompson, Meadville, Miss., 5; Rev. T. D. Lipscomb, Donaldsonville, La., 2; Rev. W. W. Hopper, Sattartla, Miss., 5.

The meeting at the First Methodist Church at Beaumont, Texas, in which the pastor, Rev. W. J. Johnson, was assisted by Dr. H. G. Henderson of Lexington, Miss., closed last Monday evening. The Beaumont Enterprise of October 5 stated that Dr. Henderson had won a host of friends in that city by his strong preaching and genial and charming personality. At the service last Sunday morning about 50 persons were received into the Church.

The Rayville Sunday school held its annual rally and promotion day on Sunday, October 4, with great success. The church was decorated with autumn fruits and flowers. The school was re-graded and 26 pupils were promoted, some infants were baptized, and a large catechism class was organized. Pastor Townsley believes in using our Church catechism. This school raised $100 on Rally Day for a native Chinese pastor.

Mr. James Hand, of Purvis, Miss., sends us the money for his own and another subscription and adds $3.50 to send the Advocate to persons who are financially unable to take it. And he, furthermore, says: "Every Methodist home should have it; it is the best paper that I know of." We are grateful to Brother Hand for his generous contribution to our "Helping Fund." He is given to using his money in a way to make it a blessing to others. May the Heavenly Father prosper and reward him for his many worthy and charitable deeds!

Through the courtesy of the author, Rev. J. A. Parker, D.D., of Lafayette, La., we have received a copy of a song, entitled "Starry Crown (The Pilgrim's Hope)" which has been issued in an attractive form, with the music, composed by Milton Parker, accompanying it. The words of this stirring hymn were printed in the Advocate several months ago. The sentiment which it voices is wholesome and inspiring and the music fits it most admirably. The price of a single copy is 20 cents; per dozen $2. All orders should be sent to Dr. Parker.

Rev. C. M. Chapman, our pastor at Rolling Fork, Miss., writes as follows: "Rev. and Mrs. E. L. Alford, of the Anguilla charge, are in sorrow over the death of a babe born to live but a few hours in their home. The mother has been critically ill, but has improved. Let the Church remember these stricken servants of God in their grief." It will be remembered that Brother and Sister Alford lost their twin babes last year. We deeply sympathize with them in their sorrow, and pray that the Heavenly Father may graciously bless and comfort them, as only he can do.

Under date of October 4, Rev. W. W. Drake, of Baton Rouge, La., writes: "We close here tonight one of the greatest meetings that I have ever been in. Sixty persons came forward this evening on a definite proposition to surrender to Christ, or to renew the Christian life. Our Church will receive 60 or 70 members by profession of faith and a number by certificate, and probably 25 will join other Churches. Evangelists Price and Smith were the leaders in the services and they did fine work. I will send you later a fuller statement concerning this remarkable revival."

We were pleased to receive a few days since the following message from Rev. L. A. McKeown, of Byhalia, Miss., which was written on Sept. 30: "My wife was operated on in Memphis on the 26th of September, as I wrote you that she would be, and the physician states that she is doing exceptionally well, for which we are thankful." Brother and Sister McKeown's many friends throughout North Mississippi will be happy to hear this good news. We sincerely hope that this faithful Christian worker will have a speedy and complete recovery and soon be at home and busy in the Master's service again.

Rev. J. A. Bowen, of Birmingham, Ala., writing to the Alabama Christian Advocate from Magnolia, Miss., on Sept. 23, said: "I am just from a great meeting at Philadelphia, Miss. There were more than 50 accessions to our Church, 26 to the Presbyterian Church (U. S. A.), and some to the Baptist Church. On account of the loss of our church by fire last winter, the meeting was held in the Presbyterian Church. Rev. W. J. Ferguson is our pastor there. I am here at Magnolia in a meeting that promises success. * * * Philadelphia and Magnolia are two nice, strong towns, both county sites, one of Neshoba and the other of Pike County."

Rev. John A. Randolph, of the United States Army, writes as follows from El Paso, Texas: "After a most delightful visit to Mississippi, I am now back with my regiment at this place. Mrs. Randolph and Mrs. McDonald returned with me. We are indulging the fond hope that conditions across the border will permit us to return to our station at San Francisco before Christmas. I was in Nashville while on my leave of absence and was delighted to see our good friend, Dr. J. W. Boswell, looking better than I ever saw him. He seems truly to be renewing his youth. I am sorry that I shall not be able to meet the brethren at Starkville in December."

We are indebted to Rev. Paul M. Brown, of Shreveport, La., for the following note: "I had the pleasure of worshipping with the First Church congregation of this city last Sunday (Sept. 27). Dr. G. S. Sexton was rallying his flock for the fall campaign. He has won his way into the hearts of all classes in Shreveport. His mixing qualities are really marvelous. He stresses the evangelistic note in all his work and preaching. On Sunday evening Judge Kiltrell, of Houston, Texas, was the speaker and he gave us a splendid address dealing with the evidences of Christianity from a legal standpoint. This is the first of a series of addresses by prominent laymen which the pastor has planned."

A Shreveport correspondent says: "The enrollment at both of our colleges—Centenary and Mansfield—is increasing and very satisfactory work is being done. If only we can get our people to swing into line and raise money to further equip and endow these institutions, there are bright days ahead for them and for Louisiana Methodism." Surely the urgent appeal that is being made in behalf of these deserving schools will not fall upon deaf ears. We believe that our pastors and people are going to rally to their support and strengthen their resources without further delay. Let our leaders go forward and let the 35,000 Methodists of Louisiana give them their united co-operation. If all will help, we shall soon achieve substantial results.

Rev. C. A. Battle, the pastor of the Felicity Street Church of New Orleans, having been suddenly called out of the city, requested Dr. J. T. Sawyer to preach for him at 11 a. m. last Sunday, that being American "Peace Sunday" at the suggestion of President Wilson. Dr. Sawyer reports the presence of a very large congregation who paid close attention to his discourse from John xiii, 34. The excellent choir rendered appropriate music, and all present joined in prayer to God for the stoppage of the dreadful European war and the coming of a lasting peace. In the afternoon Dr. Sawyer crossed the river and preached at 3:30 p. m. in the Presbyterian Church at Westwego.

Rev. Olin Ray, of Jonestown, Miss., brings us under obligations to him for several subscriptions from his field of work, and adds the following statement: "Rev. H. S. Spragins, our efficient presiding elder, was with us on Saturday and Sunday, Sept. 26 and 27, and delivered four excellent sermons, which were an inspiration to all who heard them. He was in fine spirits and left our people greatly encouraged in the work of the Church. We are closing our first year, which has been a very pleasant one, on this charge. As a result of the successful meetings, in which we were assisted by Rev. W. S. Lagrone, Rev. J. D. Wroten, and Rev. J. A. Goad, the spiritual state of the charge has been much improved, and we have had an increase of 20 in church membership."

We have on our table an interesting pamphlet giving "Facts About the Public Schools of New Orleans in Relation to Vocation," which was prepared by David Spence Hill, Ph.D., who is the Director of the Department of Research of the Public Schools of this city. Dr. Hill has been engaged for several months in making this vocational survey, and this report, which is Number One, and which is to be followed by several other supplementary to it, contains much suggestive information. The principal object of Dr. Hill's investigation is to open the way for the establishment of the Isaac Delgado Central Trades School upon the plan that will make it most serviceable to the youth of the Crescent City. Such a preliminary study of the field and how best to organize the proposed institution to meet its needs, is undoubtedly an eminently wise course of procedure.

Miss Rona Gay, whose post-office is Meridian, Miss., in renewing her subscription, says: "I cannot afford to do without my church paper. I think that it grows better each year. I wish our ministers would emphasize its worth and advocate its claims more than they do." We heartily appreciate this kindly message. We receive many like it and also some very dissimilar to it. Few have the bitter and the sweet more generally mixed than the editor of a church organ. Often the very thing that one correspondent commends brings the stinging fire of another. The only sensible course for the occupant of a tripod is to move serenely on doing his duty, as he sees it, come what may. But we do wish that our pastors would heed Miss Gay's exhortation to talk up the Advocate more. If all would do as well as some, the Conference organ would have a much larger circulation.

AT THE OPENING OF WHITWORTH COLLEGE.

Whitworth College is an institution of which the Methodists in Mississippi should be proud, for which they should be grateful, and which they should support with a whole heart. The situation is healthful and beautiful, the buildings comfortable and attractive, the management wise and careful. The women who have graduated from Whitworth are among the noblest and worthiest of the land, and those who now constitute its student body cannot be surpassed by any like number in any institution. If parents wish their daughters to have the best care as to health, culture, manners, morals, and religion, they cannot do better than to send them to Whitworth. The rates are as reasonable as can be expected for the advantages given.

Dr. Cooper, who has for thirty-five years been a trusted and honored member of our Conference, and for more than a decade has been president of Whitworth, has always and everywhere justified the confidence that the Church has reposed in him. His culture and character not only qualify him for presiding over this institution, but make him competent to select the best helpers, of which he has an excellent corps.

The Mary Jane Lampton Auditorium would be a credit to any college. The new dormitory, not yet named, now nearing completion, is a beautiful and substantial structure. The older dormitories have been renovated throughout and are in excellent condition. Notwithstanding the stringency of the times, the attendance is better than it was last year. Its buildings should be crowded and others added to meet the growing needs.

As I stood within its lovely grounds and looked upon its worthy buildings and thought of its inspiring history and its splendid management, my heart was thrilled, and I wished myself rich enough to endow it so as to make it unnecessary to charge tuition and to put it upon an equal footing with our State institutions.

May the Methodists of Mississippi whom God has blessed with this world's goods see this need and meet it!

THICK, GLOSSY HAIR
FREE FROM DANDRUFF

Girls! Try it! Hair gets soft, fluffy and beautiful—Get a 25 cent bottle
of Danderine.

If you care for heavy hair that glis-
tens with beauty and is radiant with life; has an incomparable softness and is fluffy and lustrous, try Danderine.
Just one application doubles the beauty of your hair, besides it immediately dissolves every particle of dandruff. You can not have nice heavy, healthy hair if you have dandruff. This destructive scurf robs
the hair of its lustre, its strength and its very life, and if not overcome it produces a feverishness and itching of
the scalp; the hair roots famish, loosen and die; then the hair falls out fast. Surely get a 25-cent bottle of Knowlton's Danderine from any drug store and just try it.

WILLIAM THOMAS ROBERTSON
died on June 2, 1914. Brother Robertson was born in Georgia on Sept. 10, 1836. On October 10, 1860 he was married to Miss J. Moore who preceded him to the heavenly home just 12 years to the day. He united with the Methodist Church when young, and until sickness prevented, was active in the performance of his church duties. He loved his Church and pastor and was loyal in their support, acting as steward for forty years.
The writer was his pastor for four years. He was well known in his County, and dearly loved by many people whom he had served both as a public and private citizen. His good name is the richest legacy he could have left to his children whom he tenderly loved. One afternoon, after prayer in the home with his sainted daughter and godly daughter-in-law, on being asked about his soul, he replied, "All is well with my soul; but I am anxious about my boys." As he spoke he looked a meaning into the pastor's heart, and I believe, his desire will find an answer through faith's prayer in a mighty Savior's love and saving power. May God save and comfort all the bereaved.

A. M. BROADFOOT.

We were grieved to receive the message from our dear friend, Mr.
R. B. Neal, of Starkville, Miss., stating that his wife, MRS. R. B. NEAL, had passed away to the home beyond the skies. The writer was at her bedside for a little while, a few weeks ago and saw then, that it was only a short time before she would be relieved of her sufferings, close her eyes in peace and enter the haven of rest. Having known her since my childhood, my close association with the family has been such, that I can say, she was one of the truest and best women I have ever known. She was unpretentious, unassuming and the vanities of life never affected her and she truly fulfilled an exalted mission in this world. While her precious children have sustained a great loss, grief will fall heaviest upon the dear father and husband.
So, my dear friends, when you miss a mother's wise counsel, and sigh for the touch of a vanished hand, and for the voice that is still, turn your thoughts and your hearts to Jesus, for he alone can give you strength in this sad hour. A devoted friend,

J. H. BELL.

Brother THOS. L. TUNNELL, an honored member of the M. E. Church, South, on the Columbus circuit, fell on sleep at his home near Steens, Miss., on August 15, 1914. He was born in Lowndes County on Nov. 13, 1836.
He professed religion in the Confederate Army under the ministry of Rev. J. B. Stone in 1863, and joined the Baptist Church with his wife at the close of the war. Brother Tunnell was made superintendent of our Methodist Sunday school which office he held until his death. In 1888 he joined the Methodist Church and was always true and loyal. As husband, father, grandfather, neighbor, friend, citizen, church-member and Sunday school superintendent, he was true and faithful—a man after God's own heart. And when the end came he was ready to go. He felt no fear.
He left to his mourning loved ones the rich legacy of a noble life, and the testimony of a triumphant death.
I, as his pastor, share the sorrow of his loved ones in his going away.
And, thank God, I share with them the joyful hope of meeting him again in the Father's mansion house above.

R. E. EVANS.

IN MEMORY OF MR. F. H. HOLDEN

Resolutions passed by the M. E.
Sunday school, at Wilson, La., September 23, 1914.)

Whereas, "The pendulum of unfolding destiny has described another arc," and the implacable decree of fate has terminated the useful career of our beloved Superintendent—Mr.
F. H. Holden, be it resolved,

That in his untimely death, the Sunday school has not only lost its superintendent, but a friend and father, whose devotion and loyalty to the upbuilding of Christ's cause was an example worthy of imitation. As a man, he was upright, just, sincere, true to his convictions, and brave in the advocacy of what he considered to be right. As a Christian, he served God humbly, with no display of hollow show, but with a contrition inspired by "a heavenly spirit of all grace, vouchsafed to man, through the sacrifice of the son of God."

Words are inadequate to express the sadness of the officers and teachers as they walked into the Sabbath school on Sunday morning, and saw the vacant chair which had for many years been filled by our faithful Superintendent. His work is finished and he has gone to his reward. We miss him—yes—but weep not, loved ones, he will still be your guardian angel, to watch over your pathway, and when you, too, cross over the "river of death," you will all clasp hands on the golden shore of eternity.

He serves now, in God's army of the redeemed, from which there is no retirement. And, after all, such lives live on here. Love and memory embalm them, and their gracious influence still abides as a benediction and help toward the world's uplifting. The subject of our present sorrowful and respectful consideration, was born in East Baton Rouge Parish, on the 15th day of September, in the year 1863. It is a pleasure to pay a just tribute of praise to the splendid qualities that adorned the character of this worthy man. First, it could be truthfully said of him, that he was a Christian. His life was useful, while it was quiet and unob-trusive. While he did not busy himself in searching out new friends, he was always ready to recognize the obligations the relation of friendship imposes, and was glad to assume them, when the object was worthy.
On the 19th day of September, 1914, while surrounded by the watchful care of a devoted wife and daughter, he "launched his bark upon the unknown sea dividing the life here and hereafter and sailed away." To him, it was neither an uncertain nor an unexpected voyage, for his faith had crossed that unknown space in advance, and was safely anchored in the "Haven of Rest."

"I need not be missed, if another succeed me,
To reap down thine fields which in spring I have sown,
He who plowed and who sowed is not missed by the reaper.
He is only remembered by what he has done.

Needs there be praise of the love-written record,
The name and the epitaph graved on the stone?

The things we have lived for, let them
be our story,
We, ourselves, but remembered by what we have done."

Resolved, That we extend to the family of the deceased our heartfelt sympathy in this sad hour, and pray that the Holy Comforter may pour the balm of consolation into their wounded hearts and assuage all grief.

Resolved, That this community has lost a useful and honored citizen; the Church and Sunday school a staunch and loyal supporter; his wife and daughter, a loving husband and a kind indulgent father.

It is hard to understand the inexorable laws of nature, and we can only bow our hearts in humble submissiveness, and say, as said the philosopher of old, "What is, is best!"

Resolved, That this tribute of affection be published in The Christian Advocate, and a copy sent to the family of the deceased.

Signed: Miss Mattie Hoover, Chairman; Mrs. Nannie Terry, Mrs. W. O.
Blair, Mrs. J. L. Singletary, Mrs.
W. D. Singletary, Mrs. J. E. Walter,
Miss Addie Draper, Mrs. W. L. Carruth, Mrs. Sam Cooper, Committee.

COME SAGE TEA IN LIFELESS, GRAY HAIR

Look young! Common garden Sage and Sulphur darkens so naturally nobody can tell.

Grandmother kept her hair beautifully darkened, glossy and abundant with a brew of Sage Tea and Sulphur.
Whenever her hair fell out or took on that dull, faded or streaked appearance, this simple mixture was applied with wonderful effect. By asking at any drug-store for "Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Hair Remedy," you will get a large bottle of this old-time recipe, ready to use, for about 50 cents. This simple mixture can be depended upon to restore natural color and beauty to the hair and is splendid for dandruff, dry, itchy scalp and falling hair.

A well-known downtown druggist says everybody uses Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur, because it darkens so naturally and evenly that nobody can tell it has been applied—it's so easy to use, too. You simply dampen a comb or soft brush and draw it through your hair, taking one strand at a time. By morning the gray hair disappears; after another application or two, it is restored to its natural color and looks glossy, soft and abundant.

Tidings From the Field

Moscow Charge, Miss. Conf.

The Moscow charge is making some advance. The Shiloh Church is being completed and is to be dedicated by our presiding elder, Rev. J. T. Leggett, on the first Sunday in November. A new church building at, or near, Rodol is being undertaken and promises to be an accomplished fact in the near future. We need special prayer, and will be glad to know of any who will share with us our great burden. The meetings thus far held have all been profitable. We are now holding special revival services with encouraging prospects at Hopewell. The Lord of Hosts is with us; the God of Jacob, is our refuge.—C. H. Ellis.

Sharon, Miss.

We have had some good meetings in the Sharon charge this year. We have just closed a meeting at Thornton's Chapel, the visible results of which were 10 additions to the Church on profession of faith, some family altars erected and the entire membership revived spiritually. We were assisted by Rev. J. B. King, our pastor at Vaughn, a young man thoroughly consecrated to God, and whose preaching was accompanied by the power of the Holy Spirit. We have an excellent Woman's Home Mission Society at Sharon, the membership of which has been nearly doubled during the year, and from which the parsonage has received some substantial furnishings, and the pastor and his family many tokens of appreciation. Our third quarterly conference for this year has been held. Our presiding elder, Brother Hardin, was with us and gave us an excellent sermon. He looks after all the interests of the Church. We all love Brother Hardin, and of course we expect him to be returned to us next year.—R. A. Sibley, Jr.

Derby Circuit, Miss.

After an absence of nine weeks, six of which were spent in the Bogalusa Hospital, I have returned to the pleasant duties of my charge. God only knows the suffering I endured while at the hospital. You will remember I was thrown from a buggy and that my leg was broken. I wish to thank our many friends who contributed to our needs during those dark days. We received many kind letters and some money from people whom we had never known. I want to specially mention our dear presiding elder, Brother Huntley, who so graciously ministered to me with his sympathy and means. I am glad to say that I found my circuit moving on well under the supervision of Brother R. A. Breland. This has been a good year with us. Brother H. P. Lewis, Jr., assisted me in two meetings and my brother, J. H. Grice, helped me in a meeting at Derby. The churches were greatly revived and some new members added (some praying members), and we established family altars in several homes. My people have been faithful to me and we have had a good living all the year. God be praised forever!—Paul H. Grice, P. C.

Waynesboro, Miss.

As far as I am able to judge, our work is in a fairly good condition. We have just closed the last of the revival meetings on this charge and our pastor thinks there is an upward spiritual trend among the people. Our pastor has also done considerable repair work in and around the parsonage this year. The people at Pleasant Grove Church have at last ceiled the church, and expect to paint it before Conference. This is quite an old church, having been erected in 1886. The good people at that place will have a cozy little house of worship when the repairs are completed. In the revival meeting just closed at Pleasant Grove, Rev. W. W. Murray, of Eucutta, assisted our pastor with good results. Brother Westbrook has been doing some good earnest work this year both from a spiritual and a financial standpoint, and I, for one, am well pleased with his labors among us. His sermon on last Sunday at old Big Rock Church was clear, forceful and orthodox. We need more such sermons. Brother Westbrook has been with us for three years, and I feel safe in saying that our work is in a far better condition than it was when he came to us. We hope to see him go to the Annual Conference in December with a bright face and good collections. The pastors friend, AUBREY T. RICHEY.

Queensborough, Shreveport.

At our last Conference Queensborough was made a station, with Cedar Grove, the factory division of the City of Shreveport, as an afternoon appointment. There was no organization at the latter place. We organized a church there in March with 30 members and have since received 5. The church which was spoken of in a former letter is finished, and will probably be dedicated on the second Sunday in October by Dr. G. S. Sexton. The Church is well seated. We have nice opera chairs as a donation from the First Church. The presiding elder expects to have a man for his full time at this point next year. At Queensborough we have seated the church with splendid new pews and the Woman's Missionary Society has put a nice carpet on the floor. The pastor put in three large ceiling fans, which has completed the furnishings of this Church. Our Sunday school is doing splendidly under Brother McKennon as superintendent. We have in it a large organized Bible class (mixed) that is doing excellent work. They meet each Monday night at different homes for study and other work. The president of the class is Mr. Percy Hoffpauir, an able layman. The teacher of the class is Mrs. Martha Watts, who was a member of the first Sunday school organized in Shreveport. The class is rendering fine service. They have a charity hospital committee, which holds services in the State hospital twice a month, where there have been several conversions. Positions have also been secured for people when they were ready to leave the hospital. Our revival closed on last Sunday night. We were assisted by Rev. Arch C. Holder, who lives here. There were between 60 and 80 conversions. We have received 22 members so far, with others to follow. There were several who pledged to tithe henceforth. We have received this year 83 members and expect to make the number 100 by Conference. I believe the Shreveport District will have a considerable net increase this year.—F. J. McCoy.

Perseverance is a great element of success. If you only knock long enough and loud enough at the gate, you are sure to wake up somebody.—Longfellow.

GIVE "SYRUP OF FIGS" TO CONSTIPATED CHILD

Delicious "Fruit Laxative" can't harm tender little Stomach, liver and bowels.

Look at the tongue, mother! If coated, your little one's stomach, liver and bowels need cleansing at once. When peevish, cross, listless, doesn't sleep, eat or act naturally, or is feverish, stomach sour, breath bad; has sore throat, diarrhea, full of cold, give a teaspoonful of "California Syrup of Figs," and in a few hours all the foul, constipated waste, undigested food and sour bile gently moves out of its little bowels without griping, and you have a well, playful child again. Ask your druggist for a 50-cent bottle of "California Syrup of Figs," which contains full directions for babies, children of all ages and for grown-ups.

Sunday School

LOUISIANA NOTES.

By W. W. Williams.

Bro. W. A. McKennon was in Alexandria a few days ago and states that his Sunday school at Shreveport is improving rapidly now.

A number of the Sunday schools in Rapides Parish are intending to hold institutes similar to the one held by Brother Lowrey at Kentwood, as soon as a little time has elapsed after the revivals held recently in this section.

The writer attended a Sunday School Convention eighteen miles out from Winnfield in the country last Sunday, Sept. 27. This lasted two days, Saturday and Sunday. Most all the participants were young people, young school teachers and parish officers.

Brother Bogan, the pastor at Winnfield, states that he has an average attendance of about 108 through the summer, but expects a large increase now that the vacation days are over. He has a nice little church and some improvements are to be made shortly. They use the graded literature in some of the departments. Several special days have been observed with success.

It is stated that another Indian Sunday school will shortly be organized in LaSalle Parish, near Trout, La. in the lower part of Rapides Parish. All the writer's expenses are being paid by those requesting his services and the most of the work is being carried on by the younger generation which shows up well for the future.

The Epworth League of Alexandria is now getting well along with its Mission Study class. The class is not large but the attendants are regular and in earnest. They have ordered, as a first year course, "Training the Teacher," by Shaufler, Brumbaugh, Lamoreau and Lawrence. Quite a number of the books have been ordered and the class will start at once. This book was carefully selected by those intending to take the course after examining a number of others. They claim that while other books have just as much information, yet the manner in which they are gotten up makes them far too dry and prosaic for young people, and several of the members having been through the other books spoke from experience.

NORTH MISSISSIPPI NOTES.

By Rev. V. C. Curtis.

We spent Sept. 5 and 6 at Friendship on the Fulton charge. Rev. J. R. Murph is there having his first experience as a pastor, and is endeavoring to look after all the interests of the Church. The Sunday schools on this charge are not as active as they should be, but it is a field of great opportunities. Several other schools were represented, and we hope that the plans and suggestions offered will be carried out and that the Sunday school interests in that part of the field may develop as never before. Some of the things accomplished were: Getting a new superintendent, arranging for the Home Department and Cradle Roll, and receiving one person into the Church on profession of faith.

On Wednesday evening, Sept. 16, by previous arrangement with the preacher in charge and the superintendent, we were joined at Mantachie by Miss Willingham of the Durant District. Brother Clark is much interested in the Sunday school work, but by an oversight on his part, had arranged for two meetings at the same time and we were left in charge of the field. They have a wide-awake superintendent in the person of Mr. J. E. Simms. The people were exceedingly busy gathering their crops, but representatives from other churches were present and we had a Sunday school census of the town taken, the different departments were organized, and we hope a better day will dawn for the Sunday schools of that charge. I have not visited a charge this year where there were greater opportunities than here.

Sunday, Sept. 20, was spent with Rev. W. A. Bowlin on the Booneville Circuit. Brother Bowlin is enthusiastic about his Sunday school work and had arranged to have the service at Blackland near the center of the charge. The people seem to be much interested in the work and are doing good service with the Teacher-training advanced course. Their report on attendance and the work as a whole was far above the average.

The afternoon was given to Carolina, at one time one of the strongest churches in that section, but which seems to be rapidly going down. The community is thickly settled but they have no Sunday school. There were but few present and nearly half the number of those that came on the ground, did not come into the house. This condition is due to a great extent to the fact that many of the leaders have moved into town and carried their membership with them. Others are rapidly following. In many sections of our Conference this exodus from the country to the towns presents the gravest problem that the country church has to solve.

Sunday evening was spent with Brother S. A. Brown, of Booneville where the service had been well advertised. The other Churches had no services and we had a good hearing. Here I found another pastor that did not know where he was going to "drop" another year, as his people there insist that he cannot stay longer than four years. However they much regret that the time limit makes it necessary for him to go.

We spent Sunday evening, Sept. 6, with Brother J. C. Park and his choice congregation of Tupelo. His school is in charge of Mr. J. H. Ledyard, one of the most efficient and aggressive superintendents to be found in the connection. His worth has been recognized by the Church at large and he has been honored with a place on the General Sunday School Board. With such a pair as these for leaders, we expect great things of Tupelo, and in this they are not disappointing us. They gave an attentive hearing to the needs of the Sunday school field of the North Mississippi Conference as presented by the Secretary.

SARAH, MISS.

Dear Dr. Meek: Being often reminded that other preachers report their charges to the Advocate and that I never do, I shall now endeavor to clear my skirts of that charge. The Longtown charge has 363 members on its rolls and has 5 churches, 6 congregations, and 7 appointments. There are 5 active prayer meetings, 7 Sunday schools, and 55 subscribers to the Advocate. It has required only 7 weeks to go the "revival round" this year, giving one week to each place, we report but 23 conversions, all told. The last of our services was held at Beech Springs last Sunday night. Rev. H. G. Roberts did the preaching both there and at McGehee's Chapel. At each place he gave us deep spiritual sermons on which to feed. Rev. J. B. Randolph did the preaching at Sea's Chapel and helped us much on the business view of religious life, some 10 or 15 of our people obligating themselves to give a tithe of their incomes to the Lord. We know the people, and know that this means something at that place. We had several conversions and three accessions here. At Cypress Corner a good Presbyterian brother, Rev. M. E. Gabard, thundered the law into the ears of his hearers for six days and nights; plainly and without compromise, he dealt with both sin and sinners, and God graciously rewarded his labors with 16 conversions and 18 additions to our Church. Other brethren who did us good service were Revs. J. B. Connor and S. B. Smith, the latter of the North Alabama Conference. One of the peculiar things about this Longtown Charge is the way it retains the tracks of former workmen: W. V. Shearer boosted the people into church-going some 5 years ago and they still keep the churches well attended; J. A. Biffie laid a pattern in that steady ox-cart movement which questions no mud-hole, halts at no hill, nor frights at any man's automobile; and some of these people believe that he had the only safe plan of achievement. If this pastor can but do a lasting service, however humble, he will be therewith content.—A. M. Bennett, P. C.

Rheumatism

A Home Cure Given by One Who Had it

In the spring of 1893 I was attacked by Muscular and Inflammatory Rheumatism. I suffered as only those who have it know, for over three years. I tried remedy after remedy, and doctor after doctor, but such relief as I received was only temporary. Finally, I found a remedy that cured me completely, and it has never returned. I have given it to a number who were terribly afflicted and even bed-ridden with Rheumatism, and it effected a cure in every case.

I want every sufferer from any form of rheumatic trouble to try this marvelous healing power. Don't send a cent; simply mail your name and address and I will send it free to try. After you have used it and it has proven itself to be that long-looked-for means of curing your Rheumatism, you may send the price of it, one dollar, but, understand, I do not want your money unless you are perfectly satisfied to send it. Isn't that fair? Why suffer any longer when positive relief is thus offered you free? Don't delay. Write to-day.

REV. A. B. MOWERS ADVOCATES NERVE REMEDY.

Nervous indigestion is one of the commonest of the many forms of nervous trouble. It is very hard to treat usually, but those who have used Dr. Miles' Nervine all report that it was not long before their trouble vanished entirely.

Every ailment must have a cause and the cause is what should be removed. When the cause lies in the nervous system Dr. Miles' Nervine cannot be too strongly advocated. It is backed by thirty years of successful use.

The Rev. A. B. Mowers, of York, Pa., is an ardent advocate of this remedy since it completely relieved him. He made the following statement for publication:—

"Nearly 10 years ago I was troubled with nervous indigestion in its worst form. I had sick headaches nearly every day with a dizzy, dull feeling. I was extremely nervous, confused and suffered much with constipation. I was informed of Dr. Miles' Nervine and Liver Pills and determined to give them a trial. I used them as directed and received much relief. I continued the Nervine until I had used several bottles. I now enjoy good health, relish my meals and can eat any kind of food without fear. I take pleasure in recommending Dr. Miles' Remedies to the public."

Dr. Miles' Nervine or Liver Pills can be purchased at any drug store and the purchase price will be cheerfully refunded by the druggist if after using the remedies you are not satisfied with the results obtained.

IF BACK HURTS USE SALTS FOR KIDNEYS

Eat less meat if Kidneys feel like lead or Bladder bothers you—Meat forms uric acid.

Most folks forget that the kidneys, like the bowels, get sluggish and clogged and need a flushing occasionally, else we have backache and dull misery in the kidney region, severe headaches, rheumatic twinges, torpid liver, acid stomach, sleeplessness and all sorts of bladder disorders.

You simply must keep your kidneys active and clean, and the moment you feel an ache or pain in the kidney region, get about four ounces of Jad Salts from any good drug store here, take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast for a few days and your kidneys will then act fine. This famous salts is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia, and is harmless to flush clogged kidneys and stimulate them to normal activity. It also neutralizes the acids so they no longer irritate, thus ending bladder disorders.

Jad Salts is harmless; inexpensive; makes a delightful effervescent lithia-water drink which everybody should take now and then to keep their kidneys clean, thus avoiding serious complications.

A well-known local druggist says he sells lots of Jad Salts to folks who believe in overcoming kidney trouble while it is only trouble.

JOHN R. MOTT'S PLANS FOR A WORLD TOUR ABANDONED.

John R. Mott, the Young Men's Christian Association leader and head of the Continuation Committee of World Foreign Missions, announces that plans made by him for a world tour have been abandoned. It is also announced that the World's Christian Student Federation, with headquarters at Geneva, and part of the Y. M. C. A. work, is thoroughly demoralized by the war. The sad outcome for the Federation is that its three General Secretaries are called into war to fight each other. Secretary Fefmaud, the Senior Secretary, has been called to command a Swiss regiment, the Swiss republic's forces being mobilized; Secretary Sauttern has entered the French army, and Secretary Childress, the German—Nashville Christian Advocate.

GIRLS' CONFERENCE.

During the summer two girls' conferences have been held, one at Vaiden for the Durant and Winona Districts, and the other at Coffeeville for the Holly Springs District. A three days' session was held for each conference. On Saturday the girls arrived and on Saturday afternoon addresses of welcome were given.

On Sunday the conference sermon was preached; at Vaiden, Rev. E. Nash Broyles, of Durant, and at Coffeeville Rev. J. R. Countiss of Grenada College, delivered impressive and helpful sermons to the young people. In Vaiden, on Sunday afternoon, Mrs. J. W. Conger gave a talk on "The Girl with a Vision," on Sunday night Miss Lillie Hartwell gave a talk on the "Need of Young People in the Master's Vineyard" and Monday was "Girls' Day." Papers were read by the girls on subjects interesting to themselves. It was indeed an inspiration to see the girls for the first time read these helpful papers, bringing out, in every instance, what it means to be prepared for life in the broadest sense.

On Monday night the conference closed, after a testimony service, all the young people making a large circle and singing "Blest be the Tie That Binds."

Whatever is done for the young people in training them for better work, the fact of the responsibility of such meetings being put on them will mean much to them. Special mention should be made of the young people of both towns, for their interest and help made the conference possible.

MISS WILLIA FRANCIS PROMOTED.

Among the deaconesses consecrated at the last session of the Woman's Missionary Council, perhaps the happiest was Miss Francis. She had been called to deaconess work during the Council meeting at Washington in 1912. God used one of the deaconesses to let her see the need. The Baltimore Conference provided a scholarship, and at last she was ready to come forth prepared for the work, full of joy in being ready for service. The Board appointed her to Clifton, S. C., and all of her plans were made with a view to helping the cotton mill people at this beautiful little city. On August 29, after a protracted illness from typhoid fever, she died at Versailles, Ky., while she was visiting her sister, Miss R. J. Bamber. They took her to Branchville, Southampton County, for burial.

During the Deaconess Conference and the Missionary Conference at Junaluska fervent prayers for her recovery were offered, but God had need of her elsewhere, and so her work was finished here. Who can take her place at Clifton?

A LETTER TO MISSION STUDY ORGANIZERS IN LOUISIANA.

My Dear Co-Workers:

As we are to begin our Mission Study in October I would suggest a tentative program for a missionary rally to open our campaign, such as the one following:

Goal of Missionary Activity—Peace and Good-will Among Men.

Program: Hymn 654 or 349; Devotional—Isaiah 6:1-8; Mission Study: Value and Importance; Symposium—Review of Mission Study Books (September Voice); Hymn 402 or 343; Address: "Missionary Women and the Social Question," "Christ in Every Life," "Christ for all Life." Arrange it for a Sunday night so as to reach the greater number of the women of your church.

We urge the organization of a Mission Study Class in every auxiliary; and during the year the study of at least two books. While all the books are interesting, and will be helpful, we suggest "The Child in the Midst," "Missionary Women and the Social Question," "In Red Man's Land" and "In Black and White."

Use many of the striking sentences of these books as mottoes on post cards to announce meetings, put them also in conspicuous places in your meeting room, and Sunday school, and change them at each meeting. Use such sentences as, "The Home is the Center of a Nation's Life," "Child Welfare is the Foundation of World Welfare," "Play is an Irresistible Method of Self Expression," and statistics on pages 72 and 165. Many of the pictures of advertisements can be used effectively in making charts.

Through Mission Study and Bible Study we can arouse our churches and make them evangelists for establishing and perfecting the kingdom of God on earth.

We have the Money, People, Organization, every thing except LOVE. Pray that God may work through you.

With cordial good wishes,

Yours sincerely,
MRS. H. R. STEELE,
Educational Secy.
MRS. A. F. GODAT,

CENTRAL INSTITUTE, RIO.

Miss Andrew writes: We had such an interesting service on last Sunday afternoon for the deaf mutes; three were baptized and taken into the Church. The director of their department, Dr. Silvado, has studied in both the United States and Europe. They have night classes here and services on Sunday afternoons."

OUTGOING MISSIONARIES.

Many changes had to be made in the dates of departure for outgoing missionaries. They were scheduled to sail on English and Japanese vessels that were taken for war purposes. The greatest delay has been in those going to Brazil; for the only steamship line between New York and Rio is English, and the vessels have been harassed by German ships. Three of our missionaries—Misses Owings, Buie, and Edwards—who came from Korea via Europe and were there when the war broke out, reached home without serious inconvenience. Misses Rankin and Bomar, from Huchow; Miss Lester, from Soochow; Miss Holman, a music teacher for the Laura Haygood School; and Miss Elizabeth Love, sister of Dr. Harriet Love, left for China on the Siberia, September 7.

SUGGESTIONS ABOUT MISSION STUDY.

Send a mission study book to a friend. Missionary literature is a means of propaganda.

When you have finished "The Child in the Midst" separate into chapters, bind in a pretty color, stitch with silk, ornament the cover with a picture, and send it to a "shut-in."

Send ten cents to the Home Base Secretary for a package of leaflets that will be helpful in the study of "The Child in the Midst."

SOMETHING NEW.

At least it is to me. There lies on my desk a program for a Sunday School Revival at Kentwood, where Brother P. O. Lowrey is pastor. This "revival" began on Sunday, Sept. 27, and ran through the week closing on Sunday, Oct. 4. Services were held each night at 7:30 o'clock in the interest of the several departments of the Sunday school, closing with a Rally Day service on Oct. 4, with installation of the officers and teachers, and a consecration service led by Mr. Van Carter, all under the supervision of the pastor. This is something well worth the study of our Sunday school force. I most heartily commend the plan to our Mississippi Conference pastors. B. F. LEWIS, Crystal Springs, Miss.

RECIPE FOR GRAY HAIR.

To half pint of water add 1 oz. Bay Rum, a small box of Barbo Compound, and 1-4 oz. of glycerine. Apply to the hair twice a week until it becomes the desired shade. Any druggist can put this up or you can mix it at home at very little cost. Full directions for making and use come in each box of Barbo Compound. It will gradually darken streaked, faded gray hair, and removes dandruff. It is excellent for falling hair and will make harsh hair soft and glossy. It will not color the scalp, is not sticky or greasy, and does not rub off.

MEETING OF CONFERENCE MISSIONARY SECRETARIES.

An important meeting of Conference missionary secretaries was held at Junaluska, N. C., on Aug. 29, 1914, at which representatives from a goodly number of Conferences were present, together with our General Secretaries, Doctors W. W. Pinson, E. H. Rawlings, J. M. Moore, and C. F. Reid, who presided over the meeting. The missionary secretaries who were not present have been furnished with a pretty full report of this Conference, and as some of the matters discussed are of considerable interest to pastors and presiding elders and members of our Conference Board of Missions, I take the liberty of publishing the most important items included in the report sent me by Dr. Pinson. It is stated that the whole meeting was pervaded with a contagious earnestness and determination that grew as the hours went by. There seemed to be present a spirit of hopefulness, a sense of the greatness of the hour, and the dawning of a yet greater day.

Mid-Year Meeting.

It was agreed that the mid-year meeting of each Conference board should be held as early after the session of the Annual Conference as possible, and before the presiding elders begin to hold their institutes. It should be held in connection with, and the day preceding the meeting of the presiding elders with the Bishop, as provided in the new Discipline. Institutes for the several districts should be then planned, and programs outlined, so that the work may be definite and effective all the way down to the pastoral charge and the local church.

District Institutes.

Institutes should be held in the several districts as early as possible after the mid-year meeting. All the leaders of the district, including the pastors, charge and church leaders, district leader, Sunday school superintendents, presidents of Epworth Leagues, and presidents of women's missionary societies, should be present. Plans should here be laid for charge rallies, missions in the Sunday school, study classes, the distribution of literature, the practical working of "A Financial Method for Methodists," early collections, and such other work as will enable the district to carry out proportionately the plan made by the Annual Conference.

On the subject of "Intensive Cultivation," it was agreed that our methods have been too much in patches and on the surface. The kind of cultivation now demanded is that which will go to the heart of the Church and enlist all of its forces. Better have one district in a Conference thoroughly organized and enlisted than a whole Conference merely touched on the surface, or one charge brought up to a high standard than many merely slightly stirred. The example of a thorough plan and real success is of great value.

The Every-Member Canvass.

The real problem is that of reaching the rank and file. Nothing will do this effectively except the "Every-Member Canvass," which is already proving its efficiency in many places. In the discussion of this topic it was decided that each Annual Conference should select some certain month early in the Conference year, and after thorough preparation, make the "every-member canvass" during some stated week. The simultaneous canvass has the advantage of concentration and of the creation of a common, widespread interest in that one thing. It should be taken early, apart from the budget for local support. The canvass for local expenses should either precede the every-member canvass or follow later. It is deemed inexpedient to combine the two.

As to a financial aim, the first and most important is full collections, not because it is a high aim, or an eminently worthy one, but because it is the only one that appeals to about nine-tenths of our people. But for real inspiration and large effort a higher aim set by a Conference, or a district, or a whole Church, is essential. Big things are done only where they are attempted. This is far better than isolated "specials." Furthermore, it is important to secure the co-operation of all leaders. It was agreed that in order to achieve the best results we must begin early, plan clearly, work earnestly, co-operate cheerfully, and keep everlastingly at it.

Yours fraternally,
M. M. BLACK,
Conf. Missionary Secretary.

When You Want to Laugh---Eat!

And if You Want to Eat Without Food Fears Take a Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablet After Each Meal.

Laughter, smiles and mirth never go with a "red-in" stomach. Fear is a man afraid of his food, laughing! There is always that haunting feeling that a sick stomach is nothing to be mirthful about.

"My old grouchy days are funny to me now."

Just make up your mind to help nature help herself. Give your body a chance to make good. Heal the raw edges of your stomach and give your blood the tools to make digestive fluids with.

There is only one way to make the body well—give it the chance to make itself well. Harmful and strong medicines handicap the system. Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets go into the stomach just like food. They are dissolved and there they strengthen the weakened juices of the digestive apparatus until the digestion is made normal.

There is nothing mysterious or magical about them. Science has proved that certain ingredients make up Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets—that is all there is to it. One grain of a certain ingredient contained in Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets will digest 3,000 grains of food. This illustrates how you aid nature to restore her worn-out materials. When a stomach which is filled with food receives a Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablet, it is more able to digest the food than it would be without it. The work is not so hard nor the task so long.

When the meal is finally assimilated the entire system absorbs more nourishment and harmful food effects are eliminated easily, quickly and with the maximum of benefit. Every drug store carries Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets. To anyone wishing a free trial of these tablets please address F. A. Stuart Co., 150 Stuart Bldg., Marshall, Mich., and a small sample package will be mailed free.

BAKER, LA.

Dear Dr. Meek: I beg leave to make the following report of my work, since last writing the Advocate. Rev. W. E. Thomas of New Orleans, assisted me in my revival meeting in Baker, and did good preaching, which resulted in much good to the Church. Rev. A. J. Gearheard, of McDonoghville, assisted me in my revival at Blackwater Church, and it goes without saying that he did fine preaching and won the hearts of the people to such a degree that they want him to be their pastor next year. Brother Gearheard enjoys a cup of coffee and plenty of fried chicken just about as much as any Methodist preacher, not excepting the writer; for with the fresh taste of coffee in his mouth, and a big sermon in his heart, he would enter the pulpit and hold his hearers spellbound for a period of from 35 to 50 minutes. The meeting resulted in several conversions, 17 additions to the Church; and the Church was revived. I left on September for Angie, La., where I assisted Rev. H. C. Murphy in a revival meeting. All things considered, we had a good meeting. There were only a few additions to the Church, but the congregations were large day and night, and I believe much good was accomplished. I am planning to begin my meeting at Bethel this week. My fourth quarterly conference meets at Deerford on Saturday, Oct. 10, at 11 a.m. This is my fourth year on the Baker charge, and hence I shall have to take my departure after the meeting of the Annual Conference in December. Well, I have spent four years of constant labor in this field and they have been pleasant years because I have had an intelligent and appreciative people to serve. That God may bless them all, is now, and shall be my prayer.—S. D. Howard.

10 CENT "CASCARETS" FOR LIVER AND BOWELS

Cure Sick Headache, Constipation, Biliousness, Sour Stomach, Bad Breath—Candy Cathartic.

No odds how bad your liver, stomach or bowels; how much your head aches, how miserable you are from constipation, indigestion, biliousness and sluggish bowels—you always get relief with Cascarets. They immediately cleanse and regulate the stomach, remove the sour, fermenting food and foul gases; take the excess bile from the liver and carry off the constipated waste matter and poison from the intestines and bowels. A 10-cent box from your druggist will keep your liver and bowels clean; stomach sweet and head clear for months. They work while you sleep.

A good character is the best tonic—stone marble.—Spurgeon.

"It is much better to form a character than to form one."

SOOR, ACID STOMACH, GASES OR INDIGESTION

Each "Pape's Diapensin" digests 3000 grains food, ending all stomach misery in five minutes.

Time! In five minutes all stomach distress will go. No indigestion, heartburn, sourness or belching of gas, acid, or eructations of undigested food, no dizziness, bloating, foul breath or headache.

Pape's Diapensin is noted for its speed in regulating upset stomachs. It is the surest, quickest stomach remedy in the whole world and besides it is harmless. Put an end to stomach trouble forever by getting a large fifty-cent case of Pape's Diapensin from any drug store. You realize in five minutes how needless it is to suffer from indigestion, dyspepsia or any stomach disorder. It's the quickest, surest and most harmless stomach doctor in the world.

WOLF RIVER MISSION, MISS. CONF.

The Wolf River Mission embraces part of Hancock and Harrison Counties and is principally a hotbed of Catholicism. This is a very large territory with hundreds of people in it. And scores and scores of old gray-headed people who never heard a Protestant preacher. There are many who cannot read or write, and are rearing families which know nothing of the Sunday School or the prayer meeting, who have not a Bible in the home and do not know anything about the blessed Christ.

If you ask them about salvation they know not about what you speak. Some years ago when we were first among this people they were very superstitious and would not listen to us because they could not understand the great mysteries of a loving Savior. But we did not give up, but kept on. When they would not come out to hear us, we went to them. We went and talked to them and now we can preach in some of their homes. We can pray in their homes and now they come out to preaching and listen with rapt attention. We may not live to see the majority of this people enjoying the religion of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ, but the time will come if this people is properly taken care of when not only a majority will accept the religion of Christ, but a majority will be members of the Methodist Church. We have held all our meetings. On the third Sunday in June we began our meetings at Beulah. We had in this meeting one of the war horses of the Mississippi Conference to do the preaching, G. W. Huff by name. Brother Huff is a great man and a very fine preacher. Under his genuine gospel preaching, 20 were received as members into the Church. On the fourth Sunday in July we began our meeting at Whittington, Brother E. G. Gunn of Long Beach, Miss., doing the preaching for us. We had 7 additions to the Church and had some fine sermons.

On the first Sunday in August we began our meeting at Durham. Rev. R. A. Breland did all the preaching and he is certainly fine help in a revival. In this meeting 3 members were added to the Church.

On the second Sunday in September our meeting at London started, with Brother L. E. Alford of Saucier, Miss., doing the preaching. Brother Alford proved himself to be a deep student and he preached some very strong sermons. We are very thankful to other brethren for valued assistance, especially to our presiding elder, Dr. W. H. Huntley. We have up to the present had 30 additions to the Church and have baptized 48 children and 10 adults. Our collections are about half up. Brethren, pray for us and let us praise God from whom all blessings flow. L. FAYARD, P. C.

A LETTER FROM VIRGINIA.

Dear Dr. Meek: Having been in Mississippi for a long time, I am familiar with your paper and love it. We have just closed at Sperryville, Va., the greatest meeting I ever saw. Rev. Dan E. Kelly, Conference Evangelist of the Mississippi Conference, was with me and was at his best. The meeting was continued for two weeks and closed in a wave of revival glory. The whole town and community were stirred to the core. There were more reclamations and conversions than could be estimated. There were 59 additions to the Methodist Church and 13 to the Baptist Church. By the time the meeting closed, people from one end of town to the other were loving each other better and in every store and home the good work of the meeting was being discussed. The Church was stirred to new life.

One wonderful result of the meeting was that the town was wet before the revival and voted dry by a big majority in the election that took place shortly after the meeting closed. It was a grand sight to see more than fifty grown-ups coming into the Church at once. One woman was about 70 years of age.

It was a great pleasure to have Brother Kelly to conduct this great meeting for us. The Lord's hand was in it. Brother Kelly's style of evangelism is sane and safe. While absolutely loyal to his Church and true to all its doctrines, he yet is broad enough for Christians of all denominations to join with him in his efforts to spread the Master's kingdom without doing violence to the sacred mandates of conscience and without impairing their sense of church loyalty. He encourages church loyalty, but is unsparing on narrow sectarianism. He employs none of the clap-trap methods of the modern, independent and professional evangelist. With him evangelism is not a method, but a spirit. He has no prepared program but throws himself utterly upon the Holy Spirit for guidance. He believes God will come if our motives are right, and this proved true in our work here. Brother Kelly's work here has been epochal on this charge. I believe it will be easier to work now since the Lord has so graciously visited us under Brother Kelly's leadership.

EUNICE, LA.

Dear Dr. Meek: I would like very much to submit a word concerning our work. The general condition of the Eunice Circuit is good. We have had meetings at all the regular appointments. At Iota we were assisted by Rev. M. Hebert, who did good service, preaching in French for a while every night of the meeting. There is much interest shown by these people, who have been deprived of the pure gospel so long. Seven of these natives joined our Church, 5 on profession of faith and 2 by letter. At Estherwood we were assisted by Rev. F. J. McCoy. We had a good meeting there. The church was much revived; many were reclaimed and several were converted. Ten united with the Church, 5 on profession of faith and 5 by letter. Considering all things, we have made good headway with our new church project.

The lumber is being brought on the ground about as fast as it is prepared. We hope to have this building ready by the time Conference comes around. We have added 54 members to the church roll this year so far and the prospect for more is bright. Later on I hope to send you as many more subscribers as I have herein enclosed. I have been reading the Advocate for nearly twenty years and at no time has it been better edited and published.—A. A. Bernard.

Editorial

"How can I sink with such a prop
As my Eternal God,
Who bears the earth's huge pillars up
And spreads the heavens abroad?"

The best way to teach Christianity is to live it. Nothing is so impressive as an object lesson.

The first word in the Great Commission given by the Master to his disciples, just before his ascension, is "GO." If Christians are not active and aggressive, they are not what our Lord desires them to be.

It is the first departure from one's highest conception of right that most needs to be guarded against. An eminent writer has well said: "The spirit of a man is a very delicate instrument, which, if it be distorted out of its proper course, this way or that, by prejudice or interest or doubt dealing on the one hand, or foolhardiness or self-confidence on the other, may never perhaps in life recover its equilibrium."

President Hadley of Yale University is quoted as having said that prayer for peace in Europe is "apt to be only the indulgence of the luxury of expressing one's emotions in public." Of course, we do not at all agree with this sweeping declaration of Dr. Hadley; but if he had limited his statement to the prayers that are being paraded in the newspapers, we should have had less fault to find with his utterance.

We notice that some editors of church papers are given to depreciating physical courage. In this they are wrong. Physical courage is a noble quality, and it need not necessarily make one pugnacious. One does not have to be a coward in order to be peaceable. We do not believe that a person afflicted with physical cowardice ever possesses a high order of moral courage. One needs both of these forms of courage to measure up to the noblest standard of manhood, and the higher may be trusted to regulate the lower. Never during his earthly career did our Lord show the slightest indication of physical fear.

A friend told us some days since of hearing a conversation among some young ladies at the dinner table. One of them remarked that a minister had preached that a person must exercise faith in Christ and be "born anew" of the Holy Spirit, or be eternally lost. Another exclaimed in supercilious tones, "Oh, what a narrow view!" She was right—it is "narrow;" but it is the view that our Lord set forth. There is little comfort for the latitudinarianism of this day in the following utterance of the God-man, made in his Sermon on the Mount: "Enter ye in at the strait gate; for wide is the gate, and broad is the way, that leadeth to destruction, and many there be which go in thereat; because strait is the gate, and narrow the way that leadeth unto life, and few there be that find it."

WORTH MORE THAN CATHEDRALS.

The press generally is weeping over the injury done the cathedral at Rheims by the German artillery. We, too, regret that the war has wrought injury to that famous edifice, but far more do we deplore the fact that human beings, made in the image of God, are being ruthlessly shot to death. The truth is, there is nothing great on earth but man, and material things have value only in relation to him. The common, ordinary people that are so much neglected and sneered at constitute the real treasures of our planet, and it is only when Governments and Churches are busy promoting their welfare that they measure up to the highest and noblest form of service. This is one of the great outstanding lessons of the incarnation and crucifixion, but alas! how difficult it is for humanity to learn it. What a tremendous significance there is in those memorable words spoken by the Master in his vivid picture of the general judgment: "Verily I say unto you, inasmuch as ye did it not to one of the least of these, ye did it not to Me." Upon the soul of the suffering beggar by the wayside we may accomplish a work that will endure when the proudest monuments of earth shall have crumbled into dust.

A GREAT SERMON.

The sermon preached by Bishop E. E. Hoss at the opening of our Atlanta Theological Seminary on Sunday, September 27, was a majestic and inspiring utterance. We are fond of sermonic literature and scarcely a week passes that we do not read in The Brooklyn Eagle and other papers a number of discourses by distinguished preachers; but it has been a long while since we have read a pulpit message of the beauty, strength, and sweep of this one. Bishop Hoss is not only Southern Methodism's foremost leader and most accomplished writer, but he is a pulpit star of the first magnitude, having no superior as an expositor of the Divine Word in the entire connection. We hope to be able next week to give our readers extracts of considerable length from this masterful discourse, but at present we can only reproduce a single brief quotation from it, which shows how radiantly optimistic this really great minister of Jesus-Christ is, notwithstanding the storm and stress of the fierce battle through which he has recently passed. The quotation is as follows:

"The opportunities for service belong to every age and every station in life. No time is so poor or so unheroic as to be without them. In this first quarter of the twentieth century they abound more than ever before. It is grander to be living in the America of to-day than in the Athens of Pericles, or in the Rome of Caesar Augustus, or in the England of Queen Elizabeth. The ends of the world upon which we are come are not stale or commonplace. Chivalry is not dead, saintship is not a mere memory of hygone ages. There are men and women around us through whose lives there gleam and glow, like lines of light and fire, the energy of Christ's self-sacrificing love. The honest laborer that goes forth to his daily tasks, taking his cold dinner in a tin pail and thinking gently of the wife and children behind him, is more of a true knight than any mail-clad freebooter that ever rode a-foray or set his lance in rest against an enemy; and the sweet and patient mother that carries with unwavering fidelity the incessant burden of her household cares is more of a saint than any dreamy nun that ever sought refuge from the world in the seclusion of convent walls. The great days are not gone; the great days are here; and greater days are coming on."

A SUGGESTIVE STATEMENT.

In his admirable little book, entitled "Culture and Religion," which embraces a series of lectures delivered to the students of the institution with which he was connected, Principal J. E. Shairp, of Scotland, says: "The devout spirit is not fed by purely intellectual processes—sometimes it is even frustrated by them. The hard brain work and the seclusion of the student tend, if uncoupled, to dry up the springs alike of the human sympathies and the heavenward emotions. It was a saying of Dr. Arnold, certainly no disparager of intellect; that no student could continue long in a healthy religious State unless his heart was kept tender by mingling with children, or by frequent intercourse with the poor and suffering."

This statement is well worth careful consideration by the instructors in our theological seminaries, as well as by pastors engaged in the active work of the ministry. In the training of young ministers, the practical side of their education ought as much as possible to be carried along with the theoretical, as is done in equipping medical students for their life-work. The isolation of culture and the chasm that it so often develops between the polished preacher and the masses of the people whom they are called to serve need to be carefully guarded against.

Ministers in charge of pastorates also should recognize the fact that living in close contact with their parishioners will strengthen them and add largely to their efficiency as spiritual shepherds. To be sure, they should be earnest students of books and mentally alert to keep abreast of current thought, but they should not neglect the living volume of human nature spread out before them. A pastor is expected to be the religious leader of his people, and, as is well known, he who would lead men must understand them and keep in touch with them. "The voice of a stranger they will not follow," no matter how deeply, in the seclusion of his study, he may have quaffed of the "Pierian spring."

The Methodist Episcopal Church, South, is operating in 28 cities, having a population of more than 50,000, and an aggregate population of 5,228,554. In the States known as the South there are 40 cities with more than 25,000 people, which together have a population of 3,570,770. Though ours is chiefly a rural Church, we have work in enough large municipalities to bring us face to face with the city problems of this day.

THE MAN WHO LONGED TO LEAD.

By S. E. Kiser.

There was a man who prayed
For wisdom that he might Sway men from sinful ways
And lead them into light.
Each night he knelt and asked the Lord
To let him guide the sinful horde.
And every day he rose again
To idly drift along.
One of the many common men
Who form the common throng.

Year after year he prayed
For worldly strength to lead;
Year after year the Lord
He worshiped failed to heed;
His prayer for leadership and light
He rattled off by rote each night.
And in the morning rose again
To merely drift along.
One of the many common men
Who form the common throng.

One day the man who longed
To lead in men's affairs
Resolved that he would add
Hard work unto his prayers;
By day he strove with all his might,
He knelt and prayed for help at night.
And God gave ear and aid, for then
He ceased to drift along.
A cipher with his fellow men,
But came to lead the throng.

VIRILE WORKERS NEEDED.

In every age God has worked with men of force. It is true that he may welcome weaklings into his kingdom, but it is only that he may thereafter make them strong to do his will. Christianity spells not effeminacy, but efficiency. When some one expressed surprise at the energy and initiative displayed by a certain servant of God, the latter explained his course by saying: "When I became converted, I put off the old man; but I did not put on the old woman!" To be a Christian is not to be coddled, petted, or exempted, but to be challenged, demanded, mobilized with others for service. Christianity is not a lullaby or a sleeping potion, but a bugle call summoning to attack and advance.—Zion's Herald.

THE GOOD WE DO.

Rev. William Thomas McElroy, D.D.

The privilege of doing good to others is one of the highest privileges given to mankind. A man may accumulate a fortune and make himself a power in the world without helping another in the smallest degree. A woman may by dint of her learning or her ability accomplish something great as the world sees greatness, and yet never help one soul towards heaven, or even towards happiness in life. It is not unusual for the world to call such as these successes. But that person who, whether he accomplished anything that the world may hear of or not, is daily sacrificing himself, is daily doing some little thing to help another, is as he goes through life scattering deeds of kindness and words of cheer on those with whom he comes in contact, is a greater success than either of them.

Sometime ago at the funeral of a poor but well-known and widely-beloved woman of a little town in the Middle West a famous financier who had his country home in the town spoke these words: "If I with all my money and power had done one-tenth the good in the world that little woman has done, death would have none of the terrors for me that it now has."

The little woman all her life had had to struggle to "make ends meet." And yet there was hardly a person in the whole town who did not have some reason to be thankful for her life. Wherever there had been sickness her help had been freely and gladly given. Wherever there had been dire poverty she had given sympathy, and oftentimes more of her slender material means than she was able to give. Wherever there had been sorrow she had come to comfort and console. Truly, as nearly as frail humanity can do so, she had followed "in His steps." Such lives are indeed indispensable blessings to the world.

There are so many ways of doing good, and so much of happiness and comfort to be secured from the knowledge that we have helped another, that it is surprising that more of us do not seek to lead lives of helpfulness and encouragement. We may not be able to give money; some of us are not able even to give much of our time and strength; but who is there who can not speak a kindly word to some one who needs just that word, or smile for new encouragement and new inspiration in life's journey?

I suppose no man was ever busier all his life long than was the late Rev. Dr. J. R. Miller, who was beloved by so many thousands in all parts of the world. Besides his arduous labors as an active pastor and as editor-in-chief of the periodical publications of a large publishing house, he produced during his life nearly half a hundred books, many of which must have required much study and toil. But his biographer, Doctor Faris, tells us that in spite of all this great demand upon his time and strength, during the later years of his life no day ever passed during which he did not write a letter to some one whom he thought needed a message—a letter of sympathy, or love, or inspiration, or congratulation, or encouragement, or hope, or concern for the recipient's spiritual welfare.

It is related that during a Torrey-Alexander meeting in Philadelphia in 1906 some one spoke of Doctor Miller's letters. At once Mr. Alexander asked how many in the audience had received letters from Doctor Miller. "One might have expected," says Doctor Faris, "a scattering show of hands here and there * * * but hundreds of hands were raised in silent but eloquent tribute to a man who, although extremely busy, always found time to share the burdens of others."

Doctor Miller's life is an eminent example of what one person can accomplish, not only in the line of letter-writing, but also in many other directions. His motto was "Jesus and I are friends," and his motto was borne out by his life in a most beautiful manner. It is not probable that we all can be so eminently successful in living the helpful life as Doctor Miller was, but if we adopt such a motto as his and endeavor to live in accord with it, most of us will do far more good than we are doing now.

Many of us who call ourselves Christians would do well to review our lives, to find out whether or not we are after all Christians in the true sense of the word. The record of Christ's life is that "he went about doing good." A Christian is essentially a follower of Christ. And if it can not be said of us that we go about doing good, we can well question our devotion to our divine Leader. It has been well written that "they best serve God who serve their fellow man;" for unless the love of God is in our hearts, it is not likely that we will have much love for our fellow man. Certainly in such case we will not love him enough to sacrifice our own interests and our own ambitions for his benefit.—Pittsburgh Christian Advocate.

A FALSE DOCTRINE EXPLODED.

By Bishop E. E. Hoss.

It has been assumed in many quarters, as if it were a thing beyond dispute, that the ideal arrangement for the management of schools and colleges, especially Church schools and colleges, is through a self-perpetuating board of trust. In the early days of the Vanderbilt controversy the constant cry of the trustees and their defenders was: "Of course the university belongs to the Church, but the administration of its affairs is and must be in the hands of a self-perpetuating board in order to secure consistency and continuity of policy." That was considered a sound plea by many good persons who did not know that when the issue should come to actual adjudication the trustees would deny the ownership of the Church, and that the Supreme Court, to use the language of Chancellor Kirkland, would "go out of its way" to sustain the denial.

But I wish to say that the doctrine of self-perpetuation in any form is un-American, undemocratic, and vicious. It rests upon the false belief that a little knot of people have more sense and more honesty than the whole body of the people. There was a time when such a doctrine could be made to pass muster, but that time has gone. More and more the citizens of this country are going to take their own affairs into their own hands. They will still continue to do this largely through their representatives, but they will determine for themselves who their representatives shall be.

There are scores of great universities in the country. Is there one of them that is under the control of a self-perpetuating board? Is there a single State that would tolerate such an arrangement for a single year? I should say not. And what reason is there why the Churches that own colleges should not also assert and exercise the right to some voice concerning them? The people, of course, will at times say and do foolish things in educational matters, but trustees are simply people. They are not always great people nor even educated people. Once in a while they are selected, as it were by accident. Once in a while they are chosen with the hope that they will open their plethoric pocketbooks—a hope that is occasionally doomed to disappointment. On the whole, they do not average up much higher than the communities from which they are taken. Their claim of exemption from fair criticism and of the right to say who shall be their successors is without warrant of reason.

How would it do to have a self-perpetuating Board of Missions in the Church? or a self-perpetuating Board of Church Extension? or a self-perpetuating Book Committee? or, mirabile dictu, a self-perpetuating College of Bishops? I trust that the ultra-democratic brethren who believe that Bishops are at best a nuisance to be endured will not take a panic at the suggestion which I have just thrown out. The Bishops, as a whole, perhaps know the Church better than anybody else does. They know the young men who seem to be of episcopal dimensions. Why should not they be empowered to use their knowledge? Simply because the proposition carries such silly possibilities in it that, if it were seriously brought forward, it would be laughed down or hooted down.

But a self-perpetuating College of Bishops is at bottom not a whit more unreasonable than a self-perpetuating board of trustees for a Methodist college or university.

N. B.—To commend myself to the good will of the present occupant of the tripod, I append the further suggestion that many reasons might be found for bestowing on him the power to name the man who shall come after him. Why not? Yes, why not?—Nashville Christian Advocate.

LOVE AMONG MINISTERS.

By Rev. C. B. Powell.

Brotherly love is a constant theme of the pulpit, as it is of the Word of God. The hearers are repeatedly admonished concerning the evils of hatred or coldness among church members, and urged to settle all differences for the sake of Christ and his cause. Nor, perhaps, can too much be said in behalf of this chief of Christian graces, for without it all piety is pretense, all religion but a form. Love is the cement that binds together the living stones in the temple of God—the secret grip that proves the believer's admission into the sacred brotherhood, the mark by which the good Shepherd may distinguish his own flock.

It has been well said, that the religion which fancies that it loves God, when it never evinces love to its brother, is not piety, but a mildewed theology with a worm in the heart. It has been better said: "He that saith he is in the light, and hateth his brother, is in the darkness even until now."

So essential is this grace that we risk nothing in attributing all trouble in Churches to its lack, for, like the personification of love among the ancients, Christian charity is blind. It cannot see a brother's faults, hence has no occasion to quarrel with him.

So great a truth as this, very properly demands a large portion of the minister's preaching, but it is equally important that it should claim his practice. We are ensamples to the flock and should not only point, but lead the way to heaven. No one has a right to expect us to be perfect, for there is as much human nature in the pulpit as in the pew, but every one is justified in expecting us to make most strenuous efforts to bring under our bodies, lest we who have preached to others ourselves be castaways. Indeed, it was without doubt on this account that the Apostle forbids the introduction of a novice into the ministry, rightly judging that a developed Christian character was essential to the exemplariness of this high calling.

We can easily imagine some one reading these lines, and asking with wonder, can it be that Christ's ministering servants are lacking in love for one another? We cannot say that they are, certainly not more so than private Christians. Indeed, the general result of our own experience enables us to say that there is no class of Christians who exhibit a greater sympathy in one another's interest than the ministry.

When afflictions have poured upon us like a flood, they have hastened to our side and strengthened us for the struggle. When prosperity, when other causes of joy have sent new light into our household, none have surpassed our ministerial brethren in warmth and frequency of congratulations. Nevertheless, many ministers are to some extent careless of the duty to manifest this sublime regard for each other. This fault is often manifested when speaking of others' abilities. The preacher's mental habits necessarily make him critical. Accustomed to scan closely his own productions lest he present untempered mortar, he naturally regards with similar scrutiny the productions of others.

In many cases this habit is so strongly fixed that it prevents one minister from enjoying another's sermon. While the uncritical audience is swept along by a torrent of eloquence, the unfortunate clerical hearer is stranded upon some theological or rhetorical flaw, that like a mountain boulder has rolled down into the stream. These criticisms find voice when brethren get together. If it were confined to those present, who could defend themselves, it would not cause so much injury; but too often the victim is absent, and the tongue of criticism glides off insensibly into words of ridicule. Thus, while criticism works itself into unnatural activity, brotherly love grows torpid and benumbed. This should never be the case; on the contrary, brotherly love should continue to grow until it could be said of us that we are one in Christ.

There is perhaps no more common rock on which a preacher's love for his brother is wrecked than that from which he must regard the ability and work of a predecessor or successor in his pastorate. Whether he look forward or backward, he needs great grace to enable him to speak kindly and justly of those who have occupied the same pulpit that he holds, and have been the objects of the affection and admiration which he prizes. Perhaps few of us can speak with the same humility and love that John the Baptist showed toward Christ in the declaration: "He must increase, but I must decrease."

Nothing is more difficult for a retiring pastor, whose affections have been closely intertwined around the members of his flock, to give place gracefully and kindly to another and perhaps a stranger. Nothing but a large supply of fraternal love can dissolve these unlovely elements. Let love then be the ruling principle.

CONCERNING NATIONAL CONSTITUTIONAL PROHIBITION.

Mr. Editor: We believe that you and the readers of your paper may be desirous of learning the situation to-day regarding the Sheppard-Hobson National Constitutional Prohibition Amendment. This will give you briefly the facts as we are able to learn them.

About three months have elapsed since the effort was made by the liquor representatives to force immediate consideration and vote. The attitude we took at that time, that of readiness for the vote if by extraordinary process its immediate consideration was forced but refraining from ourselves forcing the issue at a time when we believed it unwise to pursue this course, seems to be justified.

We have discussed the matter with many friends in Congress, among them a number of the most influential members in both political parties, and without a single exception the verdict has been that the temperance forces are stronger to-day because of our attitude three months ago. The belief is expressed by all those with whom we have talked, and who have kept in touch with affairs in Congress, that the vote will be very materially increased and that we are in a very much better tactical position because of the course that has been pursued. Several specific instances have been cited us of men who were lukewarm but are now openly advocating this prohibition resolution and who have been won over by what they concede the judicial and fair tactics of the temperance forces.

We have reason to believe that the resolution will be voted on in the early days of the next session and are encouraged to hope for a vote considerably augmented. In a short while we shall suggest to the Churches and moral forces of the country a plan of campaign for advancing the cause which we trust they will be willing to adopt.

Cordially yours,

EDWIN C. DINWIDDIE,

Legislative Superintendent.

FROM WEST END—OKLAHOMA.

I deem that a note to my brethren in the old State will not be amiss. Many things have passed among you of great interest to me. Quite a few of my dear friends have gone to their reward since you saw anything from me. Sister Shipman, that choice spirit from the preacher's home, being one of the saddest bereavements of them all. Words do not seem extravagant or fulsome when portraying the life-work of such souls. God bless the family and make them all the stronger in faith and work! K. M. Harrison, the young preacher's friend, left an aroma as of sweet ointment poured forth. And there are others, too numerous and tender, for a short note.

I rejoice in the occasional note from that old war-horse, the beloved colporter, Brother Bachman. I am persuaded, dear brother, that a rich reward awaits your coming, but pray that you may still live long to cheer the souls of the tried as you often have mine. The young men of the old Conference are now the strong guard: Meek, Countiss, Spragins, Tucker, Jacob, Steve Brown and the rest. God bless you, boys, and keep you faithful "as all our fathers were!" The work is in safe hands and will bide the tests that "wars and rumors of wars" shall provoke.

We, out here, are subject to like trials. West Oklahoma has the stuff for the market this year, and would float on high tide if the depression in price could be avoided. As things are, it will be somewhat problematic. The greater the demand, however, the greater usually the heroic effort. And so we hope to rise with the responsibility and make good at the reckoning in November. We have one of the Old Guard to preside over us here, to our great delight—Bishop Murrell, a name, like that of Galloway, to conjure with in Mississippi. How we all loved him there! And, how we shall all learn to trust him in the episcopacy is patent. He was with us a few hours lately helping to thrash out our educational problems. Great patience and sanity characterized his deliberations among us then, which augurs success for all our affairs through his presidency. We are gathering a band of "stickers" in this conference, a thing much needed for the profitable working out of the issues before us. Hitherto, we have had many "claim jumpers" in our ministerial force, who came to try us and see if the ground was softer here than elsewhere. Most of these have found that a fall here felt about the same as where they haled from and have flown. This policy can never accomplish much for the Kingdom. Every year we were blessed with a new lot. Next year some other new field would be similarly blessed with them. Many of these have to my knowing found bottom and stopped.

The new ratings and rulings of the Commission on Education will enable us to operate and grade our Methodist schools in Oklahoma and give them a real and proper standing in the educational world. Have you read it? That was great work they did at Junaluska.

The Advocate comes as a most welcome guest to our table every week. The editorial work is superb. The standard of excellence compares favorably with our other church periodicals. Come to Oklahoma again, Mr. Editor.

TO THE SUNDAY SCHOOLS OF MISSISSIPPI.

Sunday, November 8, 1914, has been designated by the Sunday School leaders of the world as Sunday School Temperance Day. It ought to be made to count for much in every Sunday school in Mississippi. Surely all Christian people can unite heartily on the temperance and prohibition movement against this common enemy of humanity. If this day should be heartily and intelligently observed by our Sunday schools generally throughout the State, the results would show large gains for righteousness.

1. The day could be made in a real sense educative and inspirational to our Sunday schools.
2. The aggregate of money raised would be a great help in driving "blind tigers" from the State, and thus opening the way for the maintenance of better order generally and for a larger attendance and better work in our Sunday schools.

3. Many young persons would be impressed in a way that might fix their feet in the path of soberness and usefulness.

The Anti-Saloon League earnestly begs the cooperation of every pastor and Sunday school superintendent and all the members of the Sunday schools in this necessary work.

The League would suggest that all pastors and Sunday school superintendents who see this article, read it to their Sunday schools and urge the observance of temperance day and the taking of a collection for the League. There is much work the League could do in the way of driving out "blind tigers" and in general law enforcement, if it only had the funds.

The League has accomplished a great work in Mississippi. Even during my administration, since May 1, it has been instrumental in the conviction of 97 "blind tiger keepers," all of whom were fined and many of whom were sent to jail. The substance of this article in the form of a letter will be mailed to every pastor of all denominations in the State, with the request that temperance day be utilized to the best advantage possible in the interest of the League.

Let all remittances be made to the Anti-Saloon League, Jackson, Miss. Fraternally,

T. J. BAILEY,

Supt. of the Miss. Anti-Saloon League.

The Louisiana Educational Campaign

LOUISIANA CONFERENCE EDUCATIONAL MEETING.

An educational conference consisting of presiding elders, members of the Conference Board of Education, college trustees, and other friends of education in the Louisiana Conference, met in Alexandria, La., on Tuesday evening, Oct. 6, in response to a call made by Rev. Paul M. Brown, chairman of the Board of Education.

The object of the meeting was to consider in advance of the Annual Conference, in December, our educational outlook, the difficulties to be met, and our program of action for the future.

The meeting was characterized by a spirit of determination to press to a successful conclusion the campaign which has been begun.

After an earnest discussion of various points involved, the conference voted the following recommendations:

First—It shall be the settled policy of the Annual Conference to maintain Centenary College as an institution of full college grade, with authority to confer degrees in accordance with our past history, our contract with Shreveport, and the terms of our deed, and that the Conference, as early as possible, shall raise the money necessary to comply with the conditions prescribed by our Commission on Education as necessary to classification as such.

Second—We indorse the plan of our Conference Secretary to raise the sum of $150,000 within a period of five years; and recommend that the Board plan to give fresh impetus to the movement, by having a great rally in behalf of the cause during the approaching Conference in Shreveport, at which time a five-year campaign shall be launched having right of way in the Conference.

Third—In furtherance of this movement, we recommend that if possible a man shall be continued in the field to direct the plan of this campaign.

That the Bishop be requested to appoint district secretaries of education on nomination of the Conference Board, whose duty shall be to solicit funds in such territory as may be assigned them.

That it shall be the duty of the presiding elders to co-operate in this movement in every possible way, and in particular by furnishing the secretary as early after Conference as possible, and from time to time thereafter, names of persons who may be canvassed for contributions.

Fourth—For the vital interests of our educational institutions, we recommend that the nomination committee give special consideration to the selection of the new Conference Board of Education.

Fifth—Resolved, That we express our appreciation of the appropriation made by the General Board for Mansfield College, and at the same time recommend that said General Board be urged to acquaint themselves with the difficult educational problems in Louisiana, and co-operate in every way possible.

Sixth—Whereas an offer of $30,000 on the annuity plan has been offered to Centenary College by a citizen of Shreveport for the erection of a building, we recommend that the Trustees give careful consideration to the terms of said offer, and provide, if possible, for its acceptance.

Seventh—We urge the presiding elders and preachers in charge, in view of most urgent necessity, to make special efforts to secure the educational collections in full the present Conference year.

Eight—We recommend that the Conference instruct the Editor of the Minutes to provide a column in the Annual Minutes for an Education Special and also instruct the preachers to make separate reports of same.

Ninth—Resolved, That a copy of the above action be furnished to the New Orleans Christian Advocate and the General Secretary of the Board of Education.

R. H. WYNN,
W. H. COLEMAN,
JOHN F. FOSTER.

The following ministers and laymen were in attendance upon the meeting referred to above: Revs. J. M. Henry and H. W. Jamison of New Orleans; Revs. Paul M. Brown, R. H. Wynn, W. H. Coleman, of Shreveport; Revs. W. W. Drake and H. W. Bowman, Baton Rouge; Revs. C. C. Miller, Wm. Schuble, Monroe; Rev. W. D. Klein Schmidt, Jena; Rev. John F. Foster, Amite; Rev. Briscoe Carter, Ruston; Rev. A. S. J. Nell, Leocompte; Revs. H. W. May, G. E. Cameron, Alexandria; Rev. B. H. Sheppard, Oakdale; Rev. H. N. Brown, Lake Arthur; Rev. J. Hoffpauir, Rayne; H. H. White, C. W. Ward, T. W. Holloman, Alexandria; W. S. Holmes, Baton Rouge; R. E. Bobbitt, Mansfield.

THE CAMPAIGN BEGUN.

By the Editor.

In accordance with the announcement made in the Advocate last week, the Louisiana educational campaign was begun in New Orleans last Sunday. The theme of Christian education was discussed in all our pulpits in the city both at the morning and evening hours, and an effort was made to interest the people in this important movement. The speakers from a distance who took part in the exercises of the occasion were Dr. R. H. Wynn, President of Centenary College; Rev. Paul M. Brown, the Secretary of Education of the Louisiana Conference; Dr. A. F. Watkins, President of Millsaps College; and Rev. W. A. Smart and Dr. Shelton, of the Atlanta Theological School. There was also a general exchange of pulpits among the resident pastors, so that practically every congregation had a new preacher for the day. In the afternoon an informal conference concerning the educational campaign, to which all our pastors and church officials in the city were invited, was held at the First Methodist Church. It was fairly well attended and was presided over by Rev. Paul M. Brown. Brief talks were made by Dr. R. H. Wynn, Dr. A. F. Watkins, Rev. W. A. Smart, Dr. Shelton, Dr. J. M. Henry, and the Editor of the Advocate.

It is impossible at present to state definitely what were the results of the services held last Sunday. The day was exceedingly inclement and the rain was pouring down at the hour for the morning worship, and on this account the congregations who heard the speakers were very small. In other words, the great body of the Methodist people of New Orleans were not reached with the stirring messages that were presented. Those who heard them, however, were impressed and interested, and we feel that much good was accomplished for this great cause. We take it that the efforts of last Sunday will be followed up with further work, and that all our people in the city will be given an opportunity to lend a helping hand to Centenary and Mansfield Colleges.

Our educational leaders in Louisiana have announced that this is but the beginning of a campaign to strengthen our institutions of learning that will be carried to every part of the State. We are publishing on this page a series of resolutions adopted at the meeting of the Conference Board of Education, the presiding elders, and other persons interested which was held in Alexandria last week, and we hope that they will be given a careful reading by every Louisiana Methodist. The truth is, we are face to face with a grave crisis in our educational work, and something must be done to retrieve the situation, and that speedily. To stand still under existing conditions means disaster. No severer blow could be struck our Church in this State than the closing of the doors of Centenary College; every phase of our work would thereby be appreciably weakened. Such a calamity must be averted, as it certainly can be, if all our pastors and people will lend to this campaign the full measure of assistance of which they are capable. Do not wait to be approached and asked for a subscription to this cause; but sit down at once and write Dr. Wynn or Brother Brown what you will give. You can arrange your pledge so as to pay so much a year for five years, but you should contribute all that you can in cash this fall.

Here is an opportunity for some large-hearted man of means to immortalize himself by placing Centenary College on a sure footing, and take his place in Methodist history, along with the Dukes, and Major Millsaps, and Mr. Asa Candler, as one of the Church's great educational benefactors. Is there not such an one somewhere in Louisiana? May the Holy Spirit lay this urgent call of the Church upon the hearts of our people who have money and move them to come to the rescue in this critical hour. How funds thus invested would bless the coming generations, and what a far-reaching influence in strengthening the Master's cause they would exert in the unfolding future! But let small givers also do their part; not less welcome will be their offerings, which should come re-enforced by their prayers. The appeal is to every man, every woman, and every child to do the utmost possible in this time of critical need. To give relief to Centenary College is at present our most imperative duty, and to fail in this undertaking would be to us a deep and lasting reproach.

"LIVING EPISTLES."

The work of winning men for Christ admits of various methods. The preaching of the Gospel is pre-eminent in its appeal. All the institutional, educational and entertaining features of modern church work have as their ultimate aim the bringing of souls into the kingdom. But the power of consecrated personality figures more largely in converting men than we sometimes are aware. The work of exposition requires intellectual powers and gifts of eloquence. But even this conspicuous form of Christian service receives its quality from the spiritual character of the preacher. The power of love in the work of Christ needs to be continually emphasized. The world needs the instruction and inspiration of genuine Christian example. Teaching, by example is a most effective form of Christian witness. Many profit by being told what the Christian life is, and what a mighty Savior we have in Christ; but far larger numbers are influenced by being shown. A radiant life, shining for Christ in the every-day conduct, is a regenerating power of the highest order. Jesus lifted men by the kind of a life he lived. So may we follow in his train, leading men to him by revealing in life and character what he has done for us.—Christian Intelligence.

Church News

In 1886 there were 5299 Methodists in Switzerland and 8846 in Germany, a total of 14,155. In 1913 this number had grown to 38,083, a gain of 256 per cent in 27 years.

Bishop W. B. Murrah laid the corner-stone of our new $35,000 church at Ripley, Tenn., on Sept. 17. The Ripley Enterprise states that the Bishop's address on that interesting occasion was exceptionally fine.

The Northwestern Christian Advocate says that six branches of the Chicago Young Men's Christian Association have adopted a regulation forbidding the use of tobacco in the rooms of the dormitories maintained by them. The Sears-Roe-buck branch of the Association has had such a rule in force for some time.

Dr. W. N. Ainsworth, of Macon, Ga., the fraternal messenger from the M. E. Church, South, to the General Conference of Canadian Methodism, delivered his message to that body on September 29. It was a comprehensive and able utterance. Dr. Ainsworth also preached before the General Conference on Sunday, October 4.

After having no intercollegiate football for ten years, Wofford College, of which Dr. H. N. Snyder is president, has fallen from grace and gone back to it. Trinity, the leading college in Southern Methodism, does not allow intercollegiate football games and Dr. Few, its official head, states that its present attendance is the largest in the history of the institution.

A meeting of the Negroes of the Methodist Episcopal Church will be held in Nashville, Tenn., Oct. 22, 23, for the purpose of discussing the proposed unification of American Methodism. It will be remembered that the plan that the M. E. Church, South, has submitted for consideration provides for four General Conferences, into one of which shall be gathered all the colored Methodists in the Churches uniting, with a sort of Federal Council over these General Conferences.

While holding the German Mission Conference, which met in San Antonio, Texas, on Oct. 1, Bishop R. G. Waterhouse was the guest of Bishop E. D. Mouzon. Both of these Chief Pastors are greatly interested in our work in the Far West, and we learn from The Pacific Methodist Advocate that Bishop Mouzon has already won the soubriquet of "Western" Mouzon. By the way, we hope that Editor Vaughan will keep the brother who wrote that article writing for his paper, since his style is so unique.

The following are some of the largest Sunday schools of the Methodist Episcopal Church, with the number of pupils enrolled: Brazil, Indiana, 4206; Bushwick Avenue Church, Brooklyn, 3721; First Church, Los Angeles, 3641; Decatur, Ill., 2200. That denomination has 16 Sunday schools with over 1700 pupils, and 41 with over 1400. From the foregoing it will be seen that the Sunday school of the First M. E. Church, South, of Shreveport, La., which has an enrollment of between 1500 and 2000, is really entitled to a place among the greatest Sunday schools in the United States.

Dr. S. A. Steel, pastor of the Washington Street M. E. Church, South, of Columbia, S. C., has recently celebrated his 65th birthday. In referring to this interesting event, the Doctor says: "I am sixty-five, and sound as a dollar and feeling like a Kentucky thoroughbred; but with lots more sense than I had thirty years ago." There are many who would like to see Dr. Steel, who is easily Southern Methodism's most brilliant orator, commissioned to range through the eastern part of the connection in the interest of the endowment fund of our new Atlanta University. One could well afford to go many miles to hear him on the great theme of "Christian Education."

Dr. T. C. Schuler has resigned as Editor of the Midland Methodist, giving as his reason that the editor of a religious journal of such importance ought to be in the office in order to do justice to the Church and himself. He does not think that a pastor-editor can rightly meet the responsibilities of such a position. We fully agree with Dr. Schuler. Brother Patton, the Publisher of the Midland Methodist, is far away from the facts when he states that there is no Conference organ in Southern Methodism that has all the time of its editor and supports him, except the Texas Advocate.

The New York Christian Advocate of October 1 contained an interesting article from the pen of Dr. H. M. DuBose, of Atlanta, Ga., entitled "Methodist Restoration." In his discussion of the proposed unification of American Methodism, Dr.

DuBose, among other things, says: "To cast all American Methodism into one body, and then sub-divide it into four jurisdictional quadrennial Conferences is only to multiply the difficulties which now exist. Frankly, I cannot see why if union be possible on any basis, it is not possible on the basis of the old Methodist Episcopal Church in America, with one General Conference and a connection of Annual Conferences standing upon an equal footing."

Secular News and Comment

The estate of the famous editor, Joseph Pulitzer, who owned The New York World and The St. Louis Post Dispatch, has been estimated to be worth approximately $20,000,000.

At Pine Bluff, Ark., a Southern Women's Cotton Club has been organized, the members pledging themselves to wear and use cotton goods as far as possible. Our Southern women are always ready to help in the time of need.

Dr. Richard Derby and his wife, who was Miss Ethel Roosevelt, have gone to Paris to aid in caring for the war's victims. During their absence their 6-months old baby, Richard, Jr., will be left with the family of the ex-President.

Through the influence of Correction Commissioner Katherine B. Davis, the prisoners on Blackwell's Island, New York, have discarded striped uniforms, which for years have been the prison badge. Mrs. Davis believes the prisoners will be better men if not branded with stripes.

The Outlook says: "Studies made at the Royal Observatory at Greenwich, England, as to the number of stars indicate that they aggregate some 1,600,000,000, though of these only 3000 or 4000 are visible to the average eye. The total number is greatly in excess of former estimates."

Postmaster-General Burleson has announced that he will reduce letter postage to the countries of South America from five to two cents, the same that it is to Great Britain, Canada, Cuba, and Mexico. The mail rate on packages will also be made much lower than that which is now in force.

There are now ten prohibition States, as follows: Georgia, Kansas, Maine, Mississippi, North Carolina, North Dakota, Oklahoma, Tennessee, Virginia, and West Virginia. Kentucky is about to join this splendid group, 107 out of 120 counties in that commonwealth having outlawed the saloon.

The New York World says: "Next Christmas, it is estimated, there will be 1,000,000 orphans in Europe because of the war, and European militarism would hold that the best use for them would be to rear them and train them for more human slaughter when they are old enough to do their glorious part."

In an abandoned school yard in the West Side ghetto of Chicago a municipal market has just been opened and is being well patronized. Cabbage sold at 2 cents, loose grapes at 5 cents, tomatoes at 2 cents, and noodles at 6 cents a pound; radishes sold at 3 cents and lettuce at 5 cents a bunch. Clothing is also being sold at the municipal market.

It is stated that the British and French Governments have ordered the purchase of 60,000 horses, which are being bought in Missouri, Kansas, Oklahoma, Kentucky, and Texas. It is expected that the shipment of these animals will be principally made from New Orleans, Mobile, and Galveston. These purchases will likely advance considerably the prices of horses and mules in the United States.

The Hon. W. J. Bryan is leading in a movement to have the United States Government to acquire the ownership of Monticello (in Albemarle County, Virginia), the estate of Thomas Jefferson, which for forty-six years was his home, and where he and his wife and two daughters are buried. This property, which overlooks the University of Virginia, has been kept practically as the great statesman left it, and is valued at $1,000,000; but Congressman Jefferson Levy, the present owner, has offered it to the Government for half that sum. He once refused an offer of $750,000 for it, which was made by the State of Virginia.

Prominent London women under the leadership of the Countess of Shaftesbury; Lady Scott, widow of the late Captain R. E. Scott, the British Antarctic explorer; Lady Jellicoe, wife of the commander of the home fleet; Lady Byron, and Mrs. Reginald McKenna, wife of the home secretary, have organized the "War Babies' and Mothers' League." The new organization will aid not only the wives of soldiers, but women whose immediate future may have been dependent upon some man called to the colors. A day nursery will be provided and assistance will be rendered, regardless of class and creed, to the wife, baby or dependent of any man serving in the army or navy.

SHALL WE APPOINT PROFESSORS TO VANDERBILT?

Dear Mr. Meek: Your editorial on the above subject in a recent issue of the Advocate was to my mind a timely statement and I heartily endorse every word of it. This question is of the greatest importance to the whole Church and especially to our educational interests at this particular time. To make such appointments would be virtually endorsing the institution and an invitation to our people to patronize it. How can we afford to appoint professors to Vanderbilt since we have been driven out and have been notified that they did not want or need us; that they could do better without us; and that any real connection with us would be a hindrance to the University?

It would be a disgrace for us to allow ourselves to be so misrepresented as to lend our influence to Vanderbilt. Surely there is not an Annual Conference or a bishop in Southern Methodism who would humiliate and embarrass the Church by making such an appointment. If we have preachers who are willing to serve the University under the conditions now existing, give them an honorable location and then we will not be responsible for the results.

What! Appoint a professor to Vanderbilt after they have robbed us of millions of money and property and have taken from us the only University that was under the control of the Church, and have flung their insults one after another into the face of the Church and her constituted authorities for four years, and when the faculty and stewards immediately after the decision of the Supreme Tennessee Court was made, under the cover of night, with brass band and torch-light parade, marched on the streets of Nashville inciting?

"Hail, hail, the gang's all here;
What the hell do we care?"

Furthermore, is it not a well known fact that for a number of years the Vanderbilt Biblical Department has been out of harmony with our Methodist standards and rankly heretical concerning many of the important doctrines of Christianity?

No, no; we cannot afford to place the Church in partnership with Vanderbilt University in the work of teaching. It would be the greatest mistake we could make at this time. We have before us the most inspiring opportunity the Church has ever had to lift up the standard of Christian education, and the eye of the Christian world is upon us anxiously praying for our success.

Should we not draw the line clearly against those who have sought so persistently to protect themselves against a "contumacious" (ill-behaved, rude, and insolent) Church? All this and more is covered up in that word "contumacious," and it just keeps grinding into me deeper and deeper as I meditate upon its true significance. This is a critical time for us and the world, and to yield to such an influence will do more to ruin our educational policy and the new enterprises of which we have said so much, than all other things combined.

I do not wish to be understood as being opposed to education—far be this from me; but as sure as you live we are going wrong somehow or somewhere on this question, and if we do not shift our sails we will soon be headed for the rocks.

The Church has suffered more from its leadership in all ages than anything else. Who but the prophets of old led Israel astray? Who were the greatest enemies to our blessed Lord and his ministry but the Scribes and Pharisees? Who started this horrible war in Europe? Is not the nation which has the largest standing army, and next to the greatest navy, in the world, the nation which has the most reputation for learning—so much so, that it has been held that no one is much until he has been there to school? Who robbed the Southern Methodist Church of millions of money and property, but men of learning? Nobody else was competent to do it. If this is education, from such good Lord, deliver us.

If the Church does not take a bold stand for truth and righteousness and exercise a strict censorship over her institutions and the men and women who lead our young life, the worst is not yet. There was published some two years ago, in one of our leading American Magazines, a series of articles from a leading so-called educator, endorsed by the editor, in which the Bible and the Church and the Christian religion were ridiculed and scarcely a single word of protest was heard from our prominent educators. We were told that 14 of the leading female colleges in America, with 50,000 young women students, were having taught in them that the Bible is a myth, a legend, and that to ask humanity to stake its salvation upon such a book was preposterous. That these 50,000 young women were using the fragments of an ancient but dying faith to build up a new gospel. That new gospel declares for the emancipation of woman from being the wife of one man, emancipation from motherhood, from the inherited prejudices of individual home-life. My brother, if we were to listen to these advanced thinkers and the output of so-called modern scholarship, they would make us believe that the eternal city of the skies, fabled in Christian legend, theology, and creeds, is in ruins at the feet of modern learning.

Thank God, there are yet millions of faithful souls who have not bowed the knee to this modern Baal, and out of the agitation of this question, if we keep "the faith once delivered to the saints," there will come a victory for God and righteousness that will sweep this old world into the kingdom of an eternal peace at last. Amen.

W. S. LAGRONE.
Clarksdale, Miss.

THE LOUISIANA ORPHANAGE AND WORK DAY.

In these stringent times we must not forget those who are wholly dependent upon us—our children at the Louisiana Methodist Orphanage. As a Church we can better afford to have some other form of church work crippled than for our orphans to lack the necessities of life. They just must have food to eat and clothes to wear. A little piece of money will not go far with a family of ninety-four. It costs less to provide a child with the necessities of life in the Orphanage than in an ordinary home. The running expenses of the Orphanage at this time are greater than the income. There is a deficit, and it is increasing. To offset this deficit and come to the end of the year with all obligations met, "Work Day" must be observed and emphasized throughout the State. Every church ought to observe it, even if the offering is small. The pastor can not be at every church, or in every community on October 17. Some one must assume the responsibility of making the day a success in your community. Why Not You?

I, as pastor of the Ruston Methodist Church, am in position to know the need of the Orphanage, and also of the splendid work being done there. I know the boys and girls in school, where they make the highest records and capture medals and take off high honors. I know them in the church and Sunday school, where they are well behaved, studious and reverent. I know them at the Orphanage where they make a model home. If the Louisiana Methodists could peep in on the orphans in their home—at work at play—there would be no further need, for liberality would abound. Brother Vaughan is "the right man in the right place," but he can't run an Orphanage without the help of the people. If your Church, and all our churches will observe "Work Day" on October 17 and make an offering in keeping with the ability of the people and the now pressing need of the Orphanage, this good work we are doing will not be crippled, nor will we be any the poorer.

What do we mean by "Work Day?" We mean this: We give our wages for one day to the Orphanage. It is easy to figure this out when one is working for a salary. But what about the farmer, the house-wife and the children? Let the farmer estimate the value of his day's labor; let the house-wife make and sell a garment or sell eggs and chickens; let the children receive a remuneration for some service rendered. The old rule, "Where there is a will there is a way," will work on "Work Day." Everybody can make a gift, even though, with some, it be small. Have some one in your community to act as treasurer, preferably your pastor; make the collections at once and send immediately to Brother Vaughan. "Do unto others as you would have others do unto you." Suppose your children were orphans?

MRS. LILY SMYLIE SHIPMAN.

Lily Smylie, daughter of Rev. J. J. and Sarah Smylie, was born in Hinds County, Miss., on February 25, 1867. She was called away with startling suddenness by a stroke of apoplexy at the district parsonage at Durant, Miss., on August 11, 1914. This attack came while she sat at the piano, surrounded by her husband and children. In a moment her happy home was changed from peace and happiness to the darkness of bitter grief and sorrow.

On January 3, 1894, she was married to Rev. W. S. Shipman of the North Mississippi Conference, and for over 20 years shared with him the cares of an itinerant's life. The Church loses a faithful co-pastor, the husband has lost a devoted helper and loving companion, and the children have lost a true mother.

There is no sadder spectacle among the varied sorrows of earth than a home desolated by a mother's death. The dissolution of this unique and tender tie at a time when the wife and mother's presence seem most sorely needed has ever seemed to me to be one of the most inscrutable mysteries of Providence. Children can have only one mother; and this relation once broken can have no renewal.

Mrs. Shipman was born in the itinerancy and lived practically all her life in the Church. She was not only a church member, but a devoted Christian whose life adorned the faith she professed. She was interested and active in the work of the Church from her childhood. She grew up a Christian and lived and died one. She had no wayward childhood or youth, but was planted and grew in the "courts of our God." She was affectionate and kindly in her nature and made and retained many friendships. She was cheerful, bright and sunny in her temperament, and people loved the sunshine of her presence. But the glory of her life was her home work. She was a wife and mother in the highest sense of these noble and sacred words. She was cheerful, bright and brave in the performance of her home duties. She was diligent and faithful in every duty, because duty was reinforced by tender affection.

To an affliction such as this humanity can offer no adequate consolation. We can only weep with them that weep and sorrow with the sorrowing. So the writer writes out a loving and tender friendship for a truly pure, devoted Christian wife and mother, and only says: "I love you and sorrow with you."

Such a life, no matter how quiet and obscure, no matter how far removed from the light of publicity, cannot be lost. Its fruits abide in the hearts of friends touched and uplifted. Her life will go on in the heart-life of husband and children to the end of time. May God bless and comfort them always!

YOUR NICHE.

There's a niche for you in the world, my boy,
A corner for you to fill;
And it waits to-day along life's way,
For the boy with a frank "I will!"
So, lad, be true; the world wants you,
In the corner that you may fill.

There's a niche for you in the world, my girl,
A corner for you to fill;
For the girl who's kind and pure in mind,
A place that is waiting still.
So, lass, be true; the world wants you,
In the corner that you may fill.

There's a niche for both in the world, my dears,
A corner for you to fill;
And work to do that no one but you
In God's great plan can fill.
So, both, be true; the world wants you,
And your place is waiting still.

—Band of Hope.

MOTHERS WHO ARE MEN-MAKERS.

Dr. Lorimer, of Tremont Temple, Boston, tells this story of one of our distinguished men who was introduced at a great public meeting as a "self-made man." Instead of appearing gratified at this tribute, it seemed to throw him for a few moments into a "brown study." Afterward they asked him the reason for the way in which he received the announcement.

"Well," said the great man, "it set me to thinking that I was not really a self-made man."

"Why?" they replied; "did you not begin to work in a store when you were ten or twelve?"

"Yes," said he, "but it was because my mother thought I ought to early have the educating touch of business."

"But, then," they urged, "you were always such a great reader, devouring books when a boy."

"Yes," he replied, "but it was because my mother led me to do it, and at her knee she had me give an account of the book after I had read it. I don't know about being a 'self-made man.' I think my mother had a great deal to do with it."

"But, then," they urged again, "your integrity was your own."

"Well, I don't know about that. One day a barrel of apples had come to me to sell out by the peck, and after the manner of some storekeepers, I put the speckled ones at the bottom and the best ones on top. My mother called me, and asked me what I was doing. I told her, and she said: 'Tom, if you do that you will be a cheat'—and I did not do it. And, on the whole, I doubt whether I am a self-made man. I think my mother had something to do with making me anything I am in the way of character or usefulness."

"Happy," said Dr. Lorimer, "the boy who had such a mother! Happy the mother who has a boy so appreciative of his mother's formative influence!"—Baptist Outlook.

THE JOY OF THE GIVER.

"I'm just disgusted with Mrs. Grant, mother; she's the richest woman in our church, and won't even give us a cake for our missionary supper."

"Why, daughter! I never heard of Mrs. Grant being selfish. I think she's considered a very liberal woman."

"Well, she's not. All the girls say the same thing. She never yet has given to us for a supper or fair, and now we do so want to raise the money for our co-worker in India. Don't you think she might have helped, mother?"

"What reason did she give for not helping?"

"O, she does not believe in raising money for church work in that way. She believes in tithing. Tithing! What would I give if I tithed?" replied Ella, as she drew off her gloves and removed her hat.

"Let us see," suggested her mother. "You are included in the family for church giving, and father pays that. He also furnishes you with everything you need and allows you ten dollars a month for pin money. Did you ever think of tithing that amount?"

Ella flushed scarlet. "No, mother, I never did. Sometimes I've given a quarter and sometimes a dime; but more often nothing. There are always girls to treat, and some little extras to buy, and the money slips out of my hands."

"Well, that is one dollar you could give each month. Then there was the twenty-five dollars your Aunt Amy sent for a birthday gift. I suppose you did not think of tithing that, either."

Ella's face was redder than ever, as she again answered, "No."

"That brings the amount up to three dollars and a half that might be credited to you. And about the five dollars that the boys gave you? That makes four dollars you might have given. Perhaps, daughter, it will be well for the young people to take up the subject of tithing and study it. I'm sure you can learn a beautiful lesson."

A few days later, Ella and a young friend were calling at the Old Ladies' Home, where they often carried flowers, fruit and magazines to the inmates. They were chatting brightly when they heard the noise of several automobiles, and looking from the window, they saw a line of them drawn up in front.

"Oh!" chirped an old lady, "the cars have come. Mrs. Grant has sent her cars again."

"Mrs. Grant!" gasped Ella.

"Yes. She sends 'em every week. She don't know we know who sends 'em though. She don't want us to know, but ain't she grand?"

Ella and her friend walked thoughtfully away, and presently stopped at the home of a young girl who did beautiful embroidery for sale.

"O, girls!" she exclaimed, enthusiastically, "do come in. I've some money for the Missionary Circle. I've been tithing. Mrs. Grant, she's my best customer, you know, told me about it. Of course, I knew they did in Bible times; but I never thought I had anything to tithe. Now, whenever I make a sale, I put down in a little book what the tenth of it is, and I have a little jar that I slip it into, and the very thought of trying to fill that jar makes me happy. I can't keep any in it, though, for I hear so many calls for help from different places."

Her laugh tinkled out musically.

The two girls thanked her for her generous donation, and again started on their way.

"Suppose we try tithing, too, Ella," suggested Edith. "We both spend lots of money on little, foolish things. My allowance comes to night. I'm going to put by a tenth the balance of the year. Won't you, too?"

Six months later the girls of the Mission Circle were gathered in their room at the church. On the table before them lay an amount of money.

"Who'd ever dreamed such a pile of money could come from a few tithes?" laughed Ella. "And here's an envelope with something in it. O, girls, it's a check for one hundred dollars from Mrs. Grant, and this one line: 'Don't you like the new way better than the old?'"

"Well, I should say we do," chirped another girl. "It's really pinched me, often, to do it; but after I began I never failed to put aside one-tenth of everything that came my way. And I never was so happy in my life."

The next Lord's Day the minister preached from the text Isaiah 3:10: "Bring ye all the tithes into the storehouse, that there may be meat in mine house, and prove me now, herewith, saith the Lord of Hosts, if I will not open you the windows of heaven, and pour you out a blessing that there shall not be room enough to receive it."

Then he told the story of the Circle girls, and urged his people to begin the system of tithing, as only such giving can bring the greatest joy to the giver, being most acceptable to the Lord.—Agnes M. Morton, in Missionary Tidings.

HOW PRISONERS ARE TREATED.

Prisoners of war captured by the Germans are being put to work on the roads of the Empire. This is objected to by Socialists, who claim that idle workmen should have the opportunity to make wages at that work. It is doubtful, as far as one's information goes, if there are many able-bodied men in Germany, who are not already in the army, or held liable to instant call. Also these persons have to be fed, and the Government will have to pay for this food out of the public treasury. It seems a good deal like a wise German thrift to repay the populace for the use of the populace's money. In France, prisoners are placed in tents in open fields, that are surrounded by a network of wire fences, heavily charged with electricity. Under these circumstances, it is not likely that many will attempt to escape. Both of these plans keep men in the open air, which is far preferable to shutting them up in insanitary buildings.—The Presbyterian.

OUR ONLY OPPORTUNITY.

To-day is your day and mine, the only day we have, the day in which we play our part. What our part may signify in the great whole we may not understand; but we are here to play it, and now is our time.

This we know—it is a part of action, not of whining; it is a part of love, not of cynicism; it is for us to express love in terms of human helpfulness.—David Starr Jordan.

MEETING OF THE PUBLISHING COMMITTEE.

The Publishing Committee of the New Orleans Christian Advocate will meet in the Advocate office (512 Camp Street) in New Orleans on Thursday, October 29, 1914, at 11 o'clock a. m.
J. M. HENRY, Chairman.

THE SINGLE EYE NEEDED.

F. W. Robertson, the great Brighton preacher, in referring to John the Baptist's rebuke of Herod for living in adultery, states that he was wholly unconscious of the fact that he was doing a fine thing. Therein lay the splendor of the rugged Forerunner's course. He simply did what he would invariably have done under like circumstances, and what he would have expected any other true man to do. He did not have his eye on the galleries and his ears open for applause. The trouble with much of the denunciation of sin in this day is that it is too "stagy"—that those hurling anathemas against it seem to be chiefly seeking to gain for themselves the reputation of being courageous reformers. The self-forgetfulness and the eye single to the glory of God that characterized the Baptist are obviously lacking.

A HURTFUL FORM OF TOADYISM.

Are we not too much given to holding up high public officials as exemplary Christians, when their private conduct does not warrant it? We certainly think so. Men who do not hesitate to take long railroad trips on the Sabbath and who are constant patrons of the theater may be patriotic and honest and efficient in the public service, but they are not model disciples of the great Galilean. There is scarcely a church in existence anywhere in the land that does not contain members who measure up to a loftier standard of piety than any ruler on earth. We ought to quit this miserable form of toadyism. It is unworthy of us and is hurtful to the cause of Christ. Christianity does not need the prestige of great names to make it a conquering force. In the days of its mightiest power it had only the advocacy of humble peasants.

THE AFFINITY OF WORLDLINESS.

A correspondent writing us concerning a minister who had lately gone astray, stated that when he was pastor in his city he was exceedingly popular with the worldly part of his membership. This information did not surprise us. The world will love its own, whether in the pulpit or in the pew. There is a certain incompatibility between spirituality and carnality, between holiness and impurity. The very presence of Jesus was a rebuke to persons who were base and low and mean, and his sinlessness had much to do with developing the hatred that finally nailed him to the cross. The preacher who constantly is applauded by the irreligious would do well to examine critically both his life and the substance of his sermons. A pastor whose chief aspiration is to be generally popular, though he may still be moral and decent, is already spiritually fallen and groveling in the dust. For an ambassador of Christ, a low and selfish aim is one of the worst of apostasies.

"SACRELIGIOUS."

The following from the Wesleyan Christian Advocate of October 9, so exactly expresses our sentiments that we reproduce it with our hearty commendation:

"It is said that Mr. Andrew Carnegie is standing sponsor for an effort to put on the dramatic boards in the United States a symbolical spectacle, to be called 'The Prince of Peace.' This dramatic production is to be in the interest of peace among the nations. It represents Jesus Christ as the Apostle of Peace and consists of a series of realistic pictures showing the ravages of war drawn from history and the legends of the world. * * * People seeing what war is as shown in a picture might be stirred to opposition to war as they would not in any other way. But when Jesus Christ, the world's Redeemer, is used for theatrical purposes it is sacrilege and the Christian people of this country should frown it down and out. Already there has been entirely too much of the effort to make money out of the teachings of Jesus Christ—to turn Him and His truth into secular lines. It is time to stop it."

This is merely another case of doing evil with the hope that good may come of it—a course of procedure that is never wise. Not infrequently well-meaning persons seek to secure some desired benefit by methods that entail losses that far outweigh the gains accruing. The churchmen who are Mr. Carnegie's peace counselors ought to endeavor to wean him away from this hurtful project. Here is an opportunity for them to render Christianity a real service.

CHRISTIANITY IN JAPAN.

Ever and anon some uninformed person breaks out with the allegation that the work of Christian missionaries in pagan lands is a failure; but happily such charges are becoming far less frequent as the years pass, due doubtless to the fact that the success of the representatives of Christianity abroad has become so much more outstanding and undeniable than it was a few decades ago. Mr. Sherwood Eddy, in his interesting volume, "The New Era in Asia," which has been wisely placed in the course of study arranged for our workers in the homeland, thus describes the present status of Christianity in the Mikado's Empire:

"The growth of the Christian Church has been marked. Think of the growth of the last fifty years. The number of missionaries has increased during this period from 10 to 900; the Christians from none to 189,000, including 66,689 Roman Catholic and 32,246 Greek Catholic Christians, while the Christian community of adherents is two or three times as large as this. The Sunday schools grew from none to 1600, with 100,000 children under instruction. A leading Japanese estimates 'that there are in Japan 1,000,000 persons who are fashioning their conduct according to the principles of Jesus Christ.' Fifty years ago there was no Bible in public circulation; to-day its circulation is numbered by millions. Then there was then hardly a hospital or asylum in the land. Christianity has been the pioneer in establishing homes, hospitals, and refuges for the poor, the blind, the fatherless, the insane, the leper, the outcast, and the criminal. Such institutions were practically unknown in old Japan. Revenge was one of the cardinal virtues of Bushido, the moral code of the upper classes, but new Japan praises Christianity for its philanthropic fruits, and the adherents of the old faiths pay to it the tribute of imitation."

A BARNYARD CATASTROPHE.

The New York World tells of a lady at Waterloo, Ia., who, having discovered a spoiled jar of brandy peaches, threw them out in the yard to the chickens. Returning later, according to our contemporary, "She found several hens lying on the ground dead drunk and a number of the younger brood trying to investigate and ascertain what was the matter with a decidedly uncertain and unsteady gait. It is stated that several of the young cockerels apparently were trying to stand on their heads and turn somersaults backward for the entertainment of the pullets, which were clustered in a corner of the yard. By the next morning the poultry had recovered, but the inebriated ones clearly showed that they had the headache." We are inclined to think that this sister should have been arrested for cruelty to animals, for even if one does insist upon the privilege of cursing one's self with liquor, one has no right to afflict similarly the poor dumb creatures of earth.

PERSONAL AND OTHER NOTES.

Next Saturday, Oct. 17, is Orphanage "Work Day" in both Louisiana and Mississippi. Let everybody observe it.

The New Orleans Methodist Ministers' Wives' Club will meet with Mrs. J. G. Snelling at 1125 Fern Street on Thursday, October 15, at 2:30 o'clock p. m.

Rev. J. B. Williams, our pastor at Ponchatoula, La., is winding up a very successful year's work in that developing charge. We have in hand a brief summary of the results of his labors which will appear in the next issue of the Advocate.

The Sunday school of the Algiers Methodist Church, of this city, had its rally day last Sunday. Attractive cards were sent out with a view to securing a large attendance. Pastor Brown and his worthy flock are keenly alive to all of the interests of the Church.

Mr. Paul Renshaw, who is a son of Rev. J. S. Renshaw of the Memphis Conference, is advertising manager for the D. H. Holmes Company of this city, which is one of the largest mercantile houses in the South. Mr. Renshaw and his family are members of Epworth Church.

Rev. W. L. Doss, Jr., pastor of the Epworth M. E. Church, South, of New Orleans, reports as follows concerning his charge: "My work is moving along nicely. We had the usual summer let-down, but things have begun to pick up again. There are possibilities here, but our growth is not rapid."

The Wesley Bible Class of the First Methodist Church, of Tupelo, Miss., held its annual reunion in the Sunday school rooms of that congregation on Friday evening, October 9. The popular teacher of this class is Mrs. Vic T. Hoyle, who kindly favored us with an invitation to this interesting gathering.

After residing in Houston, Texas, for a little over a year, Rev. R. A. Davis, an esteemed superannuate of the Louisiana Conference has come to New Orleans to live and is making his home with his son-in-law, Dr. R. S. Crichtow, at 924 Lowerline Street, which henceforth will be his address. Dr. Crichtow is taking a medical course in Tulane University.

Our Centenary Church at McComb, Miss., will be served until Conference by Dr. I. W. Cooper, President of Whitworth College, and Rev. L. E. Alford, who is connected with the same institution. The McComb Methodists are fortunate indeed in having this brace of pastors assigned to them, each of whom is a workman that needeth not to be ashamed.

Rev. W. E. Thomas requests us to announce that the Methodist Quarterly Sunday School Union, of New Orleans, will be held at the Carrollton Avenue Church on October 20 at 8 p. m. Among those announced to take part in the exercises are Mr. I. N. Niebergal, Rev. R. M. Brown, Rev. W. L. Doss, Mrs. Cohen, Mrs. R. H. Harper, and Mrs. C. F. Niebergal.

In a brief business note to our office, Mrs. Guy Langston, of Byhalia, Miss., adds the following postscript: "Sister McKeown, the wife of our pastor, Rev. L. A. McKeown, who underwent an operation in Memphis some two weeks ago, continues to improve, and we are so thankful." We are very glad indeed to receive this good news and pass it on to the many friends of Brother and Sister McKeown.

Work has been resumed on the new parsonage at Okolona, Miss., and Brother Holder, the pastor there, who is finishing his quadrennium, states that he hopes to have it in readiness for his successor. Referring to a visit from the presiding elder of Aberdeen District, Rev. J. W. Bell, on September 27, Brother Holder says: "Brother Bell preached two very fine sermons last Sunday to the delight of our congregation. He always brings with him sunshine and good cheer."

Rev. W. S. Lagrone, of Clarksdale, Miss., states that the business depression produced by the European war has stopped his new church enterprise in that city, but that the plans are in hand and the project will be carried forward as soon as circumstances will permit. That this proposed handsome house of worship will be constructed in the near future we have no doubt. We make this prediction, having a personal acquaintance with both the people of Clarksdale and their most excellent pastor.

Mr. D. R. Barbee, and wife and child, of Mobile, Ala., are visiting Mr. and Mrs. J. D. Barbee, Jr., of Greenville, Miss. Mr. D. R. Barbee is the brilliant editor of the Mobile Register.

Rev. T. H. Dorsey, of Water Valley, Miss., is assisting Rev. W. H. Lewis in a revival meeting at Brookhaven, Miss. Brother Dorsey is in much demand for evangelistic work.

Rev. C. H. Herring states that the work is progressing fairly well on the Woodville Circuit, of which he is pastor. He hopes to make a creditable report to the Annual Conference in Columbia next December.

Writing from Vancleave, Miss., on October 5, Rev. W. L. Blackwell says: "We had a fine day here yesterday." Brother Blackwell's letter brought us several subscriptions, for which he has our hearty thanks.

From the Magnolia (Miss.) Gazette of October 7, we take the following: "Rev. N. E. Alford left Magnolia Saturday to go to Barlow, in Copiah County, where, during the absence of the pastor, Rev. S. C. Schultz, he will fill the pulpits of the churches of that charge. Mr. Schultz will spend several weeks in revival work in East Mississippi."

Rev. A. R. Hoffpauir, of Jennings, La., says: "The work here is moving along nicely. Rev. A. W. Turner, of Shreveport, was here recently and made a forceful and convincing address on the prohibition question, being heard attentively by an audience of several hundred. We are in the midst of a fight to keep saloons out of Jeff Davis Parish, and we need the prayers of all, that we may defeat the enemy."

Rev. E. L. Cargill, of Standard, La., under date of October 10, writes as follows: "Last Wednesday evening, about 6 o'clock, the saw mill here was destroyed by fire and Mr. W. M. Hazen and Mr. Lorean Dodson perished in the flames, their bodies being burnt to ashes. Brother Hazen was a steward in our Church at this place." We greatly regret to chronicle this sad occurrence, and we extend sympathy to the bereaved.

Rev. James Porter, of Oakland, Miss., writes: "This charge is in a good condition in every respect. The people are kind and religious. We had Dr. J. L. Weber, of Memphis, Tenn., with us in a series of meetings in the first part of the year. He is a devout man and a great preacher. Twelve were added to the Church. We are so pleased with the situation here that we should like to remain indefinitely. The next time you go to the General Conference, please have the time limit removed."

Rev. C. V. Breithaupt, our pastor on the Hounia Mission, held a meeting at Raceland, La., last week in which there were 24 accessions to the Church, and $800. was raised for a church building. The week preceding a series of services was conducted at Bourg, a community in which the Roman Catholics are very strong, and the attendance was surprisingly good, ranging from 100 to 250. Two deaconesses—Miss Iles and Miss Walker—are employed in work connected with this mission.

Mr. and Mrs. Edmund Taylor of Greenville, Miss., have announced the marriage of their daughter, Miss Eloise, to Mr. Charles Wesley Kittleman, of Chicago, on Saturday, October 10. The bride, who is a granddaughter of Rev. R. W. Taylor and of the late Dr. W. C. Johnson, of the Memphis Conference, and a young lady of many graces and accomplishments, has for the past three or four years been attending college in the North and Northwest, and the groom is a young man of sterling character and worth. The Advocate extends felicitations and best wishes.

Mrs. J. L. Miller, of Cruger, Miss., writes: "I wish to say that I, for one, have responded to Rev. J. W. Ramsey's appeal to Methodist ladies to write The Ladies' Home Journal a note of protest against the series of dancing lessons which is now being conducted in that periodical. I asked the editor to give us elevating stories instead of the instruction in dancing, and I hope that others who read Brother Ramsey's appeal will do likewise." Mrs. Miller has certainly set a good example, which our Methodist ladies generally would do well to follow.

On August 2, 1914, at the home of Mr. Maddox, the bride's father, near McCarley, Miss., Rev. G. A. Clark and Miss Minnie Maddox were united in marriage. Rev. W. W. Jones of Carrollton, Miss., officiating. Brother Clark is our pastor at Bellefontaine, Miss., and is a young man of fine character and promise. Mrs. Clark is an accomplished and capable young woman, and has given a good account of herself as a teacher in the public schools in different parts of Mississippi. Though a little belated in doing so, we extend to this worthy young couple our hearty congratulations.

Dr. R. H. Wynn, the accomplished President of Centenary College, spent last Saturday and Sunday in New Orleans, having come to the city to lend a helping hand in the educational campaign in Louisiana. While here he favored our office with an appreciated call and we greatly enjoyed our brief season of fellowship with him. He spoke encouragingly of the work at the College and stated that the attendance is about the same that it was last year. Dr. Wynn is the right man in the right place and he should have the hearty and enthusiastic support of all our preachers and people in taking care of the important interests committed to his hands.

Sunday, October 4, was a great day at the First M. E. Church, South, of Lake Charles, La. There was a fine attendance at the Sunday school, which is thoroughly graded and organized, and is doing an exceptionally fine work. In accordance with the recommendation of President Wilson, the 11 o'clock service was held in the interest of the cause of peace. A magnificent congregation greeted the pastor, Rev. K. W. Dodson, who preached an able and eloquent sermon from Psalm 29:10-14. The music and hymns were excellent and appropriate to the occasion, and the prayers for the cessation of the awful war raging in Europe were fervent and impressive.

Dr. A. F. Watkins, of Jackson, Miss., spent last Sunday in New Orleans in the interest of the Louisiana educational campaign. He remained over Monday and we had the pleasure of having him as our guest at luncheon at the noon hour. Dr. Watkins gave an encouraging report of the work at Millsaps College, stating that there are 25 more students in the college classes than there were last year and that the law class also is considerably larger than that of the last session. There has, however, been some decrease in the attendance upon the Preparatory School. The new main building is nearing completion and will be ready for occupancy in a few days.

Rev. G. W. McLain, of the North Mississippi Conference, and Mrs. Florence G. Martin were married in the Methodist parsonage at Carrollton, Miss., on Oct. 8, 1914, the ceremony being performed by Rev. W. W. Jones, our pastor at that place. Brother McLain has been in the itinerancy in North Mississippi since 1908, but instead of serving a pastoral charge this year, has been engaged in evangelistic work in which he has had considerable success. Mrs. Martin is active in church work and also takes considerable interest in the Woman's Christian Temperance Union. Brother and Sister McLain will reside at Carrollton until the meeting of the Annual Conference in Starkville, when they will accept an appointment at the hands of Bishop Waterhouse. We wish them a long, happy, and useful life together.

Rev. L. M. Lipscomb, of Sardis, Miss., recently preached for Rev. T. M. Brownlee, our pastor at Indianola, Miss., for ten days, and the congregations frequently overflowed the house. The entire community was impressed and the Church was greatly helped spiritually. To Brother Lipscomb's pulpit work, the Sunflower Tocsin made the following reference: "Mr. Lipscomb is a powerful preacher. He is earnest, conscientious, and brilliant. His logic is convincing and his illustrations are homely and effective. There is nothing of the shopworn, professional evangelist about him, and the old stock anecdotes are conspicuous by their absence." Brother Brownlee states that the business depression in the Mississippi Delta is very marked, but that he hopes notwithstanding this to wind up the year in good shape.

Randolph-Macon Woman's College opened its twenty-second session on September 17, with an enrollment of 560. Students are still matriculating and it seems likely that the attendance will reach 600. Statistics compiled by the register show that Virginia with 163 students contributes the largest number. Tennessee furnishes 45, Texas 36, North Carolina 35, Kentucky 28, Alabama 23, Georgia 22, Mississippi 19, Louisiana 18, Missouri 17, Pennsylvania 14, West Virginia 12, South Carolina 11, Ohio 10, New York 8, New Jersey 7, Indiana and Florida 6 each, Arkansas and Maryland 5 each, Oklahoma, Illinois, Connecticut, and District of Columbia 3 each; Kansas, Michigan and Delaware are represented by 2 each, and the following States and countries by 1 each: Iowa, Maine, Massachusetts, Minnesota, Nebraska, Brazil, China, and Porto Rico.

At the recent session of the Tennessee Conference in Pulaski, Tenn., the educational policy formulated by the last General Conference was heartily endorsed, and Rev. W. B. Taylor was named as commissioner to assist in effecting the transfer of the rights of the Church in Vanderbilt University back to the former patronizing Conferences, and he was instructed to accept no relation to any department of the University different from that which the Church sustains to the whole institution. The new university in Atlanta was endorsed and the support of the Conference pledged to it. This means, of course, that the Old Jerusalem Conference wants no Methodist Theological Seminary maintained in connection with Vanderbilt University while it is under the control of a Board of Trust that claims to be independent of the Church.

BUY A BALE AND HELP PAINE COLLEGE.

The movement which seeks to relieve the distress of our agricultural population by the purchase of cotton on the "buy-a-bale" plan will give temporary relief to the farmers and may be made a means of permanent advantage to them and to all other members of the community as well.

Our colored fellow-citizens from their long training are, as a race, especially adapted to farm life. They have done well in this sphere. This would suggest to us that the way to build up the agricultural interests of the country permanently is to build up the man on whom these interests are so largely to rest in the future.

The industrial development of the Negro is being well looked after by such institutions as Hampton and Tuskegee and also by many State institutions which are being multiplied in his behalf. But unless along with all this training in industry there be a corresponding development of the Negro's church life, we cannot hope for the future stability and progress of the race and for the mutual good-will, and co-operation of the contiguous races. Conscience is the one indispensable element of success in the man who does well his part of the world's work. This cannot be developed in the Negro, any more than it can in the white man, without his church.

Such institutions as Paine College are for the purpose of helping the Negro in his church life. It seeks to give him an educated ministry and leadership. It trains preachers and teachers under Church influence and is maintained and managed by the white and colored churches jointly. It seeks to accomplish two things: (1) To build the Negro's character on a Christian foundation; (2) To bring the two races into better Christian relations and thus fit them for co-operation in working out a common destiny.

Our appeal is to those who are buying a bale to help relieve the present distress of the farmer, to extend their philanthropy to Paine College. Let the man who buys a bale turn his warehouse certificate over to this institution for building and endowment. Thousands of people will no doubt be drawn into this "buy-a-bale" movement by their sympathy for their suffering fellow countrymen in the rural districts. In the way we suggest they may extend and enlarge their gifts to the permanent uplift of a whole race of farm workers. He who feeds the poor feeds three: himself, his blessed Lord and his neighbor.

During the present financial stress Paine College is finding it hard to collect funds sufficient for its pressing needs; but if our people will take the broader view of the situation which we suggest our present distress may be turned into a great opportunity. May we be led by the Spirit into this movement which seeks the glory of God and the betterment of our common humanity!

Yours for Christian progress,

J. D. HAMMOND.

Augusta, Ga.

President, Paine College.

LOUISIANA ANTI-SALOON MEETING.

The Annual Conference of the Louisiana Anti-Saloon League will convene in Shreveport on Nov. 10, at 7:30 p. m., in the Sunday school rooms of the First Methodist Church. On account of the reduced rates to the State Fair our friends will be able to attend the convention at a small expense and see the fair. Let every pastor attend and bring at least one layman with him. On account of the unusual conditions prevailing, the session will not be prolonged, but will be devoted exclusively to business which is of interest to the League. The Superintendent's report will show what has been done and suggest some plans for the future.

E. O. WARE, President.

A. W. TURNER, State Supt.

PEWS FOR SALE.

The officers of the Carrollton Avenue Methodist Church, this city, are anxious to sell the pews which are in the old church building to make room for chairs. The building is now being used for a Sunday school and pews are unsuited for the purpose. The pews are made of oak, and are in good condition. Any one interested will please communicate with Rev. J. G. Snelling, the pastor, or Mr. A. H. Ahten, Station B, New Orleans, La.

Mrs. NETTIE ALTHEA DAVIS was born on June 29, 1854, and died on Sept. 10, 1914. She joined the Methodist Church in September, 1896, and remained a consistent member till she fell asleep in Jesus! She left a dying testimony that all was well with her soul. She was the daughter of a local preacher, Rev. J. N. Broadway. Her mother was a very fine woman. She married H. R. Davis on June 18, 1871. With him she leaves a sweet little girl baby, several sisters and two brothers to mourn their loss; yet they rejoice in the hope of meeting her again. Thank God for a Christ that can sustain us in such an hour. Her Bible was her constant companion. Loved ones, grieve not, but so live in this life that you may be reunited in the world to come. Her pastor, ALGIE OLIVER.

NANCY (BARRON) TAYLOR was born on May 11, 1856. She was married to Brother W. M. Taylor on Nov. 20, 1872. There were born to them 12 children—5 boys and 7 girls—two of each preceding her to the other world. She was the eighth or ninth person in her home to be stricken with typhoid fever—the disease that took her away. She died on September 24, 1914, at the age of 58 years. She was for many years a faithful member of the Methodist Church. Sister Taylor's home was always the preacher's home. It was said that no preacher needed to be invited to go there, as there was always a standing invitation for ministers. The righteous shall be in everlasting remembrance, and an immortal spirit has been lifted up to God who gave it. From the heart of the loved ones there issues the secret cry, "How great the loss when one so loved is taken!" Be ye also ready, for in such an hour as you think not the Son of man cometh. Let her memory be a guiding star to God; for while there is a vacant chair here, she has gone to fill one up yonder. Her pastor,
W. B. WALDROP.

Mrs. LETTIE FULLER, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. J. H. Sparks, of Shady Grove, La., was born on October 7, 1856, and died on August 24, 1914, after an illness of about four weeks. Even as a child she was kind and gentle and greatly beloved. She united with the M. E. Church, South, in 1899 and lived a faithful and consistent life until her death, being always active in the work of the Sunday school and Church. She was married to Mr. J. W. Fuller on July 31, 1913. One little girl was given to them, who followed her mother two weeks after her death to that beautiful home where Jesus said: "Their angels do always behold the face of my Father which is in heaven." There are left to mourn her departure the doubly bereaved husband, her father and mother, three brothers and four sisters, besides many other relatives and friends. The funeral services were conducted by her pastor, Rev. W. R. Whatley, and the body was laid to rest in the cemetery at Shady Grove to await the resurrection morning. May the bereaved ones look to Him who doeth all things well, and may they so live that some glad day they shall go to meet the loved ones who await them on yonder shining shore.
A BROTHER.

Hon. JAMES CLIFTON STOWERS was born on May 2, 1846, near Fayette, Miss., and died on August 14, 1914. Brother Stowers joined the Methodist Church when 19 years of age and through the remainder of his life was a faithful and consistent member of that Church. He was married in the year 1865 to Miss Mary Fletcher Johnson. Their home was blessed with peace and reasonable prosperity in things material and was a home where the most wholesome Christian influences obtained. Of this union there were born six children—four daughters and two sons. One son and one daughter preceded him to the grave, and now there remain four children and the faithful wife to mourn his departure. This writer was Brother Stowers' pastor for almost four years and can truly say that a good man has gone home. I was often in his home and on every occasion was given the warmest welcome a pastor could expect. For nearly a year prior to his death he was sick a great deal, being deprived of the privilege of attending church regularly, for which he would insist on apologizing. I have heard but few preachers and no layman who were as able in prayer as was this good man. The confidence he seemed to have in God was perfectly child-like in its simplicity. Many a time was the preaching service sweetened and made uplifting to the whole congregation by his soul-stirring prayers. Brother Stowers was a man endowed with unusual mentality. He came of a family thus blessed. He was honored by the citizenship of Jefferson County by being elected to represent the county and senatorial district in the State legislature and there acquitted himself most admirably and proved the wisdom of his constituents in placing him there. Had he been a man seeking notoriety, he could have been as favorably and much more widely known. In his last illness he expressed a perfect willingness and readiness to answer the last summons, and often prayed for grace to enable him to await with patience the call of God to "come home." He knew whom he trusted. Those who are faithful until death will see him in the glorious hereafter.

SAGE AND SULPHUR DARKENS GRAY HAIR

Brush this through faded, lifeless locks and they become dark, glossy, youthful.

Hair that loses its color and lustre, or when it fades, turns gray, dull and lifeless, is caused by a lack of sulphur in the hair. Our grandmother made up a mixture of Sage Tea and Sulphur to keep her locks dark and beautiful, and thousands of women and men who value that even color, that beautiful dark shade of hair which is so attractive, use only this old-time recipe.

Nowadays we get this famous mixture by asking at any drug store for a 50-cent bottle of "Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Hair Remedy," which darkens the hair so naturally, so evenly, that nobody can possibly tell it has been applied. Besides, it takes off dandruff, stops scalp itching and falling hair. You just dampen a sponge or soft brush with it and draw this through your hair, taking one small strand at a time. By morning the gray hair disappears, but what delights the ladies with Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur is that, besides beautifully darkening the hair after a few applications, it also brings back the gloss and lustre and gives it an appearance of abundance.

Bay Springs, Miss.

Our revival work on the Bay Springs charge closed yesterday at Raleigh, Miss. We have had good meetings all over the work. Brother W. J. Dawson did some old-time Methodist preaching at Raleigh. I am sure that his work will be felt for many days in that community. . . . Brother Crosby held a revival at the Jasper-Smith Fair Grounds that resulted in much good to the cause of God and the Church. . . . Brother Lambuth Evans helped me at Stringer, Miss. He is a promising young preacher. Brother J. Loyd Decell did the preaching at Bay Springs, and the people say that they have never had better preaching by any one. We have had 23 additions to the Church and have baptized 12 infants.—J. H. Moore.

Paris, Miss.

Dear Dr. Meek: I suppose a short report from this work will be of interest to some. I have had a very good year on this charge. On the fourth Sunday in July I began my first meeting at Markette, where the pastor did the preaching with fairly good results. We had 12 accessions at that place, 4 on profession of faith, 1 by restoration, and 7 by letter. . . . Our next meeting was held at Paris, where we had the efficient help of Rev. W. N. Duncan, who gave us a series of very fine sermons. Brother Duncan certainly knows how to fight sin. We did not have any accessions there, but much good was done. . . . On the third Sunday in August we began a meeting at Sarepta, where we did not have any visible results. . . . On the fourth Sunday in August our meeting began at Pine Flat, where we had the help of Rev. R. G. A. Carlisle, a local preacher of Central Academy, Miss., who did very good work. We had 6 accessions on profession of faith and 1 by letter at that place. . . . During the week following the fifth Sunday in August we were in a meeting at Shady Grove, where we had Brother Carlisle again. Here we had a really good meeting with 3 accessions on profession of faith. . . . Our last meeting was held at Palestine during the second week in September. Rev. W. R. Williams was with us at that time and rendered us faithful service. We received 8 there on profession of faith; and on the third Sunday in September I received 2 more on profession at Shady Grove. I have received, in all, 34 members into the Church during the year—11 by letter and 23 on profession of faith.—C. Wesley Bailey, P. C.

Pineville and Tioga Charge, La.

Dear Dr. Meek: I was thinking this morning of the year that is almost gone and of what had taken place since I came to this charge. I wish to say this much for the people of the Pineville and Tioga charge: they are a very generous people and want to see things come to pass, though I know it is true of this charge as well as others that there are people who had rather see things come to pass than to help bring them to pass. It takes much prayer and agonizing before God for a church to prosper, not only on the part of the pastor, but his people must help him. Since we arrived here, just before the first of the year, we have been continually trying to help the people we came to serve. We have held five revivals on the work and we believe all of them were a spiritual uplift to the Church. We have received 27 members into the Church—12 of this number upon a profession of faith. We have also baptized 5 infants. To God we give all the glory for this. Rev. J. L. Lay, of the Simmsboro charge, assisted me in the first revival at Pineville, which was a great one. Rev. J. R. Roy, of Buckner, La., assisted me in the second revival at this point, in which he did a great work for God. I sincerely believe the work of these two brethren will be long remembered in this little town. At Pleasant Grove we had Rev. A. A. Phillips, who led the song service and did some of the preaching. This church was built up to some extent by our work. . . . Rev. W. D. Kleinschmidt assisted me at Tioga and did some very instructive work there. This brother understands the Word and can make others understand it if they will listen to him. While in this meeting his wife was taken sick and he was forced to leave us. It is impossible to say just what the result of this meeting would have been, but we are sure there was some good accomplished. . . . This is a great field and it is one which requires a man of experience and a lot of executive ability. For a man to come on this work with no experience is like letting land out to a man to make a crop who does not know how to plow. This, if I understand it, is a mission field, and one that is like unto a farm that has lain idle for two or three years. All the fences, all the barns, all the ditches have gone to rack. You see, there is a lot of work for a man to do, and unless he has had some experience and a lot of what Rev. Sam P. Jones terms "grit, grace and greenbacks," he most likely will find himself in the condition the missionary Baptist preacher found the wagon—all bogged down and his whole congregation sitting in the wagon telling him to come up. What this work needs is a man who is not broken down with old age or overwork, one that has had an experience of a few years and has a mind to do that which his Master has sent him to do. It will be a great uplift to this church and charge if the neighbors who live close by will encourage this work with their presence and their prayers and a small bit of their means, for this is nothing more nor less than a mission field. Come over into Macedonia and help us. Let us not confine ourselves just to a little field, but spread out and assist each other as we promised to do at the Missionary Institute at Jena, La., early in the year. Ye that are strong ought to bear the infirmities of the weak. Come, let us join hands and hearts and work for the good of the Church. Pray for me that God may use me to his glory.—J. F. Dring, P. C.

Sunday School

LOUISIANA NOTES.

By W. W. Williams.

The school at Columbia, La., has grown very much during the past quarter.

Rev. H. B. Perritt, of Selma, and his faithful assistants are having fine success in the Sunday school work there.

Rev. E. L. Cargill announces that good work is being done at his school at Standard and also in the one at Urania.

Rev. W. D. Kleinschmidt writes that his school at Jena has recently made a 25 per cent increase in attendance and that the interest has also grown appreciably.

Rev. H. W. May says that the Sunday school at Good Pine is taking on much new life now. It will be remembered that a convention was held there not long since.

Brother May states that the outlook for the Sunday school work in the Alexandria District is very much brighter than it was a year ago. He says: "We are planning for the rally and work days throughout the district."

Rev. H. N. Brown, our pastor at Lake Arthur, reports that Promotion Day was observed on the first Sunday in October by his Sunday school and that the graded literature was adopted for the Elementary Department. This school is growing in interest and numbers.

Mr. W. S. Holmes, superintendent of the Sunday school of the First M. E. Church, South, of Baton Rouge, informs us that his school is in much better condition than it has been for a long time. Practically all of the modern methods are being operated there.

Brother A. A. Phillips has been put in charge as pastor of the churches at Elizabeth and Oherlin to fill out the unexpired appointment of Brother Glass. He reports a very prosperous Sunday school at Elizabeth, under the leadership of Mr. Wiley Williams as superintendent.

Rev. B. H. Sheppard states that his school at Oakdale was re-organized on the first Sunday in June. He has a membership of 148 in Sunday school and a church membership of 105. There were present last Sunday 102, and the Sunday before 112. All the classes are fairly well organized, and are doing fine work. Next Sunday is Rally Day and the attendance mark has been set at 150. Twenty-five dollars has been raised for missions, which is certainly good for a school so new.

"Rally Day" has been held at Le-compte and several new classes were organized. Promotion Day was held in connection with Rally Day and some separate classes were made for boys and girls. Brother A. S. J. Neill, the pastor at this place, was to-day actually drawing the plans for his additional Sunday school room, which is to be back of the pulpit. It will be 14 feet wide (inside measurement) and runs the entire length of the church. The Elementary Department can be put in this space. Work on this addition will begin as soon as possible.

ADDITIONAL NOTES.

By Rev. P. O. Lowrey.

Mr. C. B. Vetter, church lay leader at Kentwood, has organized a Sunday school and established a preaching place at the Rose Hill school house, two miles east of town, and the outlook is good for a successful work there. This is the third school organized on this charge this year.

For the month of September the Sunday school at Ruston had an average attendance of 423 1/4 and enjoyed a splendid Promotion Day exercise on October 4. We suspect that this Sunday school ranks as one of the best in the State and that it is second in size only to the First Methodist Sunday school of Shreveport.

On September 27 a Sunday school was organized at Briceland with 27 charter members. Brother W. A. Brown is the superintendent and one of the best Sunday school workers in the State. Our congregation there is now in a pretty, unfinished new church, and the work is moving forward. Brother Brown went from Pollock to Briceland, having built up there one of the best village Sunday schools to be found at the former place.

In the recent Sunday school revival at Kentwood there were enrolled 75 new scholars in the different departments, and the attendance on the closing Sunday was 75 per cent larger than on the beginning Sunday. While this within itself would more than justify the effort, the best part of the work was the increased enthusiasm and efficiently gained by the workers in the house-to-house canvass and as a result of the various programs. Splendid addresses were made by the different speakers, the music was first-class, the Divine Spirit was present, and enthusiasm ran high. Thus, what had been worked out in theory by the pastor for others, proved to be in practice a success even beyond what was hoped and expected. The Kentwood Sunday school will never be the same again.

LETTERS THAT INSPIRE CONFIDENCE.

I wish very much that every reader of the New Orleans Christian Advocate could spend sufficient time in my office to read the thousands of letters which I have received from all parts of the country. I have printed several hundreds of them in a booklet, but I wish you could see the originals, for I would like for you to realize the wonderful results which they report in the relief of dyspepsia, indigestion, rheumatism, gall stones, kidney, bladder and liver diseases, uric acid poisoning and other conditions due to impure blood.

Before I was cured by Shivar Mineral Water and purchased this Spring, and before I received all of these letters from sufferers, I didn't take much stock in advertisements like this. I therefore cannot blame you if you doubt, but, my friend, I am absolutely convinced the Shivar Mineral Spring is the greatest curative mineral spring ever discovered, not excepting the famous springs of Europe. I have shipped this water to thousands of sufferers and they almost invariably report either a permanent cure or beneficial results. That is why I make the guarantee contained in the following letter. Sign it now and send it in.

Shivar Spring,
Box 17J, Shelton, S. C.
Gentlemen:

I accept your guarantee offer and enclose herewith two dollars for ten gallons of Shivar Mineral Water. I agree to give it a fair trial, in accordance with instructions contained in booklet you will send, and if the results are not satisfactory to me you agree to refund the price in full upon receipt of the two empty demijohns which I agree to return promptly.

How To Get Rid of a Bad Cough

A Home-Made Remedy that Will Do It Quickly, Cheap and Easily Made

If you have a bad cough or chest cold which refuses to yield to ordinary remedies, get from any druggist 2 1/2 ounces of Pinex (50 cents worth), pour into a pint bottle and fill the bottle with plain granulated sugar syrup. Start taking a teaspoonful every hour or two. In 24 hours your cough will be conquered or very nearly so. Even whooping cough is greatly relieved in this way.

The above mixture makes a full pint—a family supply—of the finest cough syrup that money could buy—at a cost of only 54 cents. Easily prepared in 5 minutes. Full directions with Pinex.

This Pinex and Sugar Syrup preparation takes right hold of a cough and gives almost immediate relief. It loosens the dry, hoarse or tight cough in a way that is really remarkable. Also quickly heals the inflamed membranes which accompany a painful cough, and stops the formation of phlegm in the throat and bronchial tubes, thus ending the persistent loose cough. Excellent for bronchitis, spasmodic croup and winter coughs. Keeps perfectly and tastes good—children like it.

Pinex is a special and highly concentrated compound of genuine Norway pine extract, rich in guaiacol, which is so healing to the membranes.

To avoid disappointment, ask your druggist for "2 1/2 ounces of Pinex"—do not accept anything else. A guarantee of absolute satisfaction, or money promptly refunded goes with this preparation. The Pinex Co., 200 Main St., Ft. Wayne, Ind.

FROM BROTHER CURRIE.

I came home yesterday, and went to church last night to hear Brother Gearheard preach. He is helping Brother Fontaine in a revival meeting here. His sermon was full of truth and I am sure he will do much good among this people and help Brother Fontaine to realize his desire to build up the church here. I held two good meetings in Mississippi; souls were blessed and I think great good was done. Two persons united with the Methodist Church on Brother King's charge in George County. I go to Covington next to help Brother Griffin. Pray that God may give us a victory. W. T. CURRIE. Clinton, La., Oct. 8, 1914.

FROM THE COLPORTER.

"Pastors' Reports to the Annual Conference," the new form to be used this year and during the ensuing quadrennium, are in better style than ever before. Every pastor should have a copy at once to study, so that he can properly prepare his statistical reports before he goes to Conference. Enclose one dime before you forget it, and receive a complete set of these reports by return mail.

I desire to say that the Presiding Elders of the Aberdeen, Durant, Sardis and Greenville Districts have supplies of these for their preachers. It may be well for others likewise to procure them in order to have prompt and correct reports.

Every pastor has received a special notice concerning the Discipline of 1914, and the liberal offers that are being made for its more general circulation, to which it is hoped all will take heed. We are thankful for the many orders already received and are ready for many others.

I have a limited stock of "Methodist Hymnals" (shape notes), "Young People's Hymnal No. 1" (round notes), and "Young People's Hymnal No. 2" (shape notes) which I desire to dispose of at reduced prices. Any one interested will do well to write for special low rates.

G. W. BACHMAN.
Winona, Miss.

Hood's Sarsaparilla has been tested forty years. Get it today.

COCKRUM CHARGE, NORTH MISS. CONF.

Dear Editor: Perhaps a report from this charge will be of interest to some of the readers of the Advocate. Our protracted meetings have all been held, beginning with the one at Independence, which began on the fourth Sunday in July, the pastor, Rev. R. I. Collins being assisted by Rev. W. V. Shearer, of Coffeeville, Miss. It was our privilege to attend but one service which we enjoyed very much. Brother Shearer did fine preaching with good results. The membership of the church was revived and there were 4 accessions. At Cockrum, beginning on the first Sunday in August, Rev. J. B. Randolph, of Como, Miss., did the preaching and did it admirably. There were 8 accessions and the membership was strengthened. On the second Sunday in August the meeting at Greenleaf began, the pastor delivering the first sermon and most of the preaching afterwards was done by Brother D. M. Miller, a local elder from Drew, Miss. The meeting continued for one week. Brother Miller did some excellent pulpit work and both he and his good wife, whose counsel and prayers contributed much to the success of the meeting, endeared themselves to the people of the community and they would gladly be welcomed among them again. There were 13 additions to the Church on profession of faith and 1 reclamation. Our last meeting was held at Palestine, which continued from Sunday until Friday night of the same week, our pastor doing the preaching on Sunday and Sunday night. On Monday Brother L. P. Wasson, of Shaw, Miss., came to his assistance and did the preaching from that time on, holding the unabated interest of the people from first to last. And by the way, as our pastor is finishing his fourth year with us, we would be glad to have Brother Wasson sent to us as our pastor next year. However, we claim to be a loyal people and will receive whoever may be sent to us, believing that what is best for all will be done. We had 6 accessions on profession of faith and the membership was greatly revived, many pledges being made for more faithful service to our Master's cause. There were many testimonials to that effect on the last night of the meeting. We wish, in conclusion, to say that our beloved pastor, Brother Collins, has wrought well during the four years that he has been with us, and we look forward with a feeling of regret to the time of his departure from among us. But we believe in the itinerant system of our Church and pray that God's blessings may be upon him in whatever field of labor he may be assigned at Conference. The interest in our Sunday school work has increased since our revival meetings, and our pastor is active in taking up the Conference collections. We hope to have them in full in spite of the depression caused by the disturbed conditions in Europe.

TETTERINE WHEN OTHERS FAIL

That's the great thing about Tetterine skin remedy. It does insist upon relieving the severest cases of Tetter, Ringworm, Eczema, Itch, Acne, Pimples, etc., when others fail down. Mrs. S. E. Hart, Cross Trails, Ala., says: "I used Tetterine for tetter which has been running for 5 years. Nothing gave relief until I used your remedy and one box made a final cure." 50c at druggist's or by mail from Shuptrine Co., Savannah, Ga.

A DAY OF PRAYER.

In response to President Wilson's call, the Carolina Church and community met at the house of God today for special prayer. Definite plans were formulated by the Church one week prior to the gathering. The services continued one and a half hours, following the Sunday school hour. The program consisted of earnest prayers, interspersed with sacred songs, and the appropriate discussion of topics pertaining to the alarming conditions, both in Europe and the United States.

The prayers were burdened with petitions to the great loving Father for peace among the warring nations of the Old World. These prayers were mixed with expressions of gratitude that the United States of America is at peace with the world, and that we have at the head of our great government a man who is a Christian gentleman, peace-loving, and God-fearing.

The United States loomed up before us in its inexpressible bigness and greatness as a Christian nation, when we realized, in a faint way only, that the whole nation was on its knees before the throne of God interceding for the stricken and suffering peoples of other lands. Never before did we feel and realize the power of concentrated and consecrated prayer. Such days furnish spiritual food for our souls as individuals and as a nation.

May the prayers of the people of the United States be answered and peace soon reign in every land, and the peace of God reign in every heart!

A. JOE BEASLEY.

IF YOUR CHILD IS CROSS, FEVERISH, CONSTIPATED

Look Mother! If tongue is coated, cleanse little bowels with "California Syrup of Figs."

Mothers can rest easy after giving "California Syrup of Figs," because in a few hours all the clogged-up waste, sour bile and fermenting food gently moves out of the bowels, and you have a well, playful child again.

Sick children needn't be coaxed to take this harmless "fruit laxative." Millions of mothers keep it handy because they know its action on the stomach, liver and bowels is prompt and sure.

Ask your druggist for a 50-cent bottle of "California Syrup of Figs," which contains directions for babies, children of all ages and for grown-ups.

If You Suffer From Catarrh Try This Pleasant Herb Smoke. Sent FREE By Mail.

Dr. Blosser, who has devoted forty years to the treatment of Catarrh, is the originator of a certain combination of medicinal herbs, flowers and berries to be smoked in a pipe or ready prepared cigarette. The accompanying illustration shows how the smoke-vapor reaches all the air passages of the head, nose and throat. As the disease is carried into these passages with the air you breathe, so the antiseptic, healing vapor of this Remedy is carried with the breath directly to the affected parts.

This simple, practical method applies the medicine where sprays, douches, ointments etc., cannot possibly go. Its effect is soothing and healing, and is entirely harmless, containing no tobacco or habit forming drugs. It is pleasant to use, and not sickening to those who have never smoked. No matter how severe or long standing your case may be, we want to show you what our Remedy will do.

To prove the beneficial, pleasant effect, The Blosser-Company, 204, Walton St., Atlanta, Ga., will mail absolutely free to any sufferer, a sample that will verify their claims by actual test. This free package contains a pipe, some of the Remedy for smoking and also some of our medical cigarettes. If you wish to continue the treatment, it will cost only one dollar for a month's supply for the pipe, or a box containing one hundred cigarettes. We pay the postage.

If you are a sufferer from Catarrh, Asthma, Bacterial Deafness, or if subject to frequent colds, send your name and address at once by postal card or letter for the free package, and a copy of our illustrated booklet.

No. Six-Sixty-Six

This is a prescription prepared especially for MALARIA or CHILLS & FEVER. Five or six doses will break any case, and if taken then as a tonic the fever will not return. It acts on the liver better than Calomel and does not gripe or sicken. 25c

It takes so little to make a child happy, it is a pity grown people do not oftener remember it, and scatter little bits of pleasure before the small people, as they throw crumbs to the hungry sparrows.—Louisa M. Alcott.

A DELAYED NOTICE.

Mrs. J. C. Clark, District Secretary of the Newton district, sent us a notice for her district meeting, but it reached us too late to appear in last week's issue of the Advocate, and as the meeting was held on Oct. 13 and 14, it is useless to publish it now. We regret this exceedingly, as Mrs. Clark was quite anxious for all of the auxiliaries to know about the program and other features of the meeting. Miss Hallie Buie, a returned missionary, was to be present, and we hope nothing occurred to prevent her presence at the meeting, for a missionary or deaconess can give an inspiration and impetus to a meeting which we, who are not actively engaged upon the fields, can never hope to do. This district meeting was planned by a consecrated, prayerful woman, and we feel sure that it was a success and that much good was accomplished.

We would say to the district secretaries and others who wish important notices to be published that they must reach us at least nine days previous to the time of their appearance in our columns.

DISTRICT MEETINGS IN LOUISIANA.

Monroe District, Winnsboro, Oct. 19, 20; Ruston District, Arcadia, Oct. 21, 22; Shreveport District (Noel Memorial Church), Shreveport, Oct. 22, 23; Crowley District, Crowley, Saturday and Sunday, Oct. 24, 25; Lafayette District, Rayne, Oct. 26, 27; Alexandria District, Bunkie, Oct. 28, 29; Baton Rouge District, St. Francisville, Oct. 30, 31 and Kentwood, Nov. 4, 5; New Orleans District, New Orleans, Nov. 2, 3.

Mrs. Abel Bliss and Miss Martha Nutt will go to the meetings at Winnsboro, Arcadia, Shreveport, St. Francisville, Kentwood, and Algiers. Mrs. Bliss and Miss Eliza Iles will go to Rayne and Bunkie.

Take note of these dates, and as these women go from place to place do not fail to remember them at the throne of God. They are giving their time and strength with the hope of being an inspiration and help to you. As some vital changes have been made in our work, this is a time for instruction as well as re-construction of many, so then let us

"Be strong!"

We are not here to play, to dream, to drift;
We have hard work to do and loads to lift.
Shun not the struggle, face it, 'tis God's gift."

HERE AND THERE.

Here.

Since 1830 some 334,426 Chinese have been residents of the United States. There are now 70,944 living here, of whom 46,262 are on the Pacific coast. About 10,000 were born in California. The census of 1910 reports 62 Chinese Buddhist temples in this country. It is probable that many of them are joss houses.

There.

Some results of Christian mission work in China:

A new educational system; establishment of railway, telegraph and postal systems; opening of mine and other industries; new government, republican in form; an anti-foot-binding society; abolition of slavery, especially the sale of girls as slaves; abolition of the system of concubinage; new standards of marriage; decrease of opium traffic; new medical system; the growing Church of Christ.

MISSION STUDY.

Why should I study missions? Because the Master commands it. "Lift up your eyes and look upon the fields." Because the inspiration for missions comes only from the knowledge of conditions gained in mission study. Because we derive a new understanding of and attitude toward the Christian religion. Because it widens our sympathies, and enriches our spiritual life. Because it promotes a more generous spirit in giving. Because it furnishes volunteers, also leaders, in all departments of work.

This is the month to organize mission study classes. The time has passed when you can afford to do without one. You cannot do efficient missionary work if you fail to organize a class in your auxiliary. Have you read that helpful little leaflet, "A Successful Mission Study Class?"

If not, we urge you to secure a copy without delay. Some one has said that mission study is the most effective agency to-day in giving missionary information. It is the dynamo, the power-house of the Church. It gives a great deal to a few people rather than a smattering to a great many. It deepens impressions and secures conviction because it permits expression. The realization of the needs of humanity brings with it a willingness to meet those needs with money, prayer, love, and service. Can you socially afford to be without a mission study class this next year?

FROM THE CORRESPONDING SECRETARY OF NORTH MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

I would like to call the attention of officers and members of auxiliaries to the report of Miss Ross, General Treasurer, for the second quarter, as published in the Council Bulletin for September. You will see that the total collections for the Foreign Department are $51,602.68. For the same quarter last year the collections were $52,235.63, a decrease of $632.95. In the Home Department the decrease is more appalling. In 1913 the collections for the second quarter were $37,498.82; in 1914 the collections for the second quarter were $31,946.35. The decrease is $5,552.47.

Just where does our own Conference stand in regard to this deficit and for what part are we responsible?

In the Foreign Department the collections for the second quarter of 1913 were $1,038.86; for the second quarter of 1914, $627.14, a decrease of $411.72. In the Home Department the collections for the second quarter of 1913 were $797.55; for the second quarter of 1914 were $672.05, a decrease of $125.50. Our leaders are begging and pleading for us to make a tremendous effort to have the collections for the third quarter increase so as to have three-fourths of the year's collections in hand at the end of the third quarter. The records for several years show that the third quarter is the worst we have financially. This is due to several reasons, chief of which is the fact that so many of our members spend the months of this quarter in some cooler climate, while those who remain at home have hardly enough energy to do more than hold meetings regularly.

Our membership statistics show 2500 women at work. If these women contributed 25 cents each in addition to what they have already paid or pledged, over $600 would be added to the treasury. We could give it easily and I would suggest that auxiliary presidents set aside a Monday in October for the collection of this extra money. Of course, some will not give it. Then let those of us who can double it and give for the women who would like to but cannot.

We cannot say that this general decrease is the result of the present panic, for the collections were all in before war was declared or even thought of by most countries. We have been mercifully spared the horrors of war, and while we are indirectly feeling some of its evil effects, bloodshed and destruction of property are not among them, and for deliverance from these horrors we should make a thank offering worthy of our deliverance. Financial retrenchment will inevitably follow this period of business stagnation; but let's remember that the high cost of living is common to all countries and the missionaries on the field will suffer a great deal more than we will at home. Let us retrench along the line of personal gratification—whether of our appetites or the love of the beautiful in dress—and strive to meet our missionary pledges. For the work we let suffer now when the doors are open to us in all parts of the world, would mean a set-back that years could not overcome. Let us face our obligation and meet it as a people who have been blessed above all other nations.

LOUISE DUNSTAN,
Conference Cor. Secty.

ALEXANDRIA (LA.) DISTRICT MEETING.

The Annual District Meeting of the Woman's Missionary Society of the Alexandria District will be held at Bunkie, La., on Oct. 28, 29. Each auxiliary in the district is urged to send one or more delegates. Visitors are invited from churches where the work is unknown.

We will have with us Mrs. Abel Bliss, President Conference Missionary Society of Shreveport, La., Miss Martha Nutt, missionary of St. Mark's Hall, New Orleans, and Miss Eliza Iles, Deaconess, of Houma, La. Please send names of delegates and visitors to Mrs. W. M. Mantiply at Bunkie, La.

Mrs. M. N. JAMES, Dist. Sec.

CORINTH (MISS.) DISTRICT MEETING.

The Corinth District meeting will be held at Baldwin, Miss., on Oct. 20, 1914. Mrs. Vic Thompson Hoyle, Mrs. J. M. Clark, Miss Lunnie Barcroft, Miss Mary Daniels, Mrs. S. L. Pope, and others will take part in the program. If you have not done so already, elect delegate at once and send name to Mrs. A. T. Stoeke, Baldwin, Miss.

MANY FAILURES ARE DUE TO HEADACHES.

A headache saps your energy and ambition. It kills your vigor and vitality.

Many have become not only nervous wrecks, but business and domestic failures, owing to the constant drain on their nervous systems by headaches.

Dr. Miles' Anti-Pain Pills have for the past quarter of a century proved to be the popular relief for headaches and other forms of pain. They bring the desired relief surely and quickly.

They contain no habit-forming drugs and have no bad after-effects.

People who have used them are only too glad to testify to their merits so that others may also be free from pain.

The Rev. J. A. Riley, of Trout, La., has the following to say:

"For over 10 years I have used Dr. Miles' Anti-Pain Pills whenever I was in need of a remedy for pain, to allay fever or induce a natural sleep. I also find that they quiet the nerves. I have used them freely in my family to the exclusion of all other remedies and have always found them to do their work to perfection and never in a single instance have they had any bad after-effects. I heartily recommend them as a safe, pleasant and effective remedy."

Dr. Miles' Anti-Pain Pills are sold by all druggists at 25c for 25 doses. Your money will be returned if they are not found perfectly satisfactory. MILES MEDICAL CO., Elkhart, Ind.

A COLORADO LETTER.

Dear Brother Meek: Am sending you $2 for a two-year subscription to The Advocate. Of all the periodicals that visit me none affords me so much pleasure as the New Orleans Advocate. Through I have been away from Mississippi seven years, my interest and love for the old home has never abated. Our Conference has just closed and was one of the best we have had. I am back for the fourth year and our new year begins well. We have a splendid property, with recent improvements to the extent of about $1500. This church has a good record. In twelve years they have had only three pastors, and as far as I can learn have paid all claims in full. This is the county seat of one of the richest counties in the State, and one of the centers of the strike districts. From our door we could see the fifty-two-hour battle waged between the strikers on one side and the militia and mine guards on the other. Glad indeed were we, when the Federals came and took possession of the field. It is to be hoped an agreement will be reached soon. The President is doing what he can and the strikers have agreed to accept the President's proposition. The strike has lasted one year and has been one of the bitterest in the history of the country, although few were killed, considering the battles, burnings, and depredations, only about fifty in all.

One good thing resulted: all the saloons in the districts were closed and with all the pressure that can be brought to bear, our Secretary of War stands firm and will allow no saloons to be opened as long as the Federal soldiers are on the field. We hope to have State-wide prohibition here next November.

We have one of the finest mountain views in the world and it has been my pleasure to spend much time in our great mountain ranges. The highest peak in the State is not far west of us and we spent one vacation in that great garden of nature. I have just returned from a fine trip over northern New Mexico.

Our James Wight is six months old and such a pleasure and delight to our home. We should be glad to have you visit us some time. I love the West. It is in many respects a great country. Galceran, after a successful ministry here, goes back to Mississippi. Jesse Johnson is here doing effective work. Marvin was as true here as there, a noble, pure, true man of God. Our Conference is small but is as fine and loyal a band as can be found anywhere. Ours is the only Methodism in this county.

With best wishes to you and your work. Fraternally,

J. A. McKEE.

Walsenburg, Colo.

THE BRAXTON (MISS.) CHARGE.

Dear Dr. Meek: I have just closed, with the exception of one, all my meetings on the Braxton charge. This is my first year here, and taking everything into consideration, I feel that we have had, so far, a very successful year. At the beginning of the year I thought of having some of my brother preachers to help me, but finally decided (not because I could do the work better), to undertake it myself. I had Brother M. L. White engaged to come to Braxton, but the school opening would have prevented him having a square deal; so I did what I could. . . . We started our campaign at D'Lo, the home of Brother W. N. Thomas, our pastor at Daleville, whose good wife attended several of the services, and the Lord was with us. We had a number of conversions, family altars were erected, and some of the strongest men were enlisted in the Master's work. Here we had 6 accessions, 3 of them being by baptism, and 3 infants were baptized. Miss Mamie Bell, the daughter of Brother W. G. Bell, one of my stewards at Braxton, took charge of the organ and rendered fine service in furnishing music. . . . From D'Lo I went to old Rexford. Here we had the old-time Pentecostal showers. There were many conversions and reclamations, family altars were erected, and men took enthusiastically hold of the work. We had at this place 26 accessions to the Church—20 of them by baptism; 5 infants were baptized. The people say that this meeting was a record-breaker. One young man was called to preach. . . . Next we went to Holly Grove, where we had some of the old-time shouting, where another man was called to preach, and we had 1 accession by baptism.

From this place we went to Bethany, where we had a good meeting. The people said it was really good. Men took a new start for God and young men learned to pray in public. Here we had one accession by baptism. . . . Jupiter was the place of our next meeting, where the services lasted only three days. (This is a school house). We went from Bethany to Old Harrisville, where we had one of the best revivals, the people say, for fifteen years. It was certainly a most excellent meeting. The people would begin to gather at ten o'clock in the morning, and after Monday, it would be five o'clock in the afternoon before we would have the benediction; in other words, we had a revival every day from 10 a. m. to 5 p. m. There were 7 accessions to the Church at this point—five of them by baptism, and more will likely follow. . . . I had to help me in these meetings only local preachers whose membership is within the bounds of this work, and they wrought faithfully. One, Brother Burk, stopped his farming and went with me from place to place. And he says he got a blessing out of all the meetings. Be it remembered that these local preachers are in the ministry for the first year, and we are hopeful that they will be largely useful in the coming years. I think that our Annual Conference report will be better than usual, though not as good as it would if the cotton situation and financial conditions were better. We praise God for the co-operation of the good people who helped to hold up the hands of the young preachers. . . . Our last meeting began at Braxton the first Sunday in this month. We have some as good people at Braxton as the country affords; but the preacher was on the sick list and did not have the necessary vim to put into this meeting. So I feel like the Braxton congregation has not had justice done it in the way of holding a revival, and may give it another chance before the Conference. Out of these meetings have come three preachers for the Methodist Church and one for the Baptist Church. We praise God and press on.—W. B. Waldrop.

LESS MEAT IF BACK AND KIDNEYS HURT

Take a glass of Salts to flush Kidneys if Bladder bothers you—Drink lots of water.

Eating meat regularly eventually produces kidney trouble in some form or other, says a well-known authority, because the uric acid in meat excites the kidneys, they become overworked; get sluggish; clog up and cause all sorts of distress, particularly backache and misery in the kidney region; rheumatic twinges, severe headaches, acid stomach, constipation, torpid liver, sleeplessness, bladder irritation.

The moment your back hurts or kidneys aren't acting right, or if bladder bothers you, get about four ounces of Jad Salts from any good pharmacy; take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast for a few days and your kidneys will then act fine. This famous salts is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia, and has been used for generations to flush clogged kidneys and stimulate them to normal activity; also to neutralize the acids so they no longer irritate, thus ending bladder disorders.

Jad Salts cannot injure anyone; makes a delightful effervescent lithia-water drink which millions of men and women take now and then to keep the kidneys clean, thus avoiding serious kidney disease.

10 CENT "CASCARETS" IF BILIOUS OR COSTIVE

For Sick Headache, Sour Stomach, Sluggish Liver and Bowels—They work while you sleep.

Furred Tongue, Bad Taste, Indigestion, Sallow Skin and Miserable Headaches come from a torpid liver and clogged bowels, which cause your stomach to become filled with undigested food, which sours and ferments like garbage in a swill barrel. That's the first step to untold misery—indigestion, foul gases, bad breath, yellow skin, mental fears, everything that is horrible and nauseating. A Cascaret to-night will give your constipated bowels a thorough cleansing and straighten you out by morning. They work while you sleep—a 10-cent box from your druggist will keep you feeling good for months.

REVIVAL AT BATON ROUGE, LA.

Our meeting at First Church, Baton Rouge, of which I have already written you briefly, is worthy of a more extended notice. In several respects it was remarkable. Many people who have been members of this church for a long time emphatically declare it to be the best meeting the church has known, while comments from all sorts of people on the streets are to the same effect.

We had secured the services of Brother Thurston B. Price, formerly of Siloam Springs, Ark., but hereafter of St. Louis, to lead the services. He had held a meeting for us two years ago with excellent results, and at that time, by his freedom from sensationalism and objectionable methods, had won the confidence of the community and given to many of our people a new definition of a revival. From the very beginning of the recent meeting the congregations were notably large and the interest manifest. Brother Price's preaching was forcible and its effectiveness was greatly increased by apt and telling illustrations. His propositions are clear-cut and definite and response to them generally means a thorough-going decision to surrender to Christ or to renew the vows of consecration. On these propositions hundreds of people came forward, fully sixty responding on the closing night.

The singing, led by Rev. L. C. Smith, who is well known to many of your Mississippi readers, was an attractive and helpful feature of the meeting.

As a result of the meeting the spiritual tone of our Church is distinctly raised, many having been led into more earnest service and clearer experiences. Our First Church will receive about 60 members, Keener Memorial will receive about 10 and others will go to other Churches. It was notable that many in all the Churches were deeply interested.

At our first prayer meeting since the meeting, which was held last night, the attendance was very large, and in an interesting testimony meeting about half of those present spoke promptly of the blessings received from the meeting, a number of these being men who had been converted during the meeting. It was frequently noted, in speaking of the meeting, that the men were strongly interested and effectively reached. Among those who will come into the Church are all classes—strong men, mature women, young people and children.

Comparing this meeting with the one held by Brother Price two years ago, I believe that the results of it are just about double those of the previous meeting in every way. I believe the church is in a better position to go forward than ever before.

W. WINANS DRAKE.

ASSESSMENTS FOR THE AMERICAN BIBLE SOCIETY.

By John M. Moore, D.D.

Our Church has no General American Bible Society Board, and so this great organization, through its Secretary, Rev. John Fox, D.D., has asked me to bring to the attention of our Church the action of our General Conference last May in regard to the assessment for the American Bible Society. The following recommendation of the Committee (Journal page 335) was adopted: "We therefore recommend an annual assessment for this cause during the next quadrennium of a sum equal to two cents per capita for our entire membership." I interpret this to mean an assessment of two cents the member in each charge. I am giving notice through the church papers to the various Conference Bible Boards and to the various pastors and churches that hereafter there is to be an assessment on each charge of 2 cents a member. This honorable society is doing a great service throughout the world by the distribution of the Word of God. Never has the call for the Bible been so great as to-day, not only in our own country, but in all the countries of the world. There is no cause that should appeal to us more strongly than that which is represented by The American Bible Society.

HOW TO INDUCE OUR VETERANS TO ATTEND THE ANNUAL CONFERENCE.

One of our veterans, a superannuate of the North Mississippi Conference, wrote me that his pastor said to him: "You must go to the Annual Conference; your railroad fare will be paid, and there will be money to get you a suit of clothes," or words to that effect.

If each pastor who has in his charge one of these veterans could assure him that his fare to and from the seat of the Conference would be paid, to say nothing of the suit of clothes, it would be a strong inducement to the veteran to attend the session of his Conference.

While Secretary of the Veteran Ministers' Association of our Conference, it was my custom to write to these retired brethren, and kindly urge them to meet us at the Annual Conference. In some cases a kindly and brotherly answer would contain a statement like this: "I am not financially able to attend Conference." Now, in such a case, if the pastor would mention the matter to only a few of the brethren, there is but little doubt that he would, like the pastor above mentioned, be able to say to his veteran brother, "You must go to Conference; your fare will be paid." And if physically able, the veteran would most likely, by his presence, gladden the annual gathering.

Brother pastor, try this plan to bring your elder brother to Conference. And, brother veteran, come and meet us at our next Ministers' Veteran Association and receive the joyous greeting and glad hands of your brethren.

Another inducement to our retired brethren to attend Conference would be to give them something to do during the session. If able to attend the session, they will be able to sit and serve as members of some of the working committees, and thus be made to feel that they are still a part of the working force of the Conference. More than one of our superannuates were on working committees at the last Annual Conference. We would like to see all of our superannuated and supernumerary preachers at Conference next December in the goodly town of Starkville.

The annual sermon before the Veteran Ministers' Association at Tupelo last year, which was preached by Brother S. M. Thames, was strong, clear, and of touching and tender pathos.

The writer having resigned his position as secretary of the Veteran Ministers' Association, Rev. H. C. Morehead was elected secretary. Rev. S. M. Thames remains president, and Rev. G. W. Bachman vice president of the Association. Starkville, Miss.

NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE

Editorial

"Heavier the cross, the heartier prayer;
The bruised herbs most fragrant are;
If sky and wind were always fair,
The sailor would not watch the star;
And David's Psalms had ne'er been sung
If grief his heart had never wrung."

England claims to be fighting to destroy "militarism" in Germany. It is a fearful curse and deserves to be wiped out of existence forever. But what about Great Britain's "militarism" on the sea? The money invested in a single battleship would build and endow a great university.

* * *

Aim at the highest in the Christian life. Too many are contented with meager attainments in grace. One must hunger and thirst after righteousness to obtain it. The price that one has to pay for holiness is large, but it is worth all and vastly more than it costs. It blesses one and makes one a blessing as nothing else can.

* * *

The Methodist Recorder (Pittsburgh), the official organ of the Methodist Protestant Church says: "The theology of our Westminster Theological Seminary is founded upon the rock Christ Jesus, and has for its supreme text-book the Holy Bible. A progressive orthodoxy is taught at Westminster, but Westminster always asks for the old paths, and verifies every new departure by the standards of divine truth." This is admirable. We wish that such was the spirit of every Biblical School in Christendom.

The value of self-discipline in the Christian life needs to be emphasized. One ought to keep himself continually under espionage. He should watch his words, his conduct, his habits, and his spiritual growth. He should frequently observe himself as mirrored in God's looking-glass—the Bible. And he ought earnestly to endeavor, by the help of the Holy Spirit, to correct what is wrong in his life and character. We do not believe that any one has ever developed into a well-rounded and majestic Christian without thus keeping watch upon and disciplining himself. This is an indispensable service that no one else can perform for us.

* * *

The mount of vision is needed, but not as an abiding place. Doing should follow seeing, and serving is better than enjoying. The Master taught Peter this lesson at the time of his transfiguration. The ardent apostle in the rapture of that glorious hour desired to have tabernacles built upon the radiant heights and there remain; but Jesus soon led him down the mountain slope to mingle with the multitude and minister to the needy. Busy workers to rescue the perishing, with enough foregleams and foretastes of what is to come to give them heart and hope, are what are wanted now; the time for rest and the full beatific vision will follow in the not-far future.

THE PEACE OF GOD.

The effort to reduce religious experience to a natural order that pertains to the common existence of the ordinary life is to refer back to the legalism of the Jews that Paul so ardently opposed, and is to lose the ministry of Christ and the noble history of the Christian Church for the past two thousand years. The reign of natural law and legalism are so closely related that they cannot be well separated. The natural order of the material universe would say that when one has sinned there can never be an effacement of that sin. It becomes merely a fact of experience that militates against the sinner. Legalism places the mark of Cain upon his brow and sends him forth to wander disconsolately up and down the earth finding no relief. It demands an eye for an eye and a tooth for a tooth. Of course, so far as the natural order will permit there can be alleviation. If it is within the bounds of power to pay for the crime or misdemeanor or other offense, one might know some ease of heart. But when the fact of sin far surpasses in consequences anything one can do to pay there is left a great debt forever hanging over the head. One's life may be given, but that is all one has; and, further, it might not help at all to cure the wound of wrong-doing. The man, therefore, without a Christ becomes a fatalist. If ever his foot slips upon life's uncertain and shadowy highway he is gone forever. There can be no miracle such as our Master wrought to right the wrong. He has confined himself to the certain and swift laws of the natural order that we know to be so relentless. Paul, however, said: "There is therefore now no condemnation to them which are in Christ Jesus, who walk not after the flesh, but after the spirit." The great opponent of legalism lifted up Christ to the world as having power to break the natural law of bondage binding one to sin and through his infinite mercy restoring one to a state of sinlessness and happiness. "The sting of death is sin; and the strength of sin is the law," he said, "but thanks be to God, which giveth us the victory through our Lord Jesus Christ."

It is an everlasting pity that men still endeavor to find peace of heart in the vain pleasures and temporal riches of the moment. The world cries for relief from anguish and suffering, but the antidote, self-prescribed and materially sought, is of the same perishable substance that has ever been the cause of this unenviable effect. In the early part of Christ's ministry when one day he had labored with the multitudes until fatigue had brought about the necessity of rest, he lay asleep in the stern of the boat in which he and his disciples were crossing the Lake of Galilee. The great storm that arose seemed to the disciples to endanger the lives of the Master and themselves. Christ was awakened, and they cried, "Lord, save us: we perish." The Master's answer, "Why are ye fearful, O ye of little faith?" may be surprising to the materialist, for was it not natural that the disciples be afraid when the ship was "covered with the waves?" Then what did Jesus mean by asking them why they were afraid and telling them they were of such little faith? He meant a severe rebuke to them in seeking safety and peace from the material world. Their spiritual vision was still blinded, the time seemed not to have been at hand when they should behold the greater light, and to allay their fears he arose, rebuking the winds and sea, and there was a great calm. The great lesson that Christ would impress upon his followers upon this occasion was that peace was not of the outer man but of the inner. The raging of the sea, the afflictions of the body, the sufferings of death, amount to nothing if there is true peace of heart within. The mistake of the disciples at this time seems to be the error upon which the whole world seems largely bent upon following after. If we are in poverty, if we are sick, if we are at war, then there is no more peace and safety. This distinctly is not the teaching of Christ. Perhaps the most peaceful moments in the life of Christ were when he was hanging on the cross praying for those who had persecuted him. There was infinite love and mercy in his soul. What difference does it make about temporal affairs if the inner man is right with God? Christ never came into the world to bring about a reign of peace for the outer man. There is nothing to indicate such an attitude in his life. He was sent by the Father to restore the peace of mind and heart to the sinner suffering from the consequences of his sinful acts. Certainly when tranquillity of soul has settled upon all the peoples of Christendom it will be evidenced by the outward semblance of peace.

But we place too much emphasis upon the temporal peace and calm. Consequently the seeking is in the wrong direction. There is a peace corporation organized at present with many millions of dollars behind it to work among the nations of the earth for universal peace. The futility of such a material move to adjust the differences of the soul and spirit of humanity is evidenced by the sudden and violent outbreak of hostilities among the leading nations of Europe. We must learn what the atonement of Christ means not only to the individual but to the aggregation of individuals. The civilized nations have made the sad mistake of adopting the secondary institutions of Christianity for the real fact of salvation. Cultivation of mind and body through Christ as a teacher and reformer has given an outward glamour to our pride of civilization that has led the nations astray. Isaiah prophesied that the nations "shall beat their swords into plowshares, and their spears into pruninghooks," but this prophecy cannot be fulfilled till men realize the words of Christ to his disciples: "Peace I leave with you, my peace I give unto you: not as the world giveth, give I unto you." C. A. B.

The poverty that hurts worst is spiritual poverty. This is true both as to an individual and a church. There is no destitution like that of a Christless soul. This is not generally realized now, but it will be when our blinded eyes are opened and we see things as they really are.

DO IT TO-DAY.

"When I have time so many things I'll do
To make life happier and more fair
For those whose lives are crowded now with care;
I'll help to lift them from their low despair.
When I have time.

"When I have time the friend I love so well
Shall know no more these weary, toiling days;
I'll lead her feet in pleasant paths always,
And cheer her heart with words of sweetest praise.
When I have time."

When you have time! The friend you hold so dear
May be beyond the reach of all your sweet intent,
May never know you so kindly meant
To fill her life with sweet content.
When you had time.

Now is the time! Ah, friend, no longer wait
To scatter loving smiles and words of cheer
To those around whose lives are now so dear;
They may not need you in the coming year—
Now is the time.

AN INSPIRING MESSAGE.

(The following are some extracts from the sermon delivered by Bishop E. E. Hoss at the opening of the Atlanta School of Theology in the Wesley Memorial Church, on Sept. 27, 1914.)

A truth always becomes more vivid when it is exemplified and illustrated in concrete instances. Let us try that method here, taking two examples from ancient and two from modern times. A greater contrast could not be imagined than that which existed in the first century between the Apostle Paul and the Emperor Nero. The Emperor was dominated by a supreme and cankerous selfishness. In vain might the annals of the human race be searched to find the record of another man more fully absorbed in the attainment of his own gratifications. All the means and facilities for such gratification were at his disposal. From the most eminent senators down to the meanest slaves, everybody in the empire crouched in humble subjection before his throne. The immense revenues of the provinces were poured into his treasury, and no one dared to raise any question as to the character or the amount of his expenditures. In his own imperial person were embodied and consolidated all offices and all authority. Far beyond the sense in which the epithet is applied to the Czar of Russia, he was an absolute despot. Coming into power at seventeen, he reigned for less than fifteen years, but in that brief period he drained and exhausted every form of fleshy indulgence. "The lust of the flesh, the lust of the eyes, and the pride of life" yielded to him whatever good such things can afford. He left nothing untouched that could either stimulate his wants or respond to their demands when they were once aroused. After the great fire in the city of Rome had cleared him a sufficient space, he reared his "golden palace," and, looking upon its ample proportions, said: "Now, at last, I am lodged like a man." But what a penalty he paid for his reckless and wicked dissipations! How the end came to him, you all know. Forced at last to fly before the awakened fury of an outraged people, he found a temporary refuge in a miserable hut. There for the brief space of a few hours he indulged in the mock heroics of a third-rate actor, mimicking the Stoic fortitude that he did not possess, and trembling like the base coward that he was while he talked of suicide as a final resort. In that squalid hovel a friendly slave—it is a tribute to human nature that even Nero could have one faithful friend—finally did him the favor to destroy his contemptible life. Does anybody suppose that those fifteen years of orgiastic revels held one single day of unalloyed peace or one single hour of true joy?

At about this time Saint Paul was making his missionary journeys, from Antioch to the West. He had no strong missionary society behind him, but carried with him only the fraternal blessing and the sustaining prayer of the living Church. For the most part he travelled on foot. Such food and raiment as he needed, he won with the labor of his own hands. Oftentimes he suffered from extreme bodily weakness. "A thorn in the flesh, a messenger from Satan," was sent to buffet him. He was persecuted by his enemies, maligned by false brethren, deserted by his closest friends. His "golden palace" was the loathsome dungeon of the Philippian jail, into which, with his back still bleeding from the licitor's lash, he was cruelly thrust, and his feet made fast in the stocks. We should hardly expect him under such circumstances to be in an ecstatic frame of mind; yet as we listen we hear the voice of prayer and the jubilant notes of Hebrew Psalms issuing from his lonely cell. In his closing days we know that he stood on the very mount of vision, and searched the inmost heavens with keen prophetic eye. Old, poor, infirm, he was; but still strong in faith, giving glory to God. Whenever he spoke the ring of triumph was in his voice. Behind him there stretched the history of an unbroken consecration: before him there lay the fair prospect of an eternal reward. His last words are a veritable swan's song: "I have fought the good fight; I have finished the course; I have kept the faith. Henceforth there is laid up for me a crown, which the Lord, the righteous Judge, will give unto me in that day."

No two men in the eighteenth century were farther apart than Lord Chesterfield and John Wesley. The former was the perfect type of the accomplished man of the world. He had high social position, great wealth, and elaborate cultivation. Yet he organized his whole life upon the theory of consummate egoism, and consistently adhered to the doctrine that this world is a lemon to be squeezed for all the juice that is in it. In his letters to his son, he distinctly maintains that a refined, calculating, and agreeable selfishness is the only thing proper for an accomplished gentleman. That other people have rights which are too sacred to be invaded he throws out of account. Push yourself; carry your own points; secure your own pleasures—this is the very essence and substance of these Satanic epistles. I call them Satanic; and so they are, in spite of all their fine literary finish. Baseness is none the less baseness when it clothes itself in purple and fine linen, takes to itself grand and gracious airs, covers its face with the insinuating smile, and woos to its awful purposes by all the charm of engaging manners. That the noble lord should come to a morose and gloomy old age, his hand against every man and every man's hand against him, and should at last "put out to sea" with the waters "moaning on the bar," is only what might have been expected.

John Wesley on the other hand is our best modern example of thoroughgoing disinterestedness—the true Saint John of the later Church. While the flush of young manhood was yet upon him, he began to "look not upon his own things, but upon the things of others;" and without break or pause he pursued this course down to a patriarchal old age. With a wide and copious scholarship that would have made him an ideal university professor, he became the apostle of the common people. With a capacity for affairs that would have enabled him to amass a fortune, he gave away all his earnings except a bare subsistence. For three score years and more he carried the world on his heart. There was no form of human suffering that he did not seek to alleviate. The grimy collier toiling in the underground chambers where he could hear the sobbing of the outer sea, and the poor Negro, driven by a cruel master on a rice or cotton plantation in South Carolina, or festering and rotting in the foul hold of a British or Yankee slave-ship, were both alike the objects of his personal solicitude. Ambition, avarice, the love of applause or of gain—these all were entirely foreign to his mind. Ease, luxury, comfort—he did not care a fig for them. But it is only the sober truth to affirm that as far as real living and the blessedness of it are concerned, John Wesley had a richer experience in an hour than Lord Chesterfield had in fifty years. It was exceedingly fit that when the great evangelist came to die his last testimony should be: "The best of all is, God is with us." His passage through the world was a bright and shining pilgrimage, and his going out of it was an abundant entrance into the everlasting kingdom of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ.

Who was Prime Minister of England when Whitefield and Wesley began their mighty work? Can anybody in this audience tell me? And were there not divers and sundry Roman governors and other titled officials of whom the modern world would never have known but for the fact that they have been lifted out of obscurity by virtue of their casual connection with the humble apostle of Jesus Christ?

It is possible that each one of you, in your own place and after your own measure, may glorify Christ by walking in His footsteps and reproducing His deeds. I shall not stop here to point out the particular tasks that you should take up and discharge. Far be it from me to assume the functions of a petty drill-master on this or on any occasion. Fortunately for you the lines of obligation are likely to be distinctly marked out before you by the hand of Providence. You remember that wonderful passage in George Eliot's greatest book, in which Savanarola says to Romola when he finds her weeping from her unworthy husband: "Go back, my child; God makes our duties for us; we do not make them for ourselves." The age in which we have our existence, the families to which we belong, and nearly all the environments of our earlier and later days, are matters of Divine appointment, and wholly beyond our control. But we are bound to believe that all these things are so ordered as to call out into amplest exercise our best and noblest powers. The drafts that are every day made upon us for thoughtfulness, for forbearance, for sympathy, for helpfulness, are drawn by our Heavenly Father. To allow them to go to protest, is to dishonor him. Up to the top-notch of our ability we must meet them.

It is the height of folly to moan because our surroundings are not more pleasing than they are. Not yonder in the cloudland, where airy castles are built and golden dreams are spun, but here upon the solid earth, in the tame, prosaic round of our daily tasks, we must accomplish our mission and work out our destiny. The faces of parents and children, of brothers and sisters, of friends and acquaintances, are a constant appeal to us for the exercise of our highest wisdom and our tenderest love. To ignore this appeal, in the vain search for some other and more agreeable work, is to fight against God and to convert our stay upon this earth into a meaningless puzzle and a useless parade. To shirk and evade these open and manifest obligations is to be guilty at once of folly and of presumption. There can be nothing but misery and sorrow in the effort to substitute any plan of our own forming for the one that God in Heaven has ordained.

When our late Civil War came to an end it left nearly all the great leaders of the South in penury. But so revered and honored was Robert E. Lee that offers of aid came to him from numerous sources both at home and abroad. With dignified courtesy he declined them all, not wishing to be a pensioner on any man's bounty while his people were in distressing want. Finally he received an overture to become president with a great salary of a newly organized life insurance company. His answer was: "But, gentleman, I know nothing of the business." When told that he was not expected to do anything except lend his name, he replied: "If my name is worth $50,000 a year, don't you think I ought to take good care of it. I can not consistently lend my name to a business which it is impossible for me to supervise." Just at that juncture, one of his daughters casually said to some friends: "They offer my father everything except what he wants, and that is a chance to make a living by doing some honorable work." Out of this remark, so it is said, came his election on a salary of $1500 a year to the presidency of Washington College—now Washington and Lee University, at Lexington, Virginia.

The famous Commodore Matthew F. Maury, whose studies of ocean currents and related phenomena had already made him one of the greatest benefactors of modern commerce, received tempting solicitations, including large fortunes and patents of nobility, both from the Emperor of France and the Czar of Russia. But he too felt that it would be cowardly to desert his people in their time of trouble, and took a humble professorship in the Virginia Military Institute.

And so it came to pass that in the same little town that is hidden away in the Valley of Virginia, and that holds the mighty ashes of Stonewall Jackson, these two survivors of the great catastrophe, whose names had been borne on the trumpet blasts of fame around the whole world, took up the task of teaching the Southern youth by both precept and example how to bear with dignity "the slings and arrows of outrageous fortune," and to glorify days of defeat and disaster by walking humbly before God and serving their fellow-men. It is not strange that with such an example before her eyes the South should have arisen from her ashes and put on once more the garments of strength and beauty. In the face of such achievements let no man despair or be downhearted because the odds seem to be against him.—Wesleyan Christian Advocate.

PRECIOUS TREASURES GIVEN TO OUR NEW UNIVERSITY.

Miss Mary Wilkinson of New Orleans, the granddaughter of Bishop Keener, has given to our new University in Atlanta some most valuable and interesting things from the collection which she inherited from her illustrious grandfather. Among these rare treasures of historic interest are the New Testament of Bishop Asbury and Bishop Asbury's razor; a wax image of John Wesley made with Wesley in the presence of the artist, which Bishop Keener believed was the only original likeness of Wesley in America; letters of John Summerfield and a statuette of Stephens, our first missionary to Mexico, who fell there as a martyr by the hands of a fanatical mob.

This contribution adds much to the rich collection of Wesleyana already in the Wesley Memorial Building. The granddaughter has put these precious things just where her grandfather would have placed them if he had lived until now. No man among us would rejoice more than Bishop Keener at the founding of our new University if he were still in the flesh. Perhaps he is rejoicing over it.

CONCERNING BONDS.

Dear Doctor: Had you ever thought about the different sorts of bonds there are, and that some of them are agreeable and some very disagreeable? A lot of times when preachers and other public speakers begin talking about wealth and about social questions they get warmed up and then they have something to say about houses and lots and stocks and bonds. They tell us that these represent the wealth of some people. From all that I have been able to learn people are very glad indeed to be known as those possessed of this kind of bonds. When a person gets so that he is able to buy bonds, he is usually a person of considerable wealth. This is a kind of distinguishing mark. People like this begin to call themselves "capitalists." Other people call them capitalists, too. To most people there is a degree of satisfaction in this. It is a gratification to their pride. Furthermore, when one has bonds like these, he always feels like it would be possible to sell these bonds and turn them into money. With this money he would be able to purchase food and clothing and other necessities of life, as well as many luxuries. There are few of us who would object to the possession of wealth in the form of bonds.

There are other kinds of bonds that tie things together. Sometimes these are only ordinary strings and cords. But they are bonds because they hold the things together. Then there are unseen bonds that bind people to different things and to one another. How beautiful and what a delight is the bond that binds together devoted members of the same family group! They have the same common interests. Though they may be far separated, they are yet bound closely together. How fearful is it when something arises to break these bonds and to bring about a separation! A bond something like this in nature is that binding together different people in the same organization. It may be an organization for commercial purposes. It may be one that has been formed for social ends or for civic improvement. Those who have entered into this organization together have common interests and are bound together by these interests that have thus become to them bonds.

When Paul made his defense before Agrippa he had something to say about "bonds." These were different from any of these other kinds. He wished that Agrippa and those sitting with him might be even as he was, "except the bonds." These bonds were the fetters that bound him and that marked him to be a prisoner, with the possibility of being a criminal also. Men may take delight in bonds that mark them as men of wealth. They may rejoice in the bonds of family love that bind together the different members of the same family. They may gladly bear the bonds that join them to others with the same common interests, be these commercial, social or civic. However this may be, there are few men who delight in bonds that mark them as being prisoners. These bonds become very irksome and hard to bear. The Russian prisoners in bonds and thrown into a Russian dungeon do not delight in these bonds, even though they know that they are suffering for the great cause of freedom in that land of oppression. Paul bore his bonds patiently, though he knew that they were upon him unjustly. How much rather would he have been free to have presented the gospel of Christ to peoples in different lands. Yet, if the gospel of Christ might be preached by means of his bonds he was glad.

Simon offered to Peter and John money that he might have the power to bestow upon others the gift of the Holy Spirit. Peter was moved to righteous indignation by such an offer. He told Simon that he needed to repent or else he would be lost, for he was still in the "gall of bitterness and the bond of iniquity." Here was still another sort of bond. This is one that concerns me very much, Doctor. I rejoice in the bond that binds together the different members of the same family in love and in affection. I am glad to see men and women bound together with some noble purpose to advance the interest of humanity or to make the nation better. These are good. I am not much concerned about the bonds that bind the prisoner of law. God has been good to me and has helped me to keep out of the grip of the law. With his help, I will continue to do so while I live. And as for the kind of bonds that represent wealth, I am not much concerned about them either, for these are far beyond my reach. However, there is another sort of bond that does give me concern and thought day after day. This is the kind that Peter mentioned when he spoke to Simon.

The bond of iniquity is the bond that binds one to a life of sin and of iniquity. Is this a delight? Is there anything good that comes from it? Do men seek after it? There are some that seek after it. There are some who delight in this bond. They are glad to be held by it. It is a delight to them. This is true as long as iniquity pleases the senses. The pleasures of sin and of iniquity become the bonds that bind men to lives lived without reference to God or the commandments of God. These pleasures after a while, if persisted in, become even more powerful than the fetters that bind the criminal and the prisoner. How many are they who have felt this powerful bondage!

Iniquity was at first a delight. It gave pleasurable sensations. These may have been of the body and have been low and vile; they may have been of the intellect and also have become equally low and vile. However, they were pleasurable, and men have been willing to bear the bonds that have bound them to this pleasurable iniquity. They have delighted in this. It gave them a degree of satisfaction. But the time will certainly come when the contents of the cup of pleasure are gone and only the dregs are left. Now there is nothing except that which stifles and strangles remaining in the cup that once gave such great satisfaction and pleasure. The bonds formerly lightly holding the captive and giving sinful delight have now become like the heavy shackles that bind the slave in service to an intolerable master. Finally, the bearer of these bonds becomes weighed down, so that he has no strength left within to lift himself up and look another in the face with that light in his eye that marks him to be a man who has won the victory over himself and in the world.

How many are there who have fallen into this direful condition! They go through life with a shuffling gait and a downcast look of the face. Their gait is as it is, because of the bonds they wear, which are like the chain that binds the ball to the ankle of the poor bond slave. The foot cannot move with its accustomed agility. The mind is filled with vileness and with wrong. The eye is no longer clear and bright. It has lost the power that comes as an assurance from the mind that is free from iniquity. Even the very intellect has come to be in bondage and is bound with the fetters of vice. Who would not be free from such bonds—bonds of habit, of dissipation and of fearful sin? The delusive pleasures of sin, like beautiful flowers strewn along the way which after a while fade and give place to the noxious weed giving forth only death instead of the sweetest of odors, have led many poor victims into intolerable bondage where the bonds of iniquity bind with the grip of death. How may such persons become free? Multitudes of them would gladly be free. Only by turning to the Christ who came to break the yoke of bondage and to set free the captive may these be free. Let all such turn to him who is able to break their bonds. But how much better that those already free remain so and never fall into this fearful bondage of iniquity!

Doctor, I know that you would rejoice to see all men freed from this bondage; I would.

Your ever faithful,

WILLIAM.

A CALL FROM THE WAR ZONE.

The war had scarcely begun when a cry came from the heart of Germany to the American Bible Society, "for Christ's sake," to send the Scriptures in German, French, Russian and Polish. Already four such appeals have come and others are yet expected. The following cablegram is no doubt one of the last to come over the German Cable:

"American Bible Society: For charity work among soldiers, we need urgently German, Russian, French and Polish Testaments, parts of Bibles and money. Help us for Christ's sake. (Signed) Christian Tract Society. Lehmann."

The Foreign Bible Societies are doing their utmost to place a Gospel in the hands of every soldier before he goes into battle, but under the serious handicap of war time conditions, the task has proven too great for them alone. They have called on America. The American Bible Society has and is responding as generously as possible to these appeals, but since the shadow of Europe's war has also mightily increased their task at home and crippled their resources, they are not nearly able to fully meet the need.

Since we will buy a Gospel in any language, it has been suggested that the Sunday schools help in this cause. To this end the American Bible Society wishes to call attention to this opportunity through Superintendents to Sunday schools of every denomination. In this, the Society simply offers its services in conveying without cost, to the places of need, any funds that may be contributed for this cause.

Pastors, present this special call in connection with your regular annual collections for the American Bible Society, and we believe it will help raise your offering beyond the amount assessed. Thus will the Home and Foreign work both be advanced. We must not overlook the needs at our own door, and at the same time, this emergency call should be met. Let us do both.

The Louisiana Educational Campaign

A BRIEF STATEMENT OF THE EDUCATIONAL SITUATION IN LOUISIANA.

The interests of the Louisiana Conference in the work of Christian education are centered in two institutions of learning, namely Centenary College of Shreveport, and Mansfield Female College, at Mansfield, La. These institutions are independent of each other, having separate boards of trustees and faculties. A few years ago, it seemed that the Conference was practically unanimous in the opinion that they ought to be correlated; but efforts to work out a scheme of correlation which would be satisfactory to the boards of trustees and the Conference have proved abortive. The one connecting link between the institutions is their joint ownership by the Louisiana Conference, which is represented in its relation to them by the Conference Board of Education.

We had thought that the reports to the last Annual Conference from the trustees and presidents of these institutions had been fully enlightening to the members of our Conference and the Methodists of Louisiana. However, within the past few weeks we have discovered that there is still a lack of appreciation of our situation, based upon a lack of information. We invite the earnest attention of our people to the following facts in relation to our educational situation:

CENTENARY COLLEGE.—Our plant at Shreveport consists of a forty-acre campus, beautifully situated, upon which we have a single building, which serves all the purposes of a dormitory, kitchen, dining room, class rooms, etc. This building cost $35,000. There is an indebtedness against it of $7500. Our tenure of the property in Shreveport is conditioned upon our maintaining an institution of learning offering courses leading to A. B. and B. S. degrees for twenty-five years. At the end of this time the campus becomes the property in fee simple of the Louisiana Conference. Six years of this period have elapsed.

Under the regulations of our Church no institution can give the degree of A. B. or B. S. without having seven professors giving their entire time to college work, and an assured income of not less than $5000 in excess of the income from tuition, fees, etc. The building, repairing and maintenance of the College, since its removal to Shreveport, have been made possible by a voluntary tax paid by the citizens of Shreveport, which has amounted to between $3500 and $4000 per year. This tax has one more year to run after this one. All that remains from this source will be required to meet the indebtedness. To maintain the college with the present faculty will require an income of at least $3000 above that derived from tuition and fees, plus $1600 due from the Conference. This statement suffices to show the urgent demand for an endowment of not less than $50,000. Our endowment at present amounts to about $6000.

MANSFIELD FEMALE COLLEGE.—Four years ago this institution was running behind in its current expenses from $1500 to $2000 per session. In addition to this there was a heavy mortgage over the property. The Annual Conference which met in New Orleans in 1911 authorized the floating of bonds amounting to $25,000 to pay off the indebtedness of the institution. In January, 1912, these bonds were successfully floated through the efforts of Rev. N. E. Joyner, then Secretary of Education. They are twenty-five year bonds, upon which we pay six per cent interest. One bond of $1000 must be retired January 1 of each year. The interest is due semi-annually, payable on January 1 and on July 1. Two of the bonds have been paid, and the interest to January 1, 1915.

The assets of the Board of Education with which to meet this obligation are confined to what remains each year from the collection for Conference Education, after $1600 has been paid to Centenary College, as per contract with the people of Shreveport.

Since the bonds have been floated, the college has been able to meet all its running expenses, and carry over enough balance each session to meet necessary improvements to property, which has approximated $2000. The Board of Education has had to borrow from time to time to meet the payments of bonds and interest. To meet the obligations accruing January 1, 1915, and pay what we have borrowed will require $3780.

In view of these facts, we would urge the necessity of the payment in full of our assessment for Conference Education. Our receipts from this assessment last year amounted to $3499. Our obligations at the approaching Conference, according to the above statement, will be as follows:

Centenary College .....	$1600.00
Mansfield College .....	3789.00
Total .....	$5389.00

The full collection of our assessment of $7000 will enable us to meet the above obligation, and add $1600 to our appropriation to Centenary College.

Thus, it will be seen that full collections each year will wonderfully assist in the solution of our educational problem. We feel that our situation is one which should appeal to every preacher in our Conference, and to every member of our Church in Louisiana. PAUL M. BROWN, Secretary of Education of the Louisiana Conference. Oct. 17, 1914.

WAKE UP OR GO DOWN.

In the Episcopal Address to the General Conference, held in Oklahoma City, was this suggestive paragraph:

"It is not improper to say that the Roman Catholic Church will surely maintain its schools and instruct its children and youth. If the Protestant Churches should retire from the work of education, or should do their educational work less vigorously, which would be equivalent to retiring from it, the final outcome in this country would be a struggle between Romanism on one side and secularism on the other. Such a result can not be contemplated with composure."

This paragraph from the address of our Bishops to the General Conference finds emphatic illustration and striking confirmation by the bequest of Mr. James Campbell, who has just died in St. Louis, and has bequeathed $25,000,000 to the St. Louis University, the educational institution of the Jesuits located in that city. This large sum is to go to the Medical Department of that school. Concerning the bequest the St. Louis Globe-Democrat prints the following:

"The St. Louis University School of Medicine will have at its disposal the largest fund of any similar institution in the world when the James Campbell millions are finally released to the institution, according to Dr. H. W. Loeb, dean of the medical department of the university.

"Dr. Loeb was overjoyed last night when he was told of the provisions of the will and said the money could not have been placed to a better advantage.

"The news is a great surprise to me and others of the faculty, as I never expected Mr. Campbell would make such a liberal bequest to the university.

"I know that many of Mr. Campbell's friends at different times spoke to him of the value of leaving a substantial bequest to the university's medical school.

"If the provisions of the will are fully carried out, it means that the St. Louis University School of Medicine will have at its disposal for general educational purposes a larger fund than any other similar institution in the world.

"It will place St. Louis University's department of medicine ahead of that department of Harvard University, which has between $6,000,000 and $8,000,000 for its own use, and will enable St.

Louis University to compete favorably with the Rockefeller Institute in research work."

This is the way things are done by the Roman Catholics. A Methodist layman of St. Louis gave a few years ago several millions to an independent university in St. Louis; but Mr. James Campbell, a Roman Catholic, gives his money to an institution of his own Church. It would seem that it is perfectly safe for a man to trust with his money the Church to which he commits his spiritual interests.

It will be observed that this immense bequest is given to the medical department of the St. Louis University. Mr. Campbell seems not to have raised the questions raised by some Methodists about the ability of the Church to own, control, and direct a university. He never seems to have thought of the inability of his Church to run a medical school. He appears to have known nothing of a Church being related to a university "sympathetically" and "co-operatively" only. He intended that the Church should "own and control" this great medical school made possible by his money. Mr. Campbell did not deceive himself with nonsense in order to get Mr. Carnegie's approval.

If the Roman Catholic Church overcomes Protestantism in America, its victory will be accomplished by the solidity with which it stands to its schools and colleges.

Protestants must wake up or they will go down. Secularism is laying a heavy hand upon the educational work of the country, and Romanism is investing many millions of dollars in education.

What will Protestantism do? What will Methodism do? Evidently the Romanists are not going to turn over their work to the agents of Mr. Carnegie or Mr. Rockefeller. Will the Methodists surrender to the "Boards" and "Foundations" of the secularists?

Protestantism must wake up or shut up. Neither Romanism nor secularism is friendly to us.—The Wesleyan Christian Advocate.

A GREAT DAY IN HOUSTON, MISS.

On October 11, 1914, Bishop R. G. Waterhouse visited our city, and preached two great sermons and dedicated our new Sunday school rooms and church. Bishop Waterhouse is as simple as a child and as grand as a Cicero. I have heard great preachers for many years, but none greater than Bishop Waterhouse. He had a model congregation—made up of men and women of culture and a great crowd of bright boys and girls. Houston is a model town. Respectfully,

J. A. LEWIS.

LOUISIANA ANTI-SALOON MEETING.

The Annual Conference of the Louisiana Anti-Saloon League will convene in Shreveport on Nov. 10, at 7:30 p. m., in the Sunday school rooms of the First Methodist Church. On account of the reduced rates to the State Fair our friends will be able to attend the convention at a small expense and see the fair. Let every pastor attend and bring at least one layman with him. On account of the unusual conditions prevailing, the session will not be prolonged, but will be devoted exclusively to business which is of interest to the League. The Superintendent's report will show what has been done and suggest some plans for the future.

Church News

The City Board in Austin, Texas, has decided to give credit toward graduation in the city high school for study of the Bible.

The newspapers of Italy convey the information that while there are 50,000 pupils in the public schools of Rome, only 1403 parents have asked that their children receive instruction in the Roman Catholic religion.

More than 33,000,000 persons attended church in the United States on Peace Sunday and prayed for peace. Nearly all of the 210,249 churches in the country observed the day.

The women of the Presbyterian Church are raising a memorial fund to Mrs. Woodrow Wilson, to be known as "The Ellen Wilson Fund for the Christian Education of Mountain Youth."

The noted evangelist, Billy Sunday, is said to be as remarkable as an organizer as he is as a preacher. On a single Monday during his meeting at Denver, Colo., 116 cottage prayer meetings were held.

By special invitation Dr. Frank M. Thomas, of Louisville, Ky., delivered an address on "The Unification of American Methodism" before the Indiana Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church on September 18. It was a characteristically clear and forceful utterance.

From the Way of Faith (Columbia, S. C.) we take the following: "Gipsy Smith, Jr., has been conducting a meeting in the Haddon Heights Methodist Church, New Jersey Conference. He is described as having a marked individuality, though resembling his father very much."

A New York dispatch states that Dr. E. A. Alderman, President of the University of Virginia and Bishop J. C. Kilgo have been elected directors of the Southern Railway Company. Having heard Bishop Kilgo speak of the unwisdom of Methodist itinerants undertaking to acquire and manage property, we have no idea that he will accept this position of secular responsibility.

The Holston Conference met at Bristol, Tenn., on October 14, with Bishop Waterhouse in the chair. Dr. James Burrow was chosen secretary, a position which he has filled for many years, and Dr. J. S. French was named as one of the assistant secretaries. The Nashville Banner states that the opening exercises conducted by the Bishop were very impressive and drew forth many hearty "amens."

At the close of Dr. Richard Wilkinson's quadrennium as pastor of the Fourth Avenue M. E. Church, South, of Louisville, Ky., a farewell service was held in his honor which was participated in by the ministers of various denominations of the city and by representatives of the Salvation Army and Wesley House and a large number of Knights Templar. Many talks were made complimentary to Dr. Wilkinson's work in Louisville and strong resolutions commending it were adopted. As has been stated in the Advocate before, Dr. Wilkinson has been transferred to the Virginia Conference.

The Western Methodist (Little Rock, Ark.) of Sept. 24 says: "While in Memphis recently, one of the editors, under the care of Presiding Elder Johnston and Field Secretary Ellis, was permitted to view the new property of the Methodist Hospital. It is one of the best possible sites for such an institution. While in the heart of the best residence section, it is not too far out, and consists of about four city blocks, in one body, with stately oaks and a very substantial residence, which can be used as a part of the plant. All concerned are to be congratulated on the acquisition of this valuable real estate. As it was Wednesday, the editor dropped in at First Church and found a well attended and interesting Sunday school teachers' meeting, under the guidance of that prince of Sunday school superintendents, Mr. John R. Pepper, and was informed that such meetings had been held continuously for thirty years. Prayer meeting followed, led by the pastor, Dr. T. W. Lewis. The attendance was large, and the atmosphere distinctly spiritual. Some who rail at the big churches for lack of warmth and spirituality might be greatly helped by looking in on the First Church prayer meeting. Dr. Lewis is closing a successful quadrennium, and seems to be greatly loved and appreciated. Expressions of regret over the necessity for his going away were many, and evidently sincere."

It is said that probably 100,000 boys and girls now study English in the Japanese secondary schools. It is claimed that English will be quite universal in Japan within a few generations.

Nearly three-fourths of all the Negroes in the United States live on farms. Of those over ten years of age, 30.4 per cent are unable to read and write; this is less than one-half the percentage of illiteracy that existed among them twenty years ago.

The Century Magazine is stated to have lost $18,000 in 1912, $46,000 in 1913, and $31,000 in the first half of 1914; and it is now to be sold. We do not claim to be an authority in such matters, but it has seemed to us for several years that this periodical has been too exclusively literary and too much out of touch with current affairs to be popular. In our opinion, the public likes more of a mixture.

The value of United States exports of raw cotton and cotton yarn last year to the warring countries was: To England, $224,000,000; Germany, $185,000,000; France, $63,000,000; Austria, $6,000,000; Belgium, $10,500,000; Russia, $150,000,000. The war will make a tremendous cut in this business. That's why it is necessary to help the cotton grower and mill worker. Buying cotton clothes and materials will help the cotton grower more than buying a bale of cotton and holding it. Moreover you are making work for the cotton mills.—Woman's National Weekly.

The United States Government expended for Civil War pensions during the year ending June 30, 1914, $172,417,546, against $174,171,660 during the year preceding. It has been announced that 33,369 claimants died during the past fiscal year, and the Commissioner of Pensions has expressed the view that the maximum of expenditures for this cause has been passed and that hereafter a steady decrease may be looked for. The New York World, however, calls attention to the fact that General James A. Garfield once made substantially the same remark when the Nation's pension bill footed up $50,583,405.

It is said that Hans Wagner, Pittsburgh's popular favorite in professional baseball, was offered $1000 for his consent to allow his picture to be placed on the boxes of a brand of cigarettes. This he positively refused to do; and when the representative of the tobacco company expressed surprise, saying, "I thought all you ball players were money-crazy," Wagner indignantly replied: "I'm not crazy for any money that means encouraging any boy to smoke cigarettes. If my name and picture on a card or box will have that effect, I tell you I'm not going to sign up, no matter how high you go with your offers."

It is interesting to recall what the distinguished military strategist, Gen. Nogi, said at the time of the siege of Port Arthur, and note how accurately he located the field on which the future of Europe would be fought out and determined. His words were: "I believe that the world will witness a great war, which will have all Europe for its battle ground, and will settle the Franco-German question and the Anglo-German rivalry. France and Germany will meet in this last decisive conflict on the Belgian plains, probably near Waterloo, the only spot which will permit of the evolution of the immense armies which will face each other. * * * I have little doubt as to the result of this war. France will beat Germany at sea. This war will be the last in Europe for many a day—perhaps forever; the German States will emerge from the wars so exhausted and so terrified that they will have no other object than to form some sort of condition that may in the future obviate the recurrence of any such catastrophe."—Boston Herald.

The Milwaukee Journal laments that "With the 'biggest story' in history at their front door, newspapers in Paris and London may be forced to suspend before they can print it. The supply of paper is very limited. Paris papers now print but two pages in small sizes and have cut out the margins in order to husband their resources. In London, the great Times has cut its size down from fourteen to six pages, and other papers have reduced their space accordingly. Even at this rate, it is possible that before the great battles are fought there will be no paper on which to print the news. All advertising has disappeared."

PROMPT RESPONSE TO THE PROPOSAL OF THE OLD SAINT.

Some days ago I published the proposal of a venerable mother in Israel to raise a "Woman's Fund" to aid young men desiring to attend our new University. She was able to give no more than $2, but she gave that with a hearty good will and accompanied the gift with warm words of faith and love.

I am glad to say a number of good women have responded promptly to the pious proposal of the old saint. Contributions have come from devoted hands in Louisiana, Georgia, Mississippi, Virginia, Tennessee, and Kentucky.

While the amounts given have not been large they have aggregated enough to give timely aid to a worthy young man in the School of Theology.

Some contributions have come without the names of the donors, but with words of encouragement worth more than money.

One writes: "Another nameless old Sister wishing to help the boys, sends you a money order for $10 for 'The Woman's Fund To Aid Young Men,' and with God's blessing hopes to do more for this cause."

Another writes: "I so much admire the good lady's idea and plan that I am going to join her in her proposal, and am sending you $10 in this letter for this purpose. I trust the Fund may grow rapidly, and I am sure it will, if the good women will give to it and take the same interest in it as she has done."

In an unsigned letter are these words: "I am sending you $1 with the prayer that more will be sent, and that the $2 of the old saint may be a nucleus for a great fund to aid young men. I am sending the last dollar I have in my purse, but I believe God will provide me with more. I have faith in his promises and believe the more I give, the more I have."

The wife of a superannuated preacher writes: "I saw in the Christian Advocate that an aged lady sent a contribution to help young preachers to finish their education at our new University, and I was so impressed by it that I decided to add my little mite to it. It is not much, but I am so glad to give it."

These are the consecrated offerings of God's poor children, and he will not fail to add his blessing to them. Our Lord has made the widow's mite to do a vast work of benevolence during these Christian centuries.

Who can say what immense good He may bring out of the old saint's $2 and the gifts of these godly women who so promptly unite in furthering her proposal? WARREN A. CANDLER.

PEWS FOR SALE.

The officers of the Carrollton Avenue Methodist Church, this city, are anxious to sell the pews which are in the old church building to make room for chairs. The building is now being used for a Sunday school and pews are unsuited for the purpose. The pews are made of oak, and are in good condition. Any one interested will please communicate with Rev. J. G. Snelling, the pastor, or Mr. A. W. Ahten, Station B, New Orleans, La.

PRESIDING ELDERS' ADDRESS.

(Adopted at a meeting of the presiding elders of the North Mississippi Conference held in Winona, Miss., on Sept. 20, 1914.)

To the Pastors and Stewards of the North Mississippi Conference.

Dear Brethren: We are now just closing a most pleasant and helpful meeting of the presiding elders. The work of the year has been reviewed and plans laid for the future. We think it wise to address every pastor and steward in the Conference in this personal letter, praying that the blessings of God may be upon you all. For the next two months each of us, with the pastors and stewards, will have need to lay great stress on the finances necessary to maintain the work of our Church. Short collections would mean suffering for some part of our work. The full collection of all our assessments would mean a great step forward. Why not take this step?

All will be pleased and encouraged to know that the outlook is much better than some would have expected. In many of our charges the collections are now considerably in advance of last year. Of the eight districts, some expect to pay every assessment in full. Others confidently count on larger collections than last year. No presiding elder is willing to admit that his district will fall short of the report for 1913. This in the midst of the present stringency is cause for gratitude, is it not?

There is occasionally heard a note of despondency from a faint-hearted pastor or steward. There is no need for this. That diligent and earnest effort will have to be made is quite certain. That financial conditions are not most favorable is evident. But that any lowering of an adequate support for the Church of God is necessary, is not to be entertained for one moment. This is a time for an advance all along the line, and advance we must. Our people in our territory were never quite so well prepared for a tight market and slow sales as now. God has been wonderfully kind to us in the past three or four years. Very little money is owed on this crop. Our people have lived chiefly at home and a large part of the proceeds of this crop will be a surplus for harder times.

It looked for a while as though our Southland was going to be stampeded by the suddenness of the shock to our markets. But quiet has now come. Cotton exchanges are opening. Cotton is beginning to move. We will probably not get for this crop all we had expected, but, mark you, our expectations have been very high. We can easily bear some shrinkage in our expectations and yet have more than enough. Does not a calm, deliberate view of the situation convince you that this is the case?

Brethren, the great Methodist Church must not diminish its activities nor draw its lines. The North Mississippi Conference must not fall behind one hair's breadth. Let our pastors and stewards keep their vision clear and their faith strong. Our people are abundantly able and they are willing to meet the small obligations they have assumed for the support of the Church and its institutions. But if we go forth trembling they will meet us with fear; if we call upon them with uncertainty they will answer with doubt.

Brother Pastor, you are charged with caring for the collection of our Conference and connectional claims. These assessments may be included in your church budget, they may be turned over to special committees for collection, or you may give them your personal attention. In either case, the Church is looking to you to care for them. Of this there is no doubt. Success or failure to collect them, in the final analysis, is yours. The looking after these assessments, we repeat, is a part of your work. They who do it well are worthy of much praise. Can you afford to expect your stewards to collect your salary in full and you not work for and expect your Conference collections in the same proportions? The Church expects you to do just what you look to your stewards to do; that is, raise everything in full.

Brother Steward, your pastor, his wife and children are looking to you these last weeks of the Conference year with keen anxiety. They are depending on you to collect what is behind. In some instances this amount is all too large. Our pastors and their families need every cent of the assessment which has been promised them for their support. We know that many of our stewards feel very keenly the obligations of their office. For many years they have served the Church faithfully, and with credit and honor. These are the ones who pray and plan and then go out with a fixed purpose to collect their pastors' salary. And they usually succeed.

To both Pastor and Steward, we say finally, do not delay the collecting of your assessments. Delay is hazardous. It will most likely mean failure. Put these claims, the salaries and the Conference collections, on the consciences of our people. Let them know that you expect every cent of the assessment. See that every one, both members and friends of the Church, is sought out and urged to pay his share whether much or little. A determination to come out in full is half the battle. Do not get discouraged, but keep at it. "Stay on the job." Do much praying.

May God give you great success in financing his Kingdom.

With all good wishes, and with earnest supplication to our Father in your behalf, we are,

Faternally yours,

BIOGRAPHICAL SKETCH OF SAMUEL ROSEMAN WEEMS.

Although the weather was very unfavorable on September 24, 1914, a goodly number of friends and relatives, including the writer, gathered at the home of his son, W. L. Weems, in this community, to participate in celebrating his one hundredth birthday. To say that his anniversary was unique in many particulars would express the truth very mildly.

He was unusually pleasant and happy on this occasion. He has never doubted his acceptance with God, but, at times, he expresses a desire to depart and be with Christ. He has often remarked to me that he did not understand why God wants him to live so long, but he is willing to abide by God's will.

His health, I am glad to say, is very good and his mind very clear and active. Indeed it looks now, as if we might have the pleasure of celebrating his Church membership Centennial Anniversary, as he has been a member for 93 years, and therefore would have to live only seven years to make this possible. His son, Brother W. L. Weems, spoke touchingly and gave some reminiscences of his father's life, after which he read the following brief statement:

"Samuel Roseman Weems was born in Abbeville District, South Carolina, on Sept. 24, 1814. He moved with his father, Bartholomew Weems to Lawrence County, Miss., in 1817, where he lived until grown. He went to reside at Clinton, Hines County, in the thirties. He came to Scott County in 1836 and in the fall of 1837 was married to Miss Mary Ann Rode, who died eleven years ago. Of this union were born eleven children—four boys and seven girls; all lived to manhood and womanhood, except the second child, who died in infancy. Seven children are still living. The youngest is 47 years old; the oldest, Mrs. Houston, died 3 years ago at the age of 72. Mrs. E. J. Shearley died at 33, and "Brother Mat" at 67. There have been born to our family 70 children—14 are dead. The number of great-grandchildren is 90—9 are dead. There is one great-great-grand child (still living) who is one year old. This makes a grand total of 174 immediate descendants."

After Brother Weems had read this short sketch he asked me to take charge and I read the first eight verses of the fourth Chapter of 2 Timothy, calling attention to Paul's advice, or charge to Timothy, saying, "No doubt this or similar advice would be the desire of this great father and grandfather." I also commented on verses 6, 7 and 8, as doubtless being his experience and sentiments. He then asked me to read the 91st Psalm which I had read for him two or three months before at family worship. I especially called attention to the last verse of this Psalm, and in connection with it remarked that doubtless he had obeyed the commandment in Ex. 20:12: "Honor thy father and mother; that thy days may be long upon the land which the Lord thy God giveth thee." After my brief talk, I led in prayer and many hearty "Amens" were given by Brother Weems. Then an opportunity was given others who desired to do so to speak, and his children bore testimony to his godly example. Brother Fikes, a Baptist Brother, also spoke of his beautiful life, and Brother J. C. Jones, who has known him all his life, stated that he had never known of his good name and Christian character being called in question. So it is no wonder that his children rise up and call him blessed. He expressed as his greatest regret that Mat had gone before him, stating that Mat had been so kind and such a comfort to him, and that he missed him sorely. The Mat spoken of was our sainted, beloved Rev. J. M. Weems, D.D.

I have tried, Brother Meek, to speak briefly of this great man, believing that many of the readers of the Advocate would appreciate these words and many more if the space would permit me to write them. I will send you a picture of him taken the 24th of September, his birthday, to grace the pages of the New Orleans Advocate. It seems to me that the photograph of a man who has lived a hundred years above reproach, and who has been an acceptable member of the Church for 93 years should adorn the pages of our Church organ.

Faternally yours,

Homewood, Miss.

LITTLE CHILDREN, DO YOU PRAY?

Little children, do you pray?
Do you thank the Lord each day?

That He's kept you free from harm
By His strong and mighty arm?

For your home and parents dear,
For your friends both far and near?

For the blessings He doth give
That His children dear may live?

Do you ask Him guard to keep

BOBWHITE.

By Julia Ramsey Davis.

Robert and John were greatly excited when they saw a brown bird, flecked with white and black, flutter out of a small brush pile in the wheat field. They looked under the brush and found a cunning little nest full of eggs the shape and color of hen eggs, only many times smaller. They did not touch the eggs, but ran and asked their father, who was in another part of the field, to come and see the nest.

When their father saw it, he told the boys that it belonged to bobwhite, our common quail, or partridge, as he is called in the South.

"Bobwhite is the farmer's best friend," said their father; "so we must not disturb his nest. After a while all these eggs will be little bobwhites, and as they grow to be big birds they will be of great help to us. They will eat the insects and weed seeds that would injure our crops."

"I wish we could have some birds in our garden," said Robert, "for you know the insects are bad on our vegetables."

"Bobwhites make splendid pets," continued their father, "and would be useful in the garden. I remember I raised a covey once when I was about your age, and they were the most interesting pets I ever had."

"How did you get them?" exclaimed the boys.

"During harvest we found a nest that had to be disturbed, so I took the eggs home and set them under a little bantam hen. She hatched twelve birds from the fifteen eggs, and eight of them lived to be grown."

"O father," said John, "if you find any nests while harvesting this year, may we take the eggs and raise some bobwhite pets?"

"Yes, you may try; but you may not have a hen setting at the time."

"Wouldn't mamma let us use her incubator?" asked Robert.

"Certainly, that would do," replied their father. "There is a slight difference in the adjusting of the incubator to suit bird eggs, but we could manage that. We'll try to raise some bobwhites, and I hope it will teach you the same lesson that my experience taught me—to never wantonly kill a bird or destroy a nest. It is not only cruel, but it is a great loss in money."—The Child's Hour.

JOHN THREE SIXTEEN.

One cold, wintry night a poor Irish boy stood in the streets of Dublin—a little city Arab, homeless, houseless, friendless. He had taken to bad courses and had become an associate of thieves, who were leading him on the broad road to destruction. That very night they had planned to commit a burglary and appointed him to meet them in a certain street at a certain hour. As he stood there waiting, shivering and cold, a hand was suddenly laid on his shoulder. It was very dark; he could see only a tall form standing by him, and he trembled with fear. But a kindly voice said: "Boy, what are you doing here at this time of night? Such as you have no business to be in the streets at so late an hour. Go home, go to bed."

"I have no home and no bed to go to."

"That's very sad, poor fellow! Would you go to a home and to a bed if I provided one?"

"That would I, sharp," replied the boy.

"Well, in such a street and at such a number (indicating the place) you will find a bed." Before he could add more the lad started off. "Stop," said the voice. "How are you going to get in? You need a pass. No one can go in there without a pass. Here is one for you. Can you read?"

"No, sir."

"Well, remember that the pass is John 3:16. Don't forget, or they won't let you in. John 3:16 There, that's something that will do you good."

Joyfully the lad rushed off repeating his lesson and soon found himself in the street and at the number indicated before a pair of large iron gates. Then his heart failed him, they looked so grand. How could he get in there? Timidly he rang the bell. The night porter opened and in a gruff voice asked: "Who's there?"

"Me, sir. Please, sir, I'm John Three Sixteen," in very trembling tones.

"All right; in with you. That's the pass." And in the boy went.

He was soon in a nice warm bed and between sheets such as he had never seen before. As he curled himself up to go to sleep, he thought: "This is a lucky name. I'll stick to it." The next morning he was given a bowl of hot bread and milk before being sent out into the street (for this home was only for a night.) He wandered on and on, fearful of meeting his old companions, thinking over the wonders of the night and his new name, when heedlessly crossing a crowded thoroughfare, by accident or rather we should say in the good providence of God, he was run over. A crowd collected. The unconscious form was placed on a shutter and carried to the nearest hospital. He revived as they were entering it. It is usual in the Dublin hospitals to put down the religion as well as the name and address of those admitted. They asked him whether he was Catholic or Protestant. "Sure, he didn't quite know. Yesterday he was a Catholic, but now he was John Three Sixteen." This elicited a laugh.

After his injuries had been attended to, he was carried up into the accident ward. In a short time his sufferings brought on fever and delirium. Then was heard in ringing tones the oft-repeated: "John 3:16, John 3:16. It was to do me good, and so it has. It was to do me good, and so it has."

These persistent cries aroused the other patients. Testaments were pulled out to see to what he pointed. What could he mean? And here one and there another read the precious words: "For God so loved the world, that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life."

"It was to do me good, and so it has," the sufferer cried.

Consciousness returned, and the poor little fellow gazed around him. How vast it looked! and how quiet it was! Where was he? Presently a voice from the next bed said: "John Three Sixteen, and how are you to-day?"

"Why, how do you know my new name?"

"Know it? You've never ceased with your 'John Three Sixteen,' and I for one say blessed John Three Sixteen."

This sounded strange to the little lad's ears. To be called blessed—he for whom no one cared!

"And don't you know where it comes from? It's from the Bible."

"The Bible? What's that?" The poor little wail had never heard of the Bible, that blessed book, God's Word to man. "Read it to me," he said. And as the words fell on his ear, he muttered: "That's beautiful. It's all about love and not a home for a night, but a home for always." He soon learned the text and its meaning, saying, "I've not only got a new name, but something to it." This was indeed a joy.

Days passed on, and there were changes in the ward; but our little friend never felt lonely. He fed on his text and its precious words, little thinking how soon he would have use for them. Yet another soul in that ward was to be won to Christ by his means, and now in simple conscious faith he was to be the agent of blessing. On a cot near him lay an old man who was very ill. Early one morning a nun came to his bedside and said: "Patrick, how is it with you to-day?"

"Badly, badly," groaned the old man.

"Has the priest been to see you?" asked the nun.

"O, yes; but that makes it worse, for he has anointed me with the holy oil, and I am marked for death. I'm not fit to die. O, what shall I do?"

"Patrick, it's very sad to see you so," she gently answered. "Look. Here are these beads. They have been blessed by his holiness, the pope, and they will help you to die happy."

She placed them round the man's neck and then, wishing him good-by, went out. But how could a string of beads ease a dying man facing eternity with his sins unforgiven? Poor Patrick groaned aloud. "God ha' mercy!" he cried. "I'm such a sinner. I'm not fit to die. What shall I do?—O, what will become o' me?"

Our little fellow heard his miserable words. "Poor old man," thinks he; "he wants a pass." "Patrick," he called, "I know something that will do you good, quite sure. It has done me."

"Tell me, tell me quickly," cried Patrick. "If only I could find something to do me good!"

"Here it is. Now listen: John 3:16. Are you listening?"

"Yes, yes; go on."

"John 3:16: 'For God so loved the world, that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life.' Again and again he had to repeat these words. Through them Patrick found peace in his dying hour, and with his pass he entered into everlasting life. Another soul brought to Christ in that hospital ward by means of a single text blessed by the Holy Spirit!

Our little friend recovered. For a long time John 3:16 was his one text. God blessed his simple faith; friends were raised up to aid him, and he was placed at school. Now he is an earnest, hearty worker for the Master.—M. S. S., in Christian Observer.

ANOTHER VANDERBILT DEVELOPMENT.

The following is an extract from a letter written by the Rev. J. E. McCulloch, the official head of the Interchurch College, at Nashville, Tenn.:

"Another cheering fact is that plans are practically completed for the Interchurch College to be helped by Vanderbilt University. Since the Methodist Church has withdrawn its support from the Biblical Department, Wesley Hall has many vacant rooms. The plan is for our school to move to Wesley Hall until we can erect our own buildings. By a thorough co-operation of our college and the Biblical Department both schools will be greatly helped and the students of each will get the benefits of both. Similar co-operative plans for training social workers are being put in operation at Harvard, Yale, Columbia and Washington Universities. Nashville is, therefore, right in the van of educational progress. To keep this pace, however, we must work with all our might."

The disclosure made by this statement is quite significant, and would be surprising, if the public had not pretty well learned not to be startled by anything that is said or done by the gentlemen in charge of Vanderbilt University. From the middle of last June up to the opening of that institution on September 16, the announcement was publicly made, and scattered all over the South in advertisements and letters, that the Vanderbilt Biblical Department would for the present session be "maintained for the sole purpose of training young ministers for the ministry of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South;" but notwithstanding the fact that their canvass was made and that pupils were secured upon that basis, we find these men within less than a month after the beginning of the present term entering into an alliance with an interdenominational school and taking its students into their dormitory. How can any dependence be placed in the representations of persons who emphatically affirm that they are going to do one thing, and who almost immediately proceed to do another?

Is this the first step toward making the Vanderbilt Theological School independent and non-denominational? We venture the prediction that it is. The truth is, the Vanderbilt trustees have fallen down in their effort to run a Methodist Biblical Department, and they are practically bound to maintain some kind of a theological seminary, for two reasons: (1) because the charter of the institution requires it; (2) because they have in their hands a considerable sum of money given by Methodist people for this purpose when they thought the institution was owned and controlled by the Church; and now having robbed the Church, like Judas Iscariot when he betrayed his Lord for thirty pieces of silver, they have this money and property in their hands and do not know what to do with it. To divert it to any other purpose than that of religious education would be such a glaring betrayal of a sacred trust that, though it is scarcely to be thought that their consciences would trouble them, as that of Judas did him, they know it would likely bring down upon them more severely than they have yet felt it the scathing lash of outraged public opinion.

And Mr. McCulloch in thus yoking up the Interchurch College with Vanderbilt University has, in our opinion, practically destroyed it, unless it has friends who will intervene and defeat his plans and find for it another manager. Certainly under his administration it can no longer expect any favor or patronage at the hands of loyal Southern Methodists. Nor do we believe that the Presbyterians, Baptists, and other religious denominations of the South will support it while in the unholy alliance that Mr. McCulloch has arranged for it. The other Churches understand perfectly that Vanderbilt University has been Carnegieized, that it stands for secularized, against distinctively Christian, education, and that its ideals and policies are as much at war with theirs as they are with those of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. Their press and their leaders have borne eloquent testimony to this fact in the course of the long-extended controversy over the ownership and control of Vanderbilt University, and if Mr. McCulloch thinks that he can connect his school with Vanderbilt and change their attitude, we dare say that he will be speedily disillusioned.

It may not be amiss to call attention to the fact that the Rev. Mr. McCulloch is a Vanderbilt product, having attended that institution. This doubtless accounts for the blind fatuity with which he has suffered the school under his care to be drawn into this destructive arrangement. What next?

AN IMPORTANT MEETING.

The annual meeting of the Louisiana Anti-Saloon League, which Brothers Ware and Turner have announced will be held in the Sunday School Rooms of the First Methodist Church of Shreveport at 7:30 p.m. on Nov. 10, 1914, is an occasion of great importance, and it is to be hoped that it will be largely attended by the temperance workers of the State. Fortunately it has been fixed at a time when reduced rates to and from Shreveport can be had, and this should materially aid in securing representation from a large number of parishes. The saloon forces are active in our commonwealth, being now engaged in trying to swing Jeff Davis and some of the other parishes back into the wet column, and by every token the Christian and moral people of Louisiana need to be up and doing. So, let all who can, go to this council of war, and let us plan to conduct without further delay an aggressive campaign that will not stop until the white banner of prohibition waves over every foot of our soil. We can win, if we will fight hard enough and long enough, and put enough money into the contest to get the truth about the liquor traffic impressively before the minds of the people. Shall we not do this? The call for enlistment in this cause rings out loud and clear to all true-hearted men and women who love their fellow-beings and their Lord. GO TO SHREVEPORT ON NOVEMBER 10, and cheer and hearten our leaders in this noble struggle by your presence and counsel.

A REMARKABLE SERVICE.

Dr. J. W. Lee's pastoral career in St. Louis is perhaps without a parallel in the history of Southern Methodism. He has served St. John's Church in that city for three full quadrenniums, though, of course, not successive ones, and he is now entering for the second time upon a term as presiding elder of the St. Louis District, which he before served in that capacity for four years. On the evening of October 8 a great farewell reception was given Dr. Lee by the members of his congregation and other friends, the exercises being participated in by eminent ministers of all faiths, including Roman Catholics and Jews. Many brief talks, bearing testimony to the value of Dr. Lee's work were made, and he was presented with a purse containing more than $1000.

Dr. Lee is in many respects one of the most remarkable ministers in the South. A painstaking and laborious student and a prolific and widely known author, he is yet a man of affairs and has been instrumental in carrying forward to completion a number of important material enterprises in the Church. The beautiful St. John's Church in St. Louis, which is perhaps the finest church edifice in Southern Methodism, was erected under his leadership, as have also been other substantial houses of worship elsewhere in the connection. Nearly the whole of Dr. Lee's ministry has been spent in St. Louis and Atlanta and in both of these cities he numbers his friends by the thousands. Much may be expected of Southern Methodism in the Missouri metropolis with this strong and resourceful commander-in-chief to direct its forces.

A SUGGESTIVE DIALOGUE.

The following dialogue recently printed in the Pacific Methodist Advocate is so suggestive, that we reproduce it without any comment, except to say that we have heard of conversations very much like it taking place in our own territory:

"Brother Blank, where does Bishop Fitzgerald live now?"

"I have reason to believe, sister, that he is living in heaven, and has been for the past two years."

"Really? It's strange that I never heard of his death. Where is Brother Jones? He used to be our pastor, you know."

"Brother Jones has also gone to the better world. He passed over just two months ago."

The following questions were then asked in turn:

"Who is Dr. A. P. Parker?" "Where is this Miss Richardson, from?" "Candler? Candler? Have we a Bishop by that name?" "Where is Brother Smith stationed this year?" "When and where will the next Annual Conference be held?" "When will our next quarterly conference be held?" and a number of other questions concerning the Church and its interests.

After all her questions were answered, her pastor said, "You do not take the Advocate, do you? If you did, you would not have to ask these questions. You can't keep posted on matters pertaining to the Church, or keep in touch with our church leaders, or even the preachers of our own Conference, without taking the Conference organ. You had better give me your subscription now."

"I would like to, but I can't spare the money."

"I wish you might. You know, the subscription is only $2. That is a little less than four cents a week; two postage stamps; less than a single carfare. Surely you can think of some item that you can dispense with, or get along with less of, rather than deprive yourself and family of your church paper." (The subscription price of the New Orleans Advocate is considerably less than this.—The Editor.)

She gave him her subscription, and is now reading the paper weekly with increasing interest. Furthermore, her interest in the church work is increasing from week to week. And she not only does not miss the money the paper costs her, but has money for various church interests, which she cheerfully gives.

FIFTIETH WEDDING ANNIVERSARY CELEBRATED.

Writing in the Nashville Christian Advocate of October 16, Rev. John W. Boswell, D.D., says:

"Tuesday, October 6, was the fiftieth anniversary of my marriage. I celebrated the day by remaining at home and taking dinner with my wife. The next day there was placed on my desk in the Publishing House a nicely arranged basket of golden fruits and flowers, accompanying which was a card with the following inscription: 'To Dr. and Mrs. J. W. Boswell, with congratulations and good wishes from their friends of the Christian Advocate and Sunday School Department.' Our thanks are due these kind friends and are hereby tendered. May all life's blessings be theirs!"

We are sure that many readers of the New Orleans Christian Advocate, who hold Dr. Boswell in loving remembrance, will be pleased to see this statement, and will join with us in wishing him and his faithful helpmeet many more happy returns of their wedding anniversary. No truer, worthier man than Dr. Boswell ever wrought in the Methodist itinerancy, and as one of the Assistant Editors of our Sunday School Literature he is at present rendering the Church a most valuable service. It is worth much to have a man of his sanity and sound faith in such a position in this day when subtle heresies are so widespread in Christian lands. May heaven's richest blessings rest upon him, and may his bow long abide in strength!

"GO-TO-CHURCH SUNDAY" IN NEW ORLEANS.

The Protestant Ministers' Association of New Orleans has designated Sunday, October 25—NEXT SUNDAY—as "Go-to-Church Sunday." In taking this action, the Association issued to the public the following address:

"One of the functions of good citizenship is worship. For your own sake, for the sake of your family, and the good name of the city, go to church on 'Go-to-Church Sunday,' and other Sundays, too, and help in this movement for better citizenship. For more loyal men and women, truer and more devoted to the highest interests of the soul. God has a claim on us; we sometimes forget this. Let us recognize our obligations and duties on these lines. In this time of fearful strife and struggle on the other side of the water, let us not forget to pray, for there is power in the united prayer of God's people in their respective houses of worship. The social spirit of worship should not be overlooked. We should emphasize it to-day."

"Will you help in this matter? Whatever your church, go to it that day, even if you may not have been there for a long time. This is a good time to begin again. If you have no regular church home, go to some church of your choice, and you will be cordially welcomed as a fellow-worshiper."

PERSONAL AND OTHER NOTES.

Rev. Henry T. Young, our pastor at Arcadia, La., began a revival meeting in his church at that place last Sunday. Brother Young will do his own preaching.

Rev. A. I. Townsley says: "Miss Martha Nutt, of St. Mark's Hall, New Orleans, and Mrs. Abel Bliss, President of the Louisiana Conference Woman's Missionary Society, spoke in the Rayville Church on Sunday evening, October 18. Their addresses were inspiring and helpful."

Rev. Chas. E. Downer, of Foxworth, Miss., has our thanks for some subscriptions from his charge. We are pleased to know that the work in his field is going forward.

Rev. T. J. O'Neill, President of Port Gibson College, says: "Our school is prospering, our dormitories now being virtually full." We are happy to have this cheering message from this historic institution.

Rev. G. W. Huff, of Hattiesburg, Miss., writes: "I have just returned from Orange Grove, where I have been assisting Rev. W. G. Roberts in a meeting. Forty-seven persons, ranging in age from 10 to 60 years, united with our Church."

Miss Iles and Miss Walker, our two deaconesses on the Houma (La.) Mission, were recently appreciated visitors in New Orleans. They are capable workers and are making their influence strongly felt for good in their present field of labor.

Rev. S. A. Brown sends us a club of subscriptions from Booneville, Miss., where he is winding up his quadrennium in great shape. If we were a "beloved" in North Mississippi, we would be after Brother Brown. He is all right, as his record unmistakably shows.

Rev. C. M. Morris recently closed a fifteen days' meeting at Mooringsport, La., which was a marked success. He did the preaching himself for four days, after which it was done by Dr. A. C. Holder, of Shreveport. About 100 professed conversion and 37 united with our Church.

We acknowledge ourselves indebted to Rev. J. A. Goad, our energetic pastor on the New Albany (Miss.) circuit, for some subscriptions sent in a few days since, accompanied by some encouraging words. He is pleased with the prospect of a successful rounding out of the year's work.

Rev. J. J. Smylie, our pastor at Louisville, Miss., reports that the work of his charge is moving along well. It is not surprising that this is so, with Brother Smylie's hand on the helm. We are grateful to him for the fine service which he has rendered the Conference organ in his field.

Bishop Murrah called the Tennessee Conference to order in Pulaski, Tenn., on October 7 with the gavel with which Bishop Wilson opened the General Conference in Oklahoma City last May. This gavel was a present from Mrs. Ludie Paine Scruggs, a daughter of Bishop Robert Paine.

Rev. Paul M. Brown spent last week in New Orleans, in a kind of follow-up educational campaign. He favored the Advocate office with his genial presence on last Friday, and we greatly enjoyed his visit. Read what he has to say on another page concerning educational conditions in Louisiana.

Mr. J. T. Murrah, Jr., a son of the late Rev. James T. Murrah of the North Mississippi Conference, and a nephew of Bishop W. B. Murrah, has announced that it is his purpose to enter the Methodist itinerancy. We are pleased to hear of his decision and we pray that the Lord may abundantly bless and use him.

Dr. B. F. Jones, of Moss Point, Miss., states that Bishop W. A. Candler will dedicate our beautiful new house of worship at that place on Sunday, November 15. We thank the Doctor for a cordial invitation to be present on that interesting occasion, and also for a fine club of subscribers from his choice charge.

Mrs. P. H. Fontaine, the wife of our pastor at Clinton, was awarded the Grand Prize at the East Feliciana Annual Fair held in Clinton last week, for the best needlework display. Besides the Grand Prize, she was awarded three First Prizes. The spirit of Dorcas is evidently not absent from the manse in Clinton.

In a business note written on Oct. 14, which brought us some subscriptions, Rev. A. H. Parker, of Colfax, La., adds: "We are in a meeting at this place, with Rev. J. C. Rousseaux, of Zwolle, doing the preaching. His pulpit messages are excellent and the services are being well attended. We are expecting a great revival."

Rev. M. L. White, of Flora, Miss., sends us a card announcing the death of "Grandpa" McGehee, as he was called, which occurred at the home of his son, Mr. H. J. McGehee, at Carson, Miss., early in the morning of October 13. He was about 80 years of age, and was one of the grand old men of South Mississippi. We extend sympathy to the bereaved.

The Editor of the Advocate had expected to spend last Sunday in McComb City, Miss., with Dr. I. W. Cooper, who now has charge of our Centenary Church in that city, but because of illness was unable to meet his engagement, which was a keen disappointment to him. He is now somewhat improved, though he yet lacks much of being entirely well.

Rev. B. L. Sutherland, of Bucatunna, Miss., has been remembering the Advocate in his rounds with gratifying success. Referring to his charge, he says: "My work is progressing favorably. We have had some gracious revivals this summer, which resulted in many conversions and in greatly uplifting the Church spiritually. I am anxious to see our Conference organ in more of the homes of our people."

A Lake Providence (La.) dispatch to the Times-Picayune, on October 15, reads as follows: "A successful revival meeting was closed at the Methodist Church here last night. The services extended over a period of ten days, in which the pastor, Rev. J. W. Lee, was assisted by Rev. A. I. Townsley, of Rayville, who did the preaching. There were many conversions and a number were received into the Church."

Rev. G. W. Eichelberger, who for three years served efficiently as Superintendent of the Anti-Saloon League in Mississippi, and who lately has been actively working in behalf of the prohibition cause in Texas, has gone to Georgia where he has been employed by the temperance forces. Dr. T. J. Bailey, the well known Baptist minister, is now at the head of the Anti-Saloon work in Mississippi.

Rev. J. S. Parker, pastor of our church at Seminary, Miss., has been critically ill for more than two weeks with malarial fever. The attending physician thinks he is somewhat improved and that he will soon be over the worst. Physicians and friends of all denominations have been most attentive. Let the readers of the Advocate remember our stricken brother and his anxious loved ones at the throne of grace.

We acknowledge the reception from Mr. and Mrs. J. H. Sanders, of West Point, Miss., an invitation to the marriage of their daughter, Miss Rufe Watson, to Mr. Harry F. Haas, which will take place in the Methodist Church at West Point, Miss., at high noon on Wednesday, October 28, 1914. We extend in advance our hearty congratulations and pray heaven's richest blessings upon the approaching nuptials of this happy couple in which so many feel a deep interest.

Rev. Paul D. Hardin, presiding elder of the Jackson (Miss.) District, states that there are three churches in his "diocese" that will be dedicated between now and the meeting of the Annual Conference in December. Bishop Collins Denny will dedicate the Capitol Street Church of Jackson, of which Rev. J. M. Morse is pastor, on December 6. The other two will be dedicated by Brother Hardin: the one at Holly Bush, on the Fannin charge, on Nov. 1, and the one at Larkin, on the Eden charge, on Nov. 29.

Rev. S. D. Howard is finishing a successful quadrennium of service on the Baker (La.) charge and the fourth quarterly conference of that work, recently in session at Deerford, took the following action: "Resolved that we, the stewards of the several churches on this charge, exceedingly regret to lose our good and faithful pastor and we hereby express our gratitude to him for his earnest work and efficient service." We have no doubt that Brother Howard deserves this generous commendation.

Rev. K. W. Dodson, our pastor at Lake Charles, La., writes as follows: "This has been a week of unusual anxiety with us. Our little daughter, Ruth, has been quite ill with diphtheria, but I am thankful to say that she is much better now. There is a beauty in human kindness that can be seen only in times of darkness." We regret to know that Brother Dodson has had illness in his family, but we are glad to be informed that the worst seems to be over, and we trust that the stricken one will soon be entirely well.

Writing under date of October 13, Rev. W. H. Saunders, of Fernwood, Miss., says: "Rev. Robert Selby was with us last Sunday and preached us two good sermons which pleased and edified our people very much. On the next day we held our fourth quarterly conference. Of course, this charge will pay everything in full and over. Brother Selby is expecting all the charges in his district to make a good showing at the Annual Conference, and from what I can learn, he will not be disappointed."

Rev. A. H. Williams, of Shannon, Miss., says: "In the main, the outlook on this charge is encouraging. We have lately had very fine Sunday School Rally Day exercises at Shannon and an excellent quarterly conference at Troy. Rev. J. W. Bell, our presiding elder, can be depended upon even if the roads are muddy. He enjoyed the fine dinner that we had and presided charmingly over the business session of the conference; and one of our laymen said, 'If you will listen to him while he is in the pulpit, you will discover that he is doing some preaching.'"

Rev. M. M. Black and family, of Hattiesburg, Miss., were recently the recipients of a liberal "pounding" at the hands of the members of the Broad Street Church, of which Brother Black is pastor. Sunday, October 11, was observed as "Missionary Rally Day" at the Broad Street Church, with excellent results. An attractive program was rendered by the children of the Sunday school to a large congregation, and a goodly sum was realized from the offering taken. It is not surprising that this congregation is making a good record, since it has in the person of its minister a most scholarly and capable leader.

Rev. F. B. Hill, who was recently brought from Florida and stationed at Wilson, La., received a sad message last week, when a cablegram was delivered to him conveying the intelligence that his son, who is a soldier in the British Army, had been severely wounded. Brother Hill was for twenty-five years a Methodist minister in England and his family yet reside there, but he has cast his lot with Louisiana Methodism and we ask for him the prayers of the readers of the Advocate in this hour of anxiety. The seriousness of the European war may be more easily appreciated when we know that its reign of slaughter has involved in sorrow one of our own pastors.

As will be seen by a reference to a communication from Bishop Candler, appearing elsewhere in this issue of the Advocate, Miss Mary Wilkinson, of this city, has greatly enriched the magnificent collection of Wesleyana in the Wesley Memorial Building in Atlanta, the home of our new Theological Seminary, by several splendid gifts. She has brought the entire Church under obligations to her by placing these rare treasures where they will have an inspirational value for all time to come. The fact that they were associated with Bishop John C. Keener, who was one of the colossal figures in the Church in the days when there were many giants in Southern Methodism and whose heart never beat a disloyal note, will also greatly add to their value and the interest that will be felt in them by future generations.

Rev. A. C. Searcy, formerly of North Mississippi but who for some time has been serving an appointment in the Methodist Episcopal Church in Oklahoma, has recently been visiting his wife's relatives at Ringgold, La. Since coming to this State he has assisted in a revival in East Shreveport (Bossier City), in which he reports that 30 persons connected themselves with the Church. He will not return to Oklahoma until about the middle of November, and if any brother feels that he can use him in a series of evangelistic services between now and then, he would be glad to respond to his call. Brother Searcy desires to send greetings to his Mississippi friends through the Advocate, and to assure them that the Lord is greatly blessing him in his work.

Rev. D. W. Babb sends us the following note from Charleston, Miss.: "Our work is moving along smoothly and is prospering spiritually. We have every week five prayer meetings, as follows: our general prayer meeting, one in the suburbs of the town, and one each for our men, women, and young people. I feel very much encouraged. One of my stewards said to me yesterday that all our assessments would be met in full. We are closing a deal for a choice lot on Main Street, on which we expect to erect a new church just as soon as the present financial stringency has passed." This fine report is not surprising, since Brother Babb preaches not only with his tongue, but also with his life and character. There are few choicer men or more effective workers than he. His letter brought us 16 names for our subscription files.

From a recent issue of the Lincoln County Times, published at Brookhaven, Miss., we take the following: "Mrs. Bessie W. Lipscomb, of Nashville, Tenn., has announced the betrothal of her daughter, Miss Tallulah, to Mr. Benjamin S. Beall, Jr., of Lexington, Miss., the marriage to be solemnized in November. The many friends here of Mrs. Lipscomb and her daughter, who for so long were connected with Whitworth College, are interested in this announcement, and their good wishes without stint go out to the prospective bride and bridegroom." We also feel not a little interest in this approaching event. Miss Lipscomb is a daughter of the late Rev. G. H. Lipscomb, of the North Mississippi Conference, and a niece of Rev. T. H. Lipscomb, our scholarly young pastor at Starkville, Miss.; and Mr. Beall belongs to one of the best known and most highly esteemed families in Central Mississippi.

Rev. J. T. McVey has had a fruitful year on the Fannin (Miss.) charge. A good revival has been held at each of his seven churches. In one of his meetings he was ably assisted by Rev. R. T. Pickett, and in two others he had with him Rev. H. N. McKibben. Both of these brethren won their way into the hearts of the people to whom they ministered by their spiritual preaching and loving, humble spirit. The other meetings on the charge were conducted by the pastor himself, assisted by the prayers and labors of his faithful members. Brother McVey also reports that the church at Holly Bush has been completed, and furnished with an attractiveness that very few rural churches possess. It will be dedicated on November 1 by the presiding elder, Rev. Paul D. Hardin. Brother McVey's letter brought us 10 subscriptions, for which we extend to him our hearty thanks. He has doubled the circulation of the Conference organ among his people this year.

THICK, GLOSSY HAIR FREE FROM DANDRUFF

Girls! Try It! Hair gets soft, fluffy and beautiful—Get a 25 cent bottle
of Danderine.

If you care for heavy hair that glissens with beauty and is radiant with life; has an incomparable softness and
is fluffy and lustrous, try Danderine.

Just one application doubles the beauty of your hair, besides it immediately dissolves every particle of dandruff. You can not have nice heavy, healthy hair if you have dandruff. This destructive scurf robs
the hair of its lustre, its strength and
its very life, and if not overcome it produces a feverishness and itching of
the scalp; the hair roots famish,
loosen and die; then the hair falls out
fast. Surely get a 25-cent bottle of Knowlton's Danderine from any drug store and just try it.

Sister MELISSA A. SIMS, daughter of Joshua and Elizabeth Sims, was born in Williamson County, Tenn., on June 2, 1854, and fell asleep in Jesus on Sept. 30, 1914. She accepted Christ early in life and lived a devoted Christian life up to the time of her death. All who knew her loved her, and she will be greatly missed by her many friends. The Church will also feel the loss of one who lived her religion and was faithful and true in her loving service. May the Lord help us to follow her example that we may be ready when the summons comes. We pray that the blessings of heaven may rest on the bereaved ones and commend their broken hearts to a loving Savior who doeth all things well.
C. C. CLARK.

LENARD WEST FITE was born on March 27, 1848, in Panola County,
Miss. He was converted early in life and at the age of 13 years, he joined the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. He was a trustee in the Fredonia Church when he passed to his reward on Oct. 3, 1914. He loved his Lord and was loyal to his Church.
On Dec. 29, 1870, he was happily married to Miss Mary C. Page who, with three sons and five daughters, still survives him. He was a good citizen, a faithful husband and a devoted father. He leaves his family the heritage of a good name, which the wise man declared was "rather to be chosen than great riches." His remains were laid to rest in the cemetery at Fredonia, after a funeral service conducted by his pastor, Rev.
T. E. Gregory and the writer. We extend our heartfelt sympathy to the family, and pray that the Holy Comforter may pour the balm of consolation into their wounded hearts.
J. B. RANDOLPH.

Rev. JNO. M. JOURDAN was born on May 14, 1843, and died on Aug. 22, 1914. He had been a minister of the gospel for over 40 years. Brother Jourdan was born and reared in Tish-omingo County, Miss., near Bay Springs. I had known him since 1897. He was a faithful and true man.
He was married to Miss Tennessee Hughes, and of this happy union were born 5 sons and 5 daughters—two of whom preceded the father to the better world. He is survived by the mother and eight children, who are all members of the Church except two boys who we hope to see saved soon.
Brother Jourdan was a member of the M. P. Church and was once, I think, a member of our Church. He was at my appointment on the second Sunday in July, and as we separated he said, as Dr. McFerrin said: "If I should slip away before you get back you will know where to find me," and when I returned he was gone. His death was a peaceful one. His work was well done and now through eternal ages he shall rest in the joy of his Master. May the God of all comfort sustain the bereaved ones.
B. P. FULLILOVE.

Mrs. C. M. PORTER, nee Mary
Gordon Porter, died on Sept. 18, 1914, at her home in Opelousas, La., in her 44th year, and her body was laid to rest in Starkville, Miss., by the side of her two precious children—Gil-deroy and Ruby—who preceded her to the better land a few years ago.
Sister Mary gave her heart to God and joined the M. E. Church, South, of which she was an active and devoted member for many years. When the call came we know that she was ready, although, as it came suddenly, she left no dying testimony. Her pure, sweet life was sufficient proof of her truly Christian character. Her lamp was always brightly burning.
Her principles of love, truth and duty were as fixed as the eternal hills, for she drew them from the living Word of God. To her home and Church she gave her best time and talent; and like her Master she went about doing good. She gave freely of cheerfulness and hope in her thought for others, and so forgot herself—her desires, longings, and heartaches. In a letter to the writer her devoted husband said: "Mamie," as he always called her, "was too self-sacrificing for others, and she had instilled so much of her sweet Christian character into her three precious girls that it would be impossible for them not to become noble women." No one knew her better nor loved her more than the writer, having occupied the same home with her for twelve months. She was the daughter of Rev. R. G. and Mrs. Helen Porter. Our darling fought a brave and noble fight; and is now reaping her well-earned reward, crowned with everlasting life, and happy with her Lord, in whose presence is fullness of joy. She is survived by her sad and devoted husband and three daughters, a grief stricken mother, two sisters and four brothers who mourn their loss. Farewell, precious sister, we shall meet again some glad day.

MRS. L. NEWMAN MARKS.

RESOLUTIONS OF APPRECIATION.

(Adopted by the Fredonia Church,
North Mississippi Conference.)

Believing that it is meet, right, and our bounden duty to place on the records of this Church the expression of our love and our appreciation of the life work of our deceased brother,
Dr. A. S. YARBROUGH, who departed this life on May 14, 1914, we offer the following resolutions:

1. That in the death of Dr. Yarbrough this Church has lost one of its oldest and most influential members.

2. That the official board has lost one of its members who for forty-nine years steered the "Old Ship of Zion" along its way, who in season and out of season was anxious for the welfare of the Fredonia Church. Sometimes the clouds would gather and would obscure the light, but in the end the light would shine and dismay and doubt would scatter as the mist of the morning, and we went forward conquering and to conquer. We believe that under God, Dr. Yarbrough with his liberality and his love for all the members of this church and the hallowed associations connected therewith, was responsible for the greater part of our spiritual and financial progress; but Dr. Yarbrough has gone from us and the places that knew him shall know him no more; therefore let us be up and doing for the harvest is here and the Master needs workmen in his vineyard.

MEMORIAL RESOLUTIONS.

(Adopted by the Quarterly Conference of the Tyro Circuit, North Mississippi Conference, in session at Tyro,
October 11, 1914.)

Dr. A. S. YARBROUGH was called to the General Conference above on May 14, 1914. A great and good man has fallen. Dr. Yarbrough, although he had amassed a fortune and most of his interests were in Como of late years, had never severed his connection with the country charge with which he became identified more than a third of a century ago. On this charge, the Tyro circuit, he was a pillar of strength. If the preacher came to us without a horse, he was directed to go to Dr. Yarbrough, who always had an extra horse for his preacher; and wherever there was need on the circuit he was ready to bear his share of the burden. For many years he was as regular in his attendance upon the quarterly conference as the preacher in charge, although to do so meant a drive over rough roads of sixteen miles in some instances. He served the church as steward for thirty years and never during that time did his own church fall short in its financial obligations.

We commend his example to future generations, who must take up and bear the duties and obligations of the Church. Therefore, be it

Resolved, That this brief tribute be spread upon the minutes of the Conference, that a copy be sent to the New Orleans Advocate for publication, and one to Mrs. E. G. Taylor, his only surviving child, at Como, Miss.

SAGE TEA PUTS LIFE AND COLOR IN HAIR

Don't stay gray! Sage Tea and Sulphur darkens hair so naturally that nobody can tell.

You can turn gray, faded hair beautifully dark and lustrous almost overnight if you'll get a 50 cent bottle of "Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Hair Remedy" at any drug store. Millions of bottles of this old, famous Sage Tea Recipe are sold annually, says a well-known druggist here, because it darkens the hair so naturally and evenly that no one can tell it has been applied.

Those whose hair is turning gray, becoming faded, dry, scraggly and thin have a surprise awaiting them, because after one or two applications the gray hair vanishes and your locks become luxuriantly dark and beautiful—all dandruff goes, scalp itching and falling hair stops.

This is the age of youth. Gray-haired, unattractive folks aren't wanted around, so get busy with Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur to-night and you'll be delighted with your dark, handsome hair and your youthful appearance within a few days.

HOW "TIZ" HELPS SORE, TIRED FEET

Good-bye sore feet, burning feet, swollen feet, sweaty feet, smelling feet, tired feet.

Good-bye corns, callouses, bunions and raw spots. No more shoe tightness, no more limping with pain or drawing up your face in agony. "TIZ" is magical, acts right off. "TIZ" draws out all the poisonous exuda-

tions which puff up the feet. Use
"TIZ" and forget your foot misery. Ah! how comfortable your feet feel. Get a 25 cent box of "TIZ" now at any druggist or department store. Don't suffer. Have good feet, glad feet, feet that never swell, never hurt, never get tired. A year's foot comfort guaranteed or money refunded.

Tidings From the Field

Sand Point, Miss.

I have just closed a meeting at Pleasant Hill Church, in Smith County, Miss., which was in many respects one of the best meetings that has been held there in some time. Rev. N. S. Loftus, of Louin, Miss., did the preaching in power and demonstration of the Spirit. We had only 3 accessions to the Church, but the Church membership was revived. The conversions and reclamations probably numbered 35 or 40.

I have also held two other meetings: one at Cedar Grove and the other at Trinity. There was but 1 accession at Cedar Grove. But the meeting at Trinity was one of the best that I was ever in. There were 6 accessions to the Church, and many conversions and reclamations. One infant was baptized. The Lord has wonderfully blessed our churches.—H. P. Hankins, P. C.

Walnut Grove, Miss.

Dear Dr. Meek: Our work for the present year on the Walnut Grove charge has been very pleasant. We have a heavy charge—six churches—but by the help of God and some good people we have managed to serve them all. The work has been an inspiration to us and we believe a source of much benefit both to ourselves and to our people. Lately we have closed the last of six protracted meetings which were held in this charge. Those who helped us in these meetings were: Capt. B. H. Somers, Rev. W. J. Walters, Rev. T. J. O'Neil, Rev. F. L. Appiewhite, Rev. J. R. Hays, Rev. D. E. Vickers. Rev. Otto Porter was also with us in one of the meetings and had charge of the song services. Brother Porter is an excellent choir leader. All of these good men did excellent work and our meetings resulted in several additions to the Church. God is with us and everything is prosperous.—E. H. Cooley, P. C.

Philadelphia, Miss.

We have had with us Rev. J. A. Bowen, Conference Evangelist of the North Alabama Conference, in a union meeting with the Presbyterians. The meeting is said to have been the best in the history of Philadelphia. Brother Bowen is indeed a pastor-evangelist, having been in the regular pastorate for thirty-seven years, filling some of the best pulpits in the North Mississippi and North Alabama Conferences. He knows the needs of the pastor. His Conference made no mistake in putting him in the field. He remained with us twelve days holding three services daily, every service increasing in interest and power. Brother Bowen's style of preaching is smooth and easy; he condemns sin in no uncertain tones, yet the sinner knows he is his friend, and as one said, "No unsaved man can hear him preach without being moved to live a better life." He is thoroughly Scriptural in his preaching and often sublime in his utterances. The tangible results of the meeting are 46 additions to our Church and 14 to the Presbyterian Church, which is an indication of greater and better things for the Churches of our town. We heartily recommend Brother J. A. Bowen as one of the safest evangelists with whom we have been associated.—W. J. Ferguson.

Ponchatoula, La.

I wish to give you some account of our work on the Ponchatoula charge. In our first meeting, which was held at Springfield, Brother W. T. Currie did the preaching. We had a good meeting, and there were several applications for membership. Our next meeting was at Wesley Chapel. Brother H. C. Murphy was with us three days and did some good work. After he left, I did the work as best I could. The Lord wonderfully blessed our efforts, and 26 members were received into the Church. The Sunday school at Wesley deserves special mention, because of the great work it is accomplishing. Our last meeting began in Ponchatoula on the 24th of September and closed on the evening of October 7. Brother T. J. Norsworthy did the preaching and it was well done. He denounced sin in all its phases, and pleaded with the people to live a higher, nobler life. There was a great spiritual uplift in the Church, and 26 members were received. We have held some other meetings in school houses, sowing seed for good. We feel that our year's work has not been in vain—some good has been accomplished for our Lord. The people are kind and good to us; we have had a pleasant year. God has been with us. God bless you in your great work. You are giving us a good paper.—J. B. Williams.

Rienzi, Miss.

Dear Dr. Meek: Please give me a little more space in your most valuable paper. We have had a good year, so far, on Rienzi circuit. We have had four good meetings, two of which I held myself. In the other two I had assistance. We have had 44 accessions to our Church, mostly on profession of faith, though some came in by letter, and some by restoration. The Lord has blessed us very greatly, for which we give him all the praise. You remember I told you in the spring we had a new church on foot. The day after the committee was appointed, they met and decided to build, and in one month's time the lumber was on the ground. This was done before the people got so busy with their crops. I preached on the first Sunday in August in the old church and we held the protracted meeting in the new church on the first Sunday in September, it being almost completed. This church will pay every cent of their assessment for salary and also their part on the parsonage debt as well as their portion of the Conference collections. The present prospects are that our charge will make the best report this year in its history. To God be all the glory and praise for any success we may have had. Our new church will soon be nicely finished without a dollar of debt hanging over it. The brethren will have to borrow a few dollars to finish up with, but I hope to get that small amount from the Board of Church Extension.—B. P. Fullilove.

DEDICATION AT TALISHEEK, LA.

Dear Brother Meek: Please announce through the columns of your paper that we will dedicate our church at Talisheek, La., on November 8, which is the second Sunday in November. Despite the hard times caused by the European war, we are going to raise the entire debt on this church before we dedicate it. The good people of Talisheek have stood nobly by this enterprise and they deserve no small credit for the work done. Three years ago, when we decided to build a church, a great many said it could not be done, but now we have one of the nicest little churches you can find in St. Tammany Parish, free of debt and ready to be dedicated. To our heavenly Father be all the praise. T. V. PETERS, Pastor.

Sunday School

LOUISIANA NOTES.

By W. W. Williams.

Mr. John L. Alexander, of Chicago, said to be the greatest expert on the Teen-age work in the Sunday school in America, spoke on that subject Tuesday evening, Oct. 13, at the First Methodist Church of Alexandria. His address was considered one of the best ever heard on the subject in Alexandria. The writer took down the address word for word in shorthand to be used for future reference.

A strange Sunday school, indeed, was organized on Sunday, October 11, on the Indian Creek Mission, near Brimghurst on the Iron Mountain Ry., about 18 miles below Alexandria. From a religious view it is probably the best in the Parish. Rev. A. A. Phillips has a congregation there he has been preaching to for about two years. There are about 28 members of the church and about seven or eight children too young to join. They are all Indians and only one or two can read or write. There is less evangelistic work to be done at this place than any I have ever visited, as there are practically no outsiders—all are in the church who have reached the years of discretion. I was unable to have a Home Department in the Sunday school as I was told that no one stayed away from services for nearly twenty miles around.

Brother Obe Blue-Eyes, over 72 years of age, walked from Oakdale, about eighteen miles and says he will be at Sunday school next Sunday also. Misses Eva and Evelyn Atahwa, sixteen and eighteen years of age, orphans, who live alone, also came over twelve miles. These people think nothing of walking four or five miles after dark to get a quarterly to study the lesson, and this through the woods over logs and poles across streams. All these people practically are converted and pray and testify in public down to eleven years of age. About half of the services are conducted in the Choctaw language and half in English, and this applies to everything—songs, prayers and testimonies—some of the things said being translated from Choctaw into English, and vice versa. These people never had anything to do with churches before. One Choctaw song they are fond of singing, which I do not believe was originally composed for religious purposes, but which they apply as such, is something like this: "A light has been seen; the dew is on the ground; we are sure of a new day; it is dawning, all is well."

They seem to think they have almost heaven here now. They are very anxious for a day school in order that they may merely learn to read and write, so that they can study the Bible for themselves. I appointed one Indian who can read and write superintendent and Bible class teacher, and an Indian boy about 15 years old as secretary. They are the only two who are competent to serve as officers. I will personally assist them for several weeks to come, they paying my expenses. Thirty-four were present last Sunday and the collection amounted to $3.40—an average of ten cents each.

KENTWOOD (LA.) NOTES.

By Rev. P. O. Lowrey.

Following the close of the recent week's Sunday school revival at Kentwood, in which 75 were added to the enrollment, a reception was given by the Adult Bible classes to the new members above the intermediate grades on Thursday night, Oct. 8. Delightful music was furnished by the Foley boys—violinists and sons of the manager of the Brooks-Scanlon Lumber Co., the Methodist Ladies Chorus Choir, and the Osyka (Miss.) quartette. Mrs. J. B. Magee gave "A Greeting to the New Sunday School Scholars;" Mr. H. E. Sanders, chairman of the Men's Bible class membership committee, spoke on "Why We Invited You to Join Our Sunday School;" Mr. Ralph Napier, a new scholar, responded on "Why We Accepted Your Invitation," and the pastor discussed our motto, "My Brother and I." About 140 sat down to the banquet that had been prepared by the ladies of the Church, and a most delightful time was had and a new era was marked in the Methodist Sunday school work and church life of Kentwood.

The Osyka (Miss.) quartette, by the way, is one of the finest musical combinations that we know in the whole country—one of the best quartettes that we ever heard. It is under the leadership of Mr. O. H. Jones, second bass, and Miss Ruth Ott, accompanist. These Christian young people are delighted to assist their near-by neighbors.

Another important event affecting our Kentwood church life was the buying during rally week of the lot adjoining the one on which "Scout Hall," in which the Boy Scouts meet and which is used for our Sunday school primary department, the price paid being $315. This gives us the best down-town location in the city, and already we are planning to install a drinking fountain, sanitary toilets, a ladies' rest room, and other sociological features for the benefit of the public, the location being ideal for this.

Don't Try to Paint Pimples

But Use Stuart's Calcium Wafers and Completely Remove Them in a Few Days.

You positively get rid of your pimples and skin eruptions by taking Stuart's Calcium Wafers.

These wonderful little workers have cured bad boils in three days, and some cases of skin disease in a week.

"Let Stuart's Calcium Wafers give you a fine, clear, transparent complexion, like this young lady's."

They contain as their main ingredient the most thorough, quick and effective blood cleanser known—calcium sulphide.

Stuart's Calcium Wafers have not a particle of poison in them. They are free from mercury, biting drugs or venomous opiates. This is absolutely guaranteed. They cannot do any harm but they always do good—good that you can see in the mirror before your own eyes in a few days after.

Stuart's Calcium Wafers will make you happy because your face will be a welcome sight not only to yourself when you look into the glass, but to everybody else who knows you and talks with you.

You don't want to wait forever and a day to get rid of your pimples or other skin eruptions. You want to get rid of them right now. Next week you may want to go somewhere where you wouldn't like to have to take the pimples along.

Go to your druggist to-day and obtain a box of Stuart's Calcium Wafers and then watch all your face horrors simply fade away. They are sold wherever drugs are sold. Price 50 cents. A small sample package will be mailed free by addressing F. A. Stuart Co., 175 Stuart Bldg., Marshall, Mich.

FROM BAKER, LA.

Dear Editor: Since last writing you, I have held my revival meeting at Bethel. Rev. J. E. Craig did the preaching and did it well. From start to finish he held his congregations spell-bound. He was reared near Bethel and everybody was anxious to hear him preach; so we had large congregations. Any one desiring an earnest gospel preacher to help him in a revival meeting, will do well to secure Brother Craig's services. We had quite a number of conversions and 11 additions to the Church, and baptized 15 children. We received one old man on profession of faith, who was 81 years of age.

We closed the meeting on Friday night and left on Saturday morning for Deerford where we met Brother Bowman, our presiding elder, and after his sermon at 11 a. m. followed by one of the best dinners ever spread at Deerford, or anywhere else, we held my fourth, and last quarterly conference, which was one of the best, in point of spirituality, ever held on the charge. The stewards brought in good reports, all things considered. Brother Bowman presided with grace and ability and preached four fine sermons at Deerford and one at Baker. The good people of Deerford gave us a nice pounding while I was holding my meeting at Bethel, and I knew nothing of it until I reached home Sunday evening. I assure you, Mr. Editor, that we appreciated it very much. My four years will soon be up and then I shall have to say good bye to the good people of the Baker charge. Baker will be a good place for some good man—and I am trusting that a good, strong man will be sent to this charge next year. May God bless the Advocate, its Editor, and all who are connected with it.—S. D. Howard.

If You Suffer From Catarrh

Try This Pleasant Herb Smoke. Sent FREE By Mail.

Dr. Blosser, who has devoted forty years to the treatment of Catarrh, is the originator of a certain combination of medical herbs, flowers and berries to be smoked in a pipe or ready prepared cigarette. The accompanying illustration shows how the smoke-vapor reaches all the air passages of the head, nose and throat. As the disease is carried into these passages with the air you breathe, so the antiseptic, healing vapor of this Remedy is carried with the breath directly to the affected parts.

This simple, practical method applies the medicine where sprays, douches, ointments etc., cannot possibly go. Its effect is soothing and healing, and is entirely harmless, containing no tobacco or habit forming drugs. It is pleasant to use, and not sickening to those who have never smoked. No matter how severe or long standing your case may be, we want to show you what our Remedy will do.

To prove the beneficial, pleasant effect, The Blosser Company, 204 Walton St., Atlanta, Ga., will mail absolutely free to any sufferer, a sample that will verify their claims by actual test. This free package contains a pipe, some of the Remedy for smoking and also some of our medical cigarettes. If you wish to continue the treatment, it will cost only one dollar for a month's supply for the pipe, or a box containing one hundred cigarettes. We pay the postage.

If you are a sufferer from Catarrh, Asthma, Bacterial Deafness, or if subject to frequent colds, send your name and address at once by postal card or letter for the free package, and a copy of our illustrated booklet.

As a real test of its value to you, justify this free Farm Ditcher AND ROAD GRADER 10 Days You will surely like it. FREE. Quickly fixes your wet land for growing big crops, and your roads for easy travel. Does work of 100 men. One-tenth price of big costly ones. Write for free book. ## SEVERE RHEUMATIC PAINS DISAPPEAR

Rheumatism depends on an acid in the blood, which affects the muscles and joints, producing inflammation, stiffness and pain. This acid gets into the blood through some defect in the digestive process.

Hood's Sarsaparilla, the old-time blood tonic, is very successful in the treatment of rheumatism. It acts directly, with purifying effect, on the blood, and improves the digestion. Don't suffer. Get Hood's today.

A GIFTED YOUNG PREACHER.

Mr. Editor: It has so happened that I have had to spend the last few Sundays at Cleveland, and the first day, as is my custom, on the Sabbath, I went to the Methodist Church. I was soon reminded of the fact that Brother E. R. Smoot, the man who only a few years ago came to Greenwood, my home town, and plucked from among us one of our "fairest flowers" to share his fate, was the man of the hour. I was delighted with the privilege but only expected to hear the average effort of the beginner in the ministry. To my surprise, I found one of the ablest preachers in our Conference. In fact, he possesses some of the rarest gifts found among men. He has a very commanding appearance, has a very strong voice, and is perfectly composed. His language is choice, and he is a thinker. He can with equal liberty live among the stars and paint pictures of the "dream land," or share the heartaches of the unfortunate. After hearing him as I have, I would be afraid to even predict his future.

Keep this as a secret: Be ye layman or elder, if while changes are being made at our Conference, you want a man capable of filling any church in the North Mississippi Conference "plum full," have the Bishop send you E. R. Smoot.

Very truly,
Greenwood, Miss. J. A. WOODS.

CALOMEL WHEN BILIOUS? NO! STOP! MAKES YOU SICK AND SALIVATES

"Dodson's Liver Tone" Is Harmless To Clean Your Sluggish Liver and Bowels.

Ugh! Calomel makes you sick. It's horrible! Take a dose of the dangerous drug tonight and tomorrow you may lose a day's work.

Calomel is mercury or quicksilver which causes necrosis of the bones. Calomel, when it comes into contact with sour bile crashes into it, breaking it up. This is when you feel that awful nausea and cramping. If you are sluggish and "all knocked out," if your liver is torpid and bowels constipated or you have headache, dizziness, coated tongue, if breath is bad or stomach sour, just try a spoonful of harmless Dodson's Liver Tone tonight on my guarantee.

Here's my guarantee—Go to any drug store and get a 50 cent bottle of Dodson's Liver Tone. Take a spoonful and if it doesn't straighten you right up and make you feel fine and vigorous I want you to go back to the store and get your money. Dodson's Liver Tone is destroying the sale of calomel because it is real liver medicine; entirely vegetable, therefore it can not salivate or make you sick.

I guarantee that one spoonful of Dodson's Liver Tone will put your sluggish liver to work and clean your bowels of that sour bile and constipated waste which is clogging your system and making you feel miserable. I guarantee that a bottle of Dodson's Liver Tone will keep your entire family feeling fine for months. Give it to your children. It is harmless; doesn't gripe and they like its pleasant taste.

CHAUTAUQUA FOREIGN MISSIONARY WEEK.

Nashville, Tenn., Oct. 7, 1914.

My dear Friend: Although the press to-day is so full of live, interesting news, I am sending you this little sheet with the hope that you may find space for it in your Woman's Page. We are going to make a special effort this year to arouse our people to the responsibility and the opportunity offered by the printed page. The printed page has become a strategic method of missionary propaganda. It speaks alike to men, women and children, and unlike the living messenger, who may speak for an hour or two, abides in the home and prolongs its appeal throughout entire days and nights. The present state of unrest and turmoil in Europe has enlarged its opportunity until now it is world-wide and I am urging you as never before to lay this work of publicity upon the hearts and consciences of your Superintendents and make your Woman's Page a weapon of irresistible influence in publishing the glad tidings of salvation.

Sincerely yours,

MRS. H. R. STEELE,
Educational Secretary.

Now, we come to the article which Mrs. Steele asked us to publish, and we gladly give it space in our page this week. Most of the men and women mentioned need no introduction, for theirs is a national, nay, almost world-wide, reputation. It is a source of genuine pleasure to Mrs. Montgomery's friends to know that she is writing another book which will be in our study course in 1915. Her "Western Women in Eastern Lands" was widely read and kindled a lasting enthusiasm for the mission work.

"The Interdenominational Foreign Missionary Institute was one of the most inspiring weeks at Chautauqua during the season of 1914.

The fact that 1100 persons registered to consider methods of conveying the Christian message to all members of the World Family, tells its own story. Nearly all branches of the Christian Church were represented, there being 19 different denominations represented. The incomparable leadership of Dr. Shailer Mathews, in the School of Religion, has made these weeks of remarkable value to the hundreds who participated.

Mrs. Helen Barrett Montgomery reviewed the Foreign Missionary text book, "The Child in the Midst" written by Mrs. Larabee.

Mrs. Montgomery's illuminating exposition of the importance of the child will not only benefit the Foreign Missionary propaganda, but will react forcibly upon the development of the child at home.

Rev. John M. Moore of New York, Dean Shailer Mathews and Mrs. Montgomery conducted the "Methods Hour" each afternoon where free discussion was permitted and many problems presented and solved.

Now our interest centers upon next season. The meeting for 1915 is being planned for August 25 to 29. Mrs. Montgomery will unfold the text book for the year 1915, which she is writing herself, "The King's Highway." It will recount her eventful trip around the world in company with Mrs. H. W. Peabody.

Mrs. Peabody, chairman of the Central Committee on United Study of Foreign Missions, was present at the institute and is planning a splendid program for 1915 with these and other attractive features: a normal teacher for leaders of mission study classes and other missionary organizations;

a story hour for children, and special conferences for workers. There will also be attractions offered for young women and inducements projected to bring them in large numbers.

A special rate of $10 a week, including gate fee, boarding accommodations and registry, may be obtained by addressing Dean Shailer Mathews, Chautauqua, N. Y. Reservations should be made early.

The following ladies comprise the Executive Committee for the coming year and will be ready to furnish any information desired in regard to the Institute for 1915: Mrs. H. T. Crane, chairman, 2427 Auburn Avenue, Cincinnati, O.; Mrs. Mary Clokey Porter, 15 Marshall Avenue, Pittsburgh, Pa.; Mrs. J. A. Travis, 1008 East Capitol Street, Washington, D. C.; Mrs. H. R. Steele, 810 Broadway, Nashville, Tenn.; Miss Carrie Carnahan (Shady Avenue), Walnut Street, Pittsburgh, Pa.; Mrs. Charles Spaeth, 11 Audubon Street, Rochester, N. Y.

WEEK OF PRAYER.

The first week in November (2-9) has been set apart as our Week of Prayer. Let us begin right now to plan and pray for it. Most attractive programs have been sent out, giving not only the devotional topics, but the subjects for each day's study and consideration. One page of the program is devoted to a list of the leaflets helpful to the successful carrying out of the program, these lists are tabulated under the days they are to be used. Every detail has been arranged for you by Mrs. B. W. Lipscomb, from whom you can secure these leaflets by sending postage to cover cost of mailing. We want information, but above all else we desire to stress prayer, then will follow the gifts not only of gold and silver, but of self, and such an inspiration will come that it will enable us to gain a vision of the world's needs and our responsibilities.

The objects to which our offerings are to be devoted are the Rio School in Brazil, and the Vashti Industrial School in Thomasville, Ga. Miss M. L. Gibson, in a leaflet entitled "Voices from Rio de Janeiro," sets forth in a beautifully impressive way a number of reasons why it is so imperative to have a first class Christian school for girls in this city. She also gives a brief history of the work since its establishment in 1887. The need is great, oh, so great! and "upon each member of the missionary society, upon every woman who ought to be enrolled as a member, upon every man, woman, and child who values life and light and freedom of conscience, the obligation to aid by prayer and gifts is imperative."

In the homeland the needs for the Vashti Industrial School make as earnest an appeal to our hearts and purses as does the work in Brazil. This industrial school has done a wonderful work and of the two hundred girls helped only six have fallen by the wayside. It pays to invest your money here. They are crowded to discomfort and the equipment is such that they are not able to obtain the best results. These are only a few of the facts why we should help. Read the leaflet "Reason Why I Need to Help Vashti," and remember it is the week of PRAYER you are going to observe. After much earnest communion with your Father, see if you cannot say "I will help out of my bounty—nay more—I will this year deny myself some luxury, some necessity, in order that I may help to meet the great need at the Vashti Industrial School."

PORT GIBSON DISTRICT MISSIONARY MEETING.

The Port Gibson district meeting was held in Centerville on Oct. 5 and 6, and it was a season of spiritual uplift. We were exceedingly fortunate in having the following officers as our guests: Mrs. R. E. Johnson, president; Mrs. W. H. LaPrade, corresponding secretary of Foreign department; and Mrs. Paul Daniel, first vice-president. On Monday night Mrs. Johnson spoke of her trip to Junaluska and the inspiration it had been to her. She also gave a resume of the work in Foreign fields. On Tuesday night Mrs. LaPrade spoke on "Social Service," and presented her subject in such a simple impressive manner that the lessons brought out will linger long in the hearts of her hearers, and be productive of much good. Tuesday was devoted to institute work. The changes in our administration were carefully and lovingly explained by Mrs. Johnson, and we are sorry representatives from every auxiliary in the district were not there, for much opposition to the contemplated changes would have been overcome. Mrs. Daniel gave the young people's work the prominence which our women are beginning to realize it deserves. She also gave a vivid description of the work at Biloxi Wesley House where she labored three years prior to her marriage.

RECIPE FOR GRAY HAIR.

To half pint of water add 1 oz. Bay Rum, a small box of Barbo Compound, and 1-4 oz. of glycerine. Apply to the hair twice a week until it becomes the desired shade. Any druggist can put this up or you can mix it at home at very little cost. Full directions for making and use come in each box of Barbo Compound. It will gradually darken streaked, faded gray hair, and removes dandruff. It is excellent for falling hair and will make harsh hair soft and glossy. It will not color the scalp, is not sticky or greasy, and does not rub off.

EXPERIENCE IS THE BEST TEACHER OF ALL.

"The proof of the pudding is in the eating." One is far more apt to believe a man who tells what he has done, than a man who tells what he could do. So it is with medicine. The real proof of the merits of Dr. Miles' Restorative Remedies lies in the fact that they have been used beneficially for over a quarter of a century and thousands have actually testified to benefits they have received.

We know that Dr. Miles' Anti-Pain Pills will relieve all aches and pains because thousands have found this to be proven by actual experience.

The Rev. W. D. Barger, of Hagerstown, Md., has stated:—

"Voluntarily and unsolicited I wish to bear witness to the high character of Dr. Miles' Restorative Remedies. To me personally they have been a great blessing, especially the Nervine, the Anti-Pain Pills and the Liver Pills. In cases of headache or pain of any kind they act like a charm. I have given many of them to the suffering and the results have always proven gratifying."

Dr. Miles' Anti-Pain Pills have no unpleasant after-effect. They are not constipating. They do not contain any of the dangerous habit forming drugs. We do not claim that they remove the cause of the pain, but we do claim that they bring quick relief in a harmless manner.

They are sold by all druggists at 25c a box containing 25 doses. If not satisfactory your money will be cheerfully refunded.

A RESPONSE.

By Hilary Westbrook.

Brother H. P. Hopper in referring to my article in the Advocate of a recent date concerning the independent camp meetings is somewhat nebulous. It seems that he wants to class what I have said as being fabulous. His article is just a little bit one-sided. It reminds me of a small fish nibbling at a bait that is attached to a large hook in the water. I want to say with all due respect to Brother Hopper and all the rest, that I am not against the camp meetings which are run and controlled by our great Church; "for I was saved in and through this channel." And sometimes it may be that in some communities these independent camp meetings might do some good, but it is a rare thing.

I have been the pastor on the Waynesboro circuit for three successive years, and I can not say that the Frost Bridge camp meeting has been a stimulant to my work. While some will argue that it is a feeder for my charge, I can't see it that way. As a rule the churches that are affiliated with these independent camps are inclined to hold themselves aloof from their pastor, or at least some of the folks appear to be that way. While, on the other hand, we have some as fine people as there are in the world who assist in these meetings. And I believe that Brother Hopper is in that loyal class.

We have some men and women who attend these meetings and shout, pray, and pay and then come home and sit down on the "stool of do nothing;" and it may be that they will visit the church occasionally, and when they do, you can hardly get a grunt out of them, let the preaching be great or small.

I've known of instances where some have left the meeting in the church at home and have gone off to take part in meetings outside of the Church. And again I have known some who have promised to pay a certain amount into the treasury of the church and who failed to come up to their obligations; but they always have money for the independent camp meetings. Yes, and when the faithful stewards go to them for money for the various claims for the Church they will say, "I hardly know what I can do for the Church, "for I have just paid $5 or $10 to the camp meeting, but I guess that I can give you one dollar for the Church." Where does this man's devoutness lie, as a member of the Church militant? If we fail to pay as much into the treasury of the Church as we do into the treasury of the camp meeting we are just that much in the arrears when it comes to church loyalty.

I was in attendance upon the services of the Frost Bridge camp meeting for four days and I want to say that Brother C. M. Dunaway did some as fine preaching as I ever listened to. But, to my surprise, toward the close of the series of services, he didn't open the doors of the church a single time while I was present. I don't know why he did not, as the camp is made up principally of the people from the Mathersville and the Waynesboro circuits. I think that it would have been wise to extend an opportunity to those who desire to identify themselves with the Church of God.

What, if these camps are run and controlled by a board of trustees independent of the Church? That is no reason why they should boycott the pastors and have nothing at all to do with them. They treat the pastors in and around these camps as church holders and not as God-called ministers. Is this right? Nay, verily.

Now if the Church is true to God, she stands unwaveringly for the doctrine or the experience of "perfect love," as taught uncompromisingly by the founder of our great church—John Wesley. Can we treat the Church with the spirit of half-heartedness and contend or boast of our church loyalty? I have in mind some who have and are doing this very thing to-day. It would not have been thus, had it not been that some of the preachers got too big for the Church to hold them, or that is my candid opinion about the matter.

Oh! let us all take our stand in the vanguard of the Church's forces, as fearless soldiers of the cross of Jesus Christ, ever holding up the standard of a full salvation from all sin in the Church, and not out of the Church.

"Beyond my highest joy
I prize her heavenly ways,
Her sweet communion, solemn vows,
Her hymns of love and praise."

Waynesboro, Miss.

Rheumatism

A Home Cure Given by One Who Had it

In the spring of 1893 I was attacked by Muscular and Inflammatory Rheumatism. I suffered as only those who have it know, for over three years. I tried remedy after remedy, and doctor after doctor, but such relief as I received was only temporary. Finally, I found a remedy that cured me completely, and it has never returned. I have given it to a number who were terribly afflicted and even bed-ridden with Rheumatism, and it effected a cure in every case.

I want every sufferer from any form of rheumatic trouble to try this marvelous healing power. Don't send a cent; simply mail your name and address and I will send it free to try. After you have used it and it has proven itself to be that long-looked-for means of curing your Rheumatism, you may send the price of it, one dollar, but, understand, I do not want your money unless you are perfectly satisfied to send it. Isn't that fair? Why suffer any longer when positive relief is thus offered you free? Don't delay. Write to-day.

TEMPERANCE ITEMS.

A young man drunk may be but his father's vote staggering around.

No thinking man can run a saloon and be happy.

No thinking man can vote for license and have an easy mind.

In an address before citizens of another town, a banker resident of a town which a few years ago voted out the saloons presented this telling argument for prohibition: "Liquor men," he said, "often contended that if we voted our town dry grass would grow in our streets. That prediction has come true, at least in part: Grass has actually overgrown one of our streets—the street that leads to the jail."

The State Bank Commissioner of Maine, under date of March 30, 1914, says: "The assets of the trust companies, savings banks and building and loan associations are $172,710,062.37. To this must be added about $72,000,000 which is in the national banks of the State, making a grand total of $244,000,000. The total number of depositors in the savings banks, trust companies and building and loan associations is 383,280." The annual gain in the savings bank deposits of prohibition Maine during the past ten years has been about $6,500,000.

GIVE "SYRUP OF FIGS" TO CONSTIPATED CHILD

Delicious "Fruit Laxative" can't harm tender little Stomach, liver and bowels.

Look at the tongue, mother! If coated, your little one's stomach, liver and bowels need cleansing at once. When peevish, cross, listless, doesn't sleep, eat or act naturally, or is feverish, stomach sour, breath bad; has sore throat, diarrhea, full of cold, give a teaspoonful of "California Syrup of Figs," and in a few hours all the foul, constipated waste, undigested food and sour bile gently moves out of its little bowels without griping, and you have a well, playful child again. Ask your druggist for a 50-cent bottle of "California Syrup of Figs," which contains full directions for babies, children of all ages and for grown-ups.

SALTS IF BACKACHE AND KIDNEYS HURT

Drink lots of water and stop eating meat for a while if your Bladder troubles you.

When you wake up with backache and dull misery in the kidney region it generally means you have been eating too much meat, says a well-known authority. Meat forms uric acid which overworks the kidneys in their effort to filter it from the blood and they become sort of paralyzed and foggy. When your kidneys get sluggish and clog you must relieve them, like you relieve your bowels; else you have backache, sick headache, dizzy spells; your stomach sours, tongue is coated, and when the weather is bad you have rheumatic twinges.

Either consult a good, reliable physician at once or get from your pharmacist about four ounces of Jad Salts; take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast for a few days and your kidneys will then act fine. This famous salts is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia, and has been used for generations to clean and stimulate sluggish kidneys, also to neutralize acids so they no longer irritate, thus ending bladder weakness.

Jad Salts is a life saver for regular meat eaters. It is inexpensive, cannot injure and makes a delightful, effervescent lithia-water drink.

OXFORD, MISS.

Dear Doctor Meek: We have just closed a very helpful meeting in our Church. The congregations at night were immense. We put in more than one hundred extra seats to be used during the meeting, but despite that fact scores of people were turned away each Sunday night. Mr. Irwin Price had charge of the music and Rev. J. H. Felts did the preaching the second week. While up to this time there has been no large ingathering on profession of faith, still the meeting made a profound impression upon the community. We have had 54 additions to the Church so far this year, which is the largest number received in this charge any year since the great Cates meeting eight years ago, with one single exception.

Our Sunday school is full to overflowing. Two of our adult classes have been compelled to seek quarters outside of the church and still we are crowded. We propose, despite the financial depression, to build some rooms in the rear of the church early next year.

The University is booming. The Chancellor has identified himself with our Church and is a regular and devout worshiper at our altars. The entire community here is elated over the fact that the enrollment of the University has recently gone above the 500 mark, which is the highest figure ever reached in the history of the institution. This large attendance means a great deal to Oxford, and a great deal to the Churches. It imposes a great responsibility and presents a golden opportunity.

MISSISSIPPI LEAGUERS, ATTENTION!

Our last Annual Epworth League Conference met in Meridian, Miss., June 17-21, with 62 official delegates and 11 pastors in attendance. While the attendance was not large, the interest was good and everything bids fair for better work this year and an enthusiastic Conference next June.

We were exceedingly fortunate in having with us Miss Rosalie Edwards to conduct the devotional services throughout the Conference. These devotional services were so helpful and so much enjoyed by the Leaguers that it was decided to have Miss Edwards to conduct the devotional services at Jackson next year. It was a source of much regret that Rev. Paul Kern and Miss Trawick of the central office could not be with us; however, A. C. Tippens of Nashville and Rev. J. H. Holder of Okolona, Miss., came to our rescue with many helpful suggestions.

Hon. T. L. Bailey delivered the address of welcome, which was responded to by Rev. J. L. Neill of Laurel, Miss. Other speakers on the program were Rev. H. F. Tolle, Rev. H. B. Watkins, Rev. A. F. Watkins, Rev. W. B. Hogg and Mr. J. O. Van Meter. Special mention should be made of Mr. Van Meter who so ably handled the playground work, and also of Miss Corrine Avery, Miss Annie D. Lewis, and the President, W. D. Hawkins, who were responsible for a large share of the enthusiasm of the Conference.

The principal things recommended by the Committee concerning future work were:

1. That we adopt the policy recommended by the Board of Missions, and accept the African Special for our missionary work and contributions during the coming year; that we undertake to raise $500 for this purpose during the next year in shares of $5 each; that we take a subscription at this session, securing pledges from the chapters represented and instruct the Fourth Vice-President to take charge of this work, securing subscriptions and collecting for the same—all moneys to be sent by the chapters to the Fourth Vice-President and he to remit the same to the Treasurer of the League, to be kept as a separate fund and remitted directly to the Treasurer of the Board of Missions, holding his receipts as vouchers for the same.

2. We recommend that the Conference officers be instructed to prepare by correspondence with the various Leagues accurate directories for future use.

3. We recommend that the privilege of printing or not printing the minutes be left to the Executive Committee.

4. We recommend the sending of a delegate to the Buffalo Conference.

5. We recommend that the Board of officers arrange to have a representative of the League present the League interests at the district conferences; also that the President of the Conference League present the League interests to the Annual Conference, if possible, securing an hour for that purpose.

6. We recommend that wherever possible a District League be organized and district institutes be held.

7. We regard the use of the Epworth Era essential to the best interests of the League and recommend that more Leaguers be urged to subscribe.

8. We recommend that the budget system be used to finance individual chapters.

9. We recommend further that the Conference officers work directly with the individual Leagues and keep in touch with the District Secretaries.

10. We recommend that each League hold a special League Day, the contribution taken on that day to be turned into the treasury of the League Conference for Conference expenses.

11. We recommend that after the return home of the delegates an echo meeting be held in each chapter to discuss the work of this Conference.

12. We recommend that the membership fee of ten cents per member per year be paid in January.

13. We recommend that a delegate from each chapter be sent to the Seashore Assembly and that delegates be sent also from chapters with no Leagues.

14. We recommend that a delegate be sent from each district to the Junaluska Conference, preferably the District Secretary of each District, the expense of said delegate being paid.

W. D. Hawkins was elected a delegate to the International Epworth League Conference at Buffalo, N. Y.

The following officers were elected for the ensuing year:

President, W. D. Hawkins, Meridian;

1st. Vice-President, John Picketts, Jackson; 2nd Vice-President, Miss Laura Rankin, Gulfport; 3rd Vice-President, Miss Bertha Mitchell, Laurel; 4th Vice-President, Miss Harriet Leech, Hattiesburg; Jr. Superintendent, Mrs. T. B. Clifford, McComb City; Secretary, C. H. Poythress, Meridian; Treasurer, A. R. Campbell, Sumrall; Era Agent, Miss Elsie Tucker, Vicksburg.

District Secretaries: Brookhaven District, W. D. Davis, Brookhaven; Jackson, Miss Corrine Avery, Jackson; Hattiesburg, Miss Addie Greely, Hattiesburg; Meridian, Miss Ada Holliday, Meridian; Newton, Mrs. J. S. Purcell, Mont Rose; Port Gibson, Mrs. F. H. Henderson, Vicksburg; Seashore, Miss Zora Saucier, Saucier.

Junior District Secretaries: Brookhaven District, Mrs. Jesse Davis, Brookhaven; Hattiesburg, Mrs. G. H. Galloway, Hattiesburg; Jackson, Miss Vida Gellylem, Jackson; Meridian, Miss Jane Graham, Meridian; Newton, Mrs. H. F. Tolle, Newton; Port Gibson, Miss Maud East, Natchez; Seashore, Miss Capitola Matheas, Biloxi.

One of the interesting features of the Conference was the open air meeting at Highland Park, followed by recreation at the playground conducted by J. O. Van Meter.

At the close of the business session Saturday afternoon, held at Highland Park, Jackson, Miss., was chosen as the place of meeting of the next Conference.

THE TIDE NOT ALL ONE WAY.

Anyhow, the Kaiser is not altogether bad. In his "Ten Commandments" to his soldiers he warns them against drinking beer, wine, or liquors. The Czar of Russia is also a vigorous advocate of temperance. The "water wave" is mounting higher to-day than ever before in the world's history and the throne of King Alcohol is more tottery. War and intemperance are two of the oldest and greatest enemies of the human race, and it is comforting to know that while one of them is at present cursing the world in a larger measure than usual, the other is in retreat.

AN AWFUL RESPONSIBILITY.

It is a tremendous responsibility to stand in the pulpit as a messenger sent from God. In the pews are usually people of various needs: the saint, anxious for a new vision of the Master; the careless sinner, hastening unconcerned to eternity; sorrowing ones, seeking comfort; the weary and burdened, longing for rest; persons harassed by doubts and fears, hoping to receive light and help; the young, already face to face with temptation, and the aged, who perhaps are in the sanctuary of the Lord for the last time. How a preacher in such a presence can be cold and unfeeling, or pedantic, or speculative, or parade his doubts, or seek to glorify himself, or in any other manner trifle away the hour, is quite beyond our power to see. Surely, there will be a terrible reckoning for such an one when he stands before the judgment throne to give an account of how he fulfilled his sacred mission. Oh, brethren, let us go from our knees to the sacred desk; and may the Lord have mercy upon us!

A REMARKABLE RULER.

Despite the fact that since the outbreak of the present titanic war in Europe he has been decidedly unpopular in the United States, and that some have expressed a desire to see him dethroned and banished to some lonely island, as Napoleon was, it must be admitted that Emperor William of Germany is one of the most remarkable men of this age. We are not a German sympathizer in the awful struggle now raging, but we have never felt that we knew enough about the causes that precipitated it to undertake the task of fixing the responsibility for it and to indict the Kaiser as the chief sinner in the case, though possibly he may have been. We think that this question had best be left to the philosophic historians of the future, and even they are apt to be more or less biased in favor of the side that is finally victorious. As we of the Southern States know, with many might not only makes right in the living world of action, but also in the written records of mankind.

But most of this is apart from what we started out to do, which was to introduce an estimate of the Kaiser given by Dr. Newell Dwight Hillis in a sermon delivered in the Plymouth Church of Brooklyn on October 11, and which was printed in The Brooklyn Eagle. This portion of Dr. Hillis' utterance, which we quote without meaning to give all that he says our full endorsement, was as follows:

"Some men trace the new industrial epoch of Germany to the influence of the Kaiser. This is like saying that the man who shakes the bough of a fruit tree created the orchard. The Kaiser entered the earthly scene at the strategic and ripe moment, but he has also been a good husbandman. For twenty years he has been the most talked of ruler in the world, and always there have been two clippings filed about the Emperor to one clipping about any other king or president. His speeches fill many volumes, and he writes as soldier, sailor, banker, railway man, dramatist, musician, philosopher, theologian. Beyond all doubt the Kaiser is one of the best equipped men in the world to-day. One enormous advantage he has always had, has been that experts in every department of knowledge have always been out as scouts to bring him back the latest achievements. When Professor Roentgen announced the discovery of the X-ray, the first telegram came from the Emperor's palace, and was dated at 6 o'clock in the morning. No ruler in the world has been so hard a worker or so wide a traveler, journeying incessantly over his empire. The Kaiser's knowledge of the leaders of commerce and finance in different cities, and the work carried on in every factory is first-hand knowledge. No man can read the Emperor's speeches without realizing that Frederick the Great has found a successor in a man of intellect, initiative, boundless energy, and courage, dreaming dreams and seeing visions for his country. Any statement regarding Germany's prosperity, her growth and her future must make a large place for a ruler who has exerted more influence over the legislative and financial departments of the government than any ruler that our earth has ever known."

THE ACTION OF THE TENNESSEE CONFERENCE.

The action of the Tennessee Conference relating to Vanderbilt University and the present educational situation was somewhat varied and, we think, inconsistent. First, a commissioner was elected to co-operate with the Educational Commission in effecting the transfer of any remaining rights that the Church may have in the University back to the eight original patronizing Conferences, and he was instructed not to accept any relation to any department of the University different from that which the Church sustains to the institution as a whole. The new University in Atlanta was endorsed and the hearty co-operation of the Conference was pledged to it. Later the appointment of Dr. W. F. Tillett to a chair in Vanderbilt was requested and the assignment was made. Before the adjournment of the Conference, however, the following action was taken: "Resolved by the Tennessee Conference, That in recommending appointments to Vanderbilt University, we do not commit ourselves in any sense to an endorsement of that institution, nor do we relinquish any legal right or privilege we have in said University; our action being based on the consideration that our last General Conference made provision for reconveying the University to the eight patronizing Conferences and that this matter remains pending until acted upon by the representatives of the said patronizing Conferences, to be appointed at the request of the General Conference."

Obviously, the Conference in this resolution based its action upon a glaring fallacy, namely, the assumption that the General Conference desired all the past relations between the Church and Vanderbilt University to be maintained until the transfer of its claims back to the patronizing Conferences shall have been effected. That the General Conference did not desire any such thing is perfectly clear from the fact that it withdrew all support from the theological department of the University and made arrangement for the education of our ministry elsewhere. If the reasoning of the Tennessee Conference were sound it would necessitate giving Vanderbilt the continued patronage of the Church, as well as the service of our ministers as professors. The only relation which the General Conference made provision to keep intact until the aforementioned transfer is made, was that relating to the confirmation of the trustees.

But we think that this concluding resolution of the Tennessee Conference is worth something. It will have a tendency to prevent its action in this instance from being urged as a precedent in the future, and it may with some also weaken the plea of the Vanderbilts that the Church has given recognition to the Biblical Department of the University—a plea that we dare say they will be pretty apt to bring forward and work for all it is worth hereafter. And we must confess that we regard this action of averring that the University was not being endorsed while a minister was being appointed to a place in its faculty, as very much like that of a man affirming that he must be regarded as never touching liquor while gulping a bottle of good old Bourbon down his throat.

For our part, we sincerely regret that all our Conferences have not stood resolutely against connecting the Church in any way whatever with the present administration of Vanderbilt University, which is holding proudly on to the $300,000 that Mr. Carnegie apparently hung up for the purpose of influencing public sentiment when the Vanderbilt case was pending in court. As we see it, by not doing so they have compromised and hurt the Church. It is unfortunate that there are so many among us who can be so easily led into thinking that the easiest way is the safest and best way. We do not know of anything that we think is so much needed in this day as a few men who would be willing to die for principle, if necessary. A flexible opportunism is the bane of the age in which we are living, both in Church and State.

MY SAVIOR'S HAND.

By Katherine Purvis.

That tender hand—in dark Gethsemane Raised in the prayer, "Thy will, not mine, be done!"—
 Was torn and bleeding in the agony
 Through which my guilty soul salvation won
 That chastening hand sometimes doth sorely rest
 Upon me while the storms of sorrow fall,
 Yet draws me till I lean upon his breast,
 And find in him my strength, my hope, my all.
 That guiding hand leads me from day to day,
 And smooths my path across earth's desert
 drear;
 It holds me fast—my sure and only stay—
 As life recedes and heaven's lights appear.
 O, loving hand, when shadows deepen fast,
 And in the gloom I hear death's billows foam,
 Draw me so near my eyes may rest at last
 Upon the face of Him who hears me home!

CLINGING TO HIM.

Cling to Christ. A gentleman, walking along the shore, thought he would carry home one of the pretty limpet shells all about him on the rocks. He tried to pick up one, but the limpet clung so firmly to the rock that he could not pull it off. He was surprised that so little a creature should be too strong for him. He tried to push the limpet off the rock with his cane, but he could no more move it than the rock, to which it clung so firmly. He said to himself, "I'll see whether I can not have you yet." So he sat quietly and watched the limpet, to see if it would stop clinging and move about. For a long time it held on. Then it moved a little. With one sudden grasp he took it in his hand, because it was not clinging to the rock. Satan knows he has no power to harm us when we are cleaving to our Rock, Christ Jesus, as he lurks about for his chance when we have abated our watchfulness and prayer. What we all need is the baptism of the Holy Ghost. With Christ enthroned in our hearts, "that wicked one toucheth us not."—Sunday-School Illustrator.

"EDUCATION OF THE SPIRIT NEEDED."

Dr. Robert S. Coupland, rector of the Trinity Protestant Episcopal Church of New Orleans, preached a very able and impressive sermon on the theme given above on Sunday, October 18. Among other things, Dr. Coupland said:

"He who makes no provision for the cultivation of the spirit in his household has practically denied the faith, and is worse than an infidel, because he claims to believe in the spirit and makes little or no provision for the spirit. Theoretically he says it is primary, and yet he puts it in a secondary place. It is incumbent on the head of a house to provide for the spiritual need and education of his household, because it is through these spiritual faculties that man lays hold of eternal life. Without this spiritual education and provision, like all the faculties of man, the spirit shrivels and atrophies. It is just as possible for the spirit to become sick and imbecile, blind, deaf and sluggish as it for the body and mind.

"Provision must be made for the spiritual and religious education of a household also because religion is the foundation of law and order, of morality, obedience and reverence. In this respect religion is the foundation and safeguard of the nation, the home, and the individual.

"Our civilization has become so permeated with and unconsciously influenced by Christianity and Christian institutions and ideals that we have come to think that civilization unassisted by religion is a sufficient foundation for society; that culture and secular education will uphold the structure. But this is not true. All the culture of Greece and Rome was not able to save them. Cut the root of religion from national life and reverence for morals and law and order will go. The child that is not taught to reverence God will not reverence the authority of parents nor the laws of this country; hence domestic and social anarchy.

"There are a great many symptoms of the neglect of spiritual cultivation in this day, notably the passing of family prayer. Among the most beautiful prayers in the Book of Common Prayer are those appointed for morning and evening in the family worship. In other days the father of the family, following the old patriarchal custom, acted as priest in his own household. What an example to his children gathered around was it to see their father worshipping the God of his forebears! In few families to-day does the head make this provision for his household. Then there is the passing of the family pew, the pew in which the children assembled with their parents to worship and honor God. Where are the youth and the children who are not at church to-day? Why are they not at church? Because as children they are not led to church and taught to love it, to know its service and ways, to worship God, and trained in the habit of church-going, the duty and privilege of it.

"Church-going in the past was justified in its results, and the reasons urged against it now are mere excuses. There is no substitute for the custom. There is widespread carelessness as to definite religious instruction. Children are made to go regularly to secular schools. Parents see to it that they attend these schools and help them in their lessons, but when it comes to religious instruction they are indifferent and children go to Sunday school or not, as they may elect, and they are allowed to go without any knowledge of their lessons. All responsibility is thrown on the teacher, who is unable in a single hour to impart the necessary instruction.

"This same carelessness is observable in the selection of secular schools and colleges. The exclusion of religious instruction in schools, colleges and universities is due to secular jealousy. And yet in many instances religious persons choose such institutions of learning in preference to church schools and religious universities as training places for their sons and daughters, to their lasting injury."

THE FLAG.

(The closing paragraphs of an address delivered at Baltimore, Md., on September 12, 1914, by Hon. W. J. Bryan, at the celebration of the one hundredth anniversary of the writing of "The Star Spangled Banner" by Francis Scott Key.)

Let no one think that the texture of our manhood will be of a lower quality when its strength is no longer tested by stress of war. We could not worship God as we do if we were convinced that each generation must be exercised in blood-letting in order to prevent stagnation. There is as much inspiration in a noble life as in an heroic death. With peaceful progress the avenues of usefulness are being multiplied; instead of seeking to extend our territory by the sword, we are enlarging it by intelligent cultivation of the soil; instead of measuring our merit by the numbers we can overcome, we estimate greatness by the service rendered.

It is some 3000 years since Solomon declared that 'he that is slow to anger is better than the mighty, and he that ruleth his spirit than he that taketh a city,' and yet the world is just now coming to understand this truth. In the day that is dawning the bravery of self-restraint will take the place of that bravery which tramples upon the rights of others; man will dare to forgive and leave vengeance to the Lord.

Society needs to-day, and will ever need, the moral courage that he must have who proves the right by standing for it, come what may, until his example has emboldened weaker spirits to share the risk with him. There are wrongs to be righted and abuses to be remedied, not by violence but by the inherent power of truth to propagate itself. Brave men are needed in every community throughout the land. * * *

Let us address ourselves, then, to the unfinished work which preceding generations have bequeathed to us, determined to be worthy of the inheritance which we enjoy. Freely we have received, freely must we give. Our nation is the heir of the ages; all the garnered riches of past experience are ours; we will be false to every obligation if we falter or fall short in the performance of the duties that descend to us.

Hail! Flag of the free and the brave—priceless legacy from the fathers, baptized in their priceless blood. Thy commingled hues speak to us of their sacrifices, the purity of their purpose, and their constancy. May the sacred memories invoked by thy presence compel us to thoughts and words and deeds in harmony with theirs.

Be our country's ensign still—and more. As the world is drawn closer together in the bonds of a universal brotherhood, may thy colors stimulate the struggling, hoping hosts of man to the impulses that are noblest, to the service that is largest, and to the achievements that are most enduring, as in friendly rivalry they advance through each generation to higher ground.

METHODISM IN THE SOUTH.

(An extract from the fraternal address of the Rev. W. N. Ainsworth, D.D., of Macon, Ga., to the recent General Conference of Canadian Methodism.)

In 1781, when Methodism was formally organized in America, there were in all 14,988 members, of whom 12,301 were in Maryland, Virginia, North Carolina, South Carolina and Georgia. Twelve years later there were in Maryland 12,416 members, in Virginia 12,779, in North Carolina 5712, in South Carolina 3659, in Georgia 1174, in Kentucky 1750, in Tennessee 546, aggregating 42,057, while in all other parts of the country, including Canada, there were only 14,607. At the time of the first delegated General Conference, in 1812, there were 117,120 members in the Southern States, as against 78,237 in all the rest of America. And now behold what God hath wrought! We have in our own communion 2,000,000 members, 19,780 congregations, 13,000 itinerant and local preachers, and, if we add to these the communicants in the Methodist Episcopal Church within our borders, the Methodist Protestant and colored Methodist members in the same territory, there are not less than 3,700,000 Methodist Church members in the South to-day, constituting the densest Methodist population on the globe. One in every eight of our population is a member of the Methodist Church, and one in three belongs to the Methodist constituency. It has been said, and truly, that there are more Methodists and fewer saloons in the Southern States of America than in any similar territory on earth. The Methodists are still increasing and the saloons are still decreasing. The gospel of Jesus Christ, as preached according to the interpretation of the Methodists, is still triumphant in the South. Methodism is not moving with any uncertain tread nor singing in any minor key. On our faces before God in the dust, we are pleading for a yet larger endowment of divine grace and favor; but at the same time we are thankful that, at the last Ecumenical Conference of Methodism, the consolidated report showed that out of a gain of 974,000 for all branches of Methodism in the Western Hemisphere during the last decade, the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, had gained 490,000, or as many as all other branches of Western Methodism combined. To God be all the praise!

LOUISIANA ANTI-SALOON MEETING.

The Annual Conference of the Louisiana Anti-Saloon League will convene in Shreveport on Nov. 10, at 7:30 p. m., in the Sunday school rooms of the First Methodist Church. On account of the reduced rates to the State Fair our friends will be able to attend the convention at a small expense and see the fair. Let every pastor attend and bring at least one layman with him. On account of the unusual conditions prevailing, the session will not be prolonged, but will be devoted exclusively to business which is of interest to the League. The Superintendent's report will show what has been done and suggest some plans for the future.

THE READJUSTMENT IN MEXICO.

My Dear Dr. Meek: Will you kindly give me space in the Advocate to say very frankly that I seriously object to the recent action of the Board of Missions, looking to the complete readjustment of our work in Mexico? The question is not whether some readjustment would be wise, but whether the one actually proposed is wise. I think not, and for the following reasons:

1. It involves the virtual destruction of an Annual Conference, and is, therefore, entirely beyond the competency of the Board. The fact that the result in question is to be reached by indirection does not alter its illegality. "Of course," say the Secretaries, "we can not change Conference lines; but we can withdraw men and money, and leave the congregations to sink or swim. We can go further than that, and turn over the territory to the Baptists and Campbellites as we design doing, as their special responsibility. As I see it, that is only an effort to whelp the devil around the stump. The case is made worse by the additional fact that the whole scheme was got up by a self-constituted committee that met at Cincinnati with similar committees from other churches. I, at least, as a member of the Board, never heard of it till it was spread before the public. When, moreover, the Board was later called to consider it, only four of the Bishops, and not more than one-half of the other members, were present. Though a committee was then appointed "to listen to the discussions and take notes" with a view to bringing in resolutions for action, as a matter of fact the resolutions had been prepared days in advance, and the committee had no real functions to perform. The programme was cut-and-dried, confessedly so—as perfect a piece of official manipulation as could be desired.

2. No attention whatever was paid to the written protests of more than twenty missionaries, men and women who have worked on the ground, and are familiar with its wants. In fact, it was rather unkindly intimated that these missionaries did not know their own minds, and were now going back on their former positions—though the specific and definite measure under consideration had never been placed before them. None of them were invited to Cincinnati, and their judgment was treated as a negligible quantity. Among these protestants were such men as J. F. Corbin and D. W. Carter, whose long, intelligent, and honorable service entitled them to be fully heard. Certainly they have as good a right to express their minds as the officials who are undertaking to deal at long range with a very difficult situation.

3. The native membership was simply left out of the count. Not by so much as one word, were they invited or allowed to utter their mind. Provisions are made for turning them over to the Baptists and the Campbellites without consulting them. It is easy enough to say that we shall not try to force them into those communions, but when we hand over the territory to the exclusive occupancy and the "special responsibility" of our immersionist brethren, what else are we doing except bringing to bear all the pressure we possess to influence their action?

4. While the ostensible object of the changes is to secure a territory more compact and more easily administered, the actual result is ludicrous. When shown on the map, it is quite enough to provoke mirth and ridicule. And it should be exhibited on a map to the whole Church. In the first place, it drives in a great wedge between our Texas Mexican Mission Conference and all our work in Mexico. If this is not so, then my eyesight is failing. Furthermore, it withdraws entirely from that part of Mexico out of which the stream of emigrants to Texas has come, and which in the past has been by far our most fruitful field, and which now holds our best churches, schools and hospitals. In the second place, it runs in narrow strips for at least 1500 miles up and down the two coasts of the Republic, and drives a wedge at least 400 miles wide between these opposite territories. If, as I was informed at the meeting, and by the friends of the proposed changes, it is impossible to cross over directly from one side of our work to the other, then it will be necessary to travel at least 1000 miles to get round it from end to end. The map will show.

5. The statement that all this is necessary for the glory of God, I do not believe. The glory of God is not promoted by making hodge-podge of the work of forty years. The denominations mean something. God has been in them and worked through them in past centuries, and he is doing it to-day. As a usual thing, the person that professes to be quite indifferent to denominations is not morally worth his standing room in the kingdom. A lack of concern about such matters is no sign of breadth or liberality. Liberality means holding your own convictions tenaciously, and suffering other people to do the same thing. I am not yet ready to admit that a distinctive Methodism has ceased to be of much value in the world. It has at least this value, that it supports and maintains even those who belittle it in thought and speech. My friend, Dr. Egbert Smyth, assured us that not one of the 14,000 communicants in the great Congo Mission knew that he was a Presbyterian; but Dr. Chester presently added that they could all repeat the Shorter Catechism from end to end. If that does not make them convinced Presbyterians, I do not know what would. Yours truly,

Muskogee, Okla.

HERE AND HEREAFTER.

By Dr. John T. Sawyer.

The "beloved disciple," in the evening of life and nearing the end, did not recline on his past, wonderful as that was. He was comforted in sight of the land just ahead, whose blessed light fell full upon him. That this world was passing away did not sadden him, as he was rapt in the contemplation of the world of fadeless glory and eternal youth. These are his words: "And the world passeth away, and the lust thereof; but he that doeth the will of God abideth forever."

He emphasizes a most important truth—a man's character and destiny are shaped by his view and practice regarding the things of time and sense. A philosophical, stoical unconcern that looks upon this world and life with a mere passive interest, and as insignificant and incomprehensible, is spiritually fatal. One has said: "The devotees of physical science see the same light that shown into the bowers of Eden, streaming down from the stars, and they reflect that through all the centuries it has shone on all alike—down on saints and sinners, and on the joys and sorrows, and passions and struggles of men and nations; and so, they come to think lightly of human experience. Measured by the awful extent and duration of the physical universe, man seems to them wholly insignificant—as no more than a mere buzzing insect against the window pane, beating out its life trying to reach the free air and larger prospect. So say they, the sooner the strife is ended the better." Such persons fail to note that man is grander than aught and all else around him, in that he is not just matter, but it is a thinking being, a living spirit, largely possessed of power and control over his material environment. The fact is, the birth of an idea in the heart and mind of a man may be of more moment than anything that is merely material. The history of the human race is, after all, mainly the record of great thoughts and important happenings and their results. Some of the grandest achievements of men have had their beginning in the thought of a moment. In the Book of Job we read that "Man that is born of a woman is of few days and full of trouble." While there have been some who have lived to great age, the average life of mankind has been and is short; but the brevity of our existence on earth is no indication of God's estimate of the soul, for in the thought of God the soul of man is beyond price.

To save the deathless souls of men from eternal ruin God freely gave the best he had—his Son to die the death of the cross. Human life, though brief, is long enough to make of it an eternal success. Some people, instead of that, make the fatal mistake of giving themselves wholly to the things of this world. They run upon a hot axle and do more work than they should in accumulating a fortune, making a reputation, or erecting a big structure of some sort. The hours they should have given to rest or recreation are spent in wearying labor to accomplish more than should be done in a lifetime. The result of such living generally is death in one's prime, or a nervous prostration which is a living death.

It is also spiritually fatal to idolize worldly pleasures, yielding utterly to them. "Living while they live," and never allowing the thought of death to dampen their giddy round of fleshly delights. To live just to have is spiritually destructive; and when such people pass from earth the living give them scarcely any thought. They are mentioned only in the amount of their leavings, estates, effects, succession—their lives having been almost wholly sordid. Their names are not found on the pages of history, they having done nothing worthy of historical record. Living altogether for personal and worldly gain, there can be no need of recording their deeds of selfish aggrandizement. A writer says of all such: "Like seared leaves in the autumn time, after their will has been probated and their name thus having its last record, they are blown out of memory into a merited oblivion."

For one to live just for the doing of great and creditable things, yet utterly regardless of the claims of the Son of God upon him, must prove at last spiritually fatal, though by his deeds he may have added somewhat to the brilliant records of his time. Such men, though of strong thought and telling action, have written their names high during their life on earth, yet, being wholly unprepared for the issues of the day of judgment, must be debarred forever from entering the gate of the eternal city.

To sum up, there is only one true and successful life—it is found in "doing the will of God;" and that life, as John declared, "abideth forever." This abiding life is entered upon in this world; beginning in a deep and thorough repentance of all sin and faith in the crucified Lamb of God, it is found only at the cross. The being "born again" and becoming a "new creature" in Christ Jesus, washed in his blood and cleansed from every stain, is the work of the Holy Spirit. "The Spirit itself beareth witness with our spirit, that we are the children of God." Linked to the Father by a steady faith in the Son, the Christian is daily, as Paul tells us, "led by the Spirit of God," Christ living within him the hope of glory. "The world passeth away and the lust thereof;" but, steadily doing "the will of God," the Christian is found in the dying hour ripe for heaven and goes sweeping through the gate into the perfect peace, fadeless splendors, unalloyed bliss and glorious company of the Father's house, and "abideth forever" there.

The Louisiana Educational Campaign

THE GENERAL CONFERENCE AND EDUCATION.

By Rev. Paul M. Brown.

That the Church, whatever might be the outcome in the Vanderbilt matter, does not propose to let up in her educational work may be taken for granted. Every utterance of the General Conference rings with the re-affirmation of her priority and pre-eminent duty in, as well as fitness for, the work of higher education. The Bishops' Address opens its discussion of the subject of education with this statement: "The educational work of the Church, always important, was never more so than now," and goes on to say: "Under our system of government the Church alone can impart to the work of education the spiritual quality required to save it from becoming a dangerous force." In words, which are peculiarly significant for Louisiana, it says: "It is not improper to say in this connection that the Roman Catholic Church will surely maintain its schools and instruct its children and youth. If the Protestant Churches should retire from the work of education or should do their educational work less vigorously, which would be equivalent to retiring from it, the final outcome in this country would be a struggle between Romanism on one side and secularism on the other. Such a struggle cannot be contemplated with composure."

The report of the Committee on Education says: "Our people must be brought to see that education divorced from religion means the spread of general depravity and the destruction of the basic elements of our Christian civilization, and that the distinctive mission of our Church schools is the development of a spiritualized, trained leadership."

Certain parts of the Bishops' address were referred to a special committee, which reported a number of resolutions which were unanimously adopted. The first of these is as follows: "Resolved, that the quadrennium following this General Conference shall fix as its supreme end the salvation of men, the building up of believers in the most holy faith and the advancement of the cause of Christian education." (Italics ours).

Thus if the deliverances of the General Conference mean anything, the Church faces a new quadrennium more thoroughly committed than ever, if possible, to an enlargement of her program of education. A good many years ago Bishop Haygood lamented the fact that the Church had been all too content with passing resolutions pledging hearty support to her educational work and forthwith forgetting them. In this line we have kept up the procession since his day and the passing of resolutions still goes merrily on. It is to be hoped that in the future we will make some headway in redeeming these pledges; especially is this to be hoped for Louisiana. We, too, have many and long-forgotten pledges to redeem.

CHRISTIAN EDUCATION.

The commission of Christ includes the school. "Teach all nations, . . . teaching them whatsoever I have commanded you." From the earliest centuries, the Church has maintained the school as an appointed agency for its work of evangelism and instruction. Most of the large institutions of learning, both in Europe and America, had their genesis in the Church. In those countries where the Church and State are still united, the schools still have in them a Christian element, but they are commonly predominated by the State. In this country, many of the institutions originally having organic connection with the Church, or being founded by Christian men as a means of executing the Church's mission, have been captured by powers which have made them un-Christian and un-evangelical. While the Church has thus lost influence in these schools, the State has more fully realized her need of the school, and has acquired entire school systems, covering the work from the primary department to the university. These schools in some places have become entirely devoid of religion, it being prohibited. Many private or corporate institutions have either dropped evangelical religion, repressed it, or substituted it with Unitarianism or some other non-evangelical religion. At present, the effort in this direction has been greatly increased. Leading schools, both for men and women, once distinctly evangelical, have been turned to teachings which are wholly opposed to evangelism. The effect of this is most decided. Andrew Carnegie and his fund have been making most vigorous efforts to unchurch the remaining Christian schools. A general lamentation has arisen as to the weak character showing itself among college graduates. They have been found in increasing numbers in the "bread line." They have been found to constitute the greater portion of the inmates of inebriate asylums. They have found their way in increasing numbers into penitentiaries. Both young men and women have returned to their Christian homes, only to give sorrow to their self-denying parents, by telling them that the Christian religion and the ten commandments are antiquated. This evil has gone to such an extent that thoughtful citizens and earnest Christians have awakened to the great danger, and new effort is being put forth to counteract the secularizing and heathenizing tendency in modern schools. There still remain a number of schools loyal to the Christian faith, and the Churches are awakening to a better support of these schools, and to increasing their number. The Presbyterian Church has appointed a large and able committee to take into consideration the whole question of Christian education. Other Churches are turning with new effort and zeal to meet this important question. The great weakness in the modern schools of all grades is not in their intellectual work, nor in the physical education, but in connection with religion and morality, and here the evil lies in the negative character which contributes to atheism and pantheism, and in the positive opposition of others to the evangelical religion. This must be overcome, or both the Church and civilization must decay.—The Presbyterian.

SOME EDUCATIONAL SPARKS FROM GREAT ANVILS.

There must be a moral substratum to a child's education to make it valuable and there is no other source from which this can be obtained at all comparable to the Bible.—Huxley.

As I see it, the Church must control with her authority and permeate with her influence the higher education of this great nation or irreligion will become the mark of intelligence and ignorance the badge of piety among the people.—Candler.

In order to make education truly good and socially useful it must be fundamentally religious. It is necessary that it should be given and received in the midst of a religious atmosphere, and that the religious impressions and religious observances should penetrate into all its parts.—Guizot.

The great common school system can be saved from secularism by pouring through all its veins and arteries the religious influences of our Christian colleges, if we will make these colleges strong enough to educate most of the teachers of the common schools.—Candler.

GIBSON MEMORIAL CHURCH TO BE OPENED.

Dear Dr. Meek: Please allow me to say through the Advocate that we will hold our opening service in our new church, Gibson Memorial, on the first Sunday in November. Dr. A. F. Watkins will preach the sermon. I wish to take this method of inviting all the old pastors to be present on this occasion. Brethren, please write me if you can come, so that I may make arrangements for your entertainment.

The following shows the amount received for the Gibson Memorial Window:

Amount previously reported . . . . .	$10.00
Rev. R. F. Harrell . . . . .	2.00
Rev. W. M. Sullivan . . . . .	1.00
Rev. I. B. Robertson . . . . .	1.00

Brethren, the window is in and the inscription says: "In Memory of Rev. Tobias Gibson, by the Mississippi Conference." In having it put in, I thought I was doing what you would have me do, and the glass people are writing to me for their money and I must send it to them. Please send your contribution, small or great, at once, or else write me you can not do so and I will make other arrangements. Yours fraternally.

Vicksburg, Miss. L. L. ROBERTS.

HONORING PRESIDENT MCKINLEY.

At its recent session the Northeast Ohio Conference adopted the following memorandum which is of interest to Methodists everywhere:

"The name of William McKinley, American citizen, Christian statesman, President of the United States, is known and honored throughout this land, and in other lands. Wherever his name is mentioned it commands respect; because of his distinguished services he is held in grateful remembrance; because of his tragic death, which he bravely faced, he is enshrined in the hearts of men. The people called Methodists have special reasons for cherishing his memory. A devout member and faithful trustee of our First Church, Canton, he lived and died in the faith. His portrait was recently unveiled in the Westminster Wesleyan Hall, London, the splendid new center of universal Methodism. This portrait was the gift of Mr. Joseph G. Butler, Jr., of Youngstown.

"We hear with pleasure that the National McKinley Birthplace Memorial Association, incorporated by Act of Congress, and approved by President Taft, on March 4, 1911, is making gratifying progress in the accomplishment of its object—to perpetuate the name and achievements of William McKinley, late President of the United States of America, by erecting and maintaining in the City of Niles, the place of his birth, a monument and memorial building, where it is planned to preserve the many interesting McKinley family heirlooms, documents, pictures and papers."

"We further learn that membership in this Association and the privilege of furthering its purpose have been made feasible to the American people on conditions which all can easily meet.

"As the Conference within the bounds of which this man whom we highly honor, was born and lived, we heartily commend this noble enterprise and suggest to Methodist people the propriety of securing membership in the Association upon the easy and liberal terms proposed."

Secular News and Comment

Bourbon County, Kentucky, has gone dry. Surely, this should convince the liquor men that they are fighting a hopeless battle.

It is stated that a choir composed of 5000 boys and girls will sing at the opening of the Panama-Pacific Exposition in San Francisco.

The home of Thomas Carlye, at Chelsea, London, has been converted into a memorial museum in honor of the distinguished author.

According to the papers, the first flag to fly through the Panama Canal will be that of the Daughters of the American Revolution.

The annual State Reunion of the United Confederate Veterans of Louisiana was held at Lafayette last week. The meeting was well attended and the occasion was one of much interest.

A $2,000,000 railroad station was opened in Memphis, Tenn., last week. It was constructed by the Illinois Central, the Yazoo and Mississippi Valley, the St. Louis and San Francisco, and Rock Island lines.

A contemporary says: "The longest plant in the world is a species of subtropical seaweed, which grows sometimes to be six hundred feet in length." Let us be grateful that it grows in the sea and not on the land.

James H. Franklin says: "An educated Japanese once said to me, 'We do not worship our emperor as you people of the West understand the word worship, but we do reverence him to such an extent that we are ready to die for him. If the Christians had the same devotion to their King, they would take the world.' Then he added, 'And they ought to have it, too.'"

The dispatches state that the pink weevil which has proven so destructive to cotton in Egypt has made its appearance in Florida. We wonder if there is to be no end to the woes of the cotton farmers of the South. Somehow a sort of fatality seems to attend this great industry. In a sense, it may be said to have brought on the Civil War that shook the Nation in the sixties.

Queen Elizabeth of Belgium, who remains near King Albert as he goes from place to place with his army and who ministers to wounded soldiers as opportunity offers, is a physician. She is a daughter of Duke Charles Theodore of Bavaria, the renowned oculist, and began the study of medicine under his direction at the age of sixteen. Later she took the M.D. degree at Leipzig, and after her marriage prosecuted her study of the healing art still further in Brussels, and was the founder of the Albert-Elizabeth Dispensary in that city.

Captain Robert E. Lee, the youngest son of General R. E. Lee, the famous Confederate Commander, died at Upperville, Va., on October 19. He was born at the old Lee Mansion, now a part of the Arlington Cemetery, on Oct. 27, 1843; was educated at the University of Virginia, and rendered active service in the War between the States. Since the close of that memorable struggle, he had been engaged in farming. He was the author of the volume, entitled "Recollections and Letters of General Robert E. Lee. Capt. Lee was twice married and left two children. The body was carried to Lexington, Va., for interment.

The New York Evening Post comments as follows upon the ages of some of the leading generals in the Great European War:

"General von Emmich, the capturer of Liege, is sixty-six, and General von Kluck is sixty-eight—the one two years and the other four above the compulsory American retiring age. General von Hausen, who has just given up the command of the Saxon army, because of real or assumed illness, is sixty-eight; General von Heeringen is sixty-four, and General von Einem sixty-one. General von Bulow is also sixty-eight, and General von Moltke, upon whose shoulders rest the heaviest burdens, is sixty-six. Nearly all of these officers are campaigning in France for the second time, having been young ensigns or lieutenants in 1870. General von Hindenburg, whose success on the Russian boundary has made him famous, is sixty-seven. On the English side, Kitchener is sixty-four, Smith-Dorrien fifty-six, Sir John French sixty-two, and General Grierson, who died in France the other day, was fifty-five; while the three French generals, Pau, Joffre and Gallieni, are all approaching seventy. Plainly, among the generals of this war the Osler theory does not apply."

Church News

Rev. Arthur Mather, D.D., formerly of Kentucky, has been elected Assistant Editor of the St. Louis Advocate. We cordially welcome him into the editorial fraternity.

The Methodist Episcopal Church has transferred its Sunday school editors from New York to Cincinnati, and will hereafter print its Sunday school literature in the latter city.

The Midland Methodist says that Dr. James Cannon is being spoken of in Virginia for the office of United States Senator. It is a far higher honor to be a Methodist preacher than it is to wear a Senatorial toga. There is a lot of inconsiderate talk going on in the world.

Bishop A. W. Wilson will represent the Board of Church Extension at the approaching session of the North Georgia Conference. The Wesleyan Christian Advocate states that Bishop Hoss is also expected to honor that body with his presence.

The Canadian General Conference re-elected Dr. W. B. Creighton to the editorship of The Christian Guardian, giving him 283 out of 291 votes. Dr. Creighton possesses unusual gifts as an editor, and we are glad that he has been re-commissioned to go on with his excellent work.

The Southern Baptist Theological Seminary at Louisville, Ky., opened with 208 students. That institution has at its head, in the person of Dr. E. Y. Mullens, a loyal and active man who has made it a great blessing to his Church. There is no "long dry spell" when he takes a text and begins to preach.

Dr. James A. Burrow has been elected editor of the Midland Methodist to succeed Dr. T. C. Shuler, who had resigned. We sincerely regret the retirement of Dr. Shuler from the tripod. He is an able and fluent writer and is sound in his views and thoroughly loyal to the Church. We shall miss his weekly messages in the Midland.

Bishop Alexander Carman, of the Canadian Methodist Church, at his own request, has been retired from active service. He is 81 years of age. Bishop Carman is a grand old man, and the tremendous blows he struck higher criticism at the last Ecumenical Methodist Conference, when it was brought forward by the English delegates, will not be soon forgotten.

Former Chief Justice Brown of Texas recently looked over the Southern Methodist University at Dallas, and wrote as follows concerning it: "It gave me great pleasure to visit your institution, and I am glad to say that I regard your preparation for university work superior to anything that I have seen. I am sure that your work will be blessed with success and that it will be of great benefit to the State of Texas."

At the recent session of the Holston Conference Dr. J. W. Moore was re-assigned to Centenary Church, Chattanooga, and Rev. R. M. Stanifer to Morristown, Tenn. Dr. J. S. French, who had served the McKendree Church of Nashville for the past four years, was appointed to the State Street Church of Bristol, and Dr. J. A. Baylor, who had finished a quadrennium as Dr. French's predecessor in Bristol, was made presiding elder of the Wytheville District.

At the late session of the Tennessee Conference, which met in Pulaski, Tenn., and which was presided over by Bishop Murrah, the following assignments of special interest were made to Nashville churches: McKendree, T. C. Ragsdale; Tulip Street, W. T. Haggard; West End, G. A. Morgan; Carroll Street, F. E. Alford; Blake-more, G. B. Winton.

Some weeks ago two memorial windows in honor of the Indian princess, Pocahontas, were unveiled in the quaint old church at Gravesend, England. These windows were the gift of the Colonial Dames of America. A large audience, embracing many distinguished persons, was present on this interesting occasion, and Ambassador Walter H. Page made a happy speech in which he told of the life of Pocahontas in England and the honors showered upon her at the Court of St. James.

The question as to whether the South Carolina Conference shall be divided is still being discussed in the Southern Christian Advocate, the Conference organ. The Conference at its session last fall voted in favor of a division and the last General Conference authorized it to be made, but it seems that there are some who yet hope to defeat the movement. The Carolinians will have about the best church lawyer in the connection to pass on this question when they meet, as Bishop Collins Denny will preside.

Dr. Paul H. Linn, President of Central College, at the recent session of the St. Louis Conference, took subscriptions for the endowment of that institution amounting to $12,600. It is stated that this sum, added to that previously raised, footed up to $225,000, which will bring $75,000 from the General Board of Education of New York (Rockefeller). We rejoice in Dr. Linn's success, but we regret to note that another Southern Methodist institution is to be subsidized by America's oil-king. We wish that there was not a dollar of such money in any institution of our Church. We had rather see our colleges poor than to see them under obligations to men of the Rockefeller and Carnegie type. The Christian Churches of the country need few things more than they do a money conscience.

The Presbyterian (Philadelphia) assumes that the population of the United States is approximately 100,000,000, and figures that 62,000,000 of this population are not on the roll of any religious denomination. It, furthermore estimates, that of this enormous number of unchurched people 31,000,000 are over 21 years of age, and that 10,000,000 more are more than 11 years old. This shows that, including all faiths—sound and unsound—there are more persons of responsible age outside of the various religious organizations than there are in them, the number of the latter being 37,280,370. Yet there are even Methodist preachers who do not know any better than to contend that revivals are not needed now as they were in the days ago. May the Lord have mercy on them!

The late General Conference of Canadian Methodism was, in the main, a conservative body. An effort was made to repeal the time limit, but it failed, as also did an attempt to lengthen it from four to six years. Another proposed measure that met with defeat was a resolution to fix seventy-two as the age beyond which no minister could remain in the active service. The plan looking to union with the Presbyterians and Congregationalists was again endorsed, but it is stated that there is a pretty general feeling that the union movement will not succeed at any time in the near future. If indeed it does at all. The Conference named Bishop Chown as fraternal messenger to the British Wesleyan Church; Dr. J. M. Endicott, Foreign Missionary Secretary, to bring greetings to the Methodist Episcopal Church, and Dr. Levi Curtis, of Newfoundland, to the Methodist Episcopal Church, South.

A WISE PASTOR AND A GENEROUS PARISHIONER.

The pastor of one of our churches in North Carolina writes me as follows:

October 19, 1914.

"Bishop Candler:
"My Dear Brother: I never destroy my Christian Advocates, but when going on my rounds of pastoral visiting carry them along and leave them in homes where I feel that they will be read. Recently I left the Nashville Advocate containing your article about the dear old lady who gave $2. to aid in the education of poor young men for the ministry in the home of Brother — one of our oldest members. Sister — is a Lutheran, but big-hearted and broad-minded. She read the article and next day sent me word that she wanted to help that old lady's fund and asked me to call and get her offering ($5), which I enclose. She says she is praying that many more will give to this fund, so that 'poor boys who want to preach the Gospel may be helped to secure an education.'"

This case shows an example of a wise pastor, who knows how to use the church paper well, and a generous woman who knows how to turn money to a good account.

I am glad to say the "Woman's Fund To Help Young Men" grows daily. It is now sufficient to enable a young man to take a year's work in the School of Theology, who without it could not have had such an opportunity this year, if ever.

W. A. CANDLER.

The October St. Nicholas tells of an orchid from Panama, whose blossoms look as though a pigeon with half-spread wings lay in the heart of each. It is so very rare that but five specimens are found in the United States, two of which are in the White House conservatories.

IN MEMORIAM.

(Written in appreciation of Mrs. M. L. Gustine.)

Thou'rt gone, sweet spirit, from thine earthly prison,
No longer cumbered with a load of clay;
But freed from every burden, thou art risen
Thro' death's dark night unto life's perfect day.

We mourn above the form our love hath cherished,
But thro' the clouds of grief there comes a voice:
"Be comforted; thy loved one hath not perished;
Eternal life and peace are hers. Rejoice!"

Thou seemest to smile while our sad tears are falling Upon thy pale, cold hands and silent breast;
Thy quickened ear hath heard thy Savior calling,
"Come unto to me, and I will give you rest."

And tho' our hearts with bitter grief are riven,
And life seems empty out beyond to-day,
We bless the hand that, reaching 'out from Heaven,
Hath led thee all along the weary way.

Weary the way, tho' never sad and fearful;
For when the path grew rough or pain oppressed,
Thy trust in God e'er made thee strong and cheerful,
And kept the peace of Heaven within thy breast.

We yield thee, dear one, to his gracious keeping
Who doth his children's every sorrow share.
With us to-day his tender heart is weeping;
Lighter the burden, since our Lord doth care.

And tho' with gloomy clouds our sky is darkened,
We know for thee all grief is overpast;
The voice to which thy heart hath ever hearkened
Hath called thee into perfect rest, at last.

And so, a short good-bye, until the meeting
When we shall stand on life's eternal shore,
And hear thy welcome voice in joyful greeting,
And see thy face and clasp thy hand once more.
Mrs. A. L. GREENWOOD.

FULL COLLECTIONS URGENTLY NEEDED.

The Board of Missions is making a special effort at this time to secure the missionary assessments for the year in full. That such an effort is well directed is evident from the pressing needs of the General Board for its work both at home and abroad. That a movement for assessments in full in the Louisiana Conference is demanded by the situation, is evident from the fact that last year we paid about one-half of our assessments for these claims, that the mission work of our own Conference suffers every year, and that opportunities for advance must be neglected for want of funds. That the assessment for missions in full, without neglecting any other claims is not an unreasonable demand, is clear from the fact that it would only cost the Methodists of Louisiana about sixty-five cents a member to pay every dollar of the missionary assessment—Home, Conference, and Foreign. If we were to pay all the assessments for all the conference and connectional claims, we would only pay an average of $1.71.

We have all learned, however, that some of our people will not do their share, and in order to pay in full, some must make large contributions and raise the average. On this principle, and in view of the pressing needs of the work, the General Board is appealing for special contributions from churches and individuals to bring the assessments up in full. For this purpose special envelopes may be secured by writing to the office of the Board at Nashville. These envelopes are to be used to secure special offerings toward full collections, and in cases where the assessments for the individual church or charge are already in full, are to be credited to the charge as surplus. Individuals also are being asked to make such special contributions, which will be credited to their charge and Conference.

In our own Conference, the great effort to be made is for assessments in full in the 113 charges which did not pay in full last year. In those charges where the duplex envelope has been introduced, it must be remembered that no system will run itself and an effort should be made at once, by an every member personal canvass, to bring up delinquent pledgers and secure contributions from those who have not already pledged. Where the collections have been left until the end of the year, let the pastor, stewards, and missionary committee combine in an enthusiastic canvass

AT ONCE for A CONTRIBUTION FROM EVERY MEMBER and ALL THE ASSESSMENTS IN FULL.

The charges which have already provided for their own assessments may be able to raise a surplus which may help to bring the Conference out in full, making up for any deficiency that may remain in any charge. Let us all pull together for a new record of missionary liberality in Louisiana.

W. WINANS DRAKE.

Conference Missionary Secretary.

AN APPRECIATION.

A few days ago news reached me of the death of Mary Gordon Porter at her home in Opelousas, La., on September 17, 1914. She was the second daughter of the lamented Gilderoy Porter, of the North Mississippi Conference, and was born at Crawford, Miss., on Jan. 19, 1872. She was married to Chas. M. Porter nineteen or twenty years ago. Of that union four daughters and one son were born. The son and one daughter preceded her to the glory world, having died in infancy; but three daughters and her husband survive to mourn their loss. The remains were taken to Starkville, Miss., and on Sunday morning, September 20, she was buried from the home of her sister, Mrs. T. W. Woodward, the services being conducted by Rev. T. H. Lipscomb, Dr. T. C. Weir, and Rev. W. S. Harrison; then the mortal remains of Mary Gordon Porter were laid away in the family burial plot by the side of her father and brothers who had preceded her to the great beyond.

She grew up in the Church of God, and never knew when she was converted. The news of her death lifted the veil from the hidden years of my life and I found myself a visitor in the district parsonage at Starkville twenty seven years ago, which was then the home of Brother Gilderoy Porter and his family. A revival meeting was in progress there at that time and Mary Gordon, then a fifteen-year-old girl, usually preceded the rest of the family to the church, so eager was she to be in her place when the services began, and she was always one of the very first to speak in the praise and testimony meetings. I am told, too, that she remained a devout Christian throughout her life, and particularly was she interested in the work of the Woman's Missionary Society. In Opelousas, where Roman Catholicism has such a stronghold, she was most ardently faithful in her work for our weak church there, and was a tower of strength in the Woman's Missionary Society. But now it is all over. She has passed beyond the turmoil and warfare of this life, and cast aside her mortal remains like a worn-out garment, to assume her celestial robes; while the gates of pearl swung wide on their musical hinges, as she passed into the presence of her Savior and King. She is singing to-day, perhaps, and plucking asphodels around the great white throne of God in company with her father and other loved ones. Yes, she stands a redeemed saint, secure forever from the sorrows and ills of this life. To such a Christian, death means only crossing over into the presence of God, and I am sure that the loved ones left behind are comforted by this thought and that they are even now "abiding under the shadow of the Almighty," and it would be only mockery for me to attempt to offer words of comfort to those who understand so well the only source of comfort and strength at such times.

So I come only to cast a spray of flowers upon the grave of this, my friend, whom I recall only as a light-hearted girl just entering her teens. Yes, fragrant flowers, the honey-suckle and the jessamine, I would bring to-day and as I heap them upon the newly-made grave, lovingly and lingeringly do I dwell upon the memories of the past. Thirty-one years ago I knelt at the altar in the old Methodist Church here in Tupelo and surrendered my heart and life to God, when Brother Porter was my pastor. At that time my intimacy with his family began, and has continued through all the years that have come and gone since. In the providence of God, I stood at his bedside in the infirmary at Memphis, Tenn., when his soul took its flight and mingled my tears with those of his beloved wife and the oldest son and daughter, and then I stood with them and watched as his mortal remains were laid away from sight at Starkville; and now I come to weep again with these true and tried friends, whose souls, no doubt, have been born aloft on the crest of this new sorrow, till they themselves have stood in the very presence of God and the angels.

To dear Mrs. Porter who waits on the border land for the summons to cross over and be united with husband and children already there, I would say, "Only a few more sorrows, only a few more tears," and then all will be well. You, too, will then enter that land, where there is no need of the sun, moon or stars, for the Lamb of God is the light thereof.

MRS. VIC THOMPSON HOYLE.

RESOLUTIONS.

(Presented by the minority trustees at the last meeting of the Board of Trust of Vanderbilt University. These resolutions were not seriously considered and did not come to a vote.)

Whereas the General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, at its recent session at Oklahoma City, took action authorizing and looking to the transfer and reconveyance to the eight original patronizing Conferences of Vanderbilt University—to wit, the Tennessee, Memphis, North Mississippi, Little Rock, Arkansas, White River, North Alabama, and Louisville Conferences—all rights, title, and interest in, authority over, and control of Vanderbilt University that the General Conference as such has or may have by virtue of the resolutions of conveyance to it adopted by the said Annual Conferences in and to the property, right of supervision and control, or confirmation of the Board of Trustees of Vanderbilt University; and whereas we recognize the fact that these patronizing Conferences have rights in Vanderbilt University which, regardless of any opinion we may hold in regard to the action of the General Conference, we are morally bound to respect; therefore resolved:

1. That we stand ready, when such transfer shall have been completed, to enter into negotiations with the patronizing Conferences with a view to re-establishing a just and equitable relation of co-operation between said Conferences and Vanderbilt University, so that all their rights in the University may be preserved.

2. That, as showing our good faith and to the end that the re-establishment of satisfactory and harmonious relations between the aforesaid patronizing Conferences and Vanderbilt University may be speedily accomplished, we hereby appoint a committee of eight members of this Board, which is instructed to enter into negotiations with a committee to be composed of one representative of each of the eight patronizing Conferences with a view to working out the details of an equitable plan of co-operation, the findings of said joint committee to be reported to this Board and to each of the several patronizing Conferences for their approval and adoption.

3. That in case one or more of said patronizing Conferences shall decline to accept the tender of the General Conference and to appoint a representative or representatives to act on the joint committee herein provided for, the committee of this Board is still instructed to enter into negotiations with the representatives of such patronizing Conferences as may accept the tender of the General Conference and appoint members of the joint committee.

4. That in case the committee representing the patronizing Conferences shall be reduced in number by reason of the failure of any Conference or Conferences to appoint a representative or representatives, the committee of this Board is instructed to decrease the number of its members by dropping names from its list in the order of their appointment, beginning with the last name on the list, until the representation of the Conferences and the representation of the Board of Trust on the joint committee are equal in number.

5. That a copy of this action be sent to each of the patronizing Conferences at its approaching session with the request that it appoint and duly accredit a representative to act for it on the joint committee herein provided for.

The Modern Home is the Home With a Telephone.

No matter where you are, the Bell Telephone is the center of a large talking circle.

You can travel the length and breadth of the country and never be beyond the reach of the Bell Telephone.

Wherever you are, it links you with your home and business. You may be a thousand miles from home, yet in a few minutes you may hear the voice of friends or business associates.

And wherever you go it is the same. Always there is the same efficient service of the Universal Bell Telephone system linking you with those you have left behind.

ALL FOR JESUS.

"Two little eyes to look to God;
Two little ears to hear his Word;
Two little feet to walk his ways;
Hands to serve him all my days.

One little tongue to speak his truth;
One little heart for him in youth;
Take these, O Jesus, let them be Always most willing, true to thee."

THE BAD QUARTER.

"I'm afraid, Irene, you'll have to take my place to-day."

Irene Gage turned briskly from the window.

"Of course, Leona, I will," she said after swallowing once or twice. "If you stay at home and let mother doctor your cold, you will be all right by Monday."

Just then the gentle little mother brought in the coffee, and they took their places at the breakfast table. Leona was 21, and for a year she had had a small stock of fancy work materials for sale in the book and stationery store of a friend. In addition to selling these goods, she did embroidery for others. Her mother and sister helped.

Irene was fourteen and a tenth-grade pupil in the high school. There was an especial reason for interest in the store. In two months the small mortgage on their home was due. Mr. Gage had been a partial invalid, but had now regained health and was working at a fair salary. He would be able to pay the debt all but one hundred dollars. His wife and daughters were working hard, hoping to be able to surprise him with the needed sum.

So Irene cheerfully gave up her holiday, and listened to Leona's directions.

On reaching her sister's place of business, she proceeded to arrange the small stock of goods in the most attractive manner possible. There were several customers, then she sat down to work at the pretty linen photograph frame her sister had commenced to embroider with scarlet carnations.

She had just finished her mid-day lunch when a man entered and called for a paper of needles. He threw down a silver dollar. Irene brought the change, but he handed her back one of the quarters.

"I don't want that. It's no good," he said harshly.

Irene examined it closely. It was worn and defaced, and the stamp was different.

"Are you sure it is not good?" she asked.

"I'm sure you can't pass it off on me. I'm in a hurry," was his uncourteous reply.

The girl's cheeks flushed. She brought another quarter of a dollar without a word.

"I don't know where I got it, but it will have to be thrown away," she thought. "The loss will eat up the profits on the sales I have made this morning. Just when we are so anxious to earn money, too. It may be good, after all."

She stood a moment irresolute. Then she went to the cash drawer, put the quarter in, and went back to her work.

Customers were plentiful that afternoon. There was no opportunity of disposing of the quarter, however, until the short winter day was drawing to a close. Mrs. Van Dorn, a wealthy but eccentric old lady, entered and asked for ribbon.

"Let me see some of your work that is finished," she said after selecting a yard and a quarter of ribbon. "I want to have some embroidery done, if I can find one who will do it well."

Irene deftly spread before her the few pieces of work Leona had on hand. Mrs. Van Dorn scrutinized them closely and asked many questions. The haunting coin was forgotten until Mrs. Van Dorn said, taking a half-dollar from her purse to pay for the ribbon.

"I'll see about the work after I come back from Detroit next week."

Irene was disappointed. The order would have been such a help. As she opened the drawer to get Mrs. Van Dorn's change, the suspected quarter caught her eye.

"I'll give it to her," she thought. "She is so rich, she will never feel the loss of twenty-five cents." She gave herself no time for thought. Mrs. Van Dorn dropped the piece of money in her purse without looking at it, and started for the door.

"It's done," Irene said to herself, "and I'm so glad for"—

She stopped abruptly. What had she done? An overwhelming sense of wrong-doing smote her. Mrs. Van Dorn was closing the door from the outside when her name was called.

"Come back, please, Mrs. Van Dorn," Irene said, opening the door. "Your change is not right."

"There was a bad quarter in the drawer," she went on as Mrs. Van Dorn re-entered the room, "and I gave it to you. I will get another."

In silence the lady extracted from her plethoric purse the coin given her by Irene. When she had received another in its place, she spoke:—

"Queer you should make such a mistake when you knew it was there." The gray eyes shot a keen glance at the girl's agitated face. "Was it a mistake?"

Irene's scarlet lips trembled.

"It was not a mistake. The coin was given me, and I tried to make myself believe it would not be wrong to pass it on, but"—

Her voice failed her. Mrs. Van Dorn showed no mercy.

"What made you call me back?"

"Because I saw, all in a moment, how wrong it was," Irene said faintly.

Mrs. Van Dorn went away. Irene bent over the box of ribbons to hide her tears. Then a customer entered, and she was obliged to give her attention to business.

The store closed at six. Irene found Leona was better and resting in the big, sleepy hollow chair before the parlor grate. Mrs. Gage was busy over the seven o'clock dinner.

It was so home-like. Sitting down on the hearth rug, she told her sister all. Leona's eyes filled with a tender light.

"You poor little thing, I ought to have told you about that quarter. Mr. Wilkins gave it to me two weeks ago. He found it when he made up the cash, and he told me perhaps I could sell it to Cousin Bert. You know he is an enthusiastic collector of old and curious coins. So, you see, you did not take the quarter in change."

"But I tried to cheat Mrs. Van Dorn. I've lost you the order for her work, too. O Leona!"

On Monday Leona resumed her duties. Thursday after school, Irene stopped in the store on her way home. The flush of excitement on her sister's face told her at once that something had happened.

"It's Mrs. Van Dorn," Leona cried, dropping in her lap the brown linen cushion she was embroidering with sweet-peas.

Irene sank into a chair. "Well," was all she could say.

Leona nodded her golden head. "She's a dear. She has ordered a whole set of table linen embroidered in cowslips. I—we, rather, for you and mother must help, are to have twenty-five dollars for the work. Then the commission on the materials, which she buys here, will amount to five dollars more."

Irene gave a little gasp. "Oh, papa will surely have a hundred dollars now."

"You haven't heard it all. Mrs. Van Dorn said: 'Tell your sister that she is the bravest girl that I know. The sense of right that enables one to face again and conquer a temptation is of God.'"

A month later Leona entered the parlor one evening, and held up a crisp five-dollar bill. "See, Cousin Bert gave it to me for the bad quarter."

"For what?" Irene cried. "Oh, is it possible it wasn't bad, after all?"

Leona laughed gleefully. "It proved to be valuable because of its scarcity. Bert has been looking for one to add to his collection for a long time."

Irene looked thoughtfully out across the snow-covered street. It had indeed been a valuable quarter to her.—Anna Johnson, in the New York Observer.

TRYING FOR A SCHOLARSHIP.

"Good morning, Fred. How are you making it go?"

"Not so bad, Tom."

"About ready for exams, I suppose."

"Oh, I don't know. Guess so."

"The papers are going to be pretty stiff this year, I hear."

"That so?"

"Yes. The headmaster has an idea that the Latin paper will make us hustle."

"Well, I don't care as long as I make a pass."

"Make a pass! Why, man, I'm going to try for a scholarship, and you can beat me if you dig in."

"What line are you taking?"

"Mathematics, of course, and I think I'll win out, too."

"Well, go ahead, Tom. I wish you luck, but a pass will do me, all right; I'm not going to kill myself, if I know it."

"You're bluffing, Fred. Why not pitch in and get to the top?"

"No, I'm not bluffing, Tom. Honest. What's the use of a scholarship, anyway? Just a lot of work for nothing. If I pull through on a pass, it's enough for me."

In due time the examination for Junior matriculation came off, and, sure enough, Tom took first place in mathematics and secured the scholarship he had worked so hard to attain, while Fred, equally clever, but indolent, obtained marks enough for a pass.

This incident occurred thirty years ago. After a brilliant course at college, Tom entered mercantile life, and is now at the head of one of the largest manufacturing concerns in Canada, giving employment to hundreds of men. Fred has tried at least half a dozen different things, but has not made a great success of any one of them. He has been satisfied with a "pass" in everything he has touched, and has never got anything better.—H. Harper, in Pleasant Hours.

When one takes the first step from the right course there is no telling how far from it one will soon be. The only safety for the Christian lies in refusing to make the least compromise with evil.

Editorial

REMEMBER THE ADVOCATE.

We hope that our pastors, in winding up the year's work, will not forget to look after the interests of the Advocate in their charges. Especially do we ask them to seek to secure the renewals of persons now receiving the paper. This is a very trying time on church periodicals, and we urgently need the assistance of our friends. It is also hurtful to the Church for its organs to cease to enter the homes of our people. The following words from Bishop J. H. McCoy bear pertinently on this point:

"The time has come when no great church enterprise can hope to succeed without the aid of the church paper—when every interest of the Church shows quickening or languishing largely by the measure of the circulation of the church paper. * * * Circulating a church paper is like fertilizing a field. It is a small expenditure that yields an enormous return."

IS SOUTHERN METHODISM TO BE DISINTEGRATED?

Under the caption, "Church Union and Comity in Mexico," The New York Independent of October 12 contained a somewhat extended editorial dealing with the conference of missionaries concerning the Mexican work which was held in Cincinnati last summer and the plans relating to it which were there evolved. That meeting was participated in by members of nine denominations, as follows: Northern Baptists, Congregationalists, Disciples (Campbellites), Friends, Episcopalians, Methodists, North and South, and Presbyterians. North and South. The Independent states that the program agreed upon at Cincinnati seems certain to be approved by the Mission Boards of all the Churches there represented at an early date except that of the Protestant Episcopal Church, which has no authority to act, so that the decision of that denomination cannot be had until the meeting of its General Convention two years hence. The Southern Baptists were not represented at the Cincinnati gathering and are not co-operating in this movement, according to our contemporary.

A Statement as to What is Planned.

Proceeding with the discussion, The Independent says: "Nevertheless, the full agreement of the eight Boards, which seems assured, will give one work and one dominant Protestant Church in Mexico. For this is the first great conclusion reached, that there shall no longer be denominational lines maintained in Mexico; no Baptists, Methodists, Presbyterians, but one body, called 'The Evangelical Church of Mexico.' (We rather think that the Southern Baptist Church will see that there are some Baptists there.—Editor of the Advocate.) The time had come when no other decision was possible. This is what the mission churches have done in Japan, in Southern India, and elsewhere. The report of the conference well says that 'our denominations are sufficiently near to identity with each other, and the taste of Mexicans so indifferent to the distinctions that persist among us,' that union is perfectly feasible.

"Union in one Mexican Church means union in all mission work. So the conference, composed, be it remembered, of active missionaries, men and women, agreed to parcel out the whole country between them, allowing two missions to occupy the same field in cities of more than 20,000 inhabitants. This will assure better distribution. Thus there have been thirty-nine mission high schools in fifteen Mexican States, while there is not one in the other fifteen. Similar unity is planned for education and publications. There will be one Bible school for the training of preachers and evangelists, at least one high school for boys and girls in each mission territory, a parish school with each church, and a union college for men and women in some central place. It is proposed that all present church papers be united in one, and a joint publishing plant and depository established in Mexico City.

"This is the new federation in religious work that breaks down sectarian walls. It is better than federation; it is union."

The Church Not Properly Consulted.

If this statement of The Independent is even approximately correct, we consider it nothing short of amazing that our Board of Missions, large as are the independent powers which it has managed to secure, would undertake to carry out such a program without having made some effort to ascertain what the mind of the Church is concerning it. According to our contemporary, the plans in contemplation will largely obliterate Southern Methodism as a distinct denomination in the Republic of Mexico and yoke it up with a group of other Churches, with some of which it has little in common; yet so quietly have the proceedings looking to this end been carried on that the 2,000,000 Methodists of the South have known almost nothing about it, and none of its really representative bodies have been consulted.

The Nashville Christian Advocate of October 9, in its very brief report of the meeting of our Board of Missions held in Nashville on September 29, stated that an international conference of the Secretaries of the Boards supervising the work in Mexico was held last January, and that the Mexican missionaries of our own Board had a meeting to confer about the matter in Laredo in February; so evidently our missionary leaders have had these plans in process of formation for several months and must have known, in a general way, at least, what was in contemplation last spring. Why, then, did they not unfold them as fully as they could to the General Conference when it was in session last May and seek its advice as to the course which they should pursue in the matter? And, as will be noted in Bishop Hoss's article bearing on this subject, which appears on another page, it seems that even some members of the Board of Missions knew practically nothing of this project until the meagerly attended called meeting was convened in the latter part of September. Are a mere handful of workers, without waiting to ascertain what the will of the Church is, to be allowed to inaugurate a course of procedure so revolutionary as this and to commit us irrevocably to it? We scarcely think that to go ahead with this policy, reserving only a few minor features of it for the General Conference to pass upon after it is too late to retreat from it, meets the requirements in the case.

Denominational Integrity Should be Maintained.

For our part, while we are willing to co-operate to a reasonable extent in new and difficult fields with denominations whose teachings we consider essentially sound, we are uncompromisingly opposed to the destruction or the impairment of the denominational integrity of Methodism anywhere. We do not believe that its identity can be sacrificed and the emphasis on its distinctive teachings weakened without appreciable loss to mankind and to the Kingdom of God. If the voice of Methodism is hushed, who will preach the glorious doctrine of a universal atonement and of the possibility of the salvation of every man? Who will set forth in clear and unmistakable terms the witness of the Divine Spirit and the necessity of a conscious salvation? And who will hold up the high standard of Christian perfection as a possible attainment in this life? This last doctrine John Wesley pronounced to be absolutely necessary to the spiritual prosperity of the Church.

Some Things That Might Happen.

The announcement that there is to be "a union Bible institute and theological seminary" is to us far from reassuring. Think of our young preachers in Mexico (if we are to have any) sitting under the instruction of a Campbellite theological professor with his views as to immersion, as to providence and prayer, and as to the work of the Holy Spirit! Yet under the scheme proposed this seems quite within the range of possibility. And remember also that the Northern Presbyterians are now sending out as missionaries men, taught in such theological seminaries as Union and that of Princeton, who deny the virgin birth and the resurrection of Christ, and to a large extent also the inspiration of the Holy Scriptures. Under the suggested arrangement, what guarantee have we that some of these heretics will not be instructors in the contemplated union Bible school, or the editor of the papers and literature that are to be issued in common? Are we, under the over-worked shibboleths of "breadth" and "catholicity," to be inveigled into taking any such risks as these? Ah, brethren, a step too much in the wrong direction is the first step.

Where Would it Stop?

Well may we ask the question. Where is this thing going to stop? If the denominational integrity of Southern Methodism is to be sacrificed or impaired in Mexico, how long will it be before the same thing is undertaken in Cuba, and in Brazil, and in Korea, and in all of our other mission fields? And how long will it be before the same spirit of disintegration sets to work to wipe out our distinctive Methodism in the home land? Indeed, it is already beginning to clearly manifest itself here at home in the disposition of our various boards to yoke up with almost every sort of organization that has been hatched in this land of many religions. Surely, it is high time that we were calling a halt on these brethren whose Methodism is apparently so attenuated that they want to spread it out over everything, even to the extent of taking in Mr. Carnegie as a counselor and patron saint.

The Charge of Narrowness.

We are aware that in writing thus we will likely be called narrow, prejudiced, and ignorant, but we are not at all terrorized by these or any kindred adjectives that may be applied to us. If we are not mistaken Dr. Dinsdale T. Young, at this time president of the British Wesleyan Conference, is in point of accomplishments and acquisitions one of the foremost Methodist ministers in the world; yet in an address delivered a few weeks ago to the distinguished body of ministers who had named him as their leader, he dared to say: "I am old-fashioned and I would view with deprecation any suppression of the Methodist name anywhere. We should not be ashamed of our colors. It would ill become us to shuffle out of the great name of Wesleyan Methodist. I want our Church to maintain always its denominational character. We must be careful of the type." Dr. W. N. Ainsworth, our brilliant fraternal messenger to the recent Canadian General Conference, can scarcely be said to be lacking in vision and a mossback; yet in his eloquent message to our brethren across the northern border he ventured to declare: "It has been said that Christendom preaches Methodist doctrine now. This is largely true, but to the practiced ear there is still a little restriction in the terms of the offer as made by the Churches of the Calvinistic faith. (With some of them this restriction is yet marked and the dullest ear can not but hear it.—The Editor.) May Methodism ever be preserved to make the message plain! * * * The world never needed primitive Methodism—its gospel and its life—more than it does to-day. Let the call to the colors sound loud and long and everywhere!"

The Wise Course.

Our Board of Missions and its Secretaries would, in our judgment, show commendable wisdom if they would take time to counsel carefully and fully with the Church before presuming to go forward in a movement of such far-reaching consequences as this upon which they have entered. The Annual Conferences, which are close to the heart of the people, are now meeting. Let them go before them with their maps and state their case fully and ask for an expression of sentiment; or if this is impracticable, let them enlighten the Church by giving out all the facts now and wait until the next General Conference meets and ask its approval (the Episcopalians are going to wait two years). And let them also provide for a full consultation with the Southern Methodists of Mexico. The temper of the Church is not, in our opinion, at this time such as will lead her to listen very patiently to the pretensions of boards claiming to be "broad," or largely independent. She had quite enough of that in the case of the Vanderbilt Board of Trust, and if she had put her foot down upon its affectations of independence and its disposition to act without consulting her, and to evince its breadth, in the outset, in all probability she would never have had a lawsuit and have been robbed of her property. If there is any Board in the Church that needs the implicit confidence of the rank and file of our preachers and people more than any other, it is the Board of Missions. And many eyes are focused observantly upon it at this particular time. More than this we will not say now.

A GREAT DAY AT FIRST CHURCH, SHREVEPORT.

Rev. R. W. Vaughan sends us the following note from Shreveport, dated October 26:

"We had a great time at the First M. E. Church, South, of this city yesterday, which was Orphanage and Rally Day. The attendance at Sunday school was 1727, and the contributions to the Orphanage footed up $918, besides a bale of cotton. A thousand dollars was also pledged toward the liquidation of the $1000 debt on the Orphanage, provided three other persons can be found to give a like amount, so that it can be wiped entirely out."

We are indeed happy to have this good news.

Great is our First Church at Shreveport! We heartily congratulate Brother Vaughan, Dr. Sexton, Brother McKennon, and indeed all the members of this splendid congregation.

PERSONAL AND OTHER NOTES.

Only a little over a month until Conference! What remains to be done this year will have to be done quickly.

Rev. E. C. Gunn, of Long Beach, Miss., recently assisted in a meeting at North Gulfport, and a gracious revival blessed the church. There were 6 additions.

Rev. O. S. Lewis, of Brandon, Miss., sent us a club of several subscribers from his charge last week. All the interests of the Church are safe in Brother Lewis' hands.

Rev. J. A. Bowen, of Birmingham, Ala., is assisting Rev. M. L. Burton in a meeting at Gulfport, Miss. We are informed that the interest in the services is increasing daily.

Rev. J. A. McCormack and his people at Franklinton, La., are in the midst of a good meeting this week. They have with them Evangelist T. J. Norsworthy, of Yazoo City, Miss., who has had a large measure of success in revival work this year.

A revival meeting is in progress at the Carrollton M. E. Church, South, of New Orleans, of which Rev. J. G. Snelling is pastor. The preaching is being done by Rev. J. B. Williams, of Ponchatoula, La., and Mr. B. G. Grenfell is conducting the singing.

Rev. J. H. Montgomery, of Campti, La., reports that he has had a good year spiritually in his field. He has received 60 persons into the Church. He states, however, that the financial condition in his section is distressing, crops of all kinds being largely a failure.

Dr. J. M. Henry preached a feeling and helpful sermon at the Parker Memorial Church of New Orleans last Sunday at 11 o'clock a. m. Echoes of it are still being heard in that section of the city. Dr. Henry is finishing his quadrennium as presiding elder of the New Orleans District, in which capacity he has wrought well and accomplished much.

Mr. J. T. Murrah, of Jackson, Miss., a son of the late Rev. James T. Murrah, of the North Mississippi Conference, spent a couple of days in New Orleans last week. It was our pleasure to have him as our guest at luncheon on Thursday, October 22. He resembles his father considerably and is a young man of interesting personality.

A Card from Rev. J. W. Ramsey, of Mendenhall, Miss., bearing date of the 24th inst., reads as follows: "Please state that I have just closed at New Augusta, Miss., what the people there declared to be the best meeting that they have had in a number of years. The church was stimulated and there were 11 additions, 5 Baptists uniting with us."

Rev. J. B. Randolph, of Como, Miss., writes: "Please announce that Bishop Murrah will dedicate our new church at this place on Sunday, Nov. 29, and that all former pastors and presiding elders are invited to be present." A rare treat is in store for the people of Como, as Bishop Murrah is certain to give them an illuminating and helpful message.

We acknowledge the reception of the following invitation: "Rev. and Mrs. William Franklin Rogers request your presence at the marriage of their daughter, Maud Louise, to Mr. Thomas Lamar Givton, on Tuesday morning, November 10, at 9:20 o'clock, in the Methodist Church at Sallis, Miss." We extend in advance our hearty congratulations and best wishes.

Mr. W. W. Ellis, of Fernwood, Miss., was in New Orleans on Thursday, October 22, and visited our office, bringing sunshine with him. Before leaving he left the money for his own subscription for another year and also ordered the Advocate sent to a friend in his community at his expense. Brother Ellis is Secretary of the State Board of Pharmacy in Mississippi.

Rev. Hilary Westbrook gives us some subscriptions from his charge, the Waynesboro (Miss.) Circuit, and adds: "Rev. J. T. Leggett, our faithful presiding elder, was with us on Oct. 17 and 18, and held our fourth quarterly conference. He preached two excellent sermons on my charge, and two for Brother Decell in Waynesboro. Brother Leggett's messages were, indeed, of a high order."

Brother J. L. Cady, of Cotton Valley, La., informs us of the death of Mr. W. W. Hartman, which occurred at his home at Hartman, La., on October 19 as a result of a stroke of paralysis. We regret to be apprised of this sad occurrence and we extend sympathy to the bereaved. Brother Cady's note will be published in full in the next issue of the Advocate, having reached us too late to be printed this week.

The Bishops of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, will meet in their semi-annual session at Charleston, W. Va., on Friday of this week and their conference will continue until next Monday.

Prof. B. D. Battle, of Centenary College, was in New Orleans last Saturday and, in company with his brother, Rev. C. A. Battle, paid the Advocate office an appreciated call. He was looking exceptionally well and was in fine spirits. He is a young educator of much promise.

The Annual District Meeting of the Woman's Missionary Society for the New Orleans District will convene in Carrollton Avenue Methodist Church, corner of Carrollton Avenue and Elm Street, next Monday afternoon at 4 o'clock. There will be an evening service Monday night, and an all-day meeting Tuesday. Lunch will be served at the church by the ladies of the Carrollton auxiliary. All are invited to attend.

In a note written on October 22, Rev. R. W. Vaughan, Superintendent of the Louisiana Methodist Orphanage, says: "The reports from 'Work Day' are coming in pretty well, and while the amounts received are comparatively small, we hope that the aggregate will reach to a goodly sum." Let the brethren who have money for Brother Vaughan and who have not yet forwarded it, do so at the earliest date possible.

We are printing this week a brief statement from Mr. Thomas A. Holloman, Treasurer of the Church Extension Board of the Mississippi Conference. Brother Holloman's address is Philadelphia, Miss., but he desires all persons sending him Church Extension money to do so by means of money orders drawn on the post-office at Jackson, Miss., where he keeps his account. Let the brethren read his notice and govern themselves accordingly.

Rev. C. M. Simpson, pastor of the Oak Lawn M. E. Church, South, at Dallas, Texas, is having quite a successful pastorate in his present field—not an unusual thing with him. He has in process of construction a new house of worship which, when completed, will be worth $100,000, including the site. Brother Simpson is a Millsaps man and is well remembered in Mississippi. Our only objection to him is that he does not see fit to give his services to his native State.

Mrs. J. S. Parker, of Seminary, Miss., writes: "I wish to go on record as another Methodist lady who has written to the Ladies' Home Journal a note of protest against the series of lessons in modern dancing which it is now carrying. For perhaps twenty years I have been a subscriber to Ladies' Home Journal, and, for the most part, I have read its pages with pleasure and profit; but, with thousands of others, I regret this innovation." Let the good work go on!

Dr. J. W. Beeson, President of the Meridian College, says: "In spite of the war, financial depression, and the high cost of living, Meridian College has had a finer opening than it did last year. Many have pronounced the present student body superior to any ever assembled in Meridian." Dr. Marvin Beeson, who has recently received a Ph. D. degree from Leipzig University, Germany, has returned home and is now an appreciated member of the faculty of this institution.

In a personal note to the Editor, Mrs. Sudie J. Lingle, of Shreveport, La., says: "I am again at home, after a four weeks' stay in the Shreveport Sanitarium, where I underwent a serious operation on Sept. 14. I am glad to say, however, that I am now regaining my strength and am getting anxious to be busy again with the Leaguers." We regret to learn that Sister Lingle has been so ill, but we are happy to know that she is improving, and we trust that she will soon be entirely well.

Mr. Alcee Martin, of Bourg, La., a son of Rev. R. E. Martin, and a nephew of Rev. Anatole Martin, visited relatives in New Orleans last week, and while here favored the Advocate office with a call. Though he has not yet attained to his majority of 21 years, he is well posted concerning our work in the French Mission field and talked to us informally about it. We are always delighted to have the boys and young men drop in on us, since it makes us happy to see them interested in the Master's work.

Rev. J. B. Conner writes that the Orphanage "Work Day" in the Davis Chapel community, one of the appointments on the Sardis (Miss.) Circuit, was quite a success. The exercises at the Church on the next day, Sunday, were most enjoyable, and a collection of $16.90 was taken. Brother Conner sent us a full program of the interesting service held, which consisted of select music, recitations, and talks appropriate to the occasion, but we cannot publish it for the reason that our limited space has forced us to adopt the rule of never printing programs of any kind.

Rev. Olin Ray, of Jonestown, Miss., writes as follows: "The death angel visited the home of Mr. Guy and Mrs. Clara Ray on Monday morning, October 11, at 8 o'clock, and took from them their little 8 year old daughter, Thelma, to join her baby brother who, at the age of six months, had preceded her to the heavenly home by about four months. These await the coming of father, mother, and little brother. May the grace of God sustain them in this sad hour of their life and prepare them for the same call." We regret to learn of this sad bereavement, and we deeply sympathize with these stricken parents.

The Board of Stewards of the First M. E. Church, South, of Lake Charles, La., in an address to the membership of the Church at that place, make the following statement: "We have been very much gratified to note the interest in our church, one of the evidences of which is the good attendance upon the services." Church-going is, indeed, a good indication of interest in Christian work upon the part of a people. The pastor at Lake Charles is Rev. K. W. Dodson, who has a habit of making things go where he labors.

Miss Daisy Duncan, of Chattanooga, has succeeded Miss Long (who, as is stated elsewhere in the Advocate, has lately joined the Methodist itinerancy) as head deaconess at the Biloxi (Miss.) Wesley House, and Miss Hosler has charge of the kindergarten school there and Miss Roberts of the day nursery. The chaplain of this House during the past year has been Rev. John Carter, a student in the Seashore Campground School. The interest in all departments of the Wesley House is well sustained and the advantages that it offers are being largely used.

Rev. R. F. Harrell, of Centerville, Miss., in a letter bringing us some subscriptions to the Advocate last week, added the following note: "My strength is returning and I am about normal again. I went to my country appointment yesterday (October 18) for the first time in two months and I found a good congregation there awaiting me. As a result of our meeting out there, just before my illness, 26 persons applied for membership in the Church on profession of faith, and one of these was baptized and received yesterday. The good people of this charge are making a heroic effort to send up a good report to Conference, and I believe that they will do so, in spite of the great odds against them."

On October 20, Rev. W. W. Moore, our pastor at Pascagoula, Miss., and Miss Myrtle Mae Long, the head deaconess of the Biloxi Wesley House, were married in the chapel of the Wesley House, Rev. W. T. Griffin, assisted by Dr. W. H. Huntley, officiating. After the ceremony there was a largely attended reception, during which nice refreshments were served by the Biloxi ladies. The happy couple were the recipients of a number of handsome presents. They went immediately from the Wesley House to their home at Pascagoula. We extend to the bride and groom our congratulations, and pray that their pathway through life may be brightened by heaven's choicest blessings.

Rev. G. W. Bachman, of Winona, Miss., under date of October 24, writes as follows: "I had the privilege of preaching in our elegant new church at Como, Miss., last Sunday and of enjoying the hospitality of Brother and Sister Randolph in their parsonage home. They have recently installed in their house of worship a new pipe organ, of which they have reason to be proud. I have also lately spent a day and night in the parsonage at Grenada with Brother Hall and his family. Brother Hall expects to make a good report at Conference. Grenada College is prosperous, having more students than were in attendance last year. Brother Countiss and the faculty and friends of the college are rejoicing over its bright outlook for the future."

From the Texas Christian Advocate of October 22, we take the following: "Last Tuesday evening in Fort Worth, at the home of her son, Judge Erskine Williams, a prominent member of our last General Conference, his aged mother passed away. Mrs. Williams came to Texas with her husband in 1887 and settled at Fort Worth. Her husband, Rev. E. J. Williams, a member of the North Mississippi Conference, died shortly after coming to Texas. Mrs. Williams is survived by Rev. E. P. Williams, pastor of the Methodist Church at Mexia, and Mrs. J. Sam Barcus, of Bonham. The funeral was held Thursday morning from the Mulkey Memorial Church." Many in North Mississippi will read this announcement with a feeling of sincere regret.

Rev. T. J. Norsworthy, of Yazoo City, Miss., closed a ten days' meeting at Bogue Chitto, Miss., on October 23, which was productive of great good. Of Brother King, our pastor at that place, Brother Norsworthy says: "He is in high favor with his people and is accomplishing a good work. Notwithstanding the adverse financial situation, I believe that he will carry a fine report to the Annual Conference." Brother Norsworthy has also recently held very successful meetings at Silver City, Miss., where Rev. R. F. Witt is pastor, and at Ponchatoula, La., where Rev. J. B. Williams is in charge. He has an open date just prior to the meeting of the Louisiana and Mississippi Conferences, which he would be glad to give some brother who is in need of his services. His address is Yazoo City, Miss.

TAKES OFF DANDRUFF, HAIR STOPS FALLING

Save your Hair! Get a 25 cent bottle of Danderine right now—Also stops itching scalp.

Thin, brittle, colorless and scraggy
hair is mute evidence of a neglected
scalp; of dandruff—that awful scurf.
There is nothing so destructive to the hair as dandruff. It robs the hair of its lustre, its strength and its very life; eventually producing a feverishness and itching of the scalp, which if not remedied causes the hair roots to shrink, loosen and die—then the hair falls out fast. A little Danderine tonight—now—any time—will surely save your hair.

Get a 25 cent bottle of Knowlton's
Danderine from any drug store. You surely can have beautiful hair and lots of it if you will just try a little Danderine. Save your hair! Try it!

will be edited down to 200 words.

JULIA ISABELLE ADDINGTON
WHITSON, daughter of Isaac and Sarah Ann Addington, was born in Lafayette County, Miss., on Nov. 24, 1848. She had lived a devout Christian life, having joined the M. E.
Church at the age of 12 years. She was married to James H. Whitson on Nov. 8, 1868. To them were born 9 children, 4 of them preceding her to the better land. On Aug. 16, 1914, the dear Lord saw fit to send his angel for this precious one, who was willing, ready and waiting to go. She left a devoted husband, 5 precious children, all of whom are grown, and a host of friends to mourn her death, while they realize that their loss is her gain. We had known her all our life. She had been a mother to us and a friend in time of need to all who knew her. She was submissive to the Lord's will, and though she suffered greatly, she never forgot her friends and loved ones and wanted to administer to their needs. She was laid to rest at Wyatt's Chapel, where she was a consistent member since the church there was organized.
May God bless the bereaved ones.
ADA GREEN.

SARAH J. OWEN (nee Beal) was born in Logan County, Ohio, on Feb.
15, 1835, and passed to her reward on Oct. 3, 1914. Since 1892 she had lived in Rankin County, and for the last five or six years in Brandon. Her death marks the passing away of a true saint. Early in life she joined the Methodist Church, and she was, indeed, a loyal and true member. Almost to the day of her death she identified herself actively with the work of the Church. Faithfulness was the chief characteristic of her life. "Grandma Owen" was invariably present at all the services, and her shining face was an inspiration to every one. Her religion was not merely an outward performance of duty, but an inner reality. The Bible was her dear companion. Her shining face bespoke the presence of her Lord in her heart—an inner light that failed not. How sorely we miss that sweet face with the halo of glory about it! The funeral service was held in the Methodist Church, being conducted by the writer and attended by a host of friends. May the God of all grace comfort the hearts of the bereaved! Her pastor,
O. S. LEWIS.

Mrs. J. C. MONROE was born on Oct. 4, 1881, in Rapides Parish, near the old Spring Creek Campground, and died in the sanitarium at Shreveport, La., on Sept. 27, 1914. She was buried at Natchitoches, La., where she had lived for the past five years.
She joined the Methodist Church when she was just budding into young womanhood, and lived a consistent life. She was married on June 30, 1901, to Mr. J. C. Monroe. There was home where love reigned supreme, and to be accorded a place in that home was indeed a rare privilege. As a woman Mrs. Monroe was modest and unassuming. As a wife she was a faithful and true helpmeet to her husband. She was an ideal mother, and desired her children to be trained in the ways of righteousness and usefulness. She loved to serve, and was not unwilling to do the small things, and whether in the home or in the church she delighted to give herself in service to others. Mrs. Monroe is survived by her husband and children. We bow in submission to the will of God, and pray that our heavenly Father may comfort those who so keenly feel their loss.
F. M. FREEMAN.

RESOLUTIONS OF APPRECIATION.

Whereas it has pleased Almighty God in his providence and wisdom to take from our midst a member and very much loved sister, Mrs. W. T.
Barnes; and whereas our hearts are greatly grieved and saddened by this untimely death, and go out in warmest sympathy to the bereaved ones left behind; therefore be it resolved:

1. That we, the Scooba Methodist Sunday school, bow in humble submission to the will of Him who reigneth and ruleth over all, and governs his children with a hand of love, righteousness and mercy.

2. That the grief-stricken loved ones have our deepest love and sympathy in this sore hour, and we trust that they look to Him who was a man of sorrows and acquainted with grief, yet a victor over death and the grave.

3. That in the passing of our beloved friend and sister, the Sunday school has lost a devoted member and the church a generous and loyal supporter. We shall long cherish the memory of her consecrated, Christian example, and while we miss her presence and mourn our loss, the influence of her life, with its grace and beauty, strength and sweetness, still lingers with us an inspiration and a blessing.

4. That a copy of these resolutions be given the loved ones, and a copy be sent to the New Orleans Christian Advocate, and to the Kemper Herald-
Star for publication.

Signed by: Mrs. J. E. J. Ferguson
Miss Margaret Kennon and Mrs. Fannie Stuart.

EUREKA CHARGE, NORTH MIS- SISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

Dear Dr. Meek: Thinking perhaps it might be of interest to some, I will give you a brief summary of my year's work on this charge. There has been some progress made this year along both material and spiritual lines. We began our first meeting on the fourth Sunday in July, the writer doing the preaching himself. While the visible results were meager, we believe there was good accomplished. At our other appointments we had in the way of ministerial help Brothers J. T. Lewis
C. R. A. Brantley, O. R. Beasley, and W. J. O'Bryant. These brethren all wrought well, giving the gospel trumpet a certain (not an uncertain) sound. God honored their preaching in the salvation of several precious souls, and the quickening of the spiritual life of his people. We have endeavored to do a character of work which will abide. Or, in other words, we want our work thorough—beginning at the bottom and building upward. When I came to this charge there were five subscribers to our Conference organ. We have now 34 paid-up subscribers. I believe in doing all we can to induce our people to read their church paper.

As a result of our preaching some of the distinctive doctrines of Methodism, we have thus far baptized 27 children. Say, Doctor, I believe it pays to preach the doctrines of Methodism anyhow, don't you? They are the doctrines of the Bible, every one of them, and therefore, ought to be preached and lived. Taken as a whole, the results of our labors this year have not been what we hoped for, but we are not discouraged, for the "Gospel is a savor of life unto life or of death unto death." and God's Word shall not "return unto him void." We are very busy these days getting ready for the "rounding up" of the "boys" at Starkville on Dec. 2.

Yours for a full Gospel for a lost world.
T. J. PORTER.

10 CENT "CASCARETS" IF BILIOUS OR COSTIVE

For Sick Headache, Sour Stomach,
Sluggish Liver and Bowels—They
work while you sleep.

Furred Tongue, Bad Taste, Indigesaches come from a torpid liver and clogged bowels, which cause your stomach to become filled with undig-ested food, which sours and ferments like garbage in a swill barrel. That's the first step to untold misery—indigestion, foul gases, bad breath, yellow skin, mental fears, everything that is horrible and nauseating. A Cascaret tonight will give your constipated bowels a thorough cleansing and straighten you out by morning. They

Tidings From the Field

First Church, Memphis, Tenn.

I have two more Sundays at First Church, Memphis, and my four years will end. I ought to stay here four more years. I have received 1213 into the Church, and will turn over to my successor a roll of 1900 members and one of the greatest churches in Southern Methodism. The church has raised about $105,000 for all purposes; not over $2000 of this amount has been expended on the church and parsonage. Every department is in good condition. Where will I go another year? Ask Bishop Murrah.—T. W. Lewis.

Oct. 22, 1914.

Harrisonville, Miss.

Dear Advocate: It is indeed a pleasure for me to utilize this opportunity to express my fondness for the dear old Advocate, which to me is a spiritual tonic. Its arrival I ever await in joyful anticipation.....Our Church is in fairly good condition. We enjoyed a revival this summer under Brother Waldrop's preaching, one of the results of which was an upward spiritual trend among the people. Pray for us—that we may subdue every discordant passion within us and serve our Master in the very beauty of holiness.

Yours fraternally,
B. R. SEBREN.

Crystal Springs, Miss.

Dear Dr. Meek: We have just closed a very delightful and helpful meeting at this place. We had with us "The Lewis Quartette," consisting of Revs. B. W. H. P., Jr., J. M., and O. S. Lewis. Each of these took his place in the pulpit, and all sang at each service. The preaching was plain and practical, while the singing was of a high order. The subjects chosen for discourses and the songs selected for the singing indicated that only one desire found place in their bosoms—the salvation of men. Quite a number professed conversion while 21 united with the Church—18 of them on profession of faith, and there are others to follow. The church was delighted with the services rendered and would gladly have kept the brethren longer had it been possible for them to have remained.—B. F. Lewis, Pastor.

Mooringsport, La.

Dear Brother Meek: Since writing you last the generous people of Mooringsport have been so very kind to us, I am sure that generosity is well worth telling to others. Besides the generous "poundings" given us in the early summer they made up the necessary amount for their pastor to take a trip to the Seashore Divinity School, and the next month they gave Mrs. Morris a trip to Kentucky. While my family was away I assisted a number of pastors in meetings, having very good success in one of these meetings, and I greatly enjoyed my association with all the brethren I assisted. It was also a pleasure to meet and mingle with a number of our preachers and old friends at the Rapides camp meeting. Having been engaged to lead the singing there another year, I look forward with delight to that gracious season. Our work here is doing well in a spiritual way. We recently closed a fifteen days' meeting at Mooringsport. I preached 4 days and Dr. A. C. Holden did the preaching from that time until the close of the services. There were about 100 professions of religion and 37 united with the Methodist Church.

C. M. MORRIS.

Pine Grove (La.) Charge.

Dear Dr. Meek: We find ourselves nearing the end of this year's work. Our revivals have been held and the season has passed. The first meeting was held by Brother D. L. Griffin, of Stidell, who did some most excellent preaching, which has been followed with good results. The next one was held by Brother J. F. Foster, and he surpassed himself in preaching, so you know it was fine. The third meeting was held by Brother W. L. Hunter, of Hammond, and he was perfectly at himself, so you know we had something good. The fourth and last meeting was held by Brother W. A. Mangum, of the Keener Memorial Church at Baton Rouge, La. He not only rendered good service himself, but had with him his bride of three months, who presided at the organ, and so added much to the success of the meeting there. There were nine accessions at this point.

We have six Sunday schools on the work, besides four organized churches. I am preaching at historic Grangeville, where the good Baptist brethren have thrown open their doors to us and we are using their church, and also at the famous Log Camp No. 1 of the Natchitoches Lumber Company. Finances are very far behind on the work, but we are pressing on, humming those words—

"To serve the present age,
My calling to fulfill,
O, may it all my powers engage
To do my Master's will."
J. S. RUTLEDGE.

Houston (Miss.) Circuit.

Dear Dr. Meek: May we have a little space in the Advocate to make our first report to your paper? I would have made a report last year, but being the pathfinder of the Houston circuit in that year I had nothing to report. We have been doing very good work this year. We have had some great revivals, resulting in many additions to the Church. We were fortunate in getting Brother Dave Bass to assist us in a great meeting at Palestine where there were over 100 conversions, and between 50 and 75 additions to the Church. Bro. Bass is a great revivalist and always has success because of his devotion to God. Palestine pays $150 this year, will pay $250 or more, next year. Rev. D. R. Wasson helped us at Algoma. His splendid sermons were enjoyed by everybody. Brother W. N. Dodds, pastor of the Houma charge, held a meeting for us with wonderful success at Camp Grounds. The people of Camp Grounds have built a new church this year. Rev. R. M. Evans, of Strong, Miss., held an "old-time-religion" meeting for us at George's Chapel. There were over 30 conversions. Rev. A. Joe Beasley assisted in the Rhodes Chapel meeting where there were several additions to the Church. I held my own meeting at Thorn, and we had a really good meeting. I have been making headquarters most of the time, this year all over the charge. My study was out under a tree by the side of the road between my pastoral calls. I will not take a work next year as I am expecting to go to Millsaps College after Conference.—M. O. Beckham, P. C.

Sunday School

LOUISIANA NOTES.

By W. W. Williams.

At the meeting of the Training Class conducted by the Epworth League of the First Church, Alexandria, on Oct. 21, Mr. Holloman, the Sunday school superintendent, arranged to have the regular teachers study the same course, viz: "Training the Teacher," and took names of nineteen who desired books. It has not yet been decided whether the League will combine with this class or meet separately. Both classes aggregate an enrollment of about forty or more, studying the same course, at which an attendance of at least thirty can be expected. This is aside from new members who may come in later.

For fear many have not seen a copy of the 1914 Discipline, which of course does not excuse them for not abiding by it, it is stated that the new rules regarding the Sunday school go into effect at the fourth quarterly conferences of this year. Paragraph 261, Sec. III, page 101 provides that "Each Sunday school may have an advisory committee composed of the preacher in charge, the superintendent and other officers of the school, and three members to be elected by the quarterly conference."

As members of the conference are already in charge of schools, and the three members of the advisory committee are to represent the conference, nothing would be gained by electing a member of the conference on this committee, but it is exceedingly vital to elect the most active members of the school on this committee, as they have to report to the conference, and cannot do so unless they are thoroughly familiar with the school, and if they do not report they are useless and have not complied with the Discipline. The selection of this committee cannot be too carefully made. Assistant superintendents are also to be elected in the future. The Discipline further says:

"It shall be the duty of the superintendent to see that the Sunday school is organized according to the standard of efficiency—"
"to see that workers' councils are regularly held."

Hardly anything is needed as badly in Sunday schools to-day as Teacher-training. When Sunday schools were first organized the teaching of children by laymen, instead of preachers, or other members of the ecclesiastical body sufficiently qualified, was bitterly opposed by many, while now it seems to have reached the other extreme. Just anybody can teach a Sunday school class. The small number of Teacher-training classes in the Louisiana Conference is simply appalling. If we have so much excellent talent, why not put it to work in this way? Some Sunday schools are conducting these classes at the regular Sunday school hour rather than not have any at all. It is the writer's opinion that this should be done, as the Bible needs to be studied in a telescopic way as well as in a microscopic way.

One small Sunday school which had failed in carrying out all the departments on account of its size, placed the Home department in charge of the Wesley Bible class, appointing the regular officers of it to also serve in that capacity, and the members as visitors, and at last settled the question as to what the Adult class may do. It also placed the study of missions and temperance in the school in charge of the Teacher-training class, and some seemed to think it fit in well. They thought that missionary and temperance instruction should be a part of a training course and the giving of the instruction a part of the teachers' practice. Of course larger schools have more material.

NORTH MISSISSIPPI NOTES.

By Rev. V. C. Curtis.

I spent Sunday, Sept. 27 at Sea's Chapel, on the Longtown charge. The pastor, Brother A. M. Bennett, had advertised the meeting well. Five schools were represented. Brother Bennett and his people write enthusiastically about the future prospects of the Sunday schools of the circuit. Sunday evening was spent with Brother J. B. Randolph's congregation at Como. They have recently moved into their new and attractive church, which is well fitted up for Sunday school work. Judging from their reports, they are doing excellent work. Brother Randolph would not be surprised to be moved this year, as it is his fourth. He has wrought well.

Saturday, Oct. 3, was spent with Brother R. I. Collins at Greenleaf, on the Cockrum charge. The weather was threatening and the congregation small, though representatives from three Sunday schools were present. There is much room for improvement in the schools of this charge, but those present seemed much interested and we hope these may be the means of increasing the interest and attendance. We learned that Brother Collins had organized an advanced study circle at one of his churches, which shows the interest the pastor is taking in the work. He is another four year man. His people regret to give him up and the charge that gets him is to be congratulated.

Some of the District Secretaries have been in much demand of late and have been rendering excellent service. Miss Elie Willingham has been to Noxapater, where she spoke four times in one day to enthusiastic audiences. The people are loud in their praise of her work. All the departments were organized and a brighter day is in prospect. Other calls have come from Mathiston, Cedar Bluff, and High Point.

Miss Lizzie Horn has recently gone to one of the churches on the Lamar charge. The people were much discouraged and had decided to go into winter quarters, but reconsidered the matter, decided to press on, and they have ordered the literature and expect to begin work anew. These assistants are rendering valuable service.

Our next place was Olive Branch, where our old-time friend, Rev. T. H. Porter is serving as pastor. They spoke encouragingly of the Sunday school work. The Superintendent, Brother Jones, compliments his teachers very highly and stated they were doing excellent work among the pupils of the Agricultural High School which has been recently located there.

TO MISSISSIPPI SUNDAY SCHOOLS.

"In the interest of one of the most worthy causes that we have, the Orphans' Home, let me ask you, if your school is not already giving one Sunday's collection a month, to begin to do so. In visiting the Home, I saw the urgent need. While the children are well cared for by Brother and Mrs. Williams, some of the buildings are badly in need of repair, and Brother Williams says that they are falling behind and are in debt."

We as faithful Methodists cannot allow this to exist. If every school in the Conferences would give the collection on one Sunday in the month to this cause, the problem would be definitely solved. It would save the expense of a field solicitor and would not interfere with the other assessments, as the children will be contributing the most of it, and nothing would appeal more to the children than for them to know it is going to help some poor boy or girl who is an orphan.

It would cultivate a spirit of giving as perhaps nothing else would. Our school was one of the first to start this; it works finely and takes from no other collection; so have your pastor to make a talk concerning this plan and adopt it, and I assure you that with a little effort we can take care of these children, and what more noble work can we do? Please write me or drop me a card if you will take up this collection or that you are now doing so. Yours in the work,
J. H. MINER, Supt.

EAT LESS AND TAKE SALTS FOR KIDNEYS

Take a Glass of Salts before breakfast if your Back hurts or Bladder bothers you.

The American men and women must guard constantly against Kidney trouble, because we eat too much and all our food is rich. Our blood is filled with uric acid which the kidneys strive to filter out, they weaken from overwork, become sluggish; the eliminative tissues clog and the result is kidney trouble, bladder weakness and a general decline in health.

When your kidneys feel like lumps of lead, if you suffer with sick headache or dizzy, nervous spells, acid stomach, or you have rheumatism when the weather is bad, get from your pharmacist about four ounces of Jad Salts; take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast for a few days and your kidneys will then act fine. This famous salt is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia, and has been used for generations to flush and stimulate clogged kidneys, to neutralize the acids so they no longer are a source of irritation, thus ending bladder disorders.

Jad Salts is inexpensive; cannot injure, makes a delightful effervescent lithia-water beverage, and belongs in every home, because nobody can make a mistake by having a good kidney flushing any time.

CHURCH EXTENSION NOTICE.

As the editors of our Annual Conference Minutes for 1913, did not publish my post office address on page 18, as they did of other treasurers of Boards, I am put to the necessity of calling the attention of the preachers of the Mississippi Conference to the fact that my place of residence is Philadelphia, Miss. In remitting to me by money order, draw on P. O. at Jackson, Miss., and mail to me.

It would be a delightful task to act as your treasurer, if every preacher would remit to me before Conference convenes. Why not? Only ten cents far have sent in their money, and only two of these "paid in full," and they paid in the early part of the year.

On the presumption that every preacher takes and reads the Christian Advocate, I ask that you cut this notice out, and keep it for reference.

THOS. A. HOLLOWMAN,
Treasurer Board of Church Extension, Miss. Conf.

Oct. 23, 1914.

WHAT WOULD YOU DO?

If you were the owner of a Mineral Spring which had restored your own health, and if you received thousands of letters like the following from other sufferers, wouldn't you guarantee "Satisfactory Results or Money Refunded," just as I do? You certainly would. Read these letters and accept my guarantee offer printed below:

Dupont, Ga., Nov. 25, 1911.

Shivar Spring, Shelton, S. C.—Gentlemen: I have suffered for years with nervous indigestion and kidney troubles. Derived more benefit from the Shivar Spring Water than from months at Hot Springs, Ark., and numerous other springs. I consider it the very best water extant. Augustus Dupont.

Jacksonville, N. C., July 1, 1911.

Mr. N. F. Shivar, Shelton, S. C.—Dear Sir: This wonderful water has cured me of severe pains in my back and head after twelve years suffering and with no results from medicine and doctors' treatments. This is indeed a wonderful water. Yours truly, Mrs. M. E. Gurganus.

McCall, S. C., R.F.D., Sept. 5, 1911.

Mr. N. F. Shivar, Shelton, S. C.—Dear Sir: The ten gallons of water shipped me on Aug. 24th did me so much good. Please send ten gallons more by first express. Would like to have agency. This water has relieved me of chronic indigestion. Was living on raw eggs and milk. Now am eating anything I want without bad effects. I do not hesitate to recommend this water to all chronic sufferers of stomach troubles. Please give my order prompt attention and ship to Gibson, S. C. and oblige. Yours truly, H. W. Stubbs.

Scranton, S. C., Nov. 21, 1911.

Mr. N. F. Shivar, Shelton, S. C.—Dear Sir: My wife has been a sufferer of rheumatism, and after drinking twenty gallons of your mineral water was entirely cured of the horrible disease. Yours respectfully,

J. D. McClam.

Columbia, S. C., Aug. 11, 1911.

Dear Sir: Until a few weeks ago my wife was a chronic sufferer from gall stones. She was stricken critically ill and nothing but morphine seemed to relieve her pain by rendering her unconscious. My physician, who is a good one, seemed to do very little good. Rev. A. J. Foster, pastor of Shandon Baptist Church of Columbia, S. C., advised me to take her immediately to Shivar Spring. On consulting my physician he agreed that it would be best to do that without delay. In about three days after arriving at the Spring, she was apparently relieved and had regained her appetite. She has suffered no ill effect of the trouble since. Please publish this for the benefit of sufferers. J. P. Draffin.

P. S.—I suffered for eight years with kidney trouble and inflammation of the bladder. After using this water only a few days, I am entirely relieved and suffer no more effect of the trouble whatever.

These are not selected cases, nor are the results unusual. I receive thousands like them, therefore, am justified in guaranteeing satisfactory results. Sign below:

Shivar Spring,
Box 17J, Shelton, S. C.
Gentlemen:

I accept your guarantee offer and enclose herewith two dollars for ten gallons of Shivar Mineral Water. I agree to give it a fair trial, in accordance with instructions contained in booklet you will send, and if the results are not satisfactory to me you agree to refund the price in full upon receipt of the two empty demijohns which I agree to return promptly.

If You Suffer From Catarrh

Try This Pleasant Herb Smoke.
Sent FREE By Mail.

Dr. Blosser, who has devoted forty years to the treatment of Catarrh, is the originator of a certain combination of medical herbs, flowers and berries to be smoked in a pipe or ready prepared cigarette. The accompanying illustration shows how the smoke-vapor reaches all the air passages of the head, nose and throat. As the disease is carried into these passages with the air you breathe, so the antiseptic, healing vapor of this Remedy is carried with the breath directly to the affected parts.

This simple, practical method applies the medicine where sprays, douches, ointments, etc., cannot possibly go. Its effect is soothing and healing, and is entirely harmless, containing no tobacco or habit forming drugs. It is pleasant to use, and not sickening to those who have never smoked. No matter how severe or long standing your case may be, we want to show you what our Remedy will do.

To prove the beneficial, pleasant effect, The Blosser Company, 204 Walton St., Atlanta, Ga., will mail absolutely free to any sufferer, a sample that will verify their claims by actual test. This free package contains a pipe, some of the Remedy for smoking and also some of our medical cigarettes. If you wish to continue the treatment, it will cost only one dollar for a month's supply for the pipe, or a box containing one hundred cigarettes. We pay postage.

If you are a sufferer from Catarrh, Asthma, Catarrhal Deafness, or if subject to frequent colds, send your name and address at once by postal card or letter for the free package, and a copy of our illustrated booklet.

LAKE PROVIDENCE, LA.

Dear Editor: We are winding up a very pleasant third year at Lake Providence and it has been the best of the three. The congregations have been better and the spiritual tone of the Church has shown some improvement through the year. We have recently had a gracious revival which gave a great spiritual uplift to the town and resulted in 20 additions to the Church by baptism and vows. I was assisted in this revival by Rev. A. I. Townsley. For nine days he poured a storm of shell and shrapnel into the enemy's stronghold and routed him. Townsley's shelling is as effective as the Germans' long range siege guns. In the pulpit and out of it, he is the busiest man in a meeting I ever knew, and his work is deep and thorough. He preaches with unction and power and then between services, in the homes, in the stores and shops, and on the streets, he follows up the convictions produced by the preaching of the Word by effective personal work. He is a fine mixer and everybody falls in love with him. There is no better help in a meeting in the Louisiana Conference than Brother Townsley. He brings things to pass.

I shouldn't be surprised if there should go up to the Bishop a petition from Lake Providence for him as pastor, but I'm going to suggest him to the Bishop for the eldership. He'd make a truly efficient presiding elder, and then I'm going to stick my toes deep into this good old river soil and try to hold on to Lake Providence one more year, because it's the best appointment in the Conference.

Mr. Editor, you can't find a more intelligent and cultured people anywhere in the South. They are genial, big-souled, and sunny-hearted; and they'll spoil almost any preacher by their kind treatment and ministration to his needs. You ought to see how they "pound" their pastor. They roll it in on us in barrels and large packages. But enough of this, lest some of my brethren begin to covet my place. Hands off, brethren, you can't have it! Townsley is the only disturbing element now in my plans. I could also say in praise of the place, that Lake Providence, situated as it is on a lovely silver lake, is the prettiest town in the State, and the boating, fishing, and hunting are most excellent; and this preacher has a good motor boat of his own design and construction. Not yet, brethren; wait just one more year!—J. W. Lee.

MILLSAPS COLLEGE NOTES.

At the end of the first month of the session all the Departments of the College report good work by the students. The spirit displayed by the students of last as well as this session during the time of the inconvenience to which we were put by the burning of the old building is to be commended. We take this opportunity of giving expression to the appreciation of the authorities for such patriotism. While we have been greatly handicapped as to room for carrying on the work it is gratifying to note that in every particular the students have co-operated with the faculty in overcoming the difficulties.

The chapel services have been held in the gymnasium, but on the morning of October 22 the first service was held in the new chapel. It will be of interest to all our friends to know that the first service in the new building was the usual morning prayer service conducted by Dr. Watkins. The hour was given over to the delivering of short addresses by members of the faculty.

REVIVAL AT COLLINS.

Our series of services started on Sunday, Oct. 11, and Rev. G. H. Thompson arrived the night of the 13th, and held the morning service the next day, and was with us from that time until the close of the meeting the night of October 21. The congregations were highly appreciative and showed this to be true in many ways.

I consider Brother Thompson one of the most original preachers it has been my pleasure to hear. Taking the same old texts we have heard preached from so much, and breathing into them the living fire of the Divine Spirit, he delivered forceful gospel sermons which reached the hearts of the people and resulted in permanent good. As evidence of this, at the prayer meeting following the revival there were some present who had not been in a prayer service in a long time who gave expression to the great benefit which they had received.

Four united with the Methodist Church and one with the Presbyterian Church during the meeting. We had old-time altar services and men and women came forward for prayer that they might be conscious of their salvation and have the witness of the Spirit. Some five or six new family altars were established and numbers who had never prayed in public began to perform that Christian duty during the meeting.

One of the inspiring features of the meeting was the faithfulness of our friends possessed of musical talent who organized quite a good orchestra and rendered invaluable service.

God blessed our efforts and there are many who will rise up and call Brother Thompson blessed for the plain, practical and forceful manner in which he presented the Gospel of our Lord. J. C. CHAMBERS, P. C.

JUST A MINUTE.

Do you know

That the M. E. Church, South, is responsible for five of the twenty million people in Brazil?

That to meet the educational needs of the five millions there the Woman's Missionary Council has seven boarding schools, four day schools and one night school, with a total enrollment of 1,395?

That in our woman's work in Brazil there is only one appointment to distinctively evangelistic work?

That our whole force in that country is twenty-seven missionaries (less than last year)?

That in every station the workers are overworked, and new missionaries are not given time enough for language study?

That somebody who ought to fill the depleted ranks, somebody who could strengthen the forces for righteousness there, is staying at home?
Is that somebody you? Your daughter? Your sister?

Do you know

That only fifteen of the thirty States of Mexico have any Protestant mission work?

That the Woman's Missionary Council has only seventeen missionaries in that country?

That in our schools a daily Bible lesson was given to 942 pupils last year?

That four missionaries and one missionary teacher (under regular appointment) working in two schools with 188 pupils were your channels of blessing to Cuba last year?

Can you estimate the result of such sowing of the Word?

Just a minute more!

Do you know

That every Latin country is without the open Bible? Without a living Christ?

That the people are largely governed by an immoral priesthood and bound by superstition?

That somebody has forgotten to pray the Lord of the harvest to send enough workers?

That somebody has withheld some of God's money that he intended to save the Latin people? Was that somebody you, or your auxiliary?—

NATCHITOCHES YOUNG PEOPLE.

Here in Natchitoches (La.) we have a live Young People's missionary society with a membership of thirty-two boys and girls who are faithful and conscientious in many things, and are trying to live up to our motto,
"Loyalty to Christ."

We have two meetings a month—
one a devotional and business meeting, and the other a devotional and social meeting. At present, all are interested in studying "Livingstone the Pathfinder," and as they read of the heroism and love for Christ and humanity in the heart of the Pathfinder,
I feel sure they are inspired to do something for the Master.

It is a beautiful thought to know that the Young People have a part in God's great plan of sending the gospel to all the world. He could have arranged another way to have the story told, but he wanted the Young People to help in this work.

There is a little story of a light house keeper's daughter who was given a tiny candle and told to stand by her father and hold it, being careful not to let it go out lest some ship might be lost on the rocks. The little girl looked up in surprise and said,
"Why, daddy, the sailors can't see this little light." "Wait, my child, it is not dark yet. After awhile we'll see how much good the light will do." He cleaned and polished the lamps, and when the twilight began to come, he took the little candle and lighted the great lamps that threw their beams far out to sea.

We are not able to throw out our little light far, but we hope that from our tiny little light others may catch a gleam and that we may all be able to help save souls that are lost in the night of sin and sorrow.

MRS. R. W. WINSTEAD,
Second Vice President.

VASHTI'S ARTESIAN WELL.

Prof. E. E. Bishop reports a well at Vashti as finished and bringing great relief to the school. The work has been handicapped for some time at this point for the lack of sufficient water. Prof. Bishop writes that it has taken the entire vacation to secure this benefit. School opened on September 2. They are very much crowded, but have courage and hope to do good work despite this handicap. Four hundred schools like Vashti are needed to meet the present demand for the education and protection of friendless girls. Every State in the Union needs just such an institution as we have at Vashti. It is impossible for the Church to finance these institutions. Let us hope that Vashti will become a type which other States will copy.

This is one of the schools to which the Week of Prayer offering goes this year. Much good has been accomplished through this institution; but so many are being turned away for lack of room, that the need for immediate help is quite urgent. Their faith is so great that with many disadvantages and discouragements they do not hesitate to go right on with the work. God will surely reward such faith. Remember, you are a co-partner with God; don't disappoint him.

IN THE PRESENCE OF THE KING.

Word reached us a few days ago that Mrs. Lizzie Campbell Johnson, mother of our beloved Mrs. W. T.
Cunningham, Corresponding Secretary of the Home Department of the Louisiana Conference, had passed into the great beyond. Mrs. Johnson fell asleep on Tuesday, Oct. 13, 1914, after a long lingering illness. A friend in writing of her said, like St. Paul, "for her to live was Christ." While her sufferings were intense, that rare sweet smile which lingered upon her countenance to the end, told better than words that she knew and trusted her Father. Our hearts go out in deepest sympathy to our bereaved sister, and we pray that amid the shadow which hangs over her she may catch a glimpse of the Father, who with his loving hand has chastened her. There are mysteries in our lives which we cannot fathom, but after awhile they shall be unraveled. "Now we see through a glass darkly but then face to face," and oh, blessed promise: "I will not leave you com-fortless," so, to his tender love and care we commend this dear sister, knowing that he will bind the broken heart and give healing to her wounded spirit.

ANOTHER SHADOW ACROSS OUR PATH.

We find in our work, as elsewhere, that the Master is constantly throwing light and shadow upon our pathway. One shadow has already fallen; now comes another, though not so heavy as the first one. We allude to the serious illness of the Lafayette
District Secretary (La. Conf.), Mrs.
Crow Girard. For weeks, friends and loved ones have been praying for her restoration to health and how anxiously all have waited for news from that darkened room where our dear friend is suffering such intense agony with her eyes. We ask the women throughout the Conference to unite in prayer for her complete restoration.

There is a light that shineth in the darkness, and all who know this gifted, generous-hearted Christian woman, know that that Light shines, in her life and illuminates the darkened room in which she is forced to remain. She is a woman true and pure, and the love of Christ is the motive power of her every act. She has served faithfully and efficiently in every office in which she has been placed, and we pray that God in his infinite love and wisdom will restore her to us again, and that the work will not have to suffer because of her inability to resume it.

"Whate'er God does is well!
In patience let us wait."

GRANDMA USED SAGE TEA TO DARKEN HAIR

She made up a mixture of Sage Tea and Sulphur to bring back color, gloss, thickness.

Common garden sage brewed into a heavy tea with sulphur and alcohol added, will turn gray, streaked and faded hair beautifully dark and luxuriant, remove every bit of dandruff, stop scalp itching and falling hair.
Just a few applications will prove a revelation if your hair is fading, gray, or dry, scraggly and thin. Mixing the Sage Tea and Sulphur recipe at home, though, is troublesome. An easier way is to get the ready-to-use tonic, costing about 50 cents a large bottle at drug stores, known as "Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Hair Remedy," thus avoiding a lot of muss.

While wispy, gray, faded hair is not sinful, we all desire to retain our youthful appearance and attractiveness. By darkening your hair with Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur, no one can tell, because it does it so naturally, so evenly. You just dampen a sponge or soft brush with it and draw this through your hair, taking one small strand at a time; by morning all gray hairs have disappeared, and, after another application or two, your hair becomes beautifully dark, glossy, soft and luxuriant.

UGH! CALOMEL MAKES YOU SICK. DON'T STAY BILIOUS, CONSTIPATED

"Dodson's Liver Tone" Will Clean Your Sluggish Liver Better Than Calomel and Can Not Salivate.

Calomel makes you sick; you lose a day's work. Calomel is quicksilver and it salivates; calomel injures your liver.

If you are bilious; feel lazy, sluggish and all knocked out, if your bowels are constipated and your head aches or stomach is sour, just take a spoonful of harmless Dodson's Liver Tone instead of using sickening, salivating calomel.
Dodson's Liver Tone is real liver medicine. You'll know it next morning because you will wake up feeling fine, your liver will be working, your headache and dizziness gone, your stomach will be sweet and bowels regular. You will feel like working. You'll be cheerful; full of energy, vigor and ambition.

Your druggist or dealer sells you a

MINISTER TELLS HOW HE WAS RESTORED TO HEALTH.

The splendid restorative powers of Dr. Miles' Nervine were never better demonstrated than by the experience of the Rev. W. J. Houck, of Greencastle, Pa. We will quote from a statement that he made recently:—

"Several years ago I experienced some severe nervous shocks, which came at a time when my nervous strength and vitality had been greatly taxed by a severe season of work. My health was affected and I was seriously threatened with nervous prostration. I could not sleep at night and was so nervous that I would start at every little noise. My appetite was poor and it seemed almost impossible for me to gain strength. Through the advice of a friend I began taking Dr. Miles' Nervine and Liver Pills. I soon saw that my health was improving. Instead of that tired and worn-out feeling which had so oppressed me, I felt strong and cheerful. I could sleep soundly all night and would awake in the morning feeling rested and refreshed. Since that time whenever I am overworked or feel "run-down" I find a bottle of Dr. Miles' Nervine is a wonderful help in bracing me up and in giving me renewed strength and health."

Dr. Miles' Nervine will prove equally beneficial to others who are nervous and run-down from overwork or from any other reason, and if it fails to benefit you your money will be cheerfully refunded. It can be purchased at any drug store.

"Pape's Diapepsin" makes Sick, Sour, Gassy Stomachs surely feel fine in five minutes.

If what you just ate is souring on your stomach or lies like a lump of lead, refusing to digest, or you belch gas and eructate sour, undigested food, or have a feeling of dizziness, heartburn, fullness, nausea, bad taste in mouth and stomach-headache, you can get blessed relief in five minutes. Put an end to stomach trouble forever by getting a large fifty-cent case of Pape's Diapepsin from any drug store. You realize in five minutes how needless it is to suffer from indigestion, dyspepsia or any stomach disorder. It's the quickest, surest stomach doctor in the world. It's wonderful.

A BUSY TRIP.

I refer to a recent trip to one of my churches. In the course of 30 hours I tried to preach five times: on Saturday afternoon at the church, Saturday night at a dwelling, twice on Sunday at the Church, and on Sunday night at another dwelling. The preaching in the homes was suggested by another than myself; however, I appreciated this opportunity to so serve, and I stand ready to repeat it wherever desired on the charge. An hour or more before the last mentioned service, in the home where the service was to be held, I baptized a family of seven children (all the family except one married daughter), and just before we were through with this service two young men came in and I baptized one of them, who had been recently converted. The other young man was already a member of the Church. When I was through baptizing this family, I believe I partially realized how Peter felt after he had baptized the household of Cornelius; anyhow, since this occurrence I feel more determined to press on up the highway! Hallelujah! J. A. WELLS.

NOTICE TO LOUISIANA PREACHERS.

It will be absolutely necessary, if the statistical work of the next Annual Conference be accurately done, that each preacher reporting his work be provided with the new report blanks. The old report forms cannot be used with the new Statistical Tables. There are radical changes, and so reports will be received by the Statistical Secretaries except those in the new forms. It will be necessary, therefore, for each preacher to provide himself with the new forms before the meeting of the Conference. We urge you to order of the Publishing House at once a book of the new forms, and prepare your reports before you leave home for Conference so that they will be ready to hand to the Secretaries immediately on your arrival at Conference.

ROBT. W. VAUGHAN,
Statistical Secretary.

THE TROUBLE IS NOT INSIDE.

The myriads of parasitic germs which cause Tetter, Eczema, Ringworm, Itch, Acne, Salt Rheum, etc., cannot be killed internally. They live and feed on the surface and must there be treated. Tetterine is the common sense treatment that has scientific principles to back it up. E. A. Kennedy, druggist of Brooklyn, Fla., says: "Tetterine has cured quickly and permanently several stubborn cases of tetter that came under my personal knowledge. One of 15 years standing." 50c at druggist's or by mail from Shuptrine Co., Savannah, Ga.

BROTHER KELLEY IN VIRGINIA.

We have lately closed at Flint Hill, Va., one of the best meetings in the history of the Church. The citizens say it was the very best revival ever known here.

Rev. Dan E. Kelley, Mississippi's great Conference evangelist, did the preaching. It was full of wisdom and of power. The town and community were stirred to new life and the churches were wonderfully built up.

Forty-five have been added to the Methodist Church as a result of the meeting, and there are some to go to other Churches.

The spiritual tide has remained high in the Church since the revival has closed and the evangelist is gone. The Sunday school has greatly increased in attendance and membership. The prayer meeting, too, has received a new impetus. A woman's prayer meeting has been organized and is even now helping to make prominent the deeply spiritual life awakened.

Brother Kelley is eminently sane in his revival methods. He helps both the pastor and the people. I do not know any man more wonderfully used of God in soul-winning. His work is a blessing wherever he goes.

A. P. WILLIAMS, Pastor,
Rappahannock charge, Va.

A MESSAGE FROM A FRIEND.

Dear Mr. Editor: After the recent District Conference of the Woman's Missionary Society had closed, and the dear Christian women gone to their homes, I felt so keenly the emptiness of my life, its loneliness and desolation: it seemed to me more, almost than I could bear. I picked up the dear old Advocate, and the first lines my dim eyes rested on, were:

"How can I sink with such a prop
As my eternal God,
Who bears the earth's huge pillars up
And spreads the heavens abroad."

Then I read: "The best way to teach Christianity, is to live it. Nothing is so impressive as an object lesson." I felt as if I had a message direct from the Giver of all good, and I have tried to be brave.

The meeting was, I think, a great success, and I think that noble Christian woman, Mrs. J. C. Clark, who, is the efficient District Secretary has just cause for thankfulness over the result. She is thoroughly imbued with the spirit of missions, and, like Mary of old, "She hath done what she could."

Our Conference President was with us and presided in her sweet, womanly way, and impressed all with the feeling that she is fully consecrated to the work to which she has been called, and appreciates the magnitude and importance of her work. Our Conference Corresponding Secretary, Mrs. La Prade, was also present, and truly magnified her office. Indeed all who spoke on the different themes presented, did great credit to themselves, and I trust even greater good to the cause in which they are interested. That the meeting may result in great and lasting good, is my prayer.

I know an account of this gathering will be sent you, prepared by some abler pen than mine. I always feel like telling a preacher so if his sermon was a help and encouragement to my soul, and it was chiefly to tell you how you had helped me and given me fresh courage, for which I heartily thank you, that I decided to write this brief note.

Sincerely, your friend,
Newton, Miss. S. G. WEEMS.

TO LOUISIANA EPWORTH LEAGUERS.

I wrote to every chapter of the Epworth League in the State during the month of August, requesting the names of the officers. I have heard from very few and hope that you may realize the importance of this request, for without this information the State Cabinet can not be in touch with the different departments to give them assistance. I had names of very few Leaguers, so I addressed my letter to the President of the Epworth League, in care of the pastor whose address I took from the Annual Conference Journal. If you have not sent me the names of your officers, please send them to me when you read this.

IF YOUR CHILD IS CROSS, FEVERISH, CONSTIPATED

Look Mother! If tongue is coated, cleanse little bowels with "California Syrup of Figs."

Mothers can rest easy after giving "California Syrup of Figs," because in a few hours all the clogged-up waste, sour bile and fermenting food gently moves out of the bowels, and you have a well, playful child again.

Sick children needn't be coaxed to take this harmless "fruit laxative." Millions of mothers keep it handy because they know its action on the stomach, liver and bowels is prompt and sure.

Ask your druggist for a 50-cent bottle of "California Syrup of Figs," which contains directions for babies, children of all ages and for grown-ups.

Household Economy

How to Have the Best Cough Remedy and Save $2 by Making It at Home

Cough medicines, as a rule contain a large quantity of plain syrup. A pint of granulated sugar with 1/2 pint of warm water, stirred for 2 minutes, gives you as good syrup as money can buy.

Then get from your druggist 2 1/2 ounces Pinex (50 cents worth), pour into a pint bottle and fill the bottle with sugar syrup. This gives you, at a cost of only 54 cents, a full pint of really better cough syrup than you could buy ready made for $2.50—a clear saving of nearly $2. Full directions with Pinex. It keeps perfectly and tastes good.

It takes hold of the usual cough or chest cold at once and conquers it in 24 hours. Splendid for whooping cough, bronchitis and winter coughs.

It's truly astonishing how quickly it loosens the dry, hoarse or tight cough and heals and soothes the inflamed membranes in the case of a painful cough. It also stops the formation of phlegm in the throat and bronchial tubes, thus ending the persistent loose cough.

Pinex is a highly concentrated compound of genuine Norway pine extract, combined with gualacol, and has been used for generations to heal inflamed membranes of the throat and chest.

To avoid disappointment, ask your druggist for "2 1/2 ounces of Pinex," and don't accept anything else. A guarantee of absolute satisfaction, or money promptly refunded, goes with this preparation. The Pinex Co., 235 Main St., Ft. Wayne, Ind.

TO THE COUNTRY AGAIN:

I have been to the country again. That may seem to others to be a very ordinary occurrence, but to me it was a great pleasure. I went to Clinton, La., Monday, October 5, for the purpose of assisting Brother Fontaine in a week's meeting. The trip there was uneventful. At Ethel I wandered up and down the right-of-way in a blistering sun for more than an hour when my loneliness was abruptly ended by the arrival of Brother Fontaine, who came from one of his country appointments and was on his way home to Clinton. All my loneliness was ended, for whatever else he may or may not possess, there is no discount on Fontaine's conversational ability.

I found Clinton serenely sequestered in a grove of pecan trees. A brother of Rev. George P. White, of Plaquemine, took me in his conveyance from the depot and informed me that, since I once came from Missouri, he would "show me" Clinton. It took a long time to do it though, not that my eyes were out of order, but that Clinton is so badly scattered. Nearly every house is located on from a quarter to a whole block of ground. And the Clinton people raise their own gardens, keep fine cows, plenty of chickens, and, best of all, they have a very fine variety of fry-chickens. I blush to confess it, but it's a fact: I helped to eat from one to two chickens every day I was there. Clinton is an old time town, with old time dwellings and old time Southerners as inhabitants. From the standpoint of cordiality, I have never seen Clinton's superior.

I like Clinton for another thing. Her people go to church and pay respectful attention to the sermons. From the viewpoint of the minister, there can be but one objection to the place: Years of hard times, due to reverses in cotton, have so depleted the finances of the people there that there is small cash support for a pastor. This failing is in a measure offset by the fact that every home in town belongs to the preacher if he will just visit his people.

Brother Fontaine has done a good work there this year. He is a statistician and bookkeeper. His careful habits and conscience regarding accuracy in church statistics has prompted him to revise the roll of our Church there and fix it up until the next pastor will know at a glance exactly what is there. He has received scores of new members into the Church, too, and he has not neglected any department of the Church. Brother Fontaine is a steady man, a good pastor, an instructive preacher, and, withal, a man beloved by his people, and his wife is his help-meet in every particular. The meeting we held appeared to do much good, although there was no great stir among the people.

While in Clinton I met Rev. W. T. Currie, a local preacher of our Church who is serving God as an evangelist. He reports that his labors have been fruitful for the Master. Rev. S. D. Roberts, of the East Feliciana circuit, was present at three or four services, and I enjoyed hearing favorable reports of his work. When I left Clinton, Brother Fontaine took me to Wilson where I visited Rev. F. N. Sweeney, formerly pastor at Wilson, but who has been in Colorado for several months because of a violent attack of illness that threatened his life. I found him happy, well, and bubbling over with religion. A revival meeting was in progress in Wilson, and as my train did not leave until 12:25 p.m., I went and heard a delightful and touching sermon by Brother W. L. Hunter, our pastor at Hammond, who was there assisting the present pastor, Rev. F. R. Hill, in the meeting. It was my first visit to Brother Hill and I was favorably impressed. He is an Englishman and a Christian, and possesses those delightful social traits that merit his reception by the Louisiana preachers in the same class with our own Hills. Leaving Wilson, I thought my trip home would be as uneventful as the one from home had been, but I was mistaken. At Baker Prosiding Elder Bowman and Rev. J. E. Craig boarded the train. Twenty minutes in the same seat with Bowman when he is feeling good acts on one's spirits like a tonic. Bowman has personality, piety, pleasantness and vision, and with that blend in his own character it is no wonder that the Baton Rouge district has moved forward this year by leaps and bounds. Brother Craig was just from Bethel Church, where he had been helping Brother Howard in a revival meeting, which he reported to have been a success in every respect. Our train reached New Orleans without my meeting with any more ministers, but I came next to meeting two more when at the Union Station in New Orleans I met Miss Iles and Miss Walker, the two deaconesses who are serving the Church on the Houma Mission. They were full of Christian joy over a great revival that had just closed at one of the appointments on the Mission. I was only gone a week, but I met eight preachers and two preachersesses, so the Advocate readers may easily see why I have used so much space commenting on another week in the country.

Editorial

"Ere yet thy heart be hard and dry,
Make haste to pardon and atone;
One hoarded hate shuts all the sky,
And turns the Father's heart to stone."

The Methodists of Chicago, patterning after the plan of having a "Go-to-Church Sunday," are proposing to have a "Go-to-Prayer-Meeting Night." The date selected for this is Wednesday, November 11. Doubtless considerable good results from the special efforts made to secure worshippers on such occasions. No unobjectionable method of stirring up persons who are indifferent to their religious duties ought to be discouraged. We cannot tell what will follow from one's spending a single hour in the house of God.

If we remember correctly one of the inscriptions on the monument to Bishop McTyeire refers to him as "A leader of men and a lover of little children." Principal Shairp, in his little volume, "Culture and Religion," says: "In all the best men you meet, perhaps the thing that is most peculiar about them is the child's heart they bear within the man's. * * * And this child's heart it is that is the organ of faith, trust, and heavenly communion." This is in accord with the words of the Master: "Verily I say unto you, except ye be converted and become as little children, ye shall not enter into the kingdom of heaven."

We take the following from a book on our desk: "A mother was talking to a little girl about the death of her father. She said, 'God has sent for your father, and will send for us, but we do not know just when.' Finally, the little girl said, 'If we do not know when, don't you think that we had better pack up and get ready to go? God might send when we are not ready.' Though it is said to have come from childish lips, this is a message which all humanity would do well to heed. Indeed, it is but a repetition of the utterance of the God-Man himself: "Be ye also ready; for in such an hour as ye think not, the Son of man cometh."

A South Carolina pastor in setting forth the results of a revival in his church says: "Men and women all over town were stricken with conviction and were seen going around paying up old debts and confessing their wrongs." Noting this statement, Brother Nettles, the editor of the paper in which this appeared, interjects the remark: "We are sorry it did not reach to indebtedness to the Advocate." Our confrere here puts his finger on one of the weak spots of many people. One of the strange things in the world is how so many persons who claim to be Christians can read a paper all the year and then permit its publisher to discontinue it without paying what is due on it. We scarcely think that such a type of honesty will pass muster at the bar of the general judgment.

OUR CHURCH FINANCES.

From now until the meeting of the Annual Conferences our pastors and official boards will be busy raising the collections that are necessary to maintain the work of the Church. These funds are most urgently needed and it is to be hoped that no charge will consent to report a deficit until every possible effort has been made to secure the assessments in full. The cost of living at this time is very high and the salaries of our preachers and presiding elders ought not to be allowed to come up short. In most cases what they receive is, at best, meager and inadequate to meet their necessities, and the withholding of any portion of what has been promised them is liable to entail embarrassment and hardships. So let all our congregations strive earnestly to meet completely their obligations in this respect.

Nor are the Conference collections less important. A deficit on them will tend to leave the Church without the resources to prosecute its various activities energetically, and the cause of Christ will correspondingly suffer. In such a time as this the demands upon the Church for money are more numerous and imperative than they are when things are in a normal condition. The statement which Dr. Pinson, our Missionary Secretary, makes on another page concerning the collections for missions up to the present time is highly gratifying, and our Conferences in Mississippi and Louisiana should spare no pains to keep up this good record. If necessary, we should be willing to make sacrifices rather than to have the Church forced to take a backward step in any field in these days that are trying men's souls. Let us see that we do not fail to do our whole duty in this crucial period in the history of the world and of the Church. The call is to our colors, and the Master expects every disciple to lend a helping hand.

ONE RESULT OF THE WAR.

One effect of the Great European War has been to re-awaken interest in the study of the prophecies contained in the Scriptures. A New York communication to The New Orleans Times-Picayune describes this late development in church circles, as follows:

"People everywhere are delving into books of prophecy. Volumes written a hundred years ago, some of them, and occupying dusty shelves for decades are in demand at the libraries. People are talking about the meaning of passing events. The argument is heard in all directions that the world has reached the end of one important age. Some who scout the Second Advent and talk of the end of the world are now considering it seriously. A Sunday school class in Indianapolis has refused to hear anything but religious prophecy for several Sundays. A company of Cincinnati ministers have taken up its study. In Boston, Detroit and St. Louis companies of women have put aside other subjects to talk of this one. * * * Advanced thinkers in prophecy say that war was predicted for 1914. Bible classes and private students are studying the second coming of Christ. Religious leaders, Christian and Jew, having had occasion to travel in New England, in the South, and on the Pacific coast, report that everywhere they went they heard discussions of this subject of prophecy, and its relation to Christ's early appearance, and perhaps the end of the world."

That religious people in such a time as this should have recourse to the Divine Oracle in their efforts to interpret the significance of the perplexing events that are taking place is not surprising. Man, great as he undoubtedly is, cannot foresee the future or foretell with any degree of certainty to what great world movements may lead; hence, when they are in process it is but natural that he should try to figure out whether he is being borne on the tides of time and what is ahead. And knowing that the great Book of books was written for all ages and that prophecy holds in it an honored place, it is not strange that anxious hearts should search its pages for light. But the realm of prophecy is an exceedingly difficult one to explore and that anything definite can be determined by such researches is by no means sure; still those engaging intelligently in these studies will likely be informed and strengthened, for "all Scripture is given by inspiration of God and is profitable for doctrine, for reproof, for correction, for instruction in righteousness."

There is one point, however, that needs to be guarded: such speculations should not be allowed to interfere with our practical duties as Christians. The best way to await the development of God's plans is to keep busy in his service. What we most need now, as is indeed the case at all times, is a strong, unwavering faith in him. We may be sure that he is not an idle on-looker at what is taking place on our planet, and that he will not forsake his Church and his people. It is well for us frequently to read and meditate upon the familiar lines of Cowper, for which humanity will doubtless have use until the end of time:

"God moves in a mysterious way
His wonders to perform;
He plants his footsteps in the sea,
And rides upon the storm."

Deep in unfathomable mines
Of never failing skill,
He treasures up his bright designs,
And works his sovereign will.

Ye fearful saints, fresh courage take;
The clouds ye so much dread
Are big with mercy, and shall break
In blessings on your head."

PERSISTENCY IN PRAYER NEEDED.

If your prayers are not quickly answered, do not despair. The value of perseverance in our supplications is strongly set forth in the Holy Scriptures. Press, and keep pressing, your case before the Father's throne: if what you ask for is for your good, the Lord will bear you and will grant it. One of the amazing things in life is the feeble and infrequent manner in which Christians make use of this glorious privilege and mighty power. How few there are who really know how to pray!

DO AND SAY.

"Two brothers once lived down this way.
And one was Do and one was Say.
If streets were dirty, taxes high,
Or schools too crowded, Say would cry,
"Oh, what a town!" But Brother Do
Would set to work to make things new.
"And while Do worked, Say still would cry
"He does it wrong. I know that I Could do it right." So all the day
Was heard the clack of Brother Say.
But this one fact from none was hid,
Say always talked, Do always did."

WHAT IS IT TO BE A CHRISTIAN?

Rev. Andrew C. Ellis, D.D.

"Verily, verily, I say unto thee, We speak that which we know."—John 3:11.

The double "verily" is recorded only in John's Gospel. Over fifty times the other Gospels make the record of the word standing alone, but more than twenty times John records the double verily, as the solemn words fell from the lips of the Lord Jesus, and three of them stand close together in this conversation with Nicodemus. Jesus used it the first time when he informed the distinguished Hebrew theologian that real Christianity does not consist in the mental reception of certain doctrines. A man may be orthodox in his faith, his intellectual belief, and yet not be a Christian. He used it the second time when he told Nicodemus that Christianity does not consist in an outward amendment of life, but in an inward and spiritual change in the very depths of our being. Nicodemus, trained in a religion which laid the deepest stress on the outward and formal, expressed his amazement at a religion so spiritual and miraculous. Then Jesus used the solemn words again, to declare that the essential fact of his religion, though so utterly spiritual, was a matter of actual personal experience. He puts himself on the level of the humblest Christian, wherever he may be, when he says: "Verily, verily, I say unto thee, We speak that which we know." The final and decisive evidence of Christianity is the evidence of experience. The great modern scientific demand and test is verification—the test of experience. And Christianity, alone of all religions, accepts unhesitatingly and absolutely, this test. Its standing invitation is to "prove all things." The vision and the experience must be brought to the test of life. The teachings of Jesus must stand this test, for all classes and in every age, and when they have stood the test of life, any intellectual difficulties we may have will not discount their value. "Hold fast that which is good."

It is a remarkable fact that in an age when the attack upon the foundations of the Christian faith is the most powerful and searching ever made, an intellectual skepticism which questions every fact of the Christian religion, and a complacent agnosticism which sets up the interrogation point everywhere, there is not in all this wide world an instance of a single prominent and genuine Christian who has abandoned the Christian faith. Men who are not Christians have been disturbed and held back from an open confession of Christ, but not one man who has had an actual Christian experience has turned away from the faith. Take men like Lord Kelvin, Alfred Tennyson, William Gladstone, three men out of thousands. These men stood in the front rank of science, literature and public life, and they were as widely known for their Christian faith as for their achievements among men. Each one went to his grave with an unshaken testimony upon his lips. Why was the faith of these men not disturbed? It was because real Christian faith rests upon the foundations of personal experience, which lie hidden in a man's deepest inner consciousness, far beyond the reach of any intellectual criticism or attack. They are woven into the very texture of a man's deepest life.

What is it to be a Christian? It is never a question of dates, and frames of feeling, and rapturous manifestations. It is not a question of religious emotion. We need not discount these things, but they are not the essence of religion.

The Lord Jesus never speaks of them as conditions and tests of discipleship, and in the conversions recorded in the New Testament there is nothing said as to feeling or unusual experience. But the Lord Jesus in all his teachings made one point clear to every mind—the essence of religion is discipleship, and the test of discipleship is obedience. A man is a Christian when his face is turned Godward, away from sin, and the fact of his obedience is seen in his life. Have I surrendered my soul to the will of God? Have I that filial relation to God which issues in a life of obedience—that is the ground on which I must stand as a Christian. The human side of conversion begins with repentance toward God and faith in the Lord Jesus Christ. The Divine side is the spiritual renewal which first brought us into the Christian life, and which keeps us in the way. The center of our moral personality is the will—the "I" that is in me; and conversion is not only a change of direction, but a change in the element of character. I am a new man, if I am a Christian. My life moves in a new direction. It is a work of grace in the heart, wrought by the Holy Spirit, and changing the whole color of the life.

A well-dressed man sat in a congregation a few Sabbaths ago, intelligent, humble, his face luminous with a personal Christian experience. One who had known him years before said that at that time he was the most profane man in the community in which he lived, and a notorious drinking man—a moral nuisance. He went into a revival meeting one night, and was converted, and from that night he was a changed man. You can multiply this example by thousands. Any philosophy of life which can not give an adequate explanation of that sudden and total change in character and life is defective. These men say the change was wrought by the power of God. And whether the change be sudden or gradual, it is equally real and complete. The one unanswerable argument for Christianity is this of which Jesus is speaking to Nicodemus—"We speak that which we know, and bear witness of that which we have seen."

Let us go back to the three solemn declarations made by Jesus. To be a Christian is not to mentally accept certain teachings. It is not an outward amendment of life, but an inward moral and spiritual renewal. It is not an observance of rites and ceremonies. The unanswerable argument on which it rests is a consciousness of sins forgiven, and union with Jesus Christ. Such a one is able to say, "I KNOW!" Bring your arguments against the Church—I am not saved by being in the Church, but by being in Christ. Discuss the Bible, and raise all sorts of documentary objections and difficulties—I am nowhere taught that the Bible saves me, but I am everywhere taught that Jesus saves me. There is the essence of Christianity, where it can never be argued or mined away. No man was ever argued into Christianity, or out of Christianity. You can not argue a man out of an actual, conscious, personal experience. When you have once seen the sun shining in the heavens, no one can persuade you that it was a star or the moon—the sun is self-evident.

And when we have lifted our eyes to behold the Sun of Righteousness, we shall need no one to persuade us that he is indeed the Sun. "He that believeth on the Son hath life." We are conscious of physical life—that we are well, and not sick; that we are free, and not slaves. And by a more sure, unerring, unimpeachable consciousness, if we are Christians we can say: "We speak that which we know, and bear witness of that which we have seen."—Pittsburgh Christian Advocate.

A NOBLE SACRIFICE.

Mrs. Mary Norman, of Philadelphia, awoke to find herself the wife of a leper. Her husband is smitten with this dread disease. What shall she do? Let her answer in her own words:

"Two courses are open to me, my children and freedom on the one hand, and my husband and exile with a leper on the other. I will choose the latter, not because I love my children less, but because a wife's plain duty is not to desert a good husband in the darkest hour of his life, and when he needs her most."

And so this woman, at the age of twenty-seven, commits her two children to the care of friends, abandons earthly hope of liberty, and every other natural desire, gift, health, and purpose, and turns with a suffering heart to her afflicted husband, and, standing by him, sticking to him, she goes away into isolation, to minister to his necessities, to alleviate his suffering, with only the expectation of seeing him daily fade, fail, fall in parts, and at last pass away in torture and decay. To all this is to be added the constant danger that she herself may fall subject to the same dread disease. All this she does, not with murmuring and self-condolence, but with the promptness of a lover hastening to the trying place.

In this age, when marriage is so often contracted upon the bare grounds of mutual advantage, when a man seeks a wife for his own accommodation, when a woman accepts a husband because she counts that it will add to her gain and advantage, when there are so many broken marriage bonds, when self crushes sincerity, when nuptial love is either selfish, or so cold and dead, this woman's experience and giving of a noble love to her husband, and her fidelity to her highest vows, stands out in bold rebuking and reconstructing contrast. She testifies as to what love God can put in a human soul, and whatever the issue, the world will be better for Mary Norman and her deathless womanly love.—The Presbyterian.

GOD'S PROMISES STAND.

"The Bible To-day" has the following choice paragraph:

"All who are in hard places and tempted to doubt the delivering power of God may well turn, for the invigorating of their faith, to Acts 12:5-17.

"Against Peter were Herod, and prison walls, backed by Roman authority and power.

"For Peter there was a prayer-meeting. And the prayer-meeting was more than a match for Herod and the prison and the might of Rome.

"The thrilling narrative is another vivid illustration of the truth, often emphasized in the Scripture for the encouragement of those who believe, that God is a God of deliverances (Psalm 68:20), and that to the upright there ariseth light in the darkness (Psalm 112:4).

"Our Lord lives and has all power both in heaven and on earth. The exceeding great promise of God is unrevoked: 'Call upon me in the day of trouble: I will deliver thee, and thou shalt glorify me' (Psalm 50:15)."

"God's promises are his checks good at any depository, and fully sufficient to carry us through the hour of need. But, like good commercial paper, they are not intended for idleness, but as a support for activity. A man always does his best when he feels the ground sure under his feet."

NOT TIME TO BE A CHRISTIAN.

I say to my friend, "Be a Christian." That means to be a full man. And he says to me: "I have not time to be a Christian." I have not room. If my life were not so full? You don't know how hard I work from morning till night. What time is there for me to be a Christian? What time is there, what room is there, for Christianity in such a life as mine?" But does it not seem to us so strange, so absurd, if it were not so melancholy, that a man should say such a thing as that? It is as if the engine had said it had no room for the steam. It is as if the tree had said it had no room for the sap. It is as if the ocean had said it had no room for the tide. It is as if life said it had no time to live. Life is the thing we seek, and man finds it in the fulfillment of his life by Jesus Christ.—Phillips Brooks.

A SECOND OPEN LETTER TO DR. GROSS ALEXANDER, EDITOR OF THE METHODIST QUARTERLY REVIEW.

Dear Doctor Alexander: In the New Orleans Christian Advocate of September 3, I addressed you an open letter. The contents of that letter are familiar to the readers of the Advocate. It is, therefore, unnecessary that I shall repeat in this the complaints therein made and questions propounded, except to say that in a book review by Dr. J. H. Stevenson of Vanderbilt University, published in the July number of the Methodist Review, statements occurred which were so in accord with modern infidelity and so subversive of faith in the WORD OF GOD and so repugnant to the Second and Sixth Articles of our Christian faith, that I felt it is to be a duty to call attention to his method of inveighing against our doctrine.

That you also read the letter, I feel perfectly sure for Dr. Meek, editor of the Advocate, mailed you a marked copy of the paper containing it, and on September 24 I also wrote you a personal private letter enclosing a copy of my open communication.

But I have never received a reply and as my address was plainly printed on the envelope, which I addressed to you at Nashville, and as it has not been returned after this lapse of time I must conclude that you received it. Instead of the evil complained of in my former letter being abated, the October number of the Review is again bristling with its pointed thrusts at the inerrancy of the Holy Scriptures. You have allowed Principal P. T. Forsyth on page 630 to say, "A theology of Revelation faltering on the now hollow ground of Scripture infallibility was but more broadly based upon a new historical interpretation of the Bible, of dogma, of the world, and the soul."

"The old Supernaturalism resting as it did with one foot on an impossible verbal inspiration, and with the other upon a metaphysic of things instead of personality, society and history, fell down. The tradition indeed still continues to stand in some of the more closely organized churches, and those secluded from modern influences by immersion in a false conception of authority in Church or Bible. But they are hollow shells of ruined towers that let heaven be seen through their cracks rather than their windows." Scripture infallibility, verbal inspiration, Church and Bible authority are characterized as "hollow shells of ruined towers."

Voltaire, Tom Paine and Bob Ingersoll, a trinity of Bible traducers, would gladly have subscribed to that cruel criticism of the Church's creed, but that our Chief Editor, representing the most rigidly evangelical and orthodox Church on this continent, should send it forth as the Church's teaching to undergraduates in the ministry, who must read it, if they pursue the course of study prescribed for them by the Church, is not a whit less than amazing.

Is it not your duty, Doctor, to conserve the Church's Articles of Faith? Do you not draw a salary of not less than three thousand six hundred dollars to indoctrinate the ministry in the teaching of the Church? In my original letter as in this, I pointed out dangerous thrusts at the Second and Sixth Articles of our Faith, and I now ask, is not the fifth given a death dealing blow by Dr. Forsyth?

"The Holy Scriptures," says the Article, "contain all things necessary to salvation: so that whatsoever is not read therein; nor may be proved thereby, is not to be required of any man that it should be believed as an article of faith or be thought requisite or necessary to salvation."

Does not that Article necessarily elevate the Scripture as the infallible rule of right? May I ask you, Dr. Alexander, if that is not the effect of excluding every belief that cannot be proved by it? In thrusting at the infallibility of the Scriptures are you not, therefore, using the Review to inveigh against the very faith you are obligated to defend?

Could the Church, consistently with her character, require belief in the "hollow shell" of a ruined tower? Will you kindly inform our young ministers, Doctor, if the Fifth Article of our Church is still the Church's teaching concerning the Holy Scripture, of if Scripture infallibility is thrown to the winds, will you tell them by what authority they shall demand of the people belief in the messages they read therefrom?

May I also direct attention to some clauses on page 820, heartily endorsed by Dr. James Mudge, of Malden, Mass., as follows: "But this high estimate of the practical revelative value of the Bible is not tantamount to affirming any of the theories of the Bible, which set it over against all other books as 'infallible' or 'inerrant'; nor does it justify any language which provides an absolute distinction between the nature of the record and that of all other records. The Bible is not a record of a now discontinued revelation." Is that not tantamount to saying that the authority of the revelation contained in the Scripture and the prophetic insight and utterance of its writers is of no greater value or force than the utterance of the spiritually minded theologians to-day?

It means that, or it means that Dr. Mudge and the scholars of his ilk, are in our day vehicles of a special divine revelation. Is not that strange doctrine, Doctor? Has Doctor Mudge received a revelation? Will the Quarterly Review require belief in it as of equal authority with the revelation given in the Holy Scriptures? Such stuff is absurd. If you were to reduce the revelation of the Scripture to a similar source of inspiration and the same kind of prophetic insight and utterance as that possessed by Dr. Mudge, the Church to-day would be "the laughing-stock" of the world. The claim of the Apostle Paul, that the things which he taught were "not in the words which man's wisdom teacheth, but which the Holy Ghost teacheth," is ridiculed in this very number of the Review and called a "hollow shell" of a ruined tower. As you paid no attention whatever to my first open letter or private communication you can scarcely wonder that I again have recourse to the public page, giving now to the public my private letter which I addressed to you on Sept. 24; and which was as follows:

"Influenced to do so, by what I considered a very objectionable book review, from the pen of Dr. Stevenson, which had appeared in the Methodist Quarterly Review, I wrote you in the New Orleans Advocate the enclosed open letter. A copy of the paper containing this letter was marked and sent to you at my request by Dr. Meek, addressing you at Nashville; but as you have made no reply of any kind, it has occurred to me that possibly the paper did not reach you. I am therefore taking this method of bringing it directly to your attention. In writing my open letter I was actuated by no spirit of captious fault-finding nor any desire to injure you or the Review; but I was sincerely in earnest, my convictions being such that I felt that I could not consistently remain silent longer. And I now desire to say to you, that this issue is one which cannot be lightly pushed aside and which you will have to squarely meet. The Review is now in the course of study for our young preachers and I cannot believe that the Church will consent for such utterances as that of Dr. Stevenson to be carried in its columns, when its attention is directed to the matter. I have preferred to give you a fair chance to make to the Church such a statement as would give assurance that Dr. Stevenson did not represent your views and that such matter will hereafter be excluded from the pages of the Review. If you refuse to do this I shall be forced to take a different course in dealing with the matter. It is true, that the General Conference, by whose grace you hold your present position, will not meet for four years; but you are amenable to the Book Committee and the Annual Conferences also have a right to be heard on this subject. I should dislike very much to have to carry this matter to these bodies, but I feel that the Church and our young ministers must be protected at all hazards; and I wish to state to you that I am by no means alone in this feeling. There are quite a number of ministers who share fully with me my views in regard to this matter and who are willing to stand with me in bringing it to the attention of the Church.

Awaiting an answer, which surely I have a right to expect, I am, Yours, etc."

Such was the private communication which I wrote you several weeks ago, and which, as I have said, you have seen fit to utterly ignore. I, therefore, feel fully justified in giving it to the public as a means of showing what my course and your spirit have been in the handling of this matter, and as in part my justification for any developments that may follow.

NOLAN B. HARMON.

Yazoo City, Miss., Oct. 22, 1914.

A HARMFUL DEMAND.

The Presbyterian (Philadelphia) comments as follows upon the widespread demand for young ministers in this day:

"Why do churches glory in a young athlete of fine build and good looks, rather than in a man of grace, wisdom and experience and mellowness of character? There is but one reasonable and historical answer. It came from the segregation of our young people—not from the young people, please note, but from their segregation. Young people, as such, appreciate and value the friendship and counsel of mature, wise and experienced men, and prefer them in the high relations to men of their own time of life. But when the young people are segregated, they have their own meetings, their own socials, their own prayer services, their own benevolences; then they seek the young leader, who will fall in with their own notions, who will be a hail fellow in their athletics, social amusements, etc. This is a fickle relation and does not develop confidence or higher fellowship. It becomes commonplace and reduces the pastoral relation to the commonplace, and it grows stale and wearisome, and soon the young fellow is seeking another place. Not only is the pastoral relation thus made uncertain and temporary, but the Church is robbed of that experience, wisdom and mellowness which is so valued in other callings. The Church to-day is showing this poverty increasingly. Her sermons are only half-developed, her plans and schemes are fragmentary and temporary; her activities are spasmodic. She lacks richness and depth in her life, and so becomes the prey of fads and spasms. Her weight and influence in the community is greatly decreased. It will be well and wise for the Church to return to her former practice and Biblical wisdom, and once more put emphasis on faith, good reputation, wisdom and strength, rather than upon good looks, physical activity, and mere social attractiveness."

LESSONS TO BE LEARNED FROM THE VANDERBILT AFFAIR.

By Rev. Paul M. Brown.

To one such lesson we would venture to call attention here. It is the fact to which the lawyers for the Board of Trustees in their pleading appealed as proof that the Church did not found Vanderbilt University and upon which the Supreme Court of Tennessee placed great stress in its denial of the claims of the Church, namely, that the proposed Central University of the M. E. Church, South, projected by the original Conferences, was about to fail for the lack of response to the appeal for funds which had been made to the rank and file of the Church, when Mr. Vanderbilt came along with his half-million dollar donation. If Mr. Vanderbilt's donation had been matched by an equal amount from the Church at large, who will say that the decision of the Supreme Court would not have been different? The apathetic attitude which a great Church assumed toward a great enterprise projected by her leaders was a pathetic fact and became a fatal fact when the Church's right to the University was contested. In this instance, as well as many others that could be mentioned, the Church, instead of putting her hands in her pockets, cast longing eyes and made suggestive visits across Mason and Dixon's line to secure funds for the establishment of this great enterprise. The speeches of men, charged with the care of our educational work in the South at that time and in subsequent years, echo many a sad lament over this fact. In a speech made by Bishop Candler upon the occasion of the dedication of the Agnes Scott Institute at Decatur, Ga., in 1891, he said: "Of bequests and gifts to colleges and universities in the United States during 1890, institutions north of the Mason and Dixon's line received more than the entire value of every sort of college property in the South." Referring to the founder of Agnes Scott, he says: "The sight of a man who founds such an institution as this is so refreshing, and in the South so uncommon, that I am tempted to ask our generous friend and brother to stand up and let us look at him." In a baccalaureate address delivered during his presidency at Emory College, the Bishop said: "They (those brought up in Christian colleges) should teach our people to give good gifts to educational institutions. Here is an art that the South sadly needs to learn. After fifty years of useful life Emory College owes of her $100,000 endowment $75,000 to a citizen of New York. In these days when the wealth of the country increases so incalculably every day and the blessed old College stands unadorned and ill-sustained in the open woods where the fathers placed it, it becomes none of us to go into our houses to eat and drink until its deliverance shall have been accomplished." In a review article, written by Dr. Haygood, when he was president of Emory College, he uses this striking language: "When people have no genius for a thing they must cultivate a talent. The Southern people have no genius for endowing colleges and they should cultivate the talent."

AN UNANSWERED QUESTION.

Rev. W. W. Pinson, D.D.

"What about your income for this year?" Often and earnestly this question is asked as we near the end of the year. There are reasons for it. One is that the heart of every serious person is concerned for the cause of missions. Another is that the depressed financial condition creates a doubt as to the financial outcome. Another still is that everybody knows that the Board of Missions cannot at will cease its expenditures or curtail them below a normal level. The reasons are that the normal level is always as low as the cause will stand without disaster, and that we are dealing with the lives of men and women who at best can barely live on what we furnish them. Hence, economize as we may and as we are doing, a drop below a normal income means deficit or worse—disaster. It is an encouraging sign that this question is on so many lips.

It remains unanswered. Only the loyalty and devotion of our people can give a satisfactory answer. On this loyalty and devotion we confidently rely. The forecast is not discouraging.

At this writing thirteen Conferences have met and reported. They report for assessments a total of $72,405. This is $568 ahead of last year. These same Conferences have paid on specials this year $17,116, which is $4501 in excess of last year. The total received from these thirteen Conferences is $5,369 ahead of that for the same period last year. Those who are supporting specials are paying up remarkably well. Letters coming to us from individuals who are giving liberally breathe a spirit of sacrifice that is most cheering.

There are yet twenty-eight Conferences to be heard from. Most of these are in the cotton States, and it remains to be seen what they will do. Strong assurance comes to us from many sources of a determination and a perseverance that are telling. The West Texas Conference just held reports the best financial year in its history. A report from the Alabama Conference that one District is $10,000 ahead of last year rings a new note from the heart of the cotton section. There are no signs of a back-down anywhere. If this spirit holds through to the end we shall be victorious. Ours are a people who have always shown their capacity to do things under difficulty. We dare to believe they will not fail now to live up to their record.

If any apology were needed for this final appeal to the Church it is not wanting. It is not solely nor even mainly that there is sore need of the money. That would be neither a slight nor unworthy apology. But the deeper, more serious and compelling appeal is to the spirit of sacrifice and devotion that belong to those who love our Lord. In answering this financial question the Church is answering a far more serious question before God and men. Can she stand the test of discipleship? Has she the spirit of Christ? Will she make good in the hour when it costs? These are the questions the Church needs to answer for her own self-discovery and for the sake of her testimony to the world. The cause abroad may suffer, but if so the canker will eat deeper into the heart of the Church at home and her witness will grow feeble. A courageous, full-chested, self-denying facing of the situation can now make dollars sing hallelujahs and shine with the lustre of an unconquerable love.

Church News

The new Chinese Ambassador to England is said to be a professed adherent of Christianity.

Dr. R. H. Bennett, the new Director of our Correspondence School, has moved to Atlanta and has taken up the important work committed to his hands.

The Methodist Episcopal Church is launching a campaign to increase by $500,000 its fund for helping the superannuated ministers of that denomination.

The new Theological School in Atlanta now has 55 students, and the Wesleyan Christian Advocate predicts that the number will be increased to 75 or more by Christmas.

A half-million-dollar Y. M. C. A. building was recently opened in Atlanta with appropriate exercises. The progressive Georgia metropolis never fails to do well anything that she undertakes.

The Central Methodist Advocate states that Dr. Frank M. Thomas, of Louisville, Ky., was offered the Chair of Moral Philosophy in the Southern Methodist University in Dallas, but declined it.

The last "Cole Lectures," delivered at Vanderbilt University by Bishop F. J. McConnell of the Methodist Episcopal Church, have appeared in book form. The title of the new volume is "Personal Christianity."

The liquidation of the $30,000 indebtedness on Centenary College, at Cleveland, Tenn., now seems assured, and a movement will be launched at an early date to raise $30,000 for the construction of a new building.

Bishop W. A. Candler recently delivered a great lecture on "Christian Evidences" to the students in our Atlanta School of Theology. In nothing is that institution more fortunate than in having Bishop Candler closely related to it.

Colonel Julian S. Carr, a leading North Carolina Methodist layman, has lately made provision to have a tablet in honor of the Daughters of the Confederacy placed in the State Normal and Industrial College at Greensboro. Col. Carr has long been widely known for his good works.

Rev. Gobe Smith, pastor of the O'Neal Street Church of Newberry, South Carolina, states that he has 280 members, and that he can call on 200 of them to lead in public prayer at any time anywhere. This is truly remarkable. Every minister should be much concerned to deepen the spiritual life of his people and to lead them into active service.

Dr. W. C. Lovett has been re-elected Editor of the Wesleyan Christian Advocate, and Rev. R. F. Eakes has been continued as Assistant Editor and Business Manager. These brethren are making an admirable paper, strong, alert, and loyal to Southern Methodism, and we are glad to see them re-commissioned to go forward with their important work.

Bishop Charles W. Smith, of the Methodist Episcopal Church, died of heart failure at the home of Justice Anderson, of the District Supreme Court, in Washington City, on October 31. He had been attending a meeting held at the National Capital in the interest of the Superannuated Ministers' Fund of his denomination. Bishop Smith's home was in St. Louis.

The enrollment at the Randolph-Macon Woman's College has reached 591, which is said to be the largest attendance in the history of that institution. The students are classified denominationally, as follows: Methodists, 242; Presbyterians, 99; Baptists, 70; Episcopalians, 66; Disciples, 18; Jews, 11; Lutherans, 8; Congregationalists, 5; United Presbyterians, 4; Roman Catholics, 4; Unitarians, 3.

In his recent address to the General Conference of Canadian Methodism, Dr. W. N. Ainsworth, in referring to Bishop Galloway as a former fraternal messenger to that body, spoke of him as one "whose heart flamed with an apostle's zeal and whose eloquence had the majesty of an eagle's sweep." This was a truthful characterization of this great ascended leader of Southern Methodism.

The Central Methodist Advocate (Lexington, Ky.) says: "Each Sunday morning in Honolulu every street car in town comes out with an announcement on the fender reminding the citizens that services will be held at the different churches. No other advertisement or announcement of any other kind appears on the fender. No one can get on a car without having it called to his attention that this is the day that he should go to church."

A very remarkable edition of the Bible has been printed in the language of Uganda. The volume is of great length, but is only three inches in thickness, and the same in width. This form was issued because the white ants and other insects rapidly destroy books in that country unless they are well protected, and it is claimed that when printed in this shape the Bible will easily fit into the tin biscuit boxes of a firm which has a very large trade among the inhabitants of that land.

Dr. F. N. Parker occupied the pulpit of the Edenton M. E. Church, South, of Raleigh, N. C., on a recent Sabbath, both in the morning and evening. Referring to his visit, the Editor of the Raleigh Christian Advocate says: "The morning sermon on 'The Value of a Soul' ranked high among the truly great sermons that we have heard, and the evening sermon on 'The Kingdom of Darkness and the Kingdom of Christ in Conflict' was likewise far above ordinary. These sermons were not only logical and profound in their thought conceptions, but were surcharged with the spiritual insight and sympathy of a soul in touch with God." The more we see and hear of Dr. Parker, the more we feel like congratulating Trinity College and the Methodist Church on having his services at that great institution."

Secular News and Comment

Last year one life insurance company in the United States paid to its beneficiaries 40 per cent more than the entire world gave to the foreign missionary enterprise during the year.

It is said that over two million Chinese are facing starvation and that the loss of life in South China from famine threatens to exceed that of the great war. The Christian Herald, New York City, is receiving relief funds and will forward and money sent to it to the proper Chinese authorities.

The Jones Philippine Bill, which declares the purpose of the United States to recognize the independence of the islands "as soon as a stable government can be established there," has passed the House of Representatives by a vote of 211 to 59. It will not be considered in the Senate during the next session of Congress.—Baptist World.

A Reuter dispatch from Amsterdam says, according to Berlin newspapers received there, the number of war prisoners in Germany up to Oct. 21 aggregated 296,869, including 5401 officers. Of these it is said that there are 2472 French officers and 146,897 men; 2164 Russian officers and 104,524 men; 547 Belgian officers and 31,378 men, and 218 British officers and 8669 men.

Thomas A. Edison, the electrical wizard, has invented an instrument called the "telescribe" for recording both sides of a telephone conversation. The instrument is said to be wired with the telephone on the user's desk and operates with its own batteries without interference with the ordinary functions of the telephone. The action is somewhat similar to that of the phonograph, the spoken words being recorded on a wax cylinder.

The recent advance in the price of sugar makes interesting some figures concerning the consumption of sugar recently given out by the president of one of the great refineries. The total consumption for 1914 in the United States is estimated at $3,700,000 tons, or about 75 pounds for every man, woman and child. From one-half to two-thirds of this quantity is sold for domestic use. Confectioners, bakers, canners and other purveyors of food products take the remainder.—Youth's Companion.

"The story is told of a brilliant Oxford student who had just offered himself to the missionary society for African service. Some one remonstrated with him, telling him that he would die in a year or two and that he was throwing his life away. The student answered: 'I think it is with the African missions as with the building of a great bridge. You know many stones have to be placed in the earth unseen to be a foundation for the bridge. If Jesus wants me to be one of the unseen stones lying in an African grave, I am satisfied to be such, certain as I am the final result will be a Christian Africa.' It is a fact that this young man died after a few years there."

"A father in Richmond, Va., was sitting at his breakfast table with his family," says Geo. W. McDaniel, in the Watchman-Examiner, "when his son, who had just arrived at the age of 21, said: 'Father, how do you expect to vote?' 'Son, I will vote for Local Self Government,' said the father. 'Well, father, the practical effect of that vote is to continue the saloons in Richmond. Is it not?' 'Yes, son,' replied the father, 'that will be the effect.' 'Father, I am 21. Some of my associates drink, and frequently they have invited me to go with them into saloons. I can truthfully say to you and mother this morning that I have never darkened the door of a saloon, but if the saloon is good enough for you to vote for it, it is good enough for me to support, and the next invitation that comes to me I will accept and go in and drink.' The father lost his appetite; his eyes filled with tears; a lump came into his throat, and he said, 'My son, I will vote the prohibition ticket.'"

TRUTH DOES NOT CHANGE.

Changes are inevitable in this world. Conditions change, knowledge grows, and there is a constant action and reaction of mind on mind causing changes in man's views of life. It is not wise to assume that one's ideas on any subject, however well-grounded they may be, are so correct that they must never be modified. But that is a far less dangerous attitude than the attitude of the mind which jumps at any idea which may be plausibly presented and which throws overboard well-established truth under the impression that it is out of date because it is old.

Writing in Everybody's Magazine, Hugh Black says:

While we recognize that we are in the midst of a changing order, we are in danger of exaggerating it sometimes. A German proverb says that we never eat our soup quite as hot as it is served to us. Those who purvey our intellectual food often give it to us piping hot, and it is wise to let it cool off a bit. There are other forms of sensationalism than that of the press and the theater. Some change is only breathlessness, and some movement is not even change. There is a passage in "Alice Through the Looking Glass" which comes to mind when one tries to follow the flights of some of the prophets of change:

Alice never could quite make out, in thinking it over afterwards, how it was that they began; all she remembers is, that they were running hand in hand, and the queen went so fast that it was all she could do to keep up with her, and still the queen kept crying, "Faster! Faster!" But Alice felt she could not go faster, though she had no breath left to say so.

The most curious part of the thing was, that the trees and other things round them never changed their places at all; however fast they went, they never seemed to pass anything. *** "Are we nearly there?" Alice managed to pant out at last. "Nearly there?" the queen repeated. "Why, we passed it ten minutes ago! Faster!"

Not only is some of our motion not progress, but also some of our progress, if not all of it, is accompanied by moral danger. When old standards are let go, men lose their moral bearings and many a wrecked life is the result. This is the real menace of our time. There is a forsaking of the ordinary root-virtues by which humanity subsists. Society will go to pieces without the ancient bonds. This necessity explains the amusing spectacle we sometimes come across to-day of men rediscovering the Ten Commandments, and loudly asserting their value for the world.—The New York Weekly Witness.

BRINGS GOD'S BEST GIFTS.

"God lades the wings of private prayer with the sweetest, choicest, and chiefest blessings. Ah! how often hath God kissed the poor Christian at the beginning of private prayer, spoken peace to him in the midst of prayer, and filled him with light, joy and assurance upon its close!"

QUESTIONS FOR THOUGHT.

Ask yourself the following questions, reading them over slowly, and think then answer to yourself:

- Does my life please God?
- Am I studying my Bible daily?
- Am I enjoying my Christian life?
- Have I ever won a soul to Christ?
- How much time do I spend in prayer?
- Is there any one that I can not forgive?
- Just where am I making my greatest mistake?
- Is there anything I can not give up for Christ?
- Is the world better, or worse, by my living in it?
- Am I doing anything that I would condemn in others?
- How does my life look to those who are not Christians?
- How many things do I put before my religious duties?
- Have I ever tried to give one-tenth of my income to the Lord?
- Is Christian service my chief joy, rather than worldly pleasure?

—Mission Messenger.

DEATH TO ALCOHOL.

The New York Tribune declares that one of the astonishing incidents of the great war has been its arousing opposition to alcoholic liquors. Russia stopped the sale of vodka throughout the empire. This was a war measure, but it carried its own comment on the general effect of alcohol. Now in France, on the front page of the revered and conservative Figaro, says The Tribune, we find an eloquent plea for following this example and abolishing alcohol entirely. The writer, Raphael George Levy, a well-known economist and statistician, concludes thus:

"We have already stopped the sale of absinthe. Why halt on the road? It is only when favored by a great current of enthusiasm and national revival, like that which crosses the country at this moment, that virile resolutions can be taken. Vive la France et mort a l'alcohol!"

The writer is strong in his condemnation of the evils resulting from drinking. Alcohol enfeebles the race, takes away from workmen part of their strength and wages, and reduces the whole economic position of the individual and nation alike. The greatest enemy of France, he asserts, more dangerous than the savage Germans beaten by our armies, is alcohol. Closing all liquor shops he concedes to be impossible. But he urges a progressive limitation of their number and an end of all secret manufacture.

There is strong language in M. Levy's outpouring. Some of it may be set down to the spirit of the hour. But who knows what change may come over the spirit of Europe when such notions of efficiency vs. alcohol can take the place of honor in the gayest of Parisian journals?—The Presbyterian.

STRICKEN BELGIUM.

(Dr. Newell Dwight Hillis in the Brooklyn Eagle.)

Let us judge not, that we be not judged. This is the one example of atrocity that you and I might be able to personally prove. But every loyal German in the country can make answer: "These soldiers were drunk with wine and blood. Such an atrocity misrepresents Germany and her soldiers. The breaking of Germany's treaty with Belgium represents the dishonor of a military ring, and not the perfidy of 68,000,000 of people. We ask that judgment be postponed until all the facts are in." But, meanwhile, the man who loves his fellows at midnight in his dreams walks across the fields of broken Belgium. All through the night air there comes the sob of Rachel, weeping for her children, because they are not. In moods of bitterness, of doubt and despair the heart cries out, "How could a just God permit such cruelty upon innocent Belgium?" No man knows. "Clouds and darkness are round about God's throne." The spirit of evil caused this war, but the Spirit of God may bring good out of it, just as the summer can repair the ravages of winter. Meanwhile the heart bleeds for Belgium. For Brussels, the third most beautiful city in Europe! For Louvain once rich with its libraries, cathedrals, statues, paintings, missals, manuscripts—now a ruin. Alas! for the ruined harvests and the smoking villages! Alas, for the Cathedral that is a heap, and the library that is a ruin. Where the angel of happiness was there stalks Famine and Death. Gone, the Land of Grotius! Perished the paintings of Rubens! Ruined is Louvain. Where the wheat wave, now the hill-sides are billowy with graves. But let us believe that God reigns. Perchance Belgium is slain like the Savior, that militarism may die like Satan. Without shedding of innocent blood there is no remission of sins through tyranny and greed. There is no wine without the crushing of the grapes from the tree of life. Soon Liberty, God's dear child, will stand within the scene and comfort the desolate. Falling upon the great world's altar stairs in this hour when wisdom is ignorance, and the strongest man clutches at dust and straw, let us believe with faith victorious over tears, that some time God will gather broken-hearted little Belgium into his arms and comfort her as a father comforteth his well-beloved child.

AN AROUSED ENGLISHMAN.

The friends of Dr. Pope, of the Yorkshire United College, will be pleased to hear that he has returned safely to Bradford. Dr. Pope went to Germany early in July, and when war broke out he was taken prisoner. Instead of being placed in a fortress, however, he was allowed to remain on parole with the German pastor at Ludenhausen, in Lippe, whom he was visiting. His friends made every effort to secure his release, and through the representations of the Foreign Office and the good services of the American Consul at Hanover, a permit was granted last week, and Dr. Pope arrived home on Saturday.

At the conclusion of the morning service at Salem Congregational Church, Bradford, on Sunday, Rev. Dr. Pope walked up the aisle, and, speaking to the preacher, asked permission to address a few words to the congregation. The permission having been given, Dr. Pope said they must excuse him, but he could not help asking for the opportunity to address them. He had been in Germany for seven weeks as a prisoner on parole, and had only just got home, and with all the earnestness at his command he felt he must tell them that unless every man, young, old, weak or strong, did what he could, we British were going to be blotted out. He had no quarrel with the German people; he admired them, and they had been very kind to him; but the people in Germany were all of one mind. The aim of every man in Germany was to reach Paris first—and they meant to do it—and then go on to London. "For God's sake," said Dr. Pope, "don't let the people of this country think that it is an easy job to prevent it. Don't let them think that because the Germans are now being pushed back forty or fifty miles it is an easy job that remains, because it is not. They could not all go to the front, but they could all do something for home defence. Let them put themselves in the hands of the Government and tell the Government to use them for what they were worth.—British Weekly.

The honest doubt of Thomas craves a sign as much as the cold doubt of the Sadducee. And a sign shall be mercifully given to the doubt of love which is refused to the doubt of indifference. —F. W. Robertson.

Do thy part with industry and leave the event with God. I have seen matters fall out so unexpectedly that they have taught me, in all affairs, neither to despair nor to presume; not to despair, for God can help me; not to presume, for God can cross me. I will never despair, because I have a God. I will never presume, because I am a man.—Feltham.

ALEXANDRIA DISTRICT NOTES.

My Dear Dr. Meek: Our First Church in Alexandria has enjoyed a profitable and pleasant year. Some new features and methods have been added to the Sunday school which have inured to its profit. The congregations at the preaching services have been most excellent, while all the finances of the Church have been looked after with care and success. It may be truly said of the official board of this church that they are Christian gentlemen of a dependable character who take a vital interest in everything that concerns the Church and its welfare and they have an abiding ambition to pay such a salary as will make this church equal to any in the Louisiana Conference.

Alexandria, however, has not been the only point in the Alexandria District which has enjoyed a year of prosperity. The news comes from almost every quarter of this District that the work has advanced satisfactorily and at many points decided successes have been achieved. The following are a few of the many good things that have been done within the bounds of the District during the progress of the present year.

The debts that have been standing against the Columbia, Grayson and Jena charges have been provided for, while new churches have been built and paid for at Holm, McNary, Oak Grove and Indian Creek. While we have made progress in the line of church-building and debt-paying, the preachers' comfort in the way of parsonages has not been neglected. A brand-new and beautiful parsonage has been built at De Ridder and one of like description has also been constructed at Oakdale, while our district parsonage has been re-arranged and improved at a cost of $1000, which makes it now a most comfortable and creditable home.

An account of the progress and development of our work in some of this section will read more like an account that might be expected from some new and rapidly growing section than from one that has been so long occupied. For instance, three mission charges were created in the early part of the year, two of which have already been advanced to circuits with four appointments each, namely, Oakdale and De Ridder Circuits. On these approximately 150 members have been added to the Church, while the Oakdale and Merryville Circuits have been advanced to stations, which will pay salaries of $1200 and $900 respectively. On these mission and circuit charges we are preaching in seven or eight country places and small towns where we had no preaching at all last year.

A number of excellent revivals have been held in the bounds of the District and it appears now that the increase in membership will be at least 700.

The Sunday schools have grown rapidly and we feel sure that there is a growing interest in all the affairs of the Church in this entire section. At De Ridder our people are planning to build a $15,000 brick church, and they hope to have this under construction in the early part of the coming year.

This District is a large one, and hence our presiding elder, the Rev. H. W. May, is kept exceedingly busy in traveling over the large territory and in looking after the multitudinous interests that arise demanding his personal oversight; but to see the work of the Lord prosper in his hands seems to give him unmingled delight and added strength for the duties of his office. When our "beloved" name is called at the Annual Conference with clear intonations, we can say that there is nothing against him, but very much for him.

With highest personal regards to the Editor and best wishes to all the brethren, I am,

Yours sincerely,

G. E. CAMERON.

OUR LITTLE GIRL.

"When bedtime comes, our little girl
Grows tired and sleepy quite,
She puts her doll and dishes by
And kisses all good-night.

When bedtime comes, our little girl
Lifts up her voice in prayer,
Entreating Him who rules the night
To hold her in his care.

When bedtime comes, our little girl

GOOD SECURITY.

"Mister, do you lend money here?" asked an earnest young boy at the office door.

The lawyer turned away from his desk, confronted a clear-eyed, poorly-dressed lad of some ten years, and studied him keenly for a minute. "Sometimes we do—on good security," he said gravely.

The little fellow explained that he had "a chance to buy out a boy that's crying papers." He had half the money required, but he needed to borrow the other fifteen cents.

"What security can you offer?" asked the lawyer.

The boy's hand sought his pocket and drew out a paper carefully folded in a bit of calico. It was a cheaply printed pledge against the use of intoxicating liquors and tobacco. As respectfully as if it had been a deed to a farm, the lawyer examined it, accepted it, and handed over the required sum.

A friend who had watched the transaction with silent amusement, laughed as the young borrower departed.

"You think I know nothing about him?" smiled the lawyer. "I know that he came manfully in what he supposed to be a business way, and tried to negotiate a loan instead of begging the money. I know he has been under good influences, or he would not have signed that pledge, and that he does not hold it lightly, or he would not have cared for it so carefully. I agree with him that one who keeps himself from such things has a character to offer as security."—Pacific Methodist Advocate.

A CHILD'S PUZZLE.

Meg had been playing in the garden all the morning, and when mamma called her in she had earth on her hands and smut on her face, and she looked such a grubby little thing.

Mamma smiled. "You have been having a good time, Meg," she said.

And she put a tin basin with some soap and warm water in it on a chair where Meg could reach.

"Now, then, wash your hands and face, dear. Dada will soon be in for dinner."

But Meg pouted. "I don't want to wash," she said. "I am not dirty."

Mamma waited a little, but when she saw that Meg did not begin to wash, she said quite gravely:

"You can not sit at the table, as you are, dear. If you do not wash, then you must go without your dinner."

Meg stood a minute, then, as she saw that mamma was quite firm, she put her hands into the water and began to wash and scrub them.

Lucy is older than Meg, she had looked on all the time to see what Meg would do.

When Lucy saw her begin to wash and be good, she said:

"Why is it, mamma, that you and dada can do just as you like about everything, but we children have to do as you tell us all the time? I don't think it is fair. I wish we could do as we like, too."

Mamma did not speak for a moment. In her heart she said, "Lord, help me to make this plain to my little girls."

"Did Meg have to wash?" she asked then.

"Yes," said Lucy. "If not, she would have to—"

"Bear the punishment," said mamma. "You say, Lucy, that dada and I do just what we choose, and that is quite true. But if we chose to do wrong, then we have to be punished too, and the punishment is far worse than any that dada or I can give you, for it comes from God."

"Little children do not always know right from wrong, so in order to help them and make right easy, God gives them parents, and teachers to praise them when they are good"—and here mamma laid her hand on Meg's head—"or else to punish them when they are naughty."

"My two little girls do as they choose, as long as they choose to do what is right, and then when they are big and there is no mamma to tell them at the time what to do, I hope they will do right of themselves."—Young Soldier.

SONG OF THE FIREFLY.

Annie L. Gregory.

Perhaps you do not know that there was a time when the firefly did not carry a candle to light the way. Perhaps you do not even understand the significance of that light. Then listen and I will tell you.

Once a small insect wandered from its home. It saw the round, shining sun roll down back of a tall hill and say to the sky: "Good night, dear heart, we will meet again on the morrow."

The beautiful pale-blue sky flushed rosy red, and the small insect watched entranced until the bright tints faded and the gray of early twilight descended over all the earth. From across the sea came the mournful notes of the whelp-poor-will, shrill and high sounded the rasping of the katy-dids, the pr-r-r-ret of the tree-toads mingled with the deep bass of the frogs in the meadow brooks, and all the voices of nature joined in a mighty anthem. The small insect alone was silent, and his tears fell fast, for he was very sad.

Then softer than the night wind came a voice of solemn sweetness: "Little one, why weepest thou?"

"Because I have no voice to praise my Maker."

"Then praise him in your heart," said the wonderful voice.

A great peace came over the small insect, and with a singing heart he soared up into the night. And lo! his little body flashed like a jewel in the moonlight.—Zion's Herald.

A WISE CHINAMAN.

"Ultimate good is only to be obtained through hardship," said Kong Yue Wei, the Chinese reformer. Did you ever hear of our great sage, Chang Wu?

"Well, one day a beautiful princess came to profound important questions to the sage, but was so shocked to note his great age, and manifold infirmities that she forgot to speak, and could only gaze at him in silence.

"Daughter," said Chang Wu, smiling, "why do you regard me so strangely?"

"The princess flushed and murmured confusedly:

"O father, do—do you not find it very unpleasant to grow old?"

"Yes, very," Chang Wu answered. "But it's the only way I ever heard of to live a long time."—The Christian.

HOW THE HUMBUG FIRST BUZZED.

"It is not generally known that the word 'humbug,' long so much in vogue, is of Scottish origin. There was in olden time a race called Bogue, or Boag, of that ilk in Berwickshire. A daughter of the family married a son of Hume of Hume. In process of time, by default of male issue, the Bogue estate devolved on one Gordie Hume, who was called popularly 'Hume o' the Bogue, or, 'Hum o' the Bug.'"

He was inclined to the marvelous, and had a vast inclination to exalt himself, his wife, family, brother and all his ancestors on both sides. His tales, however, did not pass current and at last, when anyone made an extraordinary statement in the Nearn the hearer would shrug up his shoulders, and style it just "A hum o' the bug." This was shortened into humbug and the word soon spread over the whole kingdom.—Philadelphia Inquirer.

A BAG OF HEAVY STONES.

If a boy should try to run a race with a bag of heavy stones slung over his shoulder, he never could hope to win against those who were running without any such hindrance to keep them back.

Some one has said that bad habits are like a bag of stones. Every bad habit that a boy forms, keeps him down and prevents him from doing his best. Stop your bad habits, boys, and then you will be able to run a good race in the journey of life, and will not be ashamed of your record.—Pacific Methodist Advocate.

BESSIE'S VERSE.

Bessie was a very little girl. She had learned the verse, "Suffer the little children to come unto me," to repeat at a meeting. She stepped on the platform and began, "Suffer—" It was the first time she had ever tried to speak before so many people. She was frightened, and stopped for a moment, then bravely began again, "Suffer the little—" Again her fear overcame her, but, being a resolute little one, she made a third attempt, and said, "Suffer the little children."

The third time she looked at the upturned faces and stopped. At last she repeated, not exactly the verse, but these words, "Jesus wants us all to come to him, and don't anybody try to stop us." Which was better, to repeat the exact words or to have their meaning in her little heart?—The Sunbeam.

FOOD FOR THOUGHT.

None can measure the wide-spreading harm done to other men's souls by a single known act of sinful cowardice, or the equally wide-spreading good done by a single act of steadfast resistance to evil.—F. J. A. Hort.

It is surprising to observe how much more important anybody may become by simply being always in his place! One need not be wealthy, or influential, or talented, or even educated, to attain this importance. Try it—in the Sunday school, the choir, the Church and other gatherings. The people who are always in their place are the people we "count on."—District of Salina Watchman.

MEETING OF THE PUBLISHING COMMITTEE.

On the call of the chairman, Rev. J. M. Henry, D.D., the Publishing Committee of the New Orleans Christian Advocate met in the Advocate Office, 512 Camp Street, at 11 a. m., Thursday, October 29. All the members were present except Rev. Briscoe Carter of the Louisiana Conference. Rev. W. Winans Drake was elected secretary and Mr. J. D. Barbee was elected treasurer. Rev. J. M. Henry, Dr. I. W. Cooper, and Rev. W. W. Woollard were elected an executive committee.

The several departments of the paper were carefully examined into and found to be working harmoniously and satisfactorily. The paper is free of debt and makes a remarkable showing in face of the depressing financial condition prevailing throughout most of the patronizing territory. However, the circulation shows some falling off during the last two or three months, which shrinkage can be overcome only by greater diligence on the part of our preachers in getting renewals and new subscriptions. The next twelve or fifteen months are going to work a great hardship upon our sacrificing, loyal publisher unless our church people rally to his support. If your subscription has expired do not stop the paper coming to your home but send in the price of renewal at once, and you will help in a department of church work, the importance of which is not duplicated anywhere else.

The editorial management of our paper is not surpassed anywhere within our whole connection. The Publishing Committee adopted strong resolutions heartily indorsing Dr. R. A. Meek as an editor of exceptional ability, and as one who has shown loyalty and wisdom in advocating and defending the interests of our great Church. He was pledged active co-operation and support in his important work. It will be a matter of great interest to our three Conferences, in fact to the whole Church, to know that Dr. Meek will continue on the tripod of the Advocate for another year.

The attention of our three patronizing Conferences is respectfully called to the following action taken by the recent General Conference:

"And also that each Annual Conference select at its next session auxiliary advisory commissions consisting of three members whose duty it shall be to effect a change of church papers from private to Conference ownership and control, wherever practical, and to otherwise co-operate with the General Committee in carrying out the publicity work of the Church."

In closing this report the Publishing Committee wishes to emphasize the importance of prayerful and active co-operation with the editor and publisher in keeping our splendid paper up to its present success and efficiency. We, therefore, make this public appeal to every Methodist in the States of Louisiana and Mississippi to line up with the Advocate, giving it that hearty support which finds practical expression in the price of one year's subscription being sent at once to the publisher.

In behalf of the Publishing Committee,
CHAS. W. CRISLER.

BEAUTIFUL SOUVENIRS.

Mr. W. J. Bryan, our famous Secretary of State, having negotiated peace treaties with twenty-nine nations, has announced that he is having the blades of a score of condemned army swords made into miniature plowshares, designed to be used as paper weights, each having engraved on it the prophecy of Isaiah: "They shall beat their swords into plowshares." It is Mr. Bryan's purpose to give one of these weights to the ambassador of each of the countries with which a peace treaty has been made and also to the members of the United States Senate Committee on Foreign Relations. This is certainly a striking and beautiful way of providing souvenirs of the important events looking to the promotion of the world's peace that have lately taken place under the leadership of American statesmen. It also eloquently attests Mr. Bryan's faith in the Holy Scriptures as the inspired Word of God. Of all the eminent public men of the English-speaking world since the time of Gladstone, he is perhaps the most consistent and outspoken in his loyalty to the teachings and practices of Christianity.

THE NASHVILLE NEGRO CONFERENCE.

The Conference of Negro members of the Methodist Episcopal Church held in Nashville, Tenn., October 21 and 22, was an interesting and important gathering. Two hundred colored ministers and laymen were in attendance, eighteen Annual Conferences having representation in the body. The deliberations are reported to have been pitched upon a high plane, and the discussions that took place evinced an intelligent grasp of the issues under consideration. A somewhat extended series of resolutions was adopted, from which we take the following as of special interest to our readers:

"We also note with great satisfaction the advance of the prohibition movement throughout the country, and rejoice in the fact that our people in large numbers have everywhere given hearty support to the overthrow of the common enemy of mankind.

"We are neither unmindful nor unappreciative of the great services and personal sacrifices of our General Superintendents in the interest of our work, and more especially of those whose episcopal residences are in the Southland; nevertheless it is our sincere and earnest conviction that indigence and racial episcopal supervision is absolutely essential for the fullest development of the work of our field, and we therefore approve of the proposed amendments for Bishops for races and languages, and request our Board of Bishops to submit the same to the Annual Conferences of the Church during the fall of 1915 and the spring of 1916, and earnestly pray their adoption.

"We also rejoice in the growing movement for church federation and unity; the colored man has nothing to gain by sectionalism and we are therefore willing to treat on organic union upon the New Testament basis. With the light now before us, we approve of the plan of the Federation Commission for the reorganization of Methodism providing for jurisdictional or quadrennial conferences with identical powers and privileges, one of which is to be composed of the affiliated colored membership."

The first of these resolutions shows that the better class of Negroes in the South are becoming fully awake to the evils of the liquor traffic and that they are going to lend their assistance increasingly to its destruction in the coming years. This is as it should be, for no portion of our citizenship has been more terribly cursed by the saloon than our colored population.

The second resolution indicates that the Negroes of the Methodist Episcopal Church residing in the South are far from being satisfied with the present method of excluding colored men from the episcopacy of their denomination and placing white Bishops over them. This question has been a vexatious one in our Sister Church for many years, and is likely to become more so in the future, unless some satisfactory settlement of the matter can be effected.

The third of the above pronouncements looks as if the Negroes in the Northern Church are resolved not to stand in the way of the unification of American Methodists according to the plan proposed by the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, and it would seem that this action would have a tendency to help that cause along. That the Conference reached this favorable conclusion concerning this important movement, will no doubt be a surprise to many.

SOMEWHAT PERSONAL.

For some time we have been weary of the controversy concerning Vanderbilt University and have been anxious to get entirely away from it, yet we still frequently find ourself writing on the subject. The part that we have taken in this long-drawn-out contest has not been because we have any fondness for such strife, but from what we have conceived to be our imperative duty. That we would make many active and influential enemies by pursuing the course that we have, we understood perfectly in the beginning, and we felt the full force of the temptation to evade the issue and seek to be popular with both sides, having had the advisableness of the latter policy specifically suggested to us by some who at that time felt that they were in a position to tender to us their counsel. But we could not see the sacred interests of the Church imperiled and remain silent; so to the best of our ability we have sought to defend and protect them, and of the opposition that this has brought to us we have no disposition to complain.

Vastly more has been involved in this controversy than many have realized. It has not been merely a fight for the ownership and control of an institution valued at between $3,000,000 and $4,000,000—if that had been all, the Church could have lost and would have been but little injured, for her property interests reach up in value into scores of millions of dollars, and she contributes millions in money to the various benevolent and philanthropic causes every year. The real issue at stake has been whether the educational work of the Church should be conducted in institutions owned and controlled by the Church, or in institutions governed by independent boards. If the Church had yielded to the principle for which the Vanderbilts stood, other boards and schools would have soon become imbued with the same spirit and that manner of governing our institutions would in all probability have become the prevailing one. As Bishop Hoss indicated in his admirable and timely article, entitled "A False Doctrine Exploded," which we recently published, this notion that schools and colleges can be successfully managed only by independent boards even now exists among us to a considerable extent, and is one of the evils that we need thoroughly to uproot. Who can measure what would have been the effect of turning the education of our ministry over to a theological seminary owned and operated by the Vanderbilt Board of Trust according to its remarkable moral and religious ideals and standards? Why, that alone in twenty years would have well-nigh, if not completely, ruined the Church. So, the really crucial hour in the Vanderbilt fight was not when the case was being fought out in the Supreme Court of Tennessee, but at Oklahoma City, after the Board had legally won its independence, when the issue as to whether the Church would surrender the right to control her educational institutions was trembling in the balance.

It was because we realized that fundamental principles, absolutely vital to the welfare of Southern Methodism, were involved that we enlisted on the side of the Church in this great struggle and that we have so steadily stayed in the fight. We are happy to believe that the battle has now been sufficiently won to insure our ultimate triumph, but it is not yet altogether over. There are still some who are intriguing to relate the Church to Vanderbilt University in such a way as to give that institution its indorsement and a share of its patronage, and there are persons high in the councils of the Church who are in sympathy with this attempt. As we have said, we are anxious to let Vanderbilt matters alone and turn our attention to other things, but we have no notion of abandoning the field as long as it is our conviction that the Church is being wronged. And we propose to speak out fearlessly, sparing no one, from Bishops and connectional officers and the members of general boards down, who may lend his influence to Vanderbilt University in any way whatever to the detriment of the educational interests of the Church. We are well aware that there may be blows to take as well as give in this program, but we shall try to endure without whimpering what may be handed out to us in return. We are conscious of our limited ability for such a task as this, but we have great confidence in the justice and strength of our cause, and we have friends who, if necessary, will help us to circulate our paper generally over the connection. In the providence of God we have been made a watchman upon the wall of Zion at this critical time, and we dare not to be negligent or unfaithful. Our duty, as we see it, we must do as best we can.

We have been moved to write these lines as an explanation to some of our readers who, like ourself, would be glad to see the final end of the Vanderbilt controversy reached.

HIS TALE COMPLETELY PUNCTURED.

The following incident, which has been going the rounds of the church press, and which shows how little there sometimes is in the big talk that we hear, is, we think, worth reproducing:

In a hotel recently a traveling man said: "Billy Sunday is a grafter, just a grafter, that is all." A man stepped up to him and said: "What is that?" The traveling man repeated the statement. "Can you prove that?" was the next question. "Why," said the traveling man, "every one knows it." "But," said the other, "that may be true. I will give you $5000 to prove it, however." "Who are you?" asked the traveling man—"one of Sunday's kind?" "No," was the reply. "I am a salesman for a brewery. Billy Sunday is doing our business great harm, and my people will gladly give $5000 to show him up if he's a grafter, and stop the harm he is doing our business." The big talker was soon conspicuous by his absence.

PERSONAL AND OTHER NOTES.

The city of Monroe, La., is waging war on the gambling evil, and our pastor at that place, Rev. C. C. Miller, is striking some telling blows in behalf of law and order.

Rev. T. V. Peters, pastor of the St. Tammany Circuit (La. Conf.), was in New Orleans last Monday and paid the Advocate office an appreciated call, bringing with him five subscriptions. He reports his work as progressing favorably.

Rev. H. W. Bowman, presiding elder of the Baton Rouge District, was a visitor in New Orleans last Thursday. Brother Bowman is alive to all the interests of the Church in his "diocese," where Southern Methodism is steadily forging forward.

Revival services are in progress this week at the Second M. E. Church, South, of this city, of which Rev. W. E. Thomas is pastor. The preaching is being done by Rev. A. L. Mell, of Eddyville, Ky. Mr. I. N. Niebergall, of New Orleans, is leading the singing.

Rev. E. L. Cargill, of Standard, La., reports that progress is being made in his charge. This is not surprising, since Brother Cargill is given to cultivating his field carefully, and in the religious, as well as other realms, diligent work seldom fails to yield gratifying returns.

Wanted: 200 pastors who will mention the New Orleans Christian Advocate and speak a kindly word in its behalf when making their announcements next Sunday. We believe that this would result in many new subscriptions and renewals to the Conference organ.

We are indebted to the following brethren, to whom acknowledgment has not been made elsewhere, for two or more subscriptions received within the past few days: Rev. W. H. Young, Trenton, Miss., 5; Rev. D. W. Babb, Charleston, Miss., 3; Rev. E. L. Cargill, Standard, La., 3.

Mrs. Emma Siebe, of Crystal Springs, Miss., in a personal note to the Editor, says: "Our late meeting conducted by the Lewis brothers did much good, and every one enjoyed their singing. As you know, they constitute what is known as the Mississippi Conference quartette."

Rev. C. A. Northington, pastor of the Corinth (Miss.) Circuit states that in the brief summary of his work which recently appeared in the Advocate, he was made to say that one of his churches had been "repaired," when he reported that it had been painted. We gladly make this correction.

Rev. G. W. Huff, of Hattiesburg, Miss., writes: "We have just closed a good meeting at Beaumont, Miss., in which 18 persons united with our Church. We held this meeting in the Baptist Church. Rev. F. H. Howse is pastor of the Methodist congregation at Beaumont and his people love him very much."

Rev. W. W. Perry, our faithful pastor on the Haynesville (La.) charge, has our thanks for some good work recently done for the Advocate. He is closing out another successful year's work in that field. Brother Perry does not spare himself in the Master's service, and the effect of his diligence is clearly seen in what he accomplishes.

Rev. D. C. Barr, of Winnsboro, La., has lately been assisted in an interesting revival meeting by Rev. A. Inman Townsley, of Rayville, La. Among the many signs of progress on the Winnsboro charge is a new $2000 parsonage, which has been built and paid for this year, and the organization of a new church at Lamar, La., with 30 charter members.

Rev. S. W. B. Colvin, a local preacher on the Mangham charge, is kept busy preaching for the brethren. He filled the pulpit of the Presbyterian Church at Alto, La., on the fourth Sunday in October. We are informed that it is Brother Colvin's purpose to re-enter the Louisiana Conference and take a pastoral charge at its approaching session in Shreveport.

Among the "live wires" in the Louisiana Conference is Rev. A. Inman Townsley, of Rayville, who excels both as a pastor and preacher. On Sunday night, October 25, Brother Townsley delivered a strong sermon on "Gambling and Lawlessness," and he was complimented by having present on that occasion the Mayor and all the members of the City Council.

The New Orleans District Conference of the Woman's Missionary Society was held in the Carrollton Avenue Church Tuesday and Wednesday of this week. The exercises were interesting and the attendance was good. Among those taking part in the services was Mrs. Abel Bliss, of Shreveport, the Conference President of the Woman's Missionary Societies of Louisiana.

Rev. C. A. Battle preached a forceful sermon at Felicity Street Church of this city last Sunday morning, after which he administered the Sacrament of the Lord's Supper to a large number of communicants. The ladies of that congregation will observe the Week of Prayer on only one (Thursday) night, when Rev. G. D. Parker, of Brazil, will deliver an address.

Mr. D. R. Barbee, one of the editors of the Mobile Register, accompanied by his wife and babe, spent last Friday, October 30, in New Orleans. He and his family were en route home, after having spent a couple of weeks in Greenville, Miss., as guests of his brother, Mr. J. D. Barbee, of that city. Mr. D. R. Barbee is one of the best informed newspaper men in the South.

The new dormitory at Whitworth College will be formally opened with appropriate exercises next Monday. Dr. Cooper and that splendid institution are to be congratulated upon the completion of this elegant building, which will add largely to the facilities of the college. A man of clear head and warm heart and high ideals, Dr. Cooper is doing a monumental work for the young womanhood of this section.

Brother Joseph H. Sanders, of West Point, Miss., has our thanks for the renewal of his subscription to the Advocate, accompanied by some appreciated words of commendation. Brother Sanders has long been a true and helpful member of our Church in the Queen City of the Prairies, and the Editor well remembers the kindnesses shown him in his home when he had the honor to be the shepherd of the worthy flock with which he is connected.

Brother Pastor, have you ordered from the Publishing House, or from Rev. G. W. Bachman, of Winona, Miss., a set of the "new blanks" for reporting to the Annual Conference? Remember that the last General Conference ordered new forms of blanks to be prepared, and that the old ones will not answer. So you should get a set of them at once and make out your statistics before you leave home for Conference. This is an important matter.

We acknowledge the reception of a unique and very attractive invitation to a Halloween entertainment given by the Morris Bible Class of Eupora, Miss. This is one of the leading adult Sunday school classes in North Mississippi, and it is known far and near for its progressive spirit and good works. The invitations sent out were signed by Brothers T. W. Cooper, J. W. Wofford, and S. B. Curtis. Our pastor at Eupora is the Rev. J. T. McCafferty.

The Meridian College, of which Dr. J. W. Beeson is president, has recently enjoyed a gracious revival, which was conducted by Rev. C. M. Dunaway, of Talapoosa, Ga. The faculty and Christian students had been praying for the meeting for days in advance, and everything was in a fine state of preparedness when the services began. Dr. Beeson states that Brother Dunaway is now in fine health, and that he is doing the best work of his life.

At the recent session of the West Texas Conference, which met in Austin, Rev. W. D. Bradfield was stationed at Travis Park, San Antonio, and Rev. J. W. Hill (Gulliver) was transferred from the North Texas Conference and appointed to the Laurel Heights Church in the same city. Rev. J. E. Buck was assigned to the Goliad and Fannin charge, and Rev. C. W. Perkins, who had been on the superannuate list, took work and was placed in charge of the Alice Circuit.

Writing from Holden, La., on October 28, Rev. E. L. Whiddon says: "I have just finished a very successful meeting here. I organized a church with 13 members, and, assisted by the pastor and presiding elder, we have succeeded in getting the construction of a house of worship started. Mr. Isaac McCarroll, who operates a sawmill here, gave the land and the lumber for a church 30 by 42 feet, and the contract was quickly let and the framing is now up. It will be painted while the other work is going on, and we shall soon be able to preach in it and dedicate it."

The meeting of the Publishing Committee on Thursday, October 29, was an occasion of both interest and pleasure. It was a delight to have the brethren with us, and our only regret was that they could not tarry long enough for us to see more of them. At the noon hour all the members of the Committee, except Brother Adams and Dr. Cooper, who had strayed off, together with the Publisher and the Editor, lunched at The Rathskeller. Mrs. Cooper accompanied Dr. Cooper to the city. The only absentee was Rev. Briscoe Carter, of Ruston, La., who was much missed.

The Okolona (Miss.) Messenger of October 15 says: "Bishop R. G. Waterhouse, who has episcopal supervision in North Mississippi, paid Okolona a visit last week, spending two days in the hospitable home of Mr. F. J. McDonnell. Rev. W. W. Wollard, of Columbus, and Rev. J. W. Bell, of Aberdeen, two of the presiding elders of the Conference, were at the same time guests in Mr. McDonnell's home. * * * Bishop Waterhouse and Rev. J. W. Bell dedicated the Methodist Church at Houston, Miss., on the following Sunday. Returning through Okolona on Monday, the Bishop became the guest of Rev. J. H. Holder until he left for Bristol, Tenn., the seat of the Holston Conference."

Under date of October 31, Rev. J. M. Alford, of Columbia, La., writes as follows: "We have just closed a great meeting at this place. Rev. D. E. Kelly, one of the Mississippi Conference evangelists, was with us nine days, and old Columbia is revived as never before—so say our oldest members. I took 86 into the Church at the last service and will receive 6 more Sunday. I believe that we will round up 100 new members as a result of this meeting. Kelly is a wonderful fellow. Happy is the pastor who secures him for a revival! This makes 169 members received on this charge this year. I am happy and hopeful of the work in this field." This is a great showing, and Brother Alford has a right to be encouraged.

On Tuesday, October 27, at 1 o'clock p.m., in Carrollton, Miss., at the home of Mr. and Mrs. C. Gillespie, the parents of the bride, Mr. H. Percy Bryan and Miss Mabel Gillespie, two of Carrollton's most prominent young people, were married, Rev. W. W. Jones officiating. The bride is a graduate of Grenada College and is possessed of many rare accomplishments; and the groom is a young man of sterling worth, who is a member of the mercantile firm of H. M. Bryan & Sons, and a steward in the Methodist Church. Some of the out-of-town guests were Miss Mary Gibbs of Grenada, Mrs. Reece of Indianola, Mr. and Mrs. Sid Gillespie of Morgan City, Miss., and Mr. Albert Bryan of Center Point, Texas. The Advocate extends to the happy young couple congratulations and all good wishes.

We told last week of the great success of the service devoted to the interests of the Sunday school of our First Church of Shreveport and the Louisiana Methodist Orphanage, which was held on Sunday, October 25. As we stated, the attendance was 1727, which did not measure up to that of "Rally Day" of the preceding year, when it reached 2001; but the collection was very much larger, being $2003 against $1000 in 1913. Brother McKennon writes that the person who gave $1000 toward the extinction of the $4000 debt on the Orphanage, on condition that the other $3000 should be provided for, has removed all conditions and made a straight-out donation of this amount to that splendid institution. First Church, Shreveport, is one of the really great congregations of Southern Methodism, and its Sunday school, of which Brother W. A. McKennon is the efficient superintendent, is scarcely surpassed in the connection.

Mr. Robert F. Jones, of La Junta, Colo., has our thanks for an illustrated pamphlet giving the program of the Colorado Annual Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church at its session in his town in September and the stopping places of the preachers. It is similar to the one issued by those who entertained the recent session of the Ohio Conference which was presided over by Bishop Thirkleld. Mr. Jones is a nephew of the late Col. R. A. Jones of Coldwater, Miss., and we remember him as a small boy in knee trousers when we had the honor to serve that charge some twenty years ago. There is no Southern Methodist Church in La Junta, and our young friend is the chairman of the board of stewards of the Methodist Episcopal Church. Referring to his connection with the Northern Church, he says: "I see so little difference in the two denominations that I scarcely realize that I have changed from one to the other. I hope to see them united some day."

We have in hand resolutions of some length, signed by Brothers M. P. Hardin and J. H. Pointer and unanimously adopted by the fourth quarterly conference of the Como (Miss.) charge, strongly commending the work of Rev. J. B. Randolph and Sister Randolph, who are finishing a fruitful pastorate of 4 years at that place. Mention is made of their helpfulness in all departments of the work, the church having had quite a healthy growth and the Sunday school now being larger than ever before in its history; the indebtedness of the congregation to these choice workers for their large assistance in securing the handsome new house of worship, valued at $13,000, which is out of debt, and the fine pipe organ, is also acknowledged, and Sister Randolph's achievement in organizing and building up a Wesley Adult Bible Class of 60 is particularly praised. The faithful pastor and his active helpmeet are, furthermore, assured of the affection and the interest of their entire membership and all good wishes for the future are extended to them.

Mrs. SARAH ELIZABETH HARRIS was born on Sept. 20, 1848 and died on Aug. 16, 1913, just a little over a year ago. God, who knows best, has taken from us our dearly loved mother. The call came at midnight, and she left her earthly home to enter in at the golden gates to be forever with her Lord. Heaven now keeps our treasure and earth holds only the lovely casket where our dear mother sleeps in Olive Branch Cemetery. Hers was a pure, sweet life and she was always bright, cheerful and noble. She was a true wife and mother ever striving to fill her place in the world. Our hearts are broken and sad, but we pray that we may be able to say, "Thy will be done." She leaves sons, a daughter, grandchildren and many friends who feel that they are bereaved, indeed. Yet we know that He doeth all things well, and we hope that he will help us so to live that we shall meet her again some glad day in the beautiful home beyond the stars, where "there shall be no more death, neither sorrow, nor crying, and God shall wipe away all tears."

Her daughter,

Mrs. R. M. McELRATH.

WILLIAM BINZIE was born in Aichinblain, Kincardineshire, Scotland, March 25, 1846. He professed religion and joined the Methodist Church about the age of eighteen years. He set sail from Liverpool, England, on January 10, 1871, and landed in the United States about a month later. He died at his home four miles from Corinth, Miss., on October 17, 1914, at the age of sixty-eight years, six months, twenty-six days. He is survived by a loving wife and eight children—six girls and two boys: Mrs. L. W. Timlake, Mrs. J. E. Kready, of Pennsylvania; Mrs. M. E. Whitehurst, Mrs. C. H. Byrd, Mrs. D. M. Babb, John A., Will N. and Mattie Binzie. Mr. Binzie leaves a record of which his family and friends may well be proud. Coming to a foreign country, he connected himself with the Church of which he had been a member in his homeland, and continued in the same while he lived. He allied himself with the best citizens of the country where he lived and made a reputation for integrity, honesty and industry. He was called by all who knew him a good man. He was a great sufferer for months before he died, but he bore all patiently, trusting in his God. He made arrangements for his own funeral and calmly went to sleep like a babe in its mother's arms. The funeral services were conducted by Rev. J. H. Mitchell at Farmington Church, being attended by a large concourse of friends and his body was laid to rest near-by. May God bless his aged and fond wife, his dutiful and loving children, and may they all meet him in heaven!

J. H. MITCHELL.

The Woman's Foreign Missionary Society of Crystal Springs, Miss., has been called upon to part with another member, who, because of her sweet and amiable disposition was loved by everybody. Early in life she gave her heart to God and for her Church and the work of temperance and missions she showed great interest and served faithfully in any position she was called to fill. In her home life she was especially kind and loving and the relatives always loved to visit there. Her door was always open to ministers of the Gospel, and a welcome awaited them. Her four intelligent and useful daughters and two sons were taught to reverence the messengers of God, and although she has left them, she has left them the memory of a life well spent and the assurance of a happy entrance within the gates of the New Jerusalem. She was always beautiful in feature, and graceful in every movement, yet meek and modest, full of faith and good works and adherence to duty as she conceived it. She was greatly needed. On the night of July 10 she quietly fell asleep in Jesus. We grieve that we shall never see her again on earth, shall not hear the sound of her voice nor know the helpfulness of her life, but in that bright and beautiful land beyond we shall meet her again among the pure and the redeemed of earth.

Signed: Mrs. Emma Siebe, Miss M. R. Barrington, Miss Nannie Bettisworth, Committee.

BEULAH ANN MARRISON, was born on June 2, 1836, near Utica, Miss., and was married to Mr. B. C. Chase, July 24, 1863. She joined the Presbyterian Church soon after she was married, and 24 years ago she joined the M. E. Church, South, and was a faithful and true member until her death, which occurred on July 17, 1914. Her husband preceded her to the home above, more than 18 years ago. She was the mother of seven children, all living, except a little girl who died at the age of three years. A truer, more faithful Christian it would be hard to find. I was her pastor for three years, while in charge of the Gilbert work, in Franklin Parish, La., I visited her home often, spending many pleasant hours with the family. I learned to love them and was always glad when the time came for us to visit them. Her home was the preachers' home, and she always entertained them with a hearty hospitality. How the community and church will miss her! and oh, how she will be missed in the home! The children live as monuments to her godly life. She was a true and faithful friend, a kind and good neighbor, and a devoted mother. They carried her body back to Learned, Miss., and laid it to rest beside that of her husband in the Bethesda Cemetery. Her daughter writes that she was the last member of a family of eleven children. May the grace of our God sustain the grief-stricken ones in the home left desolate by the going away of their loved mother, and may they look ever above. She has gone on before, and has joined the loved ones in the heavenly home. Be true, be faithful, and you shall see her again in the sweet beyond.

T. S. R.

HELP THE ORPHANS.

At the last session of the Chickasaw Baptist Association the writer was appointed a committee of one to secure free transportation for a car for our Orphanage and try to get it filled with provisions, dry goods, shoes, hosiery, stationery, good books, handed-down clothing and anything its inmates could eat or wear. There are 149 children in the Orphanage ranging in ages all the way from babies to those 18 years old. The car will pass between Vinegar Bend and Waynesboro on Friday and from Waynesboro to Meridian Saturday after Thanksgiving. Have your offerings securely packed so they will go safely. Secure a barrel for them and give the shipping agent ample time to waybill them. The A. & V. R. R. will transport the car on to Jackson. This arrangement is also open to the Methodists who may send packages to their Orphanage at Jackson. The railroads will give the transportation and it is hoped that the people to fill the car.

W. H. PATTON.

Shubuta, Miss., Oct. 26, 1914.

A year's foot comfort guaranteed or money refunded.

CHURCH EXTENSION NOTICE.

As the editors of our Annual Conference Minutes for 1913, did not publish my post office address on page 18, as they did of other treasurers of Boards, I am put to the necessity of calling the attention of the preachers of the Mississippi Conference to the fact that my place of residence is Philadelphia, Miss. In remitting to me by money order, draw on P. O. at Jackson, Miss., and mail to me.

It would be a delightful task to act as your treasurer, if every preacher would remit to me before Conference convenes. Why not? Only ten thus far have sent in their money, and only two of these "paid in full," and they paid in the early part of the year.

On the presumption that every preacher takes and reads the Christian Advocate, I ask that you cut this notice out, and keep it for reference.

Treasurer Board of Church Extension, Miss. Conf.

GIVE "SYRUP OF FIGS" TO CONSTIPATED CHILD

Delicious "Fruit Laxative" can't harm
tender little Stomach, liver and bowels.

Look at the tongue, mother! If coated, your little one's stomach, liver and bowels need cleansing at once. When peevish, cross, listless, doesn't sleep, eat or act naturally, or is feverish, stomach sour, breath bad; has sore throat, diarrhoea, full of cold, give a teaspoonful of "California Syrup of Figs," and in a few hours all the foul, constipated waste, undigested food and sour bile gently moves out of its little bowels without griping, and you have a well, playful child again. Ask your druggist for a 50-cent bottle of "California Syrup of Figs," which contains full directions for babies, children of all ages and for grown-ups.

No. 666

This is a prescription prepared especially for MALARIA or CHILLS & FEVER. Five or six doses will break any case, and if taken then as a tonic the Fever will not return. It acts on the liver better than Calomel and does not gripe or sicken. 25c

Tidings From the Field

Sicily Island, La.

I have finished all the meetings on my charge, six in number. Brother T. D. Lipscomb and his wife assisted me in my two last meetings at Ferriday and Vidalia. They are splendid help. No man will make a mistake in getting them to help in a meeting. The work will not pay out, on account of the distressing financial condition that is now prevailing all over the South. I have more than paid my Orphanage assessment. We were assessed $60 and have paid $68. We have raised for church and parsonage improvement about $150, and for incidentals and ministerial help about $170. I have received into the Church to date 64 members, most of them by profession of faith. My Sunday schools are doing fine work. I ask the brethren to pray that I may do more and better work.—W. T. Woodward, P. C.

Leesville, La.

Dear Mr. Editor: I began a meeting here on October 11, and ran through three Sundays. Rev. W. R. Harvell did most of the preaching. Harvell is a strong, earnest preacher, and fine help in a revival. He is unsparing in denouncing sin, urges the absolute necessity of being "born again," and then living a life of consecration till death. The singing was splendid. It was led by the Rev. Edward Temple of Athens, La., who is pastor of the Presbyterian Church there. In all, we had 18 accessions, and many were stirred to a better life. The Baptists joined heartily in the meeting and they had 11 accessions. I am, and will be very busy trying to bring up a full report to Conference. I wish the war would cease. It is everybody's excuse. May the Lord help us all to do our best.—R. W. Tucker.

Escatawpa, Miss.

Dear Dr. Meek: This is our second year on this work. When we came here on Jan. 1, 1913, we found that two of our predecessors in succession had left the work, each having stayed about six months. It was thought that I would leave within six months' time, but I remained until Conference, and as the official board had asked for my return, Bishop Candler appointed me to the same charge for another year. We have had during the year 75 accessions and 20 children have been baptized. We were assisted in a meeting at Caswell Spring by Rev. David McUlmer, of the Monticome charge, who did some fine work resulting in 23 accessions. Brother McUlmer was converted under the ministry of Rev. Geo. W. Huff, who assisted me in a meeting at Orange Grove, where we had 47 accessions to the Church, ranging in age from 10 to 60 years. This was said to be one of the best meetings ever held on the coast. Brother Huff is fine help in a revival. We were assisted at Escatawpa by Rev. W. W. Moore of Pascagoula, who preached some fine sermons, but as it was a busy time the visible results were small. Then we had with us Rev. J. A. Carruth of the M. E. Church from Louisiana, the meeting lasting nine days. While he preached good, logical sermons, only a few of the members were revived, but we had other results. In addition, one of our churches was painted inside and another one was re-covered, this work costing about $150. We hope to bring up a good report on the Conference collections.—W. G. Roberts.

Waynesboro, Miss.

Dear Dr. Meek: As our revival meetings have all been held, I suppose a brief report from this charge will be of interest to some of the brethren. In many respects I have had a splendid year on this work. "The Lord of hosts has been with us." I began my first meeting on the third Sunday in June, at Clara, Miss., with the valuable assistance of Rev. W. W. Hopper, who brought us under obligation to him for the great and good messages that he gave us, which were freighted with truth divine. We had 8 accessions at that place—3 on profession of faith, and 5 by certificate. . . . On the fourth Sunday in July I began my meeting at Big Rock, where we had the faithful help of Rev. S. N. Young, who brought us from day to day some very fine messages, but we had no visible results there. . . . Our next meeting was held at Hebron, beginning on the first Sunday in August, where we had the efficient help of Rev. James T. Leggett, our presiding elder, who gave us a series of very fine sermons; yes, they were second to none. Brother Leggett certainly does know how to expose sin in all of its heinous forms. When it comes to the expounding of the Word of God, he is far above the average man in the pulpit. We had 4 accessions to the Church in that meeting, all by vows. . . . On the second Sunday in August our meeting began at Fedora, where we had the earnest help of Rev. H. A. Gatlin. This man of God did some as fine preaching as I ever listened to. Brother Gatlin doesn't fail to hold up the standard against sin. We didn't have any accessions, but much and lasting good was accomplished. To God be the glory! . . . Following this came our meeting at Goldwood. This is Rev. J. J. Golden's old home church. The pastor did the preaching at the beginning of the meeting, after which Rev. J. Loyd Decell appeared on the scene, and he did some very fine preaching, which was searching, powerful and edifying to all. . . . On Tuesday following the first Sunday in September we began at Olive Branch, a schoolhouse appointment, where we again had the efficient help of Rev. Loyd Decell. The meeting was fine and we baptized 9 children while it was in progress. . . . Our meeting began at Pleasant Grove on the fourth Sunday in September, where we had the assistance of Rev. W. W. Murray who did his work faithfully and well. We had a very good meeting, though the weather was inclement. We had 1 accession at that place on profession of faith. . . . In all I have received 13 members into the Church during this Conference year—6 by certificate and 7 by profession of faith. There have been 9 removals by death and otherwise and 12 children have been baptized. Our aim on this charge is, onward, upward, and higher ground.—Hilary Westbrook, P. C. Oct. 22, 1914.

FROM ABROAD.

The Young Men's Christian Association of Constantinople reports 481 members at the end of three months from the date of its organization. Sixteen nationalities are represented in its membership.

The first missionaries entered Korea in 1884. To-day there are about 200,000 Korean Christians and the number is increasing so rapidly as to cause serious embarrassment to those who seek to guide the movement and make it enduring.

MY VIEWS AS TO QUADRENNIAL BOARDS.

I believe that the Conference Board of Education should include an official of each Conference school or should be composed of persons who have no official connection with any Conference school. Either would assure equity and allay all fears of injustice.

I believe that when a member of the Conference is honored by electing him a member of the board of trustees of a school it should be for service rendered or anticipated; also that he should be an active advocate of said school, and that when he can not be such for any cause, he should refuse to remain on said board; and also that if he be elected an official representative of another school that is in any sense a competitive school, he should refuse to be placed in such a dual relation.

I do not believe that any president of a Conference school should be a member of the Board of Education.

I believe that when any member of the Conference has been appointed a presiding elder by the Bishop that he should refuse to serve any longer as a member of any Conference board or committee.

I believe that our Conference has plenty of material for boards and committees, and that when a member is serving as elder he should not be called upon for such service as his time and most of his talent is necessarily taken up with matters connected with the administration of the work in his district.

I do not believe that any Conference board should be rushed with its work, so that reports carrying appropriations come in as a part of the benediction ceremonies.

I believe that I have heard more expressions of dissatisfaction concerning the above matters than concerning appointments.

I believe that a small part of this complaint is just and should be remedied. C. M. CHAPMAN.
Rolling Fork, Miss.

KNOWLEDGE THAT EVERY ONE SHOULD POSSESS.

You never know when you will face an emergency, either caused by sickness or accident, when there will be no doctor within call and when it will be compulsory for you to render what aid you can.

You can never tell at what time you may suddenly be taken sick or may be called to take charge of a sick or injured person when you will need some practical knowledge of medical matters.

Dr. Miles' Family Medical Guide contains that practical knowledge of medicine that every one should possess.

It is a little book that is full of practical advice and knowledge that will enable you to be of the greatest assistance to your doctor both before and after he is called in.

This book is divided into three parts. Part 1, Simple Treatment for Common Ailments. Part 2, What to Do in Case of Accidents. Part 3, Practical Laws of Health.

Special arrangements have been made whereby the readers of the New Orleans Christian Advocate can obtain this book free of charge for a limited time only.

It is a book that should be in every household in America.

Just write your name and address clearly, on a post card if you like, and send it to Family Medical Guide, Dept. V-1, MILES MEDICAL CO., Elkhart, Indiana, and you will receive one of these valuable books all charges prepaid.—Adv.

DRUGS EXCITE YOUR KIDNEYS, USE SALTS.

If your Back is aching or Bladder Bothers, drink lots of water and eat less meat.

When your kidneys hurt and your back feels sore, don't get scared and proceed to load your stomach with a lot of drugs that excite the kidneys. Keep your kidneys clean like you keep your bowels clean, by flushing them with a mild, harmless salts which stimulates them to their normal activity. The function of the kidneys is to filter the blood. In 24 hours they strain from it 500 grains of acid and waste, so we can readily understand the vital importance of keeping the kidneys active.

Drink lots of water—you can't drink too much; also get from any pharmacist about four ounces of Jad Salts; take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast each morning for a few days and your kidneys will act fine. This famous salts is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia, and has been used for generations to clean and stimulate clogged kidneys; also to neutralize the acids so it no longer is a source of irritation, thus ending bladder weakness.

Jad Salts is inexpensive; cannot injure; makes a delightful effervescent lithia-water drink which everyone should take now and then to keep their kidneys clean and active. Try this, also keep up the water drinking, and no doubt you will wonder what became of your kidney trouble and backache.

Rheumatism

A Home Cure Given by One Who Had It

In the spring of 1893 I was attacked by Muscular and Inflammatory Rheumatism. I suffered as only those who have it know, for over three years. I tried remedy after remedy, and doctor after doctor, but such relief as I received was only temporary. Finally, I found a remedy that cured me completely; and it has never returned. I have given it to a number who were terribly afflicted and even bed-ridden with Rheumatism, and it effected a cure in every case.

I want every sufferer from any form of rheumatic trouble to try this marvelous healing power. Don't send a cent; simply mail your name and address and I will send it free to try. After you have used it and it has proven itself to be that long-looked-for means of curing your Rheumatism, you may send the price of it, one dollar, but, understand, I do not want your money unless you are perfectly satisfied to send it. Isn't that fair? Why suffer any longer when positive relief is thus offered you free? Don't delay. Write to-day.

NOTICE TO LOUISIANA PREACHERS.

It will be absolutely necessary, if the statistical work of the next Annual Conference be accurately done, that each preacher reporting his work be provided with the new report blanks. The old report forms cannot be used with the new Statistical Tables. There are radical changes, and no reports will be received by the Statistical Secretaries except those on the new forms. It will be necessary, therefore, for each preacher to provide himself with the new forms before the meeting of the Conference. We urge you to order of the Publishing House at once a book of the new forms, and prepare your reports before you leave home for Conference so that they will be ready to hand to the Secretaries immediately on your arrival at Conference.

DO YOU SUFFER FROM BACKACHE?

When your kidneys are weak and torpid they do not properly perform their functions; your back aches and you do not feel like doing much of anything. You are likely to be despondent and to borrow trouble, just as if you hadn't enough already. Don't be a victim any longer.

The old reliable medicine, Hood's Sarsaparilla, gives strength and tone to the kidneys and builds up the whole system. Get it today.

Sunday School

A GREAT SUNDAY SCHOOL CLASS.

The Alpha Wesley Class of the First Methodist Episcopal Church, South, of Tupelo, Miss., has just concluded its seventh year of organized work. The year closed with the Annual Meeting on the evening of October 9 in the spacious reception room of the Sunday school apartments of the Church.

The election of officers, reports of the year's work by the officers and committees; followed by a social hour, re-enforced by the annual spread of "palative delights," filled the evening program.

A historical sketch showed that the class was organized seven years ago with twelve members. Mr. W. T. Reeves being the first president, and Mrs. Vic Thompson Hoyle being chosen teacher. The "perpetual roll" holds more than four hundred names, while the present active enrollment is about one hundred. Ten names were read of those who have been transferred to the "Roll Triumphant."

The report of the treasurer showed that the class had raised during the year—$314.30, of which $280.05 was contributed to the Orphans' Home as follows: To expenses of Laura Desoto at college (Grenada) $110.50; to general Orphans' fund $169.55. (Miss Desoto is being educated by the class and is its prospective missionary to the foreign field). The class contributed to local charity $24.85. One member of the class (who became an "associate member" by advancement to the teaching force of the school) supports a Bible Woman in Korea; while the class has given one of its most active members to the Home Mission work in the Virginia K. Johnson Rescue Home, at Dallas, Texas.

The Class has done a work which cannot be estimated through its visitations, care for the sick, its "Flower Mission" work, its Lookout Committee, and its personal work. The class has commanded as its president a number of the strongest men of the Church, as it elects a new man every six months. The teacher, Mrs. Vic Thompson Hoyle, resourceful, devoted, intelligent, loyal and consecrated, has been the center around which the Class has grown and served since its organization.

This history is remarkable when it is known that this is one of three strong organized classes, and only one of five splendid adult classes in the school.

Mr. J. H. Ledvard is the truly great superintendent from whom the whole school receives its inspiration.

JOHN PARK, Pastor.

Tupelo, Miss., Oct. 14.

RECIPE FOR GRAY HAIR.

To half pint of water add 1 oz. Bay Rum, a small box of Barbo Compound, and 1-4 oz. of glycerine. Apply to the hair twice a week until it becomes the desired shade. Any druggist can put this up or you can mix it at home at very little cost. Full directions for making and use come in each box of Barbo Compound. It will gradually darken streaked, faded gray hair, and removes dandruff. It is excellent for falling hair and will make harsh hair soft and glossy. It will not color the scalp, is not sticky or greasy, and does not rub off.

A LETTER FROM TEXAS.

Dear Brother Meek: We are living among a fine and helpful people. They are very kind to us and say they are glad to have us with them. They gave us a surprise a short time ago, in the way of a good pounding—not a pounding to hurt, but to delight the eye, and make glad the heart.

I would be delighted to be with you at Conference in Shreveport next December, but am not able either physically or financially; so I must abide the time, and hope for the future. I passed the 72 mile post on life's journey, the 17th of this month (October). The Lord has been wonderfully gracious, good, and kind to me all these years. He has wonderfully provided for us all the way, for which I am very grateful, and I praise his great and holy name. I have trusted him during all the past and have never been disappointed, and I am trusting him for the future. I long for the old home, that I might be with the people I love. God bless them all. I enjoy the dear old Advocate, as it comes to me every week. It is an old friend. I have known from my earliest recollection, and I have never known it to be better filled and clothed than at this day. God bless you in your great work.

Your brother in Christ,

T. S. RANDLE.

POLLOCK, LA.

Sunday, Oct. 25, was a great day for us at Pollock. It was "Go-to-Church" Sunday, Sunday school "Rally Day," and also the time of our fourth quarterly conference. Our Rally Day was a success in every respect. Miss Hattie Walker trained the children for the occasion, and they knew their parts perfectly. The last act on the program was a collection taken by four little boys for the Ruston Orphanage, which amounted to $7.50. At 11 a. m. Rev. H. W. May preached a wonderful sermon, and held our fourth quarterly conference in the afternoon. He also preached again at 7:45 p.m. This has been a very prosperous year with us. We have added to the Church 48 members, and will receive a few more before the Annual Conference convenes. I have served a good people this year, and from their kindness I take it for granted that they are well pleased with their pastor. Should the presiding elder advise my assignment to the Pollock charge for 1915, I will make no complaint. The question of finance is a problem with us this year. Our people are poor, the mills are closing down, and the farmers are not able to sell their crops which will necessitate a shortage on the Conference collections. I will only receive about $300 as support from my charge, and our Conference assessment is $386. I have helped some of the brethren in their revival work this year, and we are praising God for the success he has given us.—E. G. Wood.

And Become a Perfect Man

why we insist, to give it the full, real test so you may appreciate what a perfect Rupture holding Lock it really is. If it does not prove all we claim after the required test, it will not cost you a cent.

The Real Secret of Healing Rupture

To successfully co-operate with nature in the work of healing, the supporting device must be so constructed that the rupture retaining part overlaps and draws together the breached opening instead of pressing directly into it.

The trusses of today are sadly lacking in this quality. They nearly all give that direct pressure into the opening, which cannot help but enlarge it, making it that much harder to retain the bowel later on, resulting in uncontrollable rupture with serious complications.

The Schulling Rupture Lock was invented to overcome just such faults. It is made to comply with Nature's laws and reach the objective point by the safest and shortest possible route. That it has succeeded is best told by the thousands who are now singing its praises in every corner of our land. This is the Rupture Lock that you get on a 30 Day Trial.

Write for My-Free Book at Once

It tells you all about getting rid of your rupture. It teems with interesting experiences of former rupture sufferers. It tells why physicians are recommending this Rupture Lock instead of advising dangerous operations. It tells you why the U. S. War Department orders this Rupture Lock for the gallant boys of '61. It gives you much advice and many facts about rupture that you never heard or read about, also tells you how to order the 30 Days Trial.

Send me the coupon, or, still easier, just drop me a postal card with your full address, and the book will be sent you promptly by return mail.

RUPTURE

Is a handicap. If you don't realize it now you will sooner or later. It never gets well of itself, but gets worse from time to time. It will eventually unfit you for work and life's battles. It positively grows dangerous—think of the hundreds of people that yearly sacrifice their lives to strangulation.

The past has proven that the old-fashioned antiquated truss and appliance won't help you—it can't; its construction is all wrong. A new star of hope has arisen for the ruptured—a natural outcome from the deficiencies of the past. There is hope, joy and comfort awaiting you.

The "Schulling Rupture Lock"

is a wonderful invention for rupture—the outcome of years of study, hard work and diligent research. It is away from the old lines of truss construction, and holds the rupture exactly the way Nature intends, so that she may heal the opening without interference.

Guaranteed to Hold Sent on 30 Days Trial

In wearing my rupture Lock you have absolute protection at all times. You may do any kind of work and get in any position under any condition. We will prove this, by a 30 DAY TRIAL. That's the length of time you should have. A few days trial can never bring out the merits of any article. Thirty days is the only fair way. That's

CALOMEL DYNAMITES YOUR LIVER! MAKES YOU SICK AND SALIVATES

"Dodson's Liver Tone" Starts Your Liver Better Than Calomel and You Don't Lose a Day's Work

Liven up your sluggish liver! Feel fine and cheerful; make your work a pleasure; be vigorous and full of ambition. But take no nasty, dangerous calomel because it makes you sick and you may lose a day's work.

Calomel is mercury or quicksilver which causes necrosis of the bones. Calomel crashes into your bile like dynamite, breaking it up. That's when you feel that awful nausea and cramping.

Listen to me! If you want to enjoy the nicest, gentlest liver and bowel cleansing you ever experienced just take a spoonful of harmless Dodson's Liver Tone tonight. Your druggist or dealer sells you a 50 cent bottle of Dodson's Liver Tone under my personal money-back guarantee that each spoonful will clean your sluggish liver better than a dose of nasty calomel and that it won't make you sick.

Dodson's Liver Tone is real liver medicine. You'll know it next morning because you will wake up feeling fine, your liver will be working; headache and dizziness gone; stomach will be sweet and bowels regular.

Dodson's Liver Tone is entirely vegetable, therefore harmless and can not salivate. Give it to your children. Millions of people are using Dodson's Liver Tone instead of dangerous calomel now. Your druggist will tell you that the sale of Calomel is almost stopped entirely here.

A PLEA FOR BEDS FOR OUR WESLEY HOUSES.

The Wesley Houses both at Biloxi and Meridian have opened day nurseries, and are much in need of little beds. Surely in the boundary of the Mississippi Conference, there are many stowed in attics, no longer needed in the home. Will you not send them to the little ones in these nurseries, whose need is so great? There children are left by the mother when she goes to her work in the morning, cared for all day, fed, bathed and clothed; they smile into her face as she receives them when her day's work is done. Many of these little beds are sacred to you because of the little one who rested there only a little while, then went back to the loving Father, who lent it to bless your life. Maybe some who pressed its pillow have gone out from the old home, fathers and mothers now themselves. Could you do anything more pleasing to Him, who loved little children, than to send them to bless the lives of less fortunate babies than your own? Send beds to Meridian or Biloxi, as is most convenient, or if any one will make a contribution toward one, send it to Mrs. R. E. Johnson, Gulfport, Miss. Little blankets and comforts are also needed.

Mrs. ROBT KEMP.

NEWTON DISTRICT MISSIONARY MEETING.

The opening session of the Newton District meeting was held at Newton on Tuesday evening, October 13. A lovely musical program had been arranged by the Newton ladies and the welcome extended by the various Churches made every visitor feel at once that we were "one in Christ Jesus." Mrs. W. L. Walker, of Laurel, responded in a few well chosen words to the many beautiful words of welcome. Wednesday morning was devoted to children's work, also the work at the two Wesley Houses: the one at Biloxi being presented by Mrs. Paul Daniel, and Miss Mollie Womack, deaconess, giving an account of her work at Meridian. Mrs. J. L. Neill made a strong plea for loyalty to the New Orleans Christian Advocate. The afternoon session was devoted to the Young People's work, Missionary literature, Social Service, and an Institute on the "Organization of the Woman's Missionary Work." The meetings were very well attended, considering the inclement weather, and much interest was manifested. With such a corps of Conference officers as Mrs. Johnson, Mrs. La Prade, Mrs. Daniel, and Mrs. Neill, and our beloved deaconess, Miss Womack, we can but feel that much good was accomplished in the name of Him who said: "Ye shall be witnesses unto me both in Jerusalem, and in all Judea, and in Samaria and unto the uttermost parts of the earth."

Mrs. J. C. CLARK,
Dist. Secretary.

WHAT THE WOMAN'S MISSIONARY SOCIETY HAS DONE FOR ME.

It was just after a terrible shock in my life, and I was almost a physical wreck, a stranger in a strange city that I, feeling the need of Christian fellowship, joined the Woman's Missionary Society of the First Methodist Church (New Orleans). It was then a very small band of workers. I attended the meetings, would sit and look on, and hearing about the good work the women were doing. I felt my weakness and inability to do active work, so I said that I would not go again. Then as the time drew near for another meeting, I would find myself irresistibly drawn to the church again. The same discouragement followed and I fully resolved not to return, but something seemed to call me to press forward.

Then I was called to my dying mother's bedside. When I reached her she did not recognize me. One night in the wee, small hours, she grew suddenly worse. After making her as comfortable as possible, I knelt down by her bedside, clasped her poor wasted hand in mine, and looked into her eyes. With a sweet smile, while suffering intensely, she said "My child! my child!" Something in the clasp of the hands must have caused the recognition. She soon lost consciousness, and while kneeling there, holding her hand, and praying, each and every member of the little band of workers came up before me so distinctly that I could see each face as I had been accustomed to seeing them at the meetings. Oh, what comfort and strength this gave me! What a beautiful experience in that hour of need to know that I was a member of that little band of workers! Oh, how I thanked God, and pledged then and there on bended knee, that when I returned, I would work with them with renewed vigor, even though it was little that I could do. The auxiliary has grown greatly since then, and is doing a fine, good work. Again and again I thank God that I am a member of the Woman's Missionary Society. It has done so much for me.

An Humble Worker,
Mrs. L. BAMBERGER.

CHANGES AMONG OUR DEACONESSES AND MISSIONARIES.

The regular appointments of the deaconesses and missionaries are made at the session of the Woman's Missionary Council, but between that date and the time appointed for them to go to their field of labor, circumstances frequently arise which make changes necessary. Illness, family afflictions, and weddings, have caused a number of changes recently. Miss Celia Parsons has been transferred from Dallas, Texas, to the Wesley House at Danville, Virginia. Miss Salina Monohan was called to the Woman's Home and Hospital at Tampa, Fla., to supply the place made vacant by the illness of Miss Elizabeth Davis. Miss Daisy Duncan succeeds Miss Myrtle Long at the Biloxi (Miss.) Wesley House. Miss Long was married on Oct. 20, to Rev. Waldo Moore of the Mississippi Conference.

So many vacancies have been made that trained workers have been pressed into service. Miss Marie Parham, of Bullochville, Ga., a graduate of Scarritt has gone to the Methodist Institute at Richmond, Va., to fill the place made vacant by the illness of Miss Sellers. Miss Edith Brittingham, a foreign missionary, is helping with the boys' work at the Avondale Wesley House, Birmingham, Ala. Miss Sadie Davis goes to direct the work at the Orangeburg (S. C.) Wesley House. Cupid is also responsible for this vacancy, Miss Sarah Regan, former deaconess, having married in August. Mrs. Carrie Bond, for many years district nurse at Louisville, Ky., goes to the Dallas Wesley House to take the place made vacant by Miss Monohan's removal to Tampa. Mrs. S. R. Griffith, of Scarritt, is conducting the Norfolk City Board work because of Miss Frankland's illness. Miss Nell Wynne of Cleburne, Tex., and Miss Mamie Reams of Kentwood, La., have been granted temporary absence from deaconess work because of family afflictions.

Miss Frankland was at one time church deaconess at Rayne Memorial, New Orleans, La., and Miss Reams served at the Biloxi Wesley House last year during Miss Long's illness. These two deaconesses are known to our Conferences and our prayers should follow them in their afflictions. They are both women who live very close to their Savior and their lives make a deep impression wherever they go. We know it saddens them to give up their beloved work even for a short time, but the Father knows best, and they would not question his wisdom. We pray that they may not long be kept from the labors which so insistently call to them, and to which they have consecrated their lives.

COMB SAGE TEA IN HAIR TO DARKEN IT

Grandma kept her locks dark, glossy, thick with a mixture of Sage Tea and Sulphur.

The old-time mixture of Sage Tea and Sulphur for darkening gray, streaked and faded hair is grandmother's treatment, and folks are again using it to keep their hair a good, even color, which is quite sensible, as we are living in an age when a youthful appearance is of the greatest advantage.

Nowadays, though, we don't have the troublesome task of gathering the sage and the mussy mixing at home. All drug stores sell the ready-to-use product called "Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound" for about 50 cents a bottle. It is very popular because nobody can discover it has been applied. Simply moisten your comb or a soft brush with it and draw this through your hair, taking one small strand at a time; by morning the gray hair disappears, but what delights the ladies with Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur is that, besides beautifully darkening the hair after a few applications, it also produces that soft lustre and appearance of abundance which is so attractive; besides, prevents dandruff, itching scalp and falling hair.

There are in India perhaps six million pupils in government and mission schools, and a large part of this number studying English.

If You Suffer From Catarrh

Try This Pleasant Herb Smoke.
Sent FREE By Mail.

Dr. Blosser, who has devoted forty years to the treatment of Catarrh, is the originator of a certain combination of medicinal herbs, flowers and berries to be smoked in a pipe or ready prepared cigarette. The accompanying illustration shows how the smoke-vapor reaches all the air passages of the head, nose and throat. As the disease is carried into these passages with the air you breathe, so the antiseptic, healing vapor of this Remedy is carried with the breath directly to the affected parts.

This simple, practical method applies the medicine where sprays, douches, ointments, etc., cannot possibly go. Its effect is soothing and healing, and is entirely harmless, containing no tobacco or habit forming drugs. It is pleasant to use, and not sickening to those who have never smoked. No matter how severe or long standing your case may be, we want to show you what our Remedy will do.

To prove the beneficial, pleasant effect, The Blosser Company, 204 Walton St., Atlanta, Ga., will mail absolutely free to any sufferer, a sample that will verify their claims by actual test. This free package contains a pipe, some of the Remedy for smoking and also some of our medicinal cigarettes. If you wish to continue the treatment, it will cost only one dollar for a month's supply for the pipe, or a box containing one hundred cigarettes. We pay postage.

If you are a sufferer from Catarrh, Asthma, Catarrhal Deafness, or if subject to frequent colds, send your name and address at once by postal card or letter for the free package, and a copy of our illustrated booklet.

OUR SUNDAY SCHOOLS.

By Rev. B. F. Lewis,
Chairman Mississippi Conference
Sunday School Board.

One million four hundred ninety-seven thousand seven hundred eighty-four pupils, and 131,972 officers and teachers, making a total enrollment of 1,629,690 in the Sunday schools of Southern Methodism, with a regular literature circulation of over 2,020,000 copies! This mighty Sunday school army can be made all but irresistible, and this great host of young life should represent not less than fifty thousand conversions and additions to our Church on profession of faith per annum from this department alone. This is what we desire and this is what we are aiming to accomplish.

For the first time in the history of our Church has the Sunday School Department been fully recognized and elevated to its true and rightful sphere. Formerly the General Sunday School Board was composed of only five men, faithful and competent, it is true, but still only five, of whom the Sunday School Editor was chairman, and these, "with the Publishing Committee and Book Agents," were to have supervision of our Sunday school work and provide it with a literature. This small board of less than half a dozen men had no financial backing save a little pin money and could not of their own volition bring out a book or publish a leaflet. What has been accomplished under the circumstances is marvelous, proving the divine inspiration and supervision of this mightiest arm of the Church. But now things are different. We have a board consisting of eighteen men representing as many different parts of our connection, chosen because their success in Sunday school work proves their eminent fitness for this responsible position. One of our chief pastors is permanent chairman of this board. Now fifty per cent of all Children's Day collections (twenty-five per cent if a Conference Board employs a field secretary) and ten per cent of all missionary money raised in the Sunday schools goes to this board for its use in extending the work, while they have the right to go before the Church at large for such additional financial help as may be needed.

Four things will be noted with interest by all practical Sunday school workers, and not only their feasibility, but their great importance and greater possibilities; will be appreciated.

1. The whole Church has been divided into seven districts or divisions—two foreign and five in the home field. The two foreign divisions are: the Orient, consisting of China, Japan, and Korea; the Latin American, consisting of Mexico, Cuba, Brazil and Africa.

The five home divisions are: The Atlantic Coast Division, consisting of all those Conferences on the Atlantic coast from the Baltimore to and including the South Georgia; the Gulf Division, consisting of all the Conferences in Florida, Alabama, Mississippi, Louisiana, and Arkansas; the Middle Division, made up of the Conferences in Tennessee, Kentucky, Missouri, and Illinois. The Southwestern, which includes the Conferences of Texas, Oklahoma, Colorado, and New Mexico; the Western, which includes all the Conferences on the Pacific coast and the West. Over each of these divisions will be placed a superintendent who, under the direction of the general board, will co-operate freely, but without undue interference with the Conference boards and Conference Field Secretaries in extending the Sunday school work within Conference bounds, and in bringing that already inaugurated to the highest state of efficiency.

2. Arrangements have already been made with the Southern Assembly at Junaluska, North Carolina, for a two weeks' Sunday School Conference each year, from July 15 to the 31st. During the first three days the General Sunday School Board will hold its annual meeting. Following that, the Annual Conference of General Superintendents, Conference Board Chairmen, and Field Secretaries, will be held, and the work will close with a general Sunday School Conference for the study of methods.

3. The standard of efficiency has been revised and brought down to date, based on the action of the Sunday School Council of Evangelical Denominations, and consists of the following points, each of which counts ten, viz: Cradle Roll, Home Department, Wesley Bible Class, Teacher-training Class, the use of our own periodical literature (whether graded or uniform), Missionary Instruction and Offering, Temperance, Definite Decision for Christ urged, Annual observance of Children's Day and offering as per Discipline, and Workers' Council regularly held.

4. A goal for all Southern Methodist schools has been fixed as follows: A 300,000 increase in our Sunday school enrollment, 100,000 increase in the Wesley Bible Classes, 50,000 enrollment in the Cradle Roll, 100,000 enrollment in the Home Department, 25,000 enrolled in the Teacher-training Classes, and 400,000 increase in the circulation of our periodical literature, one million dollars from our Sunday schools for missions, $150,000 Children's Day offerings, and an earnest seeking for the conversion of all unconverted connected with our Sunday schools, and the deepening of the spiritual life of all our people.

All of which we can do by the grace of God.

ANGOLA, LA.

Mr. Editor: For several months I have been conducting services for the public at Angola in addition to my regular work. First we held services in the hotel; then the Board of Control on request of the people repaired at a cost of several hundred dollars the old church building on the plantation. Subscriptions were taken for organ, lights, etc. We have had several services there with a good attendance upon the part of the public. A Sunday school has now been organized and there is a good prospect of regular services. Many good people reside on the Angola plantation and in the vicinity. In the spring Rev. W. T. Currie, was with me one Sunday and preached to the prisoners and at the hotel at night. The people there desired that he should return after our church was renovated, and he came in response to invitations and preached nearly a week in the church to good audiences, and also on Sunday to the prisoners. The preaching of Brother Currie was plain, pointed and practical. The people enjoyed it very much. The prisoners were delighted with his sermons, also. Many eyes were wet with tears as he tenderly told of his experiences and of the work of God under his ministry, and in response to invitations many lifted their hands or knelt in request for prayer. The people at Angola are desirous of obtaining the services of one of our pastors for a service each month next year, if sufficient financial backing can be obtained to make the offer. God has blessed me in the work among the prisoners. I am toiling on without much newspaper talk, but precious results are being accomplished.

A MISSISSIPPI WOMAN'S EXPERIENCE IN MEXICO.

Miss Elizabeth Streater, of Black Hawk, Miss., though not an officially appointed missionary, has for several years, with rare consecration, been doing Christian work in Mexico at her own expense. When the employees of our Board of Missions were ordered home, though importuned by friends likewise to leave, she refused to do so and has continuously remained in Guadalajara, where she has had many thrilling experiences and has made her influence strongly felt for good. Mrs. C. M. Hawkins, editress of the Woman's Missionary Department of the St. Louis Christian Advocate, recently printed in that paper the following letter from Miss Streater, which we take pleasure in reproducing, feeling assured that it will interest many of our readers:

"The wounded from the battles at La Venta, Cartillo, and other places near by were brought here, and I've been helping at the military hospital with the 'white cross.' I've seen so much suffering and had so many trying experiences during these two weeks that it seems I've lived three years or more. I've had 'pruebar' many and dangers not a few, but out of them all the Lord has delivered me, and oh, how I praise him for the privilege of being here during the trying times, when there is so much need of Christian help and comfort! And do you know that for a while at least I can work without having my work undone by the 'sacerdotes?' They are all in prison. The new government had suspicions of a plot among the priests, began to search the churches, and found arms, ammunition, and dynamite. The result was that every priest that could be found was put in prison, and every Catholic church in the city was locked. Can you imagine Guadalajara without a single 'mira' and not one sound of a bell? The priests will have their trial next week, and those not found guilty will be liberated. The leader in their fanaticism, Padre Correo, has not been found, and the archbishop was wise enough to leave for Europe before the revolutionists reached these parts. The residence of the archbishop is being used as 'cuartel,' also the large Jesuit college, and some of the convents that were conducted under the name 'colegios.' And not only the Catholic schools were occupied, but also some of the public school buildings and even some of the private residences that were vacant. So you see that by a special providence 'Instituto Colon' has escaped.

"One night a whole company of cavalry did their best to break open the iron gate and enter, even sending to our caretaker's home for an ax. The women refused to give the ax. After much banging and demanding that the gate be opened, they finally called to some one to know to whom the house belonged; and being told that it was American property, they left immediately and took possession of a nice residence near by. It was at or near the time I was having a special season of prayer for our property to be saved."

REVIVAL AT CARROLLTON AVENUE CHURCH.

The revival meeting at the Carrollton Avenue M. E. Church, South, this city, came to a close last Sunday night. The pastor, Rev. J. G. Snelling, reports 6 conversions and about 12 accessions to the Church. While the attendance was not all that could have been desired, the interest was good. The preaching during the greater part of the meeting was done by Rev. J. B. Williams, pastor of our Church at Ponchatoula, La. Brother Williams proved himself to be a spiritual preacher of unusual gifts. His sermons were of a high order and carried conviction to the hearts of his hearers. The members of the Carrollton congregation speak in high terms of the work done by Brother Williams, whose faithful ministrations, made in a spirit of humility and love, will long abide in the hearts of those whose good fortune it was to sit before him.

On last Saturday night Rev. J. L. Sutton, Superintendent of the Orphan Boys' Home, occupied the pulpit and preached an effective sermon. Brother Sutton brought with him a company of the orphan boys who rendered appreciative choral service.

On last Sunday morning Dr. J. M. Henry, the presiding elder, delivered a thought-provoking sermon, after which he administered the Sacrament of the Lord's Supper, assisted by Rev. R. A. Davis and the pastor. Brother Snelling preached the closing sermon of the revival on Sunday night.

The singing throughout the meeting was conducted by Mr. B. G. Grenfell, who gave valuable assistance and contributed not a little to the success of the meeting. Brother Grenfell is a Welshman, who has recently come to this country. He has consecrated his life to this kind of work and is recommended to the brethren as good help in revival services.

THE NEW ORLEANS WOMAN'S CITY MISSION BOARD.

The Woman's City Mission Board met at St. Mark's Hall on Tuesday afternoon, October 27, with an average attendance.

Mrs. S. A. Montgomery, the president of the organization, made a plea for more teachers in the sewing school at St. Mark's Hall. Ninety pupils are enrolled in this school, it was stated, and the classes are too large for the number of teachers if instruction is to be thorough. Members of any of the Methodist churches are expected to respond to this need, and a good story teller to entertain the pupils twice every month also will be welcomed.

Encouraging reports were heard from Mrs. Meekins, of the Mary Werlein Mission, and from Miss Thompson, a visiting missionary. Miss Martha Nutt reported on the work accomplished at St. Mark's Hall, and Miss Mary Werlein told of the successful outing given a number of deserving persons during the past summer at the Seashore Campgrounds.

Rev. H. W. Jamieson extended an invitation to the Union to hold its next meeting in the Mary Werlein Mission, and the invitation was accepted.

Among the visitors was Mrs. F. A. Lyons, mother of Mrs. L. S. Clark, who is an earnest missionary worker, and who was at one time the State President of the Methodist Missionary Societies of the Louisiana Conference.

Editorial

"A noble aim,
Faithfully kept, is as a noble deed;
In His pure sight all virtue doth succeed."

Truth may go down, but she will not stay down. Like Him who was the Incarnate Truth, though buried, she will rise again. "The eternal years of God are hers."

The announcement was made a few weeks ago that the Rockefeller Foundation will make a thorough study of the labor problem. A newspaper man at once suggested that the inquiry begin in the Rockefeller Colorado coal fields. Not a bad idea!

Character, and not intellectual attainments, is the chief factor in the making of a man. When his moral nature is in ruins, all else a human being may possess is like the verdant vine encircling and hanging upon a tree that is rotting at its heart. Soon it will fall, and all will perish with it.

Thackeray somewhere says: "To be a gentleman is to be honest, to be gentle, to be generous, to be brave, to be wise, and, possessing all these qualities, to use them in the most gracious outward manner." Huxley writes as follows: "Thoughtfulness, generosity, modesty, and self-respect are the qualities which make a real gentleman or lady, as distinguished from the veneered article which commonly goes by that name." Measured by these standards, how many ladies and gentlemen do you know?

The Brooklyn Eagle of October 26 says: "A movement is also on foot, strongly favored by Bishop Candier of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, for the union of that part of the Church with the Methodist Episcopal Church, North, the two bodies having been separated since the Civil War." As an exhibition of stupendous ignorance of both the past and present of American Methodism, this statement tops anything that we have seen. If The Eagle escapes a suit for libel after this utterance, it will only be because of the large magnanimity of our distinguished Georgia Chief Pastor.

It is a very good work to erect houses of worship and put in them pipe organs; but this is by no means the highest and noblest function of the Christian ministry. Paul's "joy and crown" were not in brick and mortar or in any other material thing, but in the living souls that he had led to Christ and which were radiant with the light that attested the indwelling of the Holy Spirit. The minister should be "a steward of the mysteries of God" and a wielder of that power that makes the dead live and sets sinful lips to speaking the praises of the Lord. He may be mightier in this respect than all the monarchs and architects and musicians on the globe. Let us see, brethren, that we do not lose sight of our high calling.

AN IMPOSSIBLE PROPOSAL.

A minister told us some time since of a prominent layman who had remarked to him that our theology needs readjusting; that the creed for the future should be humanitarianism and nothing more. We are inclined to think that there is a good deal of that sort of sentiment abroad in the land, but it is superficial and wicked. To turn thus away from the claims of Christ as to his deity and the great supernatural doctrines clustered about him, would be a betrayal of him not less base than that of which Judas Iscariot was guilty. It is because it repudiates the love and sacrifice of the eternal and divine Son of God that unbelief is accounted such a heinous sin that it forever damns the soul. An emasculated Christianity can never save the world. If it were to spread over the earth, it would carry no lifting power and would leave humanity still in the grip of depravity and vice. Our one and only hope is in the Cross of Calvary.

"That Cross, like a far beacon, stands,
In the midst of a world of sin,
And stretched out are its bleeding hands
To gather the wanderers in."

CHRIST'S KEEPING POWER.

"All the saints salute you, chiefly they that are of Caesar's household." So wrote Paul to the Philippians. The Caesar referred to was not Julius Caesar, nor Augustus Caesar, but Nero, the basest character in human history, the most lustful man that ever sat upon a throne and the murderer of his own mother. If the disciples of Jesus could be loyal and true to their Lord in Nero's household, they can do it anywhere. We do right to shun as far as may be possible an evil environment, but if forced into sinful surroundings we need not despair. Jesus can keep us pure in spite of adverse circumstances if we will stay close enough to him.

ADMIRABLE.

A few days ago the report was spread abroad that the Prince of Wales had consented to become the honorary sponsor of a ball to be given in New York for the purpose of raising money for the benefit of bereaved families and wounded soldiers in England. This report led King George, through Sir Cecil Spring-Rice, the British Ambassador to the United States, to issue to the American public the following message:

"The statement has recently appeared in the New York press to the effect that His Royal Highness, the Prince of Wales, had consented to be honorary sponsor of a ball to be held at the Biltmore Hotel in New York on November 2, in aid of the Prince of Wales Fund, and had signified his intention of sending a personal envoy to be present.

"The British Ambassador at Washington has received His Royal Highness' command to let it be known that the above statement is absolutely without foundation.

"Sir Cecil Spring-Rice wishes to add that while the many generous offers of help to the wounded soldiers and bereaved families in England are very highly appreciated, he feels obliged to disassociate himself from any efforts to raise money for these purposes by means of an entertainment or festivity of any kind. He is confident that any British subjects, who have generously offered to collect funds in this way, will readily understand his feeling that it would be unsuitable for him to be connected with any such festivities at this time of widespread sorrow and mourning."

This statement is admirable in every respect. There is something incongruous about a charity ball at any time, and particularly is this true under the conditions now existing. The English are a great people. In point of true culture and real refinement of feeling and manners it is doubtful if they can be matched by any other nation on the globe. One only needs to read their current periodicals discerningly to realize that their ideals are high and that they are surpassingly well informed. Other peoples may outstrip them in some things, but in the sturdy elements that make men and women of the noblest types they stand in the forefront. Well may we be proud of our Mother Country!

NAMBY-PAMBY CHRISTIANITY.

Some people seem to think that the man who is the most ready to overlook an offense against the authority of the Church, or against the cause of justice and right is the most religious; but this may be far from being true. To be forgiving is, indeed, a disposition to be commended, if the offender is truly penitent; but to "slop over in the matter" and extend amnesty to persons who do not acknowledge their wrong-doing, to the injury of the cause of righteousness and the Church, is to evince a censurable weakness of character. If God, for instance, were to obliterate his attributes of justice and righteousness and become all mercy, what would become of the moral government of the universe? Doubtless it would soon go to pieces. How then can we expect the Church to escape that fate if such a spirit is to prevail in her governing councils?

Dr. F. B. Meyer, the noted English preacher in a recent speech bearing on the great European War is said to have spoken to his fellow-countrymen on "the danger and futility of sitting on the fence at a time like this." If Dr. Meyer can find a method of getting all his compatriots off the fence, we hope that he will publish it so that it can be used in the United States. We know some people in this country who have been occupying such a perch so long that we fear that their trousers are glued to the rails; and some of them, we regret to say, presume to call themselves ambassadors of the frank and fearless Christ.

What a multiplicity of methods in church work are suggested in this day! One plan is hardly explained and understood before we are urged to abandon it and take up another. We are rather inclined to the view that larger results would follow if there were less shifting and a longer adherence to one course of procedure. The old aphorism, "A rolling stone gathers no moss," is as applicable in the sphere of religious endeavor as it is elsewhere.

THE USE OF THE WRITTEN BY THE INCARNATE WORD.

(A part of a matriculation address recently delivered at the Boston University School of Theology by Rev. T. H. Lewis, D.D., of the Methodist Protestant Church and published in full in Zion's Herald. Dr. Lewis is one of the ablest and most eloquent Methodist ministers in the United States, and at this time when so many are seeking to weaken the authority of the Holy Scriptures, this notable utterance is well worth a careful reading.)

1. Jesus constantly referred to the Bible as his own great credential. "Ye search the Scriptures; for in them ye think ye have eternal life: and they are they which testify of me." "For had ye believed Moses, ye would have believed me; for he wrote of me."

He began his ministry by going, as his custom was, "into the synagogue on the sabbath day." "And there was delivered unto him the book of the prophet Isaiah. And when he had opened the book, he found the place where it was written, 'The Spirit of the Lord is upon me.'" This and the words following were his text for his first recorded sermon. But they were also the explanation of his mission and the justification of his claim, because in him that Scripture was first literally fulfilled. And after his resurrection, walking to Emmaus with the two disciples, he gave an instance of his method of using the Bible: "Beginning at Moses and all the prophets, he expounded unto them in all the Scriptures the things concerning himself."

Now, of course, it would have been impossible for Jesus to have used the Bible in this way if he had not regarded it as true and as justifying his claim to be the Messiah. He submits this credential in the broadest way—not an obscure passage here and there, but "beginning at Moses and all the prophets." If any of his critics, whose animosity must have made them more than willing, had been able to find a single prophecy he did not fulfill, or a single precept he did not obey; if they could have produced any word of this ample body of testimony that witnessed against him, he must have yielded his claim and acknowledged himself an impostor, so completely does he rest his case on the whole Bible. His acceptance of the Bible, therefore, was no qualified, half-hearted acceptance. He went to it just as he has taught us to go, ready to take it all as the true and the infallible Word of God, to be judged by and measured by it in all that he did and said.

There is another suggestion in this appeal of Jesus to the Bible as his credential which may be illustrated by our own times. Some years ago the President of the United States went upon the platform to introduce to the public the author of a little book, and to endorse and commend the book with unstinted praise. Instantly this book was seen everywhere, and thousands of copies were sold upon this recommendation. Similarly, when Mr. Gladstone wrote approvingly of one of the novels of the day, it became the rage with the reading public, showing how the character of the men added to the character of the book. Towering infinitely above these examples in majesty and significance is the testimony of Jesus to the Bible. He speaks of it not only as a good book, a true book, but as his book, the very transcript of his character. "They are they which testify of me." "Take it," he seems to say, "and judge me by it. Or, if you have already judged me and find no fault in me, then take it and judge it by me. If I am the light of the world, the Bible is the vehicle of that light. If I am the way, the truth, and the life, the Bible is the guide by which men may come to me." Whatever Jesus is to the world he is through the Bible as interpreted and enforced by the Holy Spirit. No man cometh unto Jesus but by the Bible.

2. Jesus quoted freely and reverently from the Bible in his addresses to the people to enforce his words.

He was in a most emphatic sense a Bible preacher. Of course, we have only a few of his discourses recorded at all, and they are for the most part reported in a summary way. But even in these extracts references to the Old Testament abound. It would be profitable exercise for any Bible student to go over one of the Gospels to identify the Old Testament quotations made by Jesus. I cannot go into detail here, and indeed it is not necessary, since any good edition of the Bible will furnish a full list of these references. But I will, as an illustration, sum up the results of a superficial examination of the Gospel of Matthew. In this Gospel there are about 25,000 words. Of these, about 10,000 are recorded as spoken by Jesus. An ordinary reader can read aloud all that Jesus is reported by Matthew to have said on earth in one hour. Yet he will find at least 100 direct quotations from the Old Testament or allusions to its history or precepts in that reading. Jesus quotes from twenty-two of the thirty-nine books, from every one of the five books of Moses, from every one of the prophets except six of the minor, from four of the historical books, and from Psalms, Proverbs, and Job.

Now this sort of tribute to the Bible from Jesus must be allowed great weight by all who will consider one fact: Jesus was the most original teacher who ever lived. He never quoted a line or a phrase from any philosophical, literary, historical, or poetical work written by men. The evangelists, who usually narrate what took place without the least personal comment, depart from their custom to tell us that so original and striking was his teaching that the "people were astonished at his teaching, for he taught them as one having authority, and not as the scribes." But it was this Teacher, impressing his contemporaries by his originality, who was so saturated with the Bible that scarcely one of his addresses was begun or finished without some reference to it. The quotations in every case were made in a spirit of profound submission to their authority, and without criticism or modification, except to point out a deeper meaning than his hearers were accustomed to give them. Jesus quoted the Old Testament just as we quote it, "for doctrine, for reproof, for instruction in righteousness." Surely, in all that has been written in praise of the Bible there is nothing approaching the eloquence and impressiveness of this tribute of our Lord, who showed what he thought of the Bible by the way he used it.

3. Jesus treated the Bible as the paramount authority in conduct. When, immediately after his baptismal inaugural into the work of God's beloved Son, he was "tempted like as we are yet without sin," he met all the assaults with the Bible as his only shield and weapon. "It is written" was his invincible defense and the complete overthrow of his enemy. Thus he who might have triumphed in his own strength chose to rely upon the Bible, available for every man, sufficient to succor every tempted one, and supply the final answer to every doubtful question.

When he was charged with blasphemy because he claimed equality with the Father, thus making himself God, he silenced his critics by quoting the very authority on which they based their charge. And by thus establishing his own claim, he taught his disciples the first thesis of Protestantism, the right of direct approach to God based upon the authoritative Word which reveals God to us and our relations to him.

When the Pharisees came to him with the complaint that his disciples were transgressing the traditions of the elders, he retorted upon them the charge that they themselves were transgressing the Word of God by their traditions, thus insisting upon carrying back conduct behind the customs and traditions of men to the Bible as the only true standard. This is in reality an assertion of human liberty from laws and customs that are merely man-made. Yet it is not the liberty of anarchy. It is a liberty that plants itself on the Bible as the constitution that guarantees liberty. "He is free whom the truth makes free."

In the Sermon on the Mount, which is really a great ethical syllabus, he quotes Scripture freely.

To guard against the notion that his teaching derogated something from the Old Testament, he said, "Think not that I am come to destroy the law or the prophets; I am not come to destroy but to fulfill." And then, taking up in detail the duties of life, he shows us how to read the law so as to attain a righteousness greater than a mechanical observance of the law can attain. He does not abrogate the law against murder, but shows how hate in the heart is as wicked in God's sight, that lust is the essence of adultery; and thus gives the law a wider application and a stronger sanction. And, what is more important, he thus shows us that we can never come to that point of development which will make the law obsolete. It is planted deep in the nature of things, and all our new philosophies, so far as they are true and vital, will be but the blossoming of the old stock. "Till heaven and earth pass away one jot or one tittle shall in no wise pass away."

In that wonderful parable of the rich man in hell, where the veil is drawn aside to instruct us as to the bearing of conduct on destiny, he represents Abraham replying to the pathetic appeal of the doomed soul to send warning to his brethren: "They have Moses and the prophets; if they hear not these, neither would they be persuaded though one rose from the dead." And the awful meaning is that the Bible is man's only hope in instructing and saving his brothers from eternal ruin. If they will not listen, if they will not believe, if they will not obey the Bible, then there is absolutely no hope for them in God's mercy or in Christ's intercession.

Let us pause here long enough to sum up the significance of these deliverances of Jesus on conduct. We have cited his teaching on temptation, on our relation to God, on the law of right, on duties and on destiny. The list may not be exhaustive, but it is fairly comprehensive. The first two cover what Carlyle phrases as "the everlasting no" and "the everlasting yea," which determine man's position in the moral world. Until man determines his relation to the eternal evil and the eternal good, no intelligent progress in morals is possible. The next two cover the essence of conduct viewed as objective activity, the ultimate standard and the spirit of performance. And the last covers conduct as related to an end. I do not believe any essential principle of a complete ethic is omitted from this list, even according to the latest treatment of it. And now note that Jesus is not only as comprehensive and as scientific as the most modern philosophy, but infinitely more definite in his conclusions. And his last word is the Bible. He boldly offers this as the complete and authoritative text-book on ethics, the absolute moral guide.

4. Jesus treated the Bible as the supreme standard of moral and religious truth. The Sadducees were the skeptics of his time. They came to him once with a flippant puzzle about a woman married successively to seven husbands. Now, said they, if your doctrine of a resurrection is true, tell us whose wife this woman will be in the other world? Jesus put this irrelevant trifling aside with a solemn warning, "Ye do err, not knowing the Scriptures." These skeptics missed the great truth of a future life by failing to read deep enough the Scriptures which they thought they knew so well. And this warning is still appropriate. For with all our advancement in culture and in general knowledge, it is as true now as it was in the time of Christ, that only they advance in moral and religious truth who know the Scriptures. What is called advanced thought in our day has labored much with the great themes that men have always been thinking about—God, duty, the future; and it is the lamentable confession of scholarship that its final word on these subjects is agnosticism, the philosophy knowing nothing with certainty. How long have the philosophers traveled to come round to the point from which they set out? St. Paul defined the goal of those who abandon the Scriptures when he said, "The world by wisdom knew not God." This is to-day the supreme attainment of those who know not the Scriptures.

Jesus made another statement in this connection of a most impressive character. It was in that inconceivably solemn moment when he was holding communion with his father just before his passion. Speaking of his disciples and the dangers to which they would be exposed after his departure, he prayed for them to be kept through the truth, and then added, "Thy Word is truth." This asserts more than that the Bible is true. It makes the Bible the truth itself, the standard by which other books are to be tested.

Of course this assertion is to be limited to the legitimate sphere of the Bible. We are not warranted by this statement in using the Bible to test the truth of scientific or historical treatises, for example. Even those who insist that the Bible is true in all its details and incidents do not claim that it is the whole truth in all spheres of knowledge. When it has been fairly and reasonably interpreted it has always been found in agreement with the discoveries and established facts of men; yet men who have believed in it have frequently been found ignorant or in error with regard to many truths of science and philosophy. But when Jesus declares, "Thy Word is truth," he must be understood as referring to the truth he came especially to make known to men, the truth by which man is to be saved—that is, moral, religious truth. Understanding him thus, there is no further qualification to be made. All the moral and religious systems of the world are tested by this Book. Those contrary to it may flourish for a time, but ultimately men cast them out or revise them into agreement with the Bible. "Thy Word is truth," is one of those absolute declarations which our Lord was accustomed to make when speaking of matters entirely beyond the scope of human endeavor. It seals the Bible to us as not only divine in its origin but final and infallible in its character.

5. Jesus regarded the Bible as the means by which man was to be spiritually awakened, developed, and perfected. In setting forth the purpose of his kingdom, although under the guise of a parable, using the commonplace incident of a sower going forth to sow, he yet made it clear by his interpretation that the great object was to spread abroad a knowledge of the Scriptures: "The seed is the Word of God." How impressively this relates the Bible to the Church! The chief end and glory of the Church of Israel was that "unto them were committed the oracles of God." And "holding forth the Word of life," is the great business of the New Testament Church. It cannot produce the divine energy that awakens a dead world, but unto it has been given the means through which this energy operates.

When Jesus was tempted to satisfy his hunger by making bread out of the stones at his feet, he replied: "It is written, man shall not live by bread alone, but by every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of God." This gives to Scripture the power to maintain the divine life in man, as well as warns him against preferring his animal existence to his real life, if either has to be sacrificed to the other. When men say they must live, they are really expressing the urgency and the constancy of the demand for the Scriptures. The Word of God is the life of the world.

Another expression of Jesus to the same effect is his declaration in disputing with the Jews about his character and mission: "He that is of God heareth God's words." This can only mean, as the context shows; that participation in the divine nature is produced and proved only by an honest and obedient acceptance of God's message as set forth in the Bible. It is a declaration equally valid, whichever part of it is taken for the antecedent. "He that heareth God's Word is of God," or "Ye therefore hear them not because ye are not of God." The solemn import of this declaration is that salvation is impossible for those who will not have the divine nature, and this nature is not attainable except through the divine Word. Thus it is from Christ himself that we have learned to exalt the Bible as the only basis for our hope of acceptance with God.

Finally, we must revert again to the intercessory prayer for another declaration of the use and purpose of the Bible in bringing us to perfection. It is that sublime prayer with which he prefaces the declaration that "Thy Word is truth." "Sanctify them through thy truth." We may not hope to enter fully with our explanations into this most holy place of Scriptural mysteries, but something of its meaning and power we may attain by reverent attention. The word "sanctify" involves two requests in this petition—one for the consecration of his disciples to the work he has sent them into the world to do, and the other for personal holiness of character. How shall these disciples call men from sin and win them to holiness when they have no armies, no learning, no social or political influence? "Consecrate them by thy truth." Let his Word be their weapon, and they shall prevail against the powers and principalities that exalt themselves against God. Let the Bible be their constant theme, and men shall turn away from the sweetest songs and the most charming stories to listen to the song of Bethlehem and the old, old story. Let them be heralds of the Bible Christ, preachers of the Bible salvation, and no philosophy shall gainsay them, no criticism confound them. Therefore, "Consecrate them through thy truth." But this prayer has also its personal reference. The disciple must not only be faithful to duty, he must be holy in character; and for this attainment there is likewise but one prescription—"Sanctify them through thy truth." The Bible is the great means not only of setting men apart to a holy business, but of cleansing them to a holy life. If we would be faithful to the idea of personal holiness as Jesus was faithful to it, we must open our Bibles to read the directions there on every page. We must pursue it as he prayed we might by learning its secret and tracing its lessons on the characters and precepts of the Bible. We must learn that it is not a strange gift bestowed on us in our dreams, not a mysterious thrill of emotion, but a plain walking in the ways of our God, reading his will, and meekly obeying it in every act of our life. Therefore, Jesus prays that we may be made holy by a constant study of the Bible, a constant breathing in of its spirit, and a constant conformity to its precepts. "Sanctify them through thy truth."

With this imperfect glance at some of the instances of our Lord's testimony to the Bible we must close. It is a most cheering, inspiring study, and should bring to us all a deeper conviction of the value and power of that Word upon which such a seal has been set. And when we ask ourselves as ambassadors of Jesus, sent with salvation to the ends of the earth, as to our equipment and resources and method for accomplishing this mission, how can we entertain any other answer than that which the Master himself gave both by word and deed? Jesus occupied himself while on earth wholly with man's salvation. He had within the range of his choice of means all the treasures of wisdom and knowledge and power. But of all the instruments he might have selected he chose but one—the Bible. As the Author of it knew what it could do. And he "needed not that any should testify of man; for he knew what was in man." He selected the Bible as the perfect instrument to accomplish the perfect salvation he brought to man. It supplied the background and explanation of his mission; it was the eternal substance of his teaching; it was the divine authority for his code of conduct; it was the standard of truth; and it was the one means of the Holy Spirit in awakening, developing, and perfecting men. What more can we say but that this is another instance "wherein God, willing more abundantly to show unto the heirs of promise the immutability of his counsel," has confirmed his own Word by his own Son, "that by two immutable things, in which it was impossible for God to lie, we might have a strong consolation, who have fled for refuge to lay hold upon the hope set before us."

When thou hast Christ thou art rich.—Thomas a Kempis.

SOME FACTS ABOUT OUR SUNDAY SCHOOL WORK.

More than two years ago the Mississippi Conference Sunday School Board saw the necessity of selecting and placing in the field a Traveling Secretary who was to devote the greater part of his time to Sunday school work in such places as his services were most needed. Brother R. A. Maddox was chosen for the work, and the splendid service that he has rendered during these two years is abundant proof of the wisdom of the Board's action.

During the period of his service our Field Secretary has traveled over the greater part of the territory of our Conference organizing Sunday schools, where for years they have had none, infusing new life into declining Sunday schools, organizing Teacher-training classes, and giving instruction as to the best methods of conducting Sunday schools. Really, he is doing a noble work in the cause that he represents. He has had opportunity to acquaint himself thoroughly with the facts and conditions as they exist, and with the experience of two years' active service, he is the equal of any Sunday school worker we have in the State.

Now in view of the magnitude and supreme importance of this work, we can not afford to recall our Secretary and abandon it. To do so would be a step backward that would be felt in our Sunday school work for a generation to come. And yet, my brethren, in order to retain him in the field some more definite plan must be put into operation by which he can be employed from Conference to Conference. He is doing a great work, and, so far as I am informed, he is doing it in a way that satisfies all concerned, and by all means we should retain him and pay him a comfortable salary.

Our Sister Churches have realized the importance of this work, and they have put men in the field and are keeping them there, and they are paying their men good salaries. The U. S. A. Presbyterian brethren, who are but few in number, pay their Secretary $1500 and expenses. The Southern Presbyterians pay their Secretary $1800 and expenses. The Baptists in Mississippi employ two men for full time, paying one of them $1800 and expenses; I am not informed as to what they pay the other. The Field Secretary for the International work of the State draws a salary of $2400 and expenses. Our own Field Secretary is paid a salary of only $1400, and out of that he has to pay his own expenses. And I am reliably informed that necessity was laid upon him to raise the greater part of the money to carry on the work this year. I am also informed that Brother Maddox has been compelled to borrow money almost every month during the year in order to continue the work, because his salary was delayed on account of the treasury being empty.

Brethren, there is something wrong somewhere. We are as greatly in need of a Field Secretary as other denominations, we have as good as the best, and we are as able to keep him in the field and pay him a salary that will compare favorably with what others are paying. We should relieve Brother Maddox of all financial embarrassment and send him out unhampered to do his work.

At our coming Annual Conference let the Sunday School Board take this matter up with the Board of Missions, and let the Board of Missions provide for an assessment that will cover any deficit in the salary of our Field Secretary. His work is mission work, and it would be perfectly legitimate and right for the Board of Missions to come to his relief in case of necessity.

The Louisiana Educational Campaign

A VISIT TO THE LOUISIANA BAPTIST COLLEGE.

Finding himself in Alexandria with a few leisure hours recently and the automobile of a friend and a former parishioner at his disposal, the writer, in company with President Bobbitt, of Mansfield College, availed himself of an opportunity to visit the Louisiana Baptist College at Pineville. President Cottingham, that splendid Baptist layman, though exceedingly busy in the classroom welcomed us cordially and personally conducted us through the grounds and buildings. We found a beautiful girls' dormitory on the site of the building which was burned two years ago. Another two-story building serves for a chapel and classrooms. In the rear of the girls' dormitory there is a splendid dining-hall and kitchen made of brick. The male students are comfortably domiciled in cottages on the campus. Everything that we saw and heard inspired us with the belief that the Louisiana Baptists were not only doing a real work of Christian education, but were laying the foundation of an institution that that great denomination would have every reason to be proud of. Mr. Cottingham belongs to a type of laymen that are an ornament and blessing to any Church. Having won for himself a high place among Southern educators, and being able to command prominent and remunerative positions in secular educational institutions, he yet chooses at a personal loss to serve his Church in the difficult and trying position of the presidency of a struggling Church college.

We regretted not having an opportunity to meet Mr. Godbold, another layman, who has been leading the campaign to raise $100,000 for this institution. We had long wanted to meet him because of a wonderful fellow-feeling for him as a partner in distress. However, we had the pleasure of meeting his good wife, who is the matron of the institution. We are pleased to hear that the Educational Campaign of our sister Church is nearing a successful close.

One thing we noted upon this trip was that nearly every room in the girls' dormitory had on the door a plate upon which was engraved the name of some woman's organization of some Baptist Church in the State, which fact indicated that the room had been furnished by the good women of that organization. We would commend to our Methodist ladies the example of their Baptist sisters as well worthy of imitation.

In this connection we are pleased to note that one of our Methodist woman's organizations has recently made a neat contribution to Centenary College. The Missionary Society of the Alberta Church has made this good beginning. Who will follow?

DO WE NEED CENTENARY COLLEGE?

The above question is suggested by the many failures to secure funds for Centenary, and by its present financial condition. If the Church really needs the college, it seems that it would support it. But the Church does not adequately support this school. There is an annual appropriation for Centenary by the Conference, but the sum is utterly insufficient. Hitherto all efforts at raising an endowment have been futile and seemed to be predestined to failure, and a very small percentage of the boys of our members are sent to Centenary. This has been the situation for many years in the past. While all our State schools are growing very rapidly, Centenary has a struggle to exist. What is the answer? Does the Methodist Church of Louisiana need Centenary?

FROM THE COLPORTER.

It is highly important that all dues to the Colporter for books shall be paid by November 25. Amounts as much as $3 and upward may be sent by bank checks; amounts under that by money order or currency. It is hoped that all concerned will promptly heed this modest appeal for help in a time of need. Thanks are hereby tendered to those who have already promptly acted their part in this way of helping forward the work in which we are mutually interested.

Let it be borne in mind that beginning with the next Conference year the newly revised Quarterly Conference Record must be used. The price is $1 postpaid. Many orders have already come for it, but there is still room for many more. To save trouble and expense I can have at the Conferences as many as the brethren will notify me that they want. Preachers will do well to read carefully "Monday Morning" and other advertising bulletins which our Publishing House is sending out and write me in due time what books they will want at Starkville and Columbia.

I want a copy each of the two following books: "Armageddon," by Rev. S. D. Baldwin, and "Select Melodies," by Rev. W. H. Hunter. The former on the prophecies of the Bible, was published about sixty years ago, and was much read in those days. The latter was a very popular song book, used extensively sixty or seventy years ago by our parents and grandparents. They are both out of print, but copies may be found in some of the old libraries of our ancestors. If any one knows of a copy of either or both books that can be bought reasonably, or borrowed, I shall be greatly obliged to him for the information.

In closing this my thirtieth year of Colportage work and my fifty-fourth in the itinerant ministry, I would record heartfelt praises unto God for saving grace and for whatever success has attended the weak efforts of his unworthy servant. To my brethren in the ministry and all other friends who in all these years have in any wise contributed to my personal good and the success of the work, I can only say, God bless and reward you. "Let brotherly love continue."

Sincerely and faithfully,

G. W. BACHMAN.

The St. Louis Christian Advocate states that every layman and preacher in the Illinois Conference of the M. E. Church, South, settled in full his account with that journal. How we wish the spirit prevailing among the Illinois brethren would become universal! If it were to do so, however, we fear that it might so astound our Publisher that he might not recover from the shock. But we dare say that he would be willing to take chances on it: so we hope that the Methodists of Louisiana and Mississippi will imitate the good example set by their fellow-workers along our northern border.

Church News

Bishop W. R. Lambuth, of the M. E. Church, South, on account of the unsettled condition of things in Mexico, has postponed the holding of our Annual Conference there until next January.

It is stated that Bishop McCoy at the recent session of the West Texas Conference did not continue in the office of presiding elder any minister who had served for four years in that capacity.

Rev. Abe Muirkey, the noted Texas evangelist, who has been in a failing state of health for some time, is now reported to be improving, with a prospect of recovering sufficiently to take up work again.

We notice that at the Randolph-Macon Woman's College "a training class in folk-dancing games" has been organized. We scarcely think that dancing of any kind needs to be taught at a Methodist institution.

The Southern University, at Greensboro, Ala., has an enrollment of 35 students in the Fitting School and 68 in the College Department. Birmingham College reported two or three weeks ago an enrollment of 138.

The British Weekly of October 15 stated that Dr. G. Campbell Morgan, of London, England, was ill with typhoid fever, and that at his request he had been moved to a Nursing Home, where he will be cared for and treated.

Of the 60 Methodist preachers in Germany, more than 30 are said to be in the army. The President of the Wesleyan Conference of France is also battling for his country as a private soldier. Thus does cruel war array Christian against Christian.

Dr. Alpha G. Kynett, Secretary of the Board of Home Missions and Church Extension of the Methodist Episcopal Church, claims that Philadelphia is the greatest Methodist city in the world, having in the city proper 50,000 members, and in what might be termed Greater Philadelphia about 60,000.

Dr. Mark A. Matthews, pastor of the First Presbyterian Church of Seattle, the largest Presbyterian Church in the world, has lately declined an attractive call to a leading congregation in Winnipeg, Canada. Dr. Matthews is well known in West Tennessee and North Mississippi. He is one of the really great pastors in the United States—a minister of flaming zeal and remarkable power.

The First Methodist Episcopal Church, South, at Houston, Texas, has had a great year, under the pastorate of Dr. Caspar Wright. Up to the present time, 290 members have been received, and the congregation has raised for various purposes $35,000. Besides this, $65,000 was set aside in the will of a deceased member, Mrs. Sarah Bell, as a fund to be used in assisting the widows of deceased ministers. The numerical strength of this church is approximately 1200.

The Regular Baptists and Free Baptists of Maine have agreed upon a plan of union, which is expected to be fully consummated in the year 1915. The latter body is said to be numerically stronger in Maine than in any other State in the Union. This merging will make the United Baptist Convention, as it to be called, the representative organization of the largest number of communicants in any one denomination in the Pine Tree State. It will have jurisdiction over 32,817 members.

According to Zion's Herald the Mormons of Canada recently had up for discussion the question as to whether John Wesley deserves a place among religious reformers, their decision being that slight recognition may be given him as such, as he was a forerunner of Joseph Smith. About the only sense in which Wesley was a "forerunner" of the founder of the Mormon sect is that he lived and died before that impostor came upon the stage of action. Their teachings could "no more mingle that the pure lights of heaven and the unholy fires of hell."

The Presbyterian, of Philadelphia, has taken over all the papers formerly published by the Federated Religious Press of Chicago, as follows: The Presbyterian Examiner, The Great Lakes Presbyterian, The Rocky Mountain Presbyterian, and The Pacific Presbyterian. It was only a few years ago that The Continent likewise absorbed a number of publications of the Presbyterian Church. As a rule, the papers maintained by the Presbyterians in the United States are among the ablest and soundest of our religious journals.

The Barnes Hospital of the M. E. Church, South, a $2,000,000 institution located in St. Louis, was dedicated on October 27 by Bishop E. R. Hendrix. A beautiful memorial chapel connected with the hospital invites the nurses and patients who are well enough to do so to enter it to rest and pray. Mr. Robert A. Barnes, the founder of this splendid charity, was an Episcopalian, but he placed it under the auspices of the Southern Methodist Church because he believed that it was in a position to so administer it as to make it a larger blessing to humanity.

A contemporary calls attention to the fact that the Interchurch College, which Rev. J. E. McCulloch, its organizer, has announced will hereafter work in conjunction with the Vanderbilt Biblical School, domiciling its pupils in Wesley Hall, has at this time neither any teachers nor students in its white department. This does not alter the fact that, according to Mr. McCulloch's statement, such a coalition has been formed, and that by this method an effort will be made to bring students from all the Churches into Wesley Hall and into touch with the Vanderbilt Theological Department. And it is but proper that the general public should be apprised of this relation and the plan growing out of it.

FAITHFUL UNTO DEATH.

"One of the bravest acts I witnessed during the whole war," said an officer of the Army of Northern Virginia, "was that of a young soldier, who was probably not over sixteen. We had thought of him as only a boy, although he went with the regiment on all of its marches, and lived with it in all its encampment."

"One day there was a fierce engagement. In the midst of it a bullet struck this boy in the breast, and he fell. Our colonel ordered his men to dismount, and as he himself sprang from his horse, the boy called out in a weak voice, 'I will hold your horse, colonel!'"

"Stopping in the midst of the storm of bullets to gaze in pity on the white, boyish face, the colonel said, 'But you can't do that, lad—you are dying.'"

"I know I am, colonel," the gallant boy replied. "But I can hold the reins when I am dead."

"The colonel placed the bridle in the trembling hands and went forward. When the fight was over, he hurried back, and found the boy lying dead, the bridle reins still wrapped tightly around his limp right hand."—Southern Churchman.

CHRISTIAN DOCTRINES.

There is everywhere a tendency to appropriate the results of the Christian faith, but to disparage the faith itself; to praise and rejoice in the feelings that the Christian doctrines awaken, and yet to deny the doctrines. This is unfair. The Christian doctrines ought to be given the full credit that is due them for that which they have inspired and created. It is no sign of a profound mind when any one boasts that he means to promote the causes and the civilization which Christianity has inspired and cultivated, but flouts the great Christian teachings themselves. It would be far nobler and fairer to confess that these efficient causes of Christian culture, the great, distinctive doctrines of the faith, must be true, and are worthy of allegiance because of what they have accomplished. Give the essential teachings of Christianity their due credit for what they have wrought.—Zion's Herald.

PARENTAL PRAYER.

"It is related of the parents of the Rev. Dr. Finley, that it was their practice, soon after the birth of each of their children, to set apart a day for prayer that it might be an heir of eternal life; and that they had the happiness of seeing their eight children—seven of whom were sons—distinguished by their piety in youth, and growing in grace as their years increased. Most of them lived to an advanced age, were useful in their several spheres, and greatly respected and beloved on account of their Christian character."

Secular News and Comment

Mr. Richard W. Sears, founder of the firm Sears, Roebuck & Company of Chicago, lately deceased, left his widow an estate valued at $17,500,000.

The longest session of Congress in the history of the nation came to an end on Saturday, October 24. It had lasted continuously for about nineteen months, having opened on April 7, 1913.

M. Caillaux, formerly Minister of Finance of the French Government but lately a paymaster in the army, whose beautiful wife was tried some months ago for killing the editor of the Figaro, is said to have been recently imprisoned for talking disparagingly of the service of the British troops in France.

November 19 will be "Orange Day" in Louisiana. It is expected that fine displays of the luscious, golden fruit will be made in all the towns and cities of the commonwealth, and that every citizen will be patriotic enough to purchase and eat some of it. A box of the choicest oranges that can be purchased in the State will be sent to President Wilson in time for it to reach him on that day.

Mr. Charles D. Hiles, chairman of the Republican National Committee, has announced that when the call for the next national convention of that party is issued it will be on the basis of a reduced representation from the Southern States. It was the manipulation of the large number of delegates from these certainly Democratic States in the interest of President Taft's renomination that caused the split in the Republican party two years ago.

The press dispatches state that the Egyptian Government has issued a decree eliminating the cotton crop of 1915 in the upper Egyptian basins; and the South Carolina Legislature, recently in a called session, enacted a measure providing for State warehouses for the storing of cotton, and also a bill making it a penal offense for any person to plant in cotton more than one-third of the area devoted to other crops. We consider this wholesome legislation.

From Zion's Herald, we take the following: "A monument to Col. Fletcher Webster, of the Twelfth Massachusetts Regiment, son of Daniel Webster, killed in the third day's fighting in the second battle of Bull Run, was unveiled, Oct. 23, at Manassas, Va., near the spot where he fell. The monument consists of a boulder from the Webster farm in Massachusetts. Samuel Appleton, of St. Paul, Minn., a grandson of Daniel Webster, delivered the address of dedication."

The Chicago stock yards, the largest in the world, which have been continuously in operation since 1865, have been closed because of an epidemic of the foot and mouth disease among the cattle penned there. An investigation showed 600 head to be affected and it is feared that the contagion is widespread. The first result of closing the yards will be to stop the shipment of cattle, sheep, and hogs to Chicago, of which nearly 100,000 are ordinarily received every day.

The late Mrs. Mary R. Miles, widow of General William R. Miles, bequeathed a portion of her estate valued at $100,000 to her nephew, Rev. J. M. Kellogg, a Catholic priest, who is pastor and superintendent of the Newsboys' Home of New Orleans. The property given Mr. Kellogg includes two plantations, Good Hope and Black Bayou, in Holmes County, Miss., and Mrs. Miles' handsome residence in this city, No. 18 Rosa Park. The remains of General and Mrs. Miles are interred at Yazoo City, Miss.

Prof. Shigetaka, a Japanese scholar, has brought to the United States a monument made in his country in honor of the heroes of the Alamo, which he proposes to set up in or near that famous old structure in San Antonio, Texas. On one side of the stone is a brief inscription declaring its purpose, while on the other is a poem composed by the foreigner. What led Prof. Shigetaka to form the idea of erecting this monument was the fact that a battle very much like that of the Alamo was fought in the Province of Mikawa, of which he is a citizen, some four hundred years ago. Torii, a Japanese soldier, was sent out by his commander who was holding a large number of the enemy at bay, as Bonham was in Texas, and returned, as the Texan did, to perish with the gallant little band. While in the United States, Prof. Shigetaka will deliver an address at a conference to be held in Washington City under the auspices of the Pan-American Union.

READJUSTMENT IN MEXICO.

By Rev. W. W. Pinson, D.D.

It is my purpose to set down some facts to which your readers are entitled in reference to the action of the Board of Missions on readjustment in Mexico. I shall not now discuss the merits of the question, but only the genesis and history of what finally became the action of the Board by a very unusual majority.

1. The movement very properly originated in the Committee on Latin America, one of the standing committees of the Mission Boards of the United States and Canada. In a meeting of this Conference in Garden City on January 14-16, 1914, recommendations were adopted "in the interest of closer co-operation and a fuller and more even occupation and cultivation of the entire field." It was recommended that a conference be held at an early day by representatives of all the boards and missions having work in Mexico.

2. A meeting of our own missionaries was called in Laredo, Texas, on February 10-11, 1914. This meeting was presided over by Bishop Morrison, the bishop in charge of that field. There were thirteen missionaries and four board representatives present. After very thorough discussion a paper was adopted. (I hear there was one vote in the negative). This paper recommended action on practically every point later considered and acted on by the Board, including that of territory readjustment, which was specifically recommended to the Committee on Latin America to be by them put in form for submission to the several boards for their action. This again was the natural and almost necessary course. This, so far as I know, was the first denominational body to take action on the subject, and so gave to our missionaries the honor of leading in this great movement.

3. The conference recommended by the Committee on Latin America was called to meet in Cincinnati on June 30-July 1, 1914. Representatives of nine of the eleven boards having work in Mexico were present, some sixty in number. About one-third of these were missionaries. It will be noticed that this was after the annual meeting of our Board and also after the meeting of the General Conference. Hence its findings could not have gone before either body. This Conference divided its work among five committees. The reports of these committees, together with facts and reasons on which the action was based, were sent out in the form of a printed pamphlet of twenty-three pages, containing thirteen recommendations on which the Boards were asked to take action.

4. One of the requests of this meeting was that a report of its findings should be printed in the church press of the country and furnished to all the missionaries. On the 17th of July a report covering more than a page was printed in the Nashville Christian Advocate. This was the official statement of the foreign secretaries, Dr. Cook and Miss Head. On July 8th a similar communication was sent to each of the church papers. These reports gave special attention to territorial readjustment or redistribution. If any of our Advocates failed to print these reports it was not our fault, and equally so if they were not read. We did our best to take the whole Church into our confidence. A notice was even given through the Missionary News Bureau, which goes to six hundred secular papers.

5. A full notice, with copies of the action of the Cincinnati Conference, was mailed to all our missionaries on September 4th.

6. Thus full and ample publicity and opportunity for discussion were given before the Board met. The announcement brought instant and enthusiastic approval from many quarters. One of our veteran and honored missionaries availed himself of the privilege and wrote several articles strongly protesting against the proposed territorial readjustment. No reply was made to these articles. They were allowed to have their full weight unhindered. No article in advocacy of the proposed scheme of readjustment was ever issued from any representative of the Board either in print or otherwise, so far as I know, before the Board met or since. The case rested entirely on its merits. The larger part of the speaking at the Board meeting was against the proposition.

7. Notice calling a meeting of the Board for September 15th was sent out September 4th. Afterwards the date was changed to September 29. In the call it was stated that the main business would be the consideration of the readjustment in Mexico, and a full attendance was urged. The printed report of the Cincinnati Conference was sent to all Board members, which gave them further opportunity to inform themselves of what was proposed and to form their judgments, which they evidently did.

8. The meeting was the most representative and the largest called meeting I remember to have seen together. There were thirty-three members present. The session lasted for two days. One whole day, including three sessions, morning, afternoon and evening, was given to this business alone. The discussion was thorough and extended till "all minds were free." Every member certainly had a good opportunity to know which side of the question he was on and why.

9. The recommendations referred to us by the Cincinnati Conference in printed form, which had been in the hands of the members of the Board for many days, was the basis of our action. From this elaborate report the General Secretary had taken the various recommendations and put them in proper shape for consideration and action by the Board. A committee was appointed to which the whole matter was referred, after one entire session of discussion. This committee, in order to meet objections that had been raised in the preliminary discussion, changed one whole section, substituting new matter for that taken from the Cincinnati report. This was the section on territorial redistribution. In this the committee felt sure the wishes of the Board had been met and in this they were right, for the section in question was adopted by a vote of about ten to one.

10. Notice that the Board would meet and consider this question was mailed to the missionaries in ample time for any protest they wished to make, and they were invited to express their views. Three of our missionaries, Rev. F. S. Onderdonk, Rev. D. W. Carter, and Rev. N. E. Joyner, were invited to be present. Only one of these was present, Brother Joyner. He spoke in favor of the readjustment. One of the strongest speeches made was by Andres Osuna, official Spanish translator, whose home is in Northern Mexico. He is a religious and educational leader among the Mexican people, is thoroughly familiar with the situation, and was heartily in favor of the proposed plan. There was remarkable unanimity in the vote. The facts made a strong appeal. It was recognized by all that something needed to be done. To this all our missionaries agree, and I have yet to find anybody who is not of that mind. The plan finally adopted by the Board may not be the best possible, but it is the only one anybody has proposed. Those who have opposed this one have offered no other. This is at least a real effort to meet an acknowledged need. Let those who are in doubt get a copy of the Board's action before they make up their verdict against it.

DENOMINATIONAL REVIVAL.

Denominations, like other of our little systems, may "have their day and cease to be," but their day is not yet over. We might almost say that we are on the eve of a denominational revival—a revival of all that has been best in the several denominations in the past, and an evaluation of the best possible in each sect, in order that by the resulting synthesis, in a general federation, the common work of the kingdom may better be carried on. It has been said that the time for sectarian zeal is passing, but that the time for denominational enthusiasm will never pass—at any rate, it is likely to last as long as conditions short of millennial perfection obtain on earth. Our denominational affiliations are like regimental associations, and pride in each "command" is entirely compatible with loyalty to the one flag that waves over all. So let the Presbyterian contribute his sense of order, the Episcopalian his love for beauty, the Methodist his zeal for evangelism, and the Baptist his evangelistic aptitude to the one great cause of Christ.—Zion's Herald.

LIFE'S LITTLE DAYS.

One secret of a sweet and happy Christian life is learning to live by the day. It is the long stretches that tire us. We think of life as a whole, running on for us. We can not carry this load until we are threescore and ten. We can not fight this battle continually for half a century. But really there are no long stretches. Life does not come to us all at one time; it comes only a day at a time. Even to-morrow is never ours till it becomes to-day, and we have nothing whatever to do with it but to pass down to it a fair and good inheritance in to-day's work well done and to-day's life well lived.

It is a blessed secret, this of living by the day. Any one can carry his burden, however heavy, till nightfall. Any one can do his work, however hard, for one day. Any one can live sweetly, patiently, lovingly, purely, till the sun goes down. And this is all that life ever really means to us—just one little day. "Do to-day's duty, fight to-day's temptation, and do not weaken and distract yourself by looking forward to things you can not see, and could not understand if you saw them."

God gives us nights to shut down the curtain of darkness on our little days. We can not see beyond. Short horizons make life easier, and give us one of the blessed secrets of brave, true, holy living.—British Weekly.

BEDTIME PRAYER.

Ere thou sleepest, gently lay
Every troubled thought away;
Put off worry and distress
As thou puttest off thy dress;
Drop thy burden and thy care
In the quiet arms of prayer.

Lord, thou knowest how I live,
All I've done amiss forgive;
All of good I've tried to do,
Strengthen, bless, and carry through;
All I love in safety keep,
While in Thee I fall asleep.

—Henry Van Dyke.

THE NEXT DOOR BOY.

"They've only got a boy," Elma said, tragically. She had been watching the next door family move in. Now everything and everyone was there, and it was quite certain that there was not a girl in the family.

"Never mind," consoled mother. "He may be a nice boy. I've known them quite as nice as girls."

The next day Elma brought in another report.

"He is a nice boy, mother. He has three dogs and a cat and some bunnies."

"If he has all those pets, and is kind to them, he must be a nice boy," said mother.

"I think he is kind, for they all love him. The dogs griggle all over when they see him."

That afternoon the new boy got acquainted. He came to the fence and said, "Would you like to see my dog do his tricks?"

Emma was very shy, but she said "yes," and the new boy called the littiest dog and had it do tricks. It could play dead, and march like a soldier with a stick for a sword, and sing and dance, and jump through a hoop. At first Elma smiled, but soon she shouted with laughter and clapped her hands.

"Oh, but he's lovely!" she said. "How did he learn so many things?"

"I taught him," said the boy, whose name was Harry. "He'll do anything for me."

"That's a perfectly wonderful boy. He's smarter than anyone," Elma confided to her mother.

And with the passing of each day the "wonderfulness" of the new boy increased. He could make tiny doll baskets out of peachnuts; he had a little workshop in the barn, and he could make furniture for the doll-house; he could make puzzle pictures with his jigsaw; he could whistle so that the birds answered him. And best of all, he would do all these things to amuse his admiring little neighbor.

Elma carried all these reports to her mother.

"I wish I were a boy," she said one day. "I wish I could learn to do things like Harry. I guess girls can't ever do any nice things."

"Oh, I think they can," said her mother.

"Not nice things like boys," doubted Elma.

And mother said no more about it just then. But the next morning she let Elma help her bake. Now, Elma was a good little cook, and she made some of the fancy yellow cakes all by herself. Mother had taught her months before.

When the baking was all done and cleared away, mother said, "Would you like to invite Harry over this afternoon and make some of your nice fudge for him?"

"I'd love to," said Elma. "And the dogs, too?"

"Yes, the dogs, too."

Elma ran out to invite Harry and that afternoon he came with all the dogs. He had them do their tricks for mother, and she admired them very much.

"Now," said Elma. "We'll make candy."

"Hurrah!" said Harry. "But can you make it yourself?"

They went into the kitchen and Elma made the candy. Then she set out a dainty lunch on the playroom table on the back porch.

"You made the sandwiches and the cake and the candy," said Harry, admirably, when he had tasted each of the good things, "and they're all as good as can be. You're a smart girl, all right. Boys can't do things as nice as that."

"Oh!" said Elma. Then she laughed. It was just what she had been saying about him. After all, perhaps girls could do some nice things.—Zelia Margaret Walters in Christian Standard.

A BAD LITTLE HOUSEKEEPER.

"Where are you going, my pretty maid?" said Aunt Kitty, meeting little Marian on the gravel walk with an armful of books to be put away.

"Oh, please don't stop me, Aunt Kitty," said Marian; "please don't. I promised Amy Lee to come back as quick as I could. We are playing keeping a boarding house. Amy is cook, and I am housekeeper."

"Well, Miss Housekeeper," called Aunt Kitty as she passed, "I am very sorry for your boarders."

"Why, Aunt Kitty?" Marian came to a full stop and looked back in surprise.

"Oh, never mind," said the auntie, walking on. "You are in a hurry now, but some day I'll tell you."

Many times that long Saturday little Marian took a rest from keeping boarders and fell to wondering what Aunt Kitty meant. And on another day she asked her.

"I mean that you are not a good keeper of your own wonderful little house."

"Why, auntie, mamma keeps our house," said Marian.

"Oh, I don't mean the big house, with wide porches and bay windows. I mean your own tiny little house, that God has made you keeper of—the one he built for your soul to live in."

"Do you mean my body?" asked Marian.

"Yes; that is a wonderful little house, and yet you do not mind abusing it, my little housekeeper. When you got your feet wet and had croup last week, that was neglecting your little house and doing it harm. When you are greedy about candy and cake you are spoiling your house. Sometimes you don't want to take your bath, and that is being a very bad housekeeper; and when you don't go to bed early, that is bad, too."

"I must go and tell Amy Lee about it," said Marian, soberly.—My Lesson.

EDISON AT HIS BOYHOOD HOME.

The following sent out by the Associated Press from Detroit, Michigan, recently, will doubtless be read with interest:

"Detroit, Mich., Oct. 28.—It has developed that Thomas A. Edison, the inventor, visiting scenes of his boyhood near here, cast off the mantle of years Tuesday and on the way to Port Huron once more tried his hand at the operator's key, and taking the wares of the news butcher, sold them among his friends.

"As a boy Mr. Edison sold papers and worked as an operator for the same railroad. As he passed through Mount Clemens he stepped into the telegraph operator's office and tapped off a message to his children in New Jersey.

"At Port Huron Mr. Edison was equipped as a news butcher. He appeared to take keen delight in the situation. When he stepped off the train he poured the proceeds of his day's business into the hat of a grinning porter."

THE INCONSPICUOUS GIRL.

There is one advantage about an extravagant style of dress for women. This advantage is always overlooked in the discussion of the subject, and yet most people are instinctively aware of it. It is the advantage of proud pre-eminence in modesty and beauty which it gives to the women who are not extravagantly or conspicuously dressed.

Here they come—the girls who, in the midst of fashionable excesses, of horrors and exposures, are modestly and prettily dressed. Everybody notices them with admiration except those whose opinion is not worth having. Avoiding conspicuousness, these nice girls become conspicuous by their modesty and grace. "That is the sort of girl that I would like to know," is the thought of every young man who sees them. And when the young man does know them, rest assured that he treats them with respect.

All that is good in the world belongs to these girls who stop short of the line of ostentation when they go out; who would rather pass quite unobserved than startle the community. They do not pass unobserved. They are supreme. It is their hands, not those of their ornate sisters, that will rule the world. Their estimation is not confined to people of their own sort. Even the flashily dressed woman envies their quiet power, and "wishes that she could dress that way." The trouble with her (so thinks the woman of the startling gown) is that she does not know how to achieve that effect of simplicity and grace. She looks upon it as an art that she has never learned, and never can learn. But to the world it looks very easy, since it lies in restraint.

The more extravagant the fashions get, the more pre-eminent, the more triumphant, the modest girl appears. Every new freak of fashion puts her a peg higher up. As Kungfut-Tze learned politeness from the impolite, so we learn to find the most perfect adornment in those who are not erratically adorned.—New York Mail.

DANCING AMONGST SCHOOL CHILDREN.

Prof. M. V. O'Shea, of the University of Wisconsin, has been discussing dancing in its relation to education, and he says: "No people have ever long endured among whom the ballroom, and the relations which it develops, occupied an important place during the period of early youth. Speaking generally, when an adolescent catches the dancing fever, and it runs its course, his mental evolution ceases betimes." The inevitable result, he claims, is "to stifle interest in the less exciting situations presented in science or history or language; while the mastery of these latter is absolutely essential for the welfare alike of the individual and of society."

DR. PINSON'S STATEMENT.

We are printing on another page a statement by Dr. W. W. Pinson, our head Missionary Secretary, which we hope will be carefully and discerningly read. We will not at this time undertake to make a full reply to Dr. Pinson, but will only call attention briefly to two or three features of his utterance.

1. Let it be noted that the Doctor does not at all touch upon the question as to what extent the denominational integrity of Southern Methodism is to be sacrificed in Mexico. He does not say one word as to the correctness of The Independent's statement that denominational lines are to be wiped out there; that there are to be "no Baptists, Methodists, or Presbyterians, but one body, called, 'The Evangelical Church of Mexico';" nor does he give us the least light as to how far we are to be tangled up in the hodge-podge arrangement with the mission boards of the other co-operating Churches, with some of which we differ widely in doctrines and have little in common. Bishop Hoss's statement that the proposed plan will take our forces out of the States in which we have our best churches, schools, and hospitals, and give them a poorly arranged and unsatisfactory territory, is also left entirely untouched by Dr. Pinson.

2. The Doctor's effort to show that the Church has been duly consulted concerning the proposed new arrangement is, we think, when carefully examined, weak and far from convincing. For instance, he admits that it is true, as was stated in our editorial in the New Orleans Christian Advocate of October 22, that a meeting of the Committee on Latin America (which is composed of the representatives of various Churches), was held in January, 1914, for the purpose of dealing with this matter, and that our missionaries had a meeting last February with the same object in view at which a paper was drawn up making definite proposals to the Cincinnati meeting of missionaries and the representatives of various boards that was to be held in August. Our General Conference convened in May, but though our missionaries and Secretaries had gone far enough with their scheme to submit propositions to an interchurch body, the great law-making assembly of Southern Methodism seems to have been entirely ignored. We respectfully submit that Dr. Pinson's naive statement that the Cincinnati Conference had not then acted and that in consequence its findings could not be submitted to the General Conference or to the meeting of our General Board of Missions last spring, lacks much of being a satisfactory explanation as to why they were not conferred with. According to his own admission, a comparatively well-matured plan had been developed and negotiations of far-reaching significance were going on with the representatives of other Churches for months before our Board of Missions and the General Conference met; why then, we again ask, were they left in the dark as to these important proceedings? The gentlemen carrying forward this movement knew perfectly well that the General Conference would not assemble again for four years, and that, if they let it pass without securing its endorsement of their plan, they would have to proceed without its needed authority; yet they let it adjourn without the least effort to ascertain its will concerning their project. If Dr. Cook and Miss Head could make an official statement on the subject in July, why could they not have done so to the General Conference in May and have sought its approval?

What Dr. Pinson says about the information that has been given out to the public, in our opinion, falls very far short of being an adequate defense of the course of those who have had this movement in charge. The statements that have been printed in the Church papers have been too indefinite for one to form a proper conception of what was in contemplation; no one of them has gone into exact details or has been accompanied by a map showing what territory we were to give up and what we were to acquire. And let it be noted that these statements were mere general notices as to what was being done, and did not invite an expression of opinion concerning the issues involved and were not in any true sense an effort to ascertain what the will of the Church was. After all that Doctor Pinson has said, it remains perfectly clear that a revolutionary policy has been adopted concerning our work in Mexico which will largely impair, if it does not destroy, the denominational integrity of Southern Methodism in that country, without any really representative body of the Church having been consulted. Taking his own statement, it will be seen that thirty-three members of the Mission Board are presuming to handle this great undertaking almost wholly apart from the General Conference and the great masses of the Church. And nothing at all is said in the Doctor's discussion about conferring with our native members in Mexico concerning the proposed readjustment. Dr. Andres Osuna is doubtless a wise and good man, but we scarcely think he alone of all our Mexican Methodists needs to be consulted. Nor should our readers attach too much importance to the claim that the Board of Missions has been largely of one accord in this matter until the complexion of that body has been carefully considered.

Some may think that the war in Mexico has so nearly destroyed our work there, that it will make but little difference what is done; but, according to the statement made by our Bishops in their address to the General Conference last May, this seems far from being true. They said:

"In Mexico there have been revolutions and counter revolutions, wars and rumors of war. But the statistics of our work in that field are not discouraging. In 1910 the membership was reported as 7386, and in 1914 the figures are 6935. The number of Sunday school scholars has decreased, most naturally under the conditions which have prevailed, the number in 1910 having been 5663, and the number reported in 1914 being 5105. However, the number of students in our Mexican schools and colleges has advanced from 3391 in 1910 to 4164 in 1914. Contributions on the field for the support of the work amounted to $6235 in 1914 as compared with $6515 in 1910."

A GREAT DAY AT WHITWORTH COLLEGE.

Last Monday, November 9, was a memorable day in the annals of Whitworth College, at Brookhaven, Miss. For the past four or five years a movement has been under way to improve and enlarge the building equipment of that historic institution, and as these plans had been brought to a successful culmination, it was decided by the College authorities to celebrate publicly this notable achievement. The day was a bright and beautiful one and the spacious campus perhaps never presented a more attractive appearance than it did on this interesting occasion. The exercises, which began at 3 o'clock in the afternoon, were held in the Mary Jane Lampton Auditorium, a magnificent brick structure with a large seating capacity. A splendid audience, made up of the people of Brookhaven, visitors from neighboring towns and cities, and the faculty and students of the College, was in attendance. The meeting was gracefully presided over by Mr. T. B. Lampton, of Jackson, Miss., a distinguished member of the Board of Trustees, who, after some brief introductory remarks, presented Miss Drake, who spoke for the Faculty of the College, delivering an address that was appropriate, eloquent, and strikingly suggestive. Mrs. Higdon, an honored Whitworth graduate, then brought a happy and inspiring message from the Alumnae, and Mrs. Tyler and Mrs. Brady, of Brookhaven, Miss., spoke informally and impressively for "The Climbers" and "Peripatetics," the two women's clubs of that city. The concluding address was delivered by Dr. A. F. Watkins, of Millsaps College, who was singularly felicitous in his remarks. The program was interspersed with music, including a brilliant piano solo by Miss Cooper, a charming vocal solo by Miss Shanoun, and a delightful chorus song by members of the Peripatetic Club. All of the speakers paid beautiful tributes to Dr. Cooper and bore testimony to the great service which he has rendered the College during the thirteen years of his connection with it. After the exercises were over, a reception was held in the beautiful new center building (which the trustees have gone on record as desiring to have named Cooper Hall, in honor of Dr. Cooper), at which refreshments were served.

Dr. Cooper and the Trustees of Whitworth College are certainly to be congratulated upon what they have lately accomplished in the way of strengthening and increasing the facilities of that fine educational plant. They have constructed a President's Home, a thoroughly modern two-story residence, at a cost of $5000; have built a Mary Jane Lampton Auditorium, said by competent critics to be unsurpassed by any similar building in Mississippi at an expense of $20,000; have overhauled and improved in many ways Margaret Hall, The Institute, and the Whitworth Building, providing in the latter a new dining room, which is heated by steam and which has an elegant butler's pantry and all other necessary conveniences; and they have just finished erecting, where the Brown House formerly stood, the new central building which is 112 by 42 feet, which is three-stories high, steam-heated, and which is supplied on every floor with sanitary bathrooms, toilets, and marble drinking fountains, while in the first story provision has been made for a complete and up-to-date gymnasium. This structure, which cost about $17,500, has two imposing fronts and is very handsome in every respect.

These improvements, taken together, represent an outlay of approximately $50,000, and there is no indebtedness on the property, individual members of the Board of Trustees having assumed responsibility for the comparatively small balance that remains to be provided for. Of the money needed to make these improvements, the city of Brookhaven gave $10,000; the Church at large, in response to the efforts of Rev. P. D. Hardin, Rev. H. A. Gatlin, Rev. L. L. Roberts, and Rev. L. E. Alford, at different times financial agents of the College, has paid in about $7000 (there are still many subscriptions outstanding); and the remainder came from individual contributors, among whom the largest givers were the Lampton brothers, Mr. P. H. Enochs, Major R. W. Millsaps, Mr. Louis Dantzler, Mr. James Hand, and Mr. George S. Weems. Dr. Cooper himself has given about $8000. That this money should have been raised within the past five years, in the section of Mississippi most severely injured by the boll weevil, is most remarkable and bears eloquent testimony to the aggressive energy and efficient leadership of Dr. Cooper and his co-workers.

Never was the outlook for Whitworth College so bright as it is to-day. Her equipment is far more ample than ever before and the spirit of progress possesses those in charge of her affairs. Her courses of study are complete and thorough and she is steadily widening the scope of her work. A well-equipped Domestic Science Department has lately been opened and is attracting much attention. The College has an excellent working library, a well-furnished science laboratory, and its Music Department is scarcely surpassed anywhere in the South, being furnished with twenty-one pianos, two of which are Knabe Grands. The present attendance, including those taking specials, is about 200, and the number of boarders is 155. The campus embraces eight acres admirably situated in the heart of beautiful Brookhaven, and the property is valued at $150,000. During the 13 years that the present administration has been in operation all bills have been promptly met, the teachers have been regularly paid, and there have been no floating debts.

Dr. Cooper's unselfish work for the upbuilding of this noble institution could scarcely be too highly praised. He has rendered it a service which can never be forgotten, and he has perhaps done more for the Christian education of the young womanhood of Mississippi than any man who has ever lived in that State, with the possible exception of Dr. H. F. Johnson. He has brought into existence the long-talked-of "Greater Whitworth," and in so doing has made both the present and future generations his debtors and has erected to himself an imperishable monument. A truer, worthier, more high-minded educator cannot be found within the bounds of Southern Methodism.

SAYS IT IS COMING.

Four more States were added to the prohibition column in the elections held on Tuesday, November 3, namely, Arizona, Colorado, Oregon, and Washington. There are now in all fourteen prohibition States, the other ten being Georgia, Kansas, Maine, Mississippi, North Carolina, North Dakota, Oklahoma, Tennessee, Virginia, and West Virginia. Of course, there are a number of other States that are very largely under prohibition rule. It really begins to look as if the day is not far distant when the liquor traffic will be outlawed throughout the entire Nation by federal legislation. Discussing the rapid growth of sentiment in favor of such action a few days since, "Savoyard," the brilliant and widely known Washington correspondent, who is famed for his foresight as to approaching events, said:

"While I should vote against it, the Prohibition amendment is sure to come.

"If the saloon had never gone into politics it would be in less danger. In Louisville, Ky., the saloon is Democratic; in Cincinnati, Ohio, it is Republican. In politics it is conscienceless and brutal. Where is the city government in the United States that has not been run by the liquor dealers? The saloon is an inveterate, insolent, defiant law-breaker, and it is as great a fool as it is a ruffian. It has to go, sooner or later, and it will be a case of suicide.

"I am not exactly persuaded that the temperance folk have set about the thing in the way that will prove most effective. They propose to prohibit. Why don't they seek to abolish? African slavery was abolished by a constitutional amendment that forbade a man to have property in a slave. If they would fix an amendment that would not allow a man to have property in alcohol, they would stop making it.

"I believe that most of the evil of the drinking habit comes from the treating custom. There is as much sense (and less harm) in treating a friend to a pair of socks as to a dram of liquor.

"The saloon has degraded our politics, brought disrepute on universal suffrage, and it daily and hourly violates the law. It has beggared tens of thousands of good men, and the American people are after the liquor traffic with a slavery stick. He is past fifty years old who will read a Prohibition plank in the Constitution of the United States.

"I am not advocating it, I am only predicting it."

WANTED "A MERRYTORIUM."

Many things both pathetic and amusing have taken place in the South since the present distressing financial condition was developed by the Great European War, but no other incident that we have heard of quite measures up to one described by Mr. Bankhead, of Alabama, in a speech in the United States Senate some weeks ago. In the course of his somewhat extended remarks on the cotton crisis, the Senator said:

"Different plans have been discussed, but no comprehensive one has been offered or accepted broad and safe enough to meet the situation. Of all the plans that have come to my attention none is more pathetic than that of the Alabama farmer who sought relief, as expressed in a letter to his bank, which, omitting names, is as follows:

"Europe are issuing merrytoriums, so that the people can put off paying their debts a while. Now I have eighteen bales of cotton and owe debt amounting to about $600. I can't sell my cotton pay for enough to pay out and have anything left to pay taxes and live on next year. If they are selling merrytoriums in N. Y., I wish you would see what it will cost to buy me one for the amount of my debts good for six mos.

"Yours truly."

"I read this letter because it is a pathetic example of the distress of the Southern farmer at this time."

PERSONAL AND OTHER NOTES.

Rev. R. H. Harper has had a successful year at the Parker Memorial Church, of this city, and is in fine favor with his people. He excels both in pastoral and pulpit work.

The new main building at Millsaps College will be formally opened with appropriate exercises on November 24. Bishop Murrah is expected to be present and speak on that occasion.

Work has been begun on the new church at Morton, Miss., of which Rev. J. T. Abney is the efficient pastor. Brother Abney hopes to have the building completed before the coming session of the Mississippi Conference.

Among those who attended the Whitworth celebrations last Monday were Rev. W. H. Saunders, of Fernwood, Miss., and Rev. W. M. Williams and wife, of Jackson, Miss. Brother Williams is one of the trustees of the College.

Rev. E. H. Cunningham, of Myrtle, Miss., is at the close of his third year on that charge. Between 40 and 50 members have been received into the church by him this year. Through his labors and the loyalty of his people, the work has advanced under his pastorate.

The Advocate gratefully acknowledges new and renewal subscriptions as follows: Rev. J. W. Booth, Merryville, La., 4; Rev. W. S. Lagrone, Clarksdale, Miss., 2; Rev. J. T. Abney, Morton, Miss., 4; Rev. S. A. Brown, Booneville, Miss., 2; Rev. T. M. Bradley, Shelby, Miss., 2.

Our handsome new church at Moss Point, Miss., which the Dantzler brothers have erected at that place in honor of their sainted mother, was dedicated by Bishop W. A. Candler last Sunday. We hope that Dr. B. F. Jones, our pastor at Moss Point, will at his earliest convenience send us a full account of that interesting occasion.

We acknowledge the reception from Dr. and Mrs. S. Aiden Smith of an invitation to the marriage of their daughter, Miss Gretchen, to Mr. Walton Angus McMillan, which will take place at their residence, 2511 Milan Street, New Orleans, La., at 6 o'clock on Wednesday evening, Nov. 18, 1914. The Advocate extends in advance congratulations and best wishes.

The following are the dates of the sessions of our patronizing Conferences: North Mississippi, which will be held by Bishop Waterhouse, Dec. 2; Louisiana, which will be held by Bishop Candler, Dec. 9; Mississippi, which will be held by Bishop Denny, Dec. 9. From the Advocate's standpoint, it is regrettable that the latter two Conferences should conflict.

The beautiful poem written in appreciation of Mrs. M. L. Gustine, which was published in the Advocate of October 29 was improperly credited to Mrs. A. L. Greenwood. Mrs. Greenwood sent the poem to the Advocate and did not give the name of the author, Mrs. H. L. Grinstead. We therefore naturally inferred that it was the product of her pen. We regret this mistake and take pleasure in correcting it.

Miss Elie Willingham, of Eupora, Miss., the accomplished Sunday School Secretary of the Durant District, in a business note to the Editor, says: "I should be very sorry to have to miss a single copy of my own church paper which I enjoy so much. I hope that 'hard times' may not shorten the subscription list to the Christian Advocate by one single name." Such sentiments are appreciated by the Advocate.

A note from Rev. J. D. Simpson, of Pickens, Miss., informs us of the death of Mr. J. F. Wilburn, an esteemed and highly respected member of our church at that place, which occurred on Nov. 4. We greatly regret to chronicle the decease of this worthy and useful layman, of whom we have known for many years, and we extend sympathy to the bereaved. A more extended notice concerning the death of Brother Wilburn from the pen of his pastor will appear in the next issue of the Advocate.

The only Methodist minister in the New Orleans District, except Dr. J. M. Henry, the presiding elder, who will be moved by the operation of the time limit is Rev. J. G. Snelling, pastor of the Carrollton Avenue Church. Brother Snelling has made an excellent record in his present field and will carry a fine report to Conference. Dr. Henry's administration as presiding elder has been strong and able, and has made for the upbuilding of Methodism in the Crescent City.

Our new church at Talisheek, La., was dedicated last Sunday by Rev. M. B. Sharbrough, of Columbia, Miss. Talisheek is one of the appointments of the St. Tammany charge, of which Rev. T. V. Peters is pastor. Brother Peters and our worthy flock at Talisheek are to be congratulated upon having erected so substantial a house of worship in that community. Brother Sharbrough was a pioneer worker in that field and is held in high esteem by many of the citizens who knew him years ago.

It was the Editor's pleasure to spend last Sunday in McComb City, Miss., with Dr. I. W. Cooper, who is serving that charge until Conference. We were greeted by an excellent congregation at the 11 o'clock hour and by a very good audience in the evening. This is one of the strong churches of the Mississippi Conference and embraces among its membership many most excellent people. We acknowledge ourself indebted while in McComb City to Brother J. B. Alford and Brother L. Sherman for appreciated courtesies.

Rev. H. W. May, presiding elder of the Alexandria District, in a personal letter to the Editor, bearing date of Nov. 7, says: "I am closing a good year on this district. I go to-day to Oberlin, a new parish site, to hold a quarterly conference, the first ever held there by a presiding elder of the M. E. Church, South. This is in Allen Parish." Brother May has pushed out into many new fields since he has been in charge of the Alexandria District. Indeed, our Louisiana presiding elders generally seem to like pioneering work.

Writing from Biloxi, Miss., on Nov. 5, Dr. W. H. Huntley says: "I am just leaving to join the preachers at Brother Burton's annual dinner, which it is his rule to give them every year. A great soldier is Burton! Though confined to his bed a large part of the year, his work has been successfully administered, as his report at Conference will show. I doubt whether any other member of the Conference could have accomplished as much as he has." Brother Burton's work during his pastorate at Gulfport has, indeed, been a monumental one.

Rev. W. G. Burks, of Shuqualak, Miss., sends news of interest for the Advocate's readers. He writes the following: "Work on our church building is progressing rapidly, and it is hoped that it will be completed by the end of this month. It will be an elegant and commodious frame building, a much better house than the one we lost by fire last April, and our people will justly be proud of it. Much of the credit for the success of the enterprise is due to the Building Committee, of which Dr. J. A. Perry is the wide-awake chairman."

Dr. Felix R. Hill, Sr., has lately returned to New Orleans and is stopping with his son, Dr. F. R. Hill, Jr., the pastor of Rayne Memorial Church. Both of these brethren favored the Advocate office with a call last Monday morning, but the Editor, being out of the city, missed seeing them, much to his regret.

Rev. J. A. McCormack, of Franklinton, La., has recently been engaged in a stirring evangelistic campaign in that city. He states, in a letter written to the Editor several days ago, the following: "We are in the second week of our revival campaign here and the work is progressing splendidly. Rev. Thomas J. Norsworthy, who is conducting the meeting, is an evangelist of exceptional ability. We had a great service last night, in which 8 professed conversion. Quite a large number had been saved before. The church is being greatly revived. Please pray for us."

On Thursday, Nov. 5, a portrait of the Hon. Wm. H. Foster, who for over forty years was a brilliant practitioner at the New Orleans bar, and who died in 1888, was presented to the Supreme Court of Louisiana, to be hung upon the wall of the room in which its sessions are held. The presentation address was made by Mr. E. T. Merrick, whose father was the senior partner of the firm of which Mr. Foster was a member, and with which he himself later became connected. The picture of Mr. Foster was the gift of his two sons, Rev. John F. Foster of Amite City, La., and Mr. H. F. Foster of New Orleans, Chairman of the Board of Stewards of the Parker Memorial Church.

At a recent quarterly conference held in Durant, Miss., a resolution was adopted expressing appreciation of the service rendered in the choir of our church in that city by Mrs. Eugene Cole and Mrs. Kate Deloach, who, without remuneration, have unselfishly devoted their time and talents to furnishing the congregation with good music and singing. Such action, we feel sure, was timely and proper. The fidelity of many persons belonging to our church choirs is such that it deserves hearty commendation. The Durant quarterly conference also specially commended the efficient and fruitful labors of Brother E. N. Broyles, the pastor, and Brother W. S. Shipman, the presiding elder.

The following appreciated note has been recently received from Dr. I. W. Cooper, of Brookhaven, Miss., president of Whitworth College: "Rev. T. H. Dorsey, of Water Valley, Miss., has just closed a most gracious meeting in Brookhaven. The results were a general revival among the church members and 26 additions to the roll of the Methodist church. Brother Dorsey's sermons were strong, clear, convincing, and spiritual. As an evangelist, he has not reached the nervous state. There was nothing in his services to cause the most sensitive to criticize. He is a most delightful Christian brother. The pastor at Brookhaven, Brother Lewis, is loved by every one. The Brookhaven church is improving every year."

PEOPLE WHO HELP THE PRAYER-MEETING.

The busy business man who regularly attends it; the people, young and old, who sit in the front seats; the gray-haired old saint who comes with a smiling face and always has something to say of the love of Christ; the timid people who can only quote a passage of Scripture or utter a brief testimony, but whose lives show that they really love Christ; the young people who testify promptly, utter short prayers, and sing sweetly; the genial soul who can not speak or pray or sing without increasing the spiritual sunshine; the social people who welcome strangers and do not hurry away when the meeting is closed.—Pittsburgh Christian Advocate.

In July last the Postal Saving Banks of the United States had 388,000 depositors, with deposits aggregating, in round numbers, $43,000,000. Since the outbreak of the European war the number of such depositors has largely increased, and the deposits have jumped up to about $53,000,000. When the times are out of joint and business conditions are uncertain, the people like to place their money where they think it will be safe, caring little about the rate of interest being low.

They who bow their heads before God may hold them erect before the world.—A. S. Wilshire.

TAKES OFF DANDRUFF, HAIR STOPS FALLING

Save your Hair! Get a 25 cent bottle of Danderine right now—Also
stops itching scalp.

Thin, brittle, colorless and scraggy
hair is mute evidence of a neglected
scalp; of dandruff—that awful scurf.
There is nothing so destructive to the hair as dandruff. It robs the hair of its lustre, its strength and its very life; eventually producing a feverishness and itching of the scalp, which
if not remedied causes the hair roots
to shrink, loosen and die—then the hair falls out fast. A little Danderine tonight—now—any time—will surely
save your hair.

Get a 25 cent bottle of Knowlton's
Danderine from any drug store. You
surely can have beautiful hair and lots
of it if you will just try a little Danderine. Save your hair! Try it!

Mrs. MARY JANE TAYLOR (nee Roberts), the devoted wife of Brother T. W. Taylor, an active steward of the Liberty Circuit, passed to her eternal reward on May 10, 1914. This was the earthly end of a long, busy and useful life. Sister Taylor was born in Amite County, Miss., on August 17, 1837, was converted and joined the M. E. Church, South, when about sixteen years of age and lived a quiet, unobtrusive Christian life.
She was a true and good wife, always giving loving thought and care to the welfare and happiness of her husband.
She was the mother of six children, all living but one. She also reared several other children. Her life was largely given to the unselfish and noble work of bearing the burdens of the young, which to her was a ministry of love. In this work she possibly found her chief joy in life. No nobler work is given to any person than this, in which she delighted and excelled. The home is cheerless because of the absence of the one whose wealth of love and tender ministries had been for so many years its great inspiration. May God comfort the husband and children who mourn their great loss! They can safely hope to meet her in the "better world."

T. W. ADAMS.

On the morning of Oct. 16, 1914, surrounded by loved ones and friends, the spirit of MINNIE EWING BLAKE-
MAN left this earth for heaven.
Everything that kind and loving hands could do, had been done to prolong her life, but the Lord claimed her for his own. When she realized that the end was near, her first request was that two of her favorite songs, "Just as I am," and "The Home over there," be sung; then for prayer at her bedside, though she had no fear of death.
As she bade her loved ones and friends good-bye, her parting exhortation was to trust Jesus for salvation, and meet her in heaven. She said that she was leaving many things undone; but was faithful to the end, sending out for many in the community to give them a parting word, and begging them all to get right with God. To know her was to love her, and her life had been one of loving service for others. She was ever ready to help those in need in every walk of life. Her influence will never die, for she was "always abounding in the work of the Lord."
How we will miss her in our community, but her home is bereft indeed!
She was at one time District Secretary of the Woman's Home Mission Society in the Jackson District, and organized and presided over two auxiliaries in her own community where she was an ideal leader. Inasmuch as God in his providence has called from our midst our beloved sister, be it resolved:

1. That we as members of the Woman's Missionary Society hold in love and appreciation her memory, as wife, mother, friend and sister in 'Christ.'

2. That we tender to the husband, infant babe, and other members of the family, our love and sympathy in their great bereavement.

3. That a copy of these resolutions be spread on the minutes of our Society, that a copy be sent to the family, and to the New Orleans Christian Advocate for publication.

Signed: Mrs. J. S. Henderson, Mrs.
Cora L. Brister, Mrs. Mollie M. Brister, Committee.

SUSAN FRANCES STEPHENSON
(nee Spratley) was born near Oak Ridge, Miss., on August 16, 1849; she joined the Church on July 5, 1868; married Thomas Stephenson on January 6, 1869; and died on July 30, 1914. Being converted about the time she joined the Church, she ever lived a consistent life. She was sweet-spirited, a devout Methodist; a loving companion, a faithful wife, a devoted mother, and a gentle and refined lady.

She was retiring in disposition, safe in counsel, pure in heart, and without guile. Such were the characteristics of our departed sister in her earthly life. She has now entered the larger life where her husband and three children were awaiting her, and has left to relatives and the three children who mourn her departure a hallowed Christian influence—a priceless heritage. "Precious in the sight of the Lord is the death of his saints." At such times the mourners' tears are dried, and with clear eyes they look beyond the fading twilight on the shores of time and behold the growing golden dawn of the sweet by and by. Sister Stephenson is simply hidden from mortal view; we shall see her again. God bless and comfort the bereaved. Her former pastor,
J. W. CAMPBELL.

RECIPE FOR GRAY HAIR.

To half pint of water add 1 oz. Bay
Rum, a small box of Barbo Compound, and 1-4 oz. of glycerine. Apply to the hair twice a week until it becomes the desired shade. Any druggist can put this up or you can mix it at home at very little cost. Full directions for making and use come in each box of Barbo Compound. It will gradually darken streaked, faded gray hair, and removes dandruff. It is excellent for falling hair and will make harsh hair soft and glossy. It will not color the scalp, is not sticky or greasy, and does not rub off.

LIFE'S NOBLEST WORK.

I am again delighted to present a few brief reflections, from which,
I trust, some one may profit.
We usually assume the character of the materials that we take into and give out from our minds. If our thoughts are lofty, if they are prompted by right aims, integrity, and honor, we conquer our native littleness, and climb up to the apex of human dignity and worth.

We are builders of character and the designs left upon the tressel board of life may have its influence in shaping the lives of others. Then as a duty, how eager and willingly we should spread the broad mantle of charity over the frailties of our fellow beings, and scatter sunshine along the pathway of life! It is our duty to be actively engaged in a struggle to make this world a better place in which to live. Fidelity to all that is holy demands that we give ourselves to this task, trusting the powers of truth, the reality of love, and the sovereign worth of character. For, only as we incarnate this vision in actual life and activity does it become real, tangible and effective. We should not be deaf to the appeals of the needy, but responding with that fundamental principle, brotherly love, relief and truth, we should always be willing to go even on foot, if necessary, to minister to those who need our aid. We should remember that true happiness consists in making others happy.

R. R. SEBREN.
Harrisonville, Miss.

SIXTEEN YEARS OF TROUBLE.

Ended for H. H. Jackson, Friar's
Point, Miss., with the use of Gray's Ointment. "I am glad to report that it has made a permanent cure of a sore of sixteen years' standing," he writes. This is one of the numerous instances of the remarkable curative powers of Gray's Ointment. Since it was first prepared in 1820, it has been used year in and year out by American families for boils, sores, ulcers, wounds, burns, bruises and all abrasions and eruptions of the skin. It quickly heals the skin trouble and is a sure preventive of dangerous blood poison which often follows from a neglected skin wound. Only 25c a box at druggists. Get a free sample by

Tidings From the Field

Slidell and Covington Charge.

Dear Dr. Meek: I am sending you for your good paper a report of our 4 meetings and pastoral labors in this charge. The places at which these meetings were held are Pearl River, Slidell, Covington, and Ramsey. Brother W. W. Perry assisted me at Pearl River and Slidell. He did some most excellent preaching and we think that lasting good was done. As a result of these services, 5 members were received by letter. In my next two meetings held at Covington and Ramsey, Brother W. T. Currie assisted me. At these places there were no visible results, though he preached the Word earnestly and condemned sin in no uncertain tones, "reproving, rebuking, exhorting with all long suffering and doctrine." Brother Currie is "doing the work of an evangelist, and making full proof of his ministry.".....As to the results of my pastoral work, they may be summed up as follows: I have baptized 11 infants, received 10 members by letter and received 44 by baptism and vows. We have painted the parsonage and will dedicate our church at Slidell at the time of the fourth quarterly conference. The work in this field is greatly hampered by Catholicism and the liquor traffic. Morally speaking, this country has long been too largely the dumping ground for the immoral element of New Orleans and a resort for all kinds of vice. But God has some on this work who have not bowed the knee to Baal. We give all the praise to Him who said that his Word shall not return unto him void.—D. L. Griffin, P. C.

Booneville, Miss.

Dear Dr. Meek: I have just been running over the record of the past four years in this charge, Booneville Station, and calling up, as I could, my many experiences in this pastorate. My conclusion is that no pastor has any right to expect a more pleasant stay among a people than I have had. Into these four years has been crowded many trying and vexing experiences, many disappointments, many moments of anxious waiting and often wondering; but oh, the bright, happy experiences, the many good things that have come my way! Here we have a well organized church, a splendid set of men on the board of stewards; a good Sunday school, with an efficient superintendent; a live Woman's Missionary Society, with capable officers; a praying membership in the church, and a good parsonage. Only one who has been forced out of such a place by the "time limit" can fully appreciate my feelings as the last month of the Conference year opens. In these four years all financial obligations have been met; many improvements have been made on the church, a piano was bought; a new carpet laid; a church repainted and beautified, and much money raised for "other objects." Our membership is now over 500, 84 having been added this year up to date. I have married about 55 couples, and buried many persons whom I had learned to love and who are sadly missed in the church and community. My purpose is to drop out without the proverbial "farewell sermon" and go with a prayer that my successor may have the earnest co-operation of the people, at least as much as I have had, and that he may have fewer failures to regret and be more successful than I have been. He may be well assured that he will come to a loyal band who will receive him gladly. S. A. BROWN.

Alberta, La.

Dear Dr. Meek: Please allow me space in your paper to make a report of my work. We have had some very good meetings. Brother J. W. Faulk is a fine fellow and rendered us excellent service. My old Castor Church is much better spiritually because of his ministrations.....Next comes Castor Station, where I was assisted by Rev. G. D. Anders, who won his way into the hearts of our people there. We had some old-time gospel sermons, and there were 4 additions on profession of faith.....I was assisted in my meeting at Alberta by Rev. H. T. Young, who preached the Word to the people effectively and about 18 persons joined the Church on profession of faith, and 2 by certificate. We received among the number some fine business men. Brother Young won the hearts of my people and some of our young men will now lead prayer-meetings. Young is a great fellow and a splendid preacher. We have organized a Woman's Union Missionary Society, which is composed of a fine band of women who are doing a good work. Our League has been reorganized and the young people are taking an active part in the work. We had the Bienville Parish Sunday School Association in our little town, and the attendance at Sunday school has been fine since then. Mr. W. A. Davenport was chosen to organize adult Bible classes in this district, and being a very busy man, he engaged good old Dr. Pippin to assist him. They have organized nine classes (mixed) and some Sunday schools where there were none.—H. Wade Cudd.

THE LOWER COAST MISSION.

Last winter I told the readers of the Advocate about the conditions that prevailed along the Lower Coast in Plaquemines Parish. Brother J. W. Lee very wisely corrected some of my statements at that time. I was led to write as I did by reports given me by residents of that section, but I have learned since then that the people who were then the most willing to talk and tell everything are now dreadfully silent and scarce. Brother Lee was right in every one of his statements, but even then the fact remained that that whole Parish was without Protestant services.

I have made nine trips down there this year and have established five regular preaching places besides Daisy, where we have a church building. I have been cordially received and the work has opened in a way highly satisfactory. My last trip extended from October 21 to October 27. During those six days I traveled 230 miles by rail and water and crossed the Mississippi River ten times. I preached at the following places: Buras, Burrwood, Tropical Bend, Point Pleasant, Treadaway, and Daisy. At each place there met me nice congregations and the people manifested deep interest in the Gospel. I proposed to them that they raise enough money to employ a regular pastor to give his full time there next year. My suggestion was well received and already almost enough has been promised to employ a man at an $800 salary. It is not right to cause people who are able to pay for the services of a minister to expect the Church to send them a pastor and pay him with missionary money.

We expect to recommend that a pastor be sent to the Lower Coast circuit and we hope to present to our presiding elder a signed statement guaranteeing an $800 salary for next year.

The Lower Coast country presents many attractive features. At this season of the year thousands of orange trees present themselves, yellow with their luscious harvest. The bays and canals extending in from the Gulf are alive with schools of trout, croakers, drums, and red fish. Schooners loaded with oysters, shrimp and crabs are to be seen landing all day long, and the housewives know exactly how to make palatable every product of the sea. I caught a five-pound red fish the very first time I cast my line and it made me so restless to stay with the job that it was with difficulty that I resisted the temptation to cancel all further engagements and get me a bucket of shrimp and stay and fish all day. My enthusiasm was somewhat cooled a little later when a heavy wind hit me when in a skiff half a mile from shore. The agitated waves danced and shivered and even had the temerity to climb in the boat with me. I was most gloriously soaked by the time I reached shore, but I never lost my five-pounder.

Plaquemines Parish needs the prayerful attention of a Protestant minister. Its residents are big-hearted folk, but many years of neglect has allowed false standards of living to gain headway until community customs almost shock one who was reared in another place. I would say that liquor is the greatest curse of the Lower Coast. At almost every turn one sees men, women, and little children drinking. I have seen mothers give their little children whiskey and then whip them because they couldn't stand up. Wine is so commonly used that even a minister gets used to seeing it drunk. I have not raised my voice against its use, because I know that if I teach them to love Jesus and lead them to have faith in Him, they will by their new nature turn from such things. To cry out now, would be to lose an audience with them. I have faith to believe that a great work can be done in Plaquemines Parish, and I believe now is the time to do it.

MISSISSIPPI STATE W. C. T. U. MEETING.

October 22 marked the beginning of the thirty-first annual State W. C. T. U. session in our beloved Mississippi. The hospitable homes of our town were thrown open to the many officials and delegates representing various sections, and our hearts were indeed glad for the wholesome influence which seemed to permeate the atmosphere.

Mesdames Clarke, Stanley, Hodges, Scales, Unger, Hawks, Gillespie, Featherston, and Misses May Russell, Madge Montgomery, and Laura Stout were among the number who contributed so generously toward making the occasion a success, and by their public talks inspired many to feel a deeper interest in the temperance cause.

Mrs. Francis E. Beauchamp, of national fame who has accomplished so much along prohibition lines in Kentucky, was present and delivered several masterly addresses to receptive audiences. Her ability as a speaker and ease upon the platform are almost unparalleled, while her zeal and efficiency in the cause advocated are impressive and convincing. The singing by a well-trained choir was an important feature, and the special songs by Mr. Harvey Spencer and Dr. Tabb were well rendered.

Several new members were secured, and the auxiliary here will doubtless go forward under the proficient and untiring leadership of Mrs. E. A. Neblett.

The people of Eupora are to be congratulated upon having had this worthy body in their midst, and we believe that there will be lasting results, and a steady retreat for the contaminating influences of whiskey and tobacco. All those who gave of their services toward making the occasion a success have our gratitude, and special mention should be made of the activities of the Boy Scouts, Campfire Girls, Professor A. B. Campbell and Rev. Jas. T. McCafferty.

Those in attendance on Friday evening will remember with pleasure the interesting talk given by Mrs. Mattie Martin who has been a missionary under the auspices of the Louisiana Presbyterian Board in Congo, Africa for several years. She was accompanied by a little Christianized Negro girl who sang "From Greenland's Icy Mountains" in her native tongue. These things were conducive to awakening an interest in the needed enlightenment of that benighted country.

THE CIGARETTE CURSE.

The Evangelical Herald has this paragraph:

"Mr. Henry Ford, the noted manufacturer of Detroit, Mich., has announced that he will help to fight the habit of smoking cigarettes, especially among boys. When Mr. Ford was in Fort Myers, Fla., recently on his Southern trip with Thomas A. Edison, a discussion arose between the two concerning the evils of cigarette smoking. When the inventor returned to his laboratory in Orange, N. J., he wrote a letter on the matter to Mr. Ford. Copies of it will be framed at Mr. Ford's expense, and if School Superintendent Chadsey agrees, they will be hung in all Detroit public schools. The letter follows:

"Friend Ford: The injurious agent in cigarettes comes principally from the burning paper wrapper. The substance thereby formed is called 'acrolein.' It has a violent action on the nerve centers, producing degeneration of the cells of the brain, which is quite rapid among boys. Unlike most narcotics, this degeneration is permanent and uncontrollable. I employ no person who smokes cigarettes."

Here we have the unimpeachable testimony of a great scientist to the dreadful peril of the cigarette. It is high time that the truth was told far and wide if the boys and girls are to be saved from this curse. If all this is true, how can physicians and even preachers smoke the cigarette? Surely we need a livelier conscience on this subject. Tell your boys and girls what Thomas Edison says about the effect of the cigarette on the brain.

LIFE A CALL TO SERVICE.

Life is a perpetual call to service. There is always something to be done, if not always somebody at hand to do it. Particular occasions arise and disappear, but man's task is never over. Duties transpire and expire, but duty is a ceaseless thing. Responsibilities are incessant; the urgencies that are upon one seem at times overpowering. But all this constitutes the very richness and grandeur of human life, and renders it akin to the supremely self-tasking life of God himself. The one thing that must always be done among the many things, the duty of the duties, is to walk humbly with one's Maker and to serve him everywhere and forever.—Zion's Herald.

Believe Me I Eat Everything

For I know a Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablet Will Digest Any Meal at Any Time.

How often do we see men who can not eat and how often do we hear other men boasting of their abilities to eat.

The secret of all health is digestion. The secret of digestion is the juices which are supplied by the body to separate the ingredients needed from those that are of no use to the system.

The Pessimist—"Your appetite disgusts me. You eat like a giant sloth."

The Optimist—"Believe me, I give my body what it tells me to give it, and whether it be midnight or noon I always obey my appetite and then I eat a Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablet."

When a heavy meal has been eaten the entire body is called upon to furnish the digestive organs with forces to take care of it. The more the strain the weaker become the forces to take care of the next meal as well.

A Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablet aids Nature in Nature's own way. These little tablets are filled with the very ingredients and essences so needful to every normal and perfect stomach.

One quality or ingredient of a Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablet will digest 3000 times its weight in food. Think if you can what a big help this means to a depleted digestion. Other ingredients aid in building up the digestive juices and blood. The stomach and intestines have their duties lightened and thus irritation, soreness and raw linings are permitted to be cured by the system naturally, quickly, harmlessly.

Thousands of dyspeptics and stomach sufferers would be glad to tell you what Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets have done for them. This is what makes these tablets sold in every drug store in this country, price 50 cents.

To anyone wishing a free trial of these tablets please address F. A. Stuart Co., 150 Stuart Bldg., Marshall, Mich., and a small sample package will be mailed free.

God never gives all he has to give; the time never comes when he has nothing more to bestow.—Rev. J. R. Miller, D. D.

URIC ACID IN MEAT CLOGS THE KIDNEYS.

Take a glass of Salts if your Back hurts or Bladder bothers you—Drink more water.

If you must have your meat every day, eat it, but flush your kidneys with salts occasionally, says a noted authority who tells us that meat forms uric acid which almost paralyzes the kidneys in their efforts to expel it from the blood. They become sluggish and weaken, then you suffer with a dull misery in the kidney region, sharp pains in the back or sick headache, dizziness, your stomach sours, tongue is coated and when the weather is bad you have rheumatic twinges.

To neutralize these irritating acids, to cleanse the kidneys get four ounces of Jad Salts from any pharmacy here; take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast for a few days and your kidneys will then act fine. This famous salts is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia, and has been used for generations to flush and stimulate sluggish kidneys, also to neutralize the acid so it no longer irritates, thus ending bladder weakness.

Jad Salts is inexpensive; cannot injure, and makes a delightful effervescent lithia-water drink.

Be not afraid to show Him the emptiness and coldness of your heart; do so that the void may be filled. Ruin may be the tenement of your soul; ask him to repair it. Great may be your poverty; ask him to enrich it; open your heart to him, desiring that the love which you need may be poured into it, and verily you shall be filled.—Dr. Morgan Dix.

NOTICE TO LOUISIANA PREACH- ERS.

It will be absolutely necessary, if the statistical work of the next Annual Conference be accurately done, that each preacher reporting his work be provided with the new report blanks. The old report forms cannot be used with the new Statistical Tables. There are radical changes, and no reports will be received by the Statistical Secretaries except those on the new forms. It will be necessary, therefore, for each preacher to provide himself with the new forms before the meeting of the Conference. We urge you to order of the Publishing House at once a book of the new forms, and prepare your reports before you leave home for Conference so that they will be ready to hand to the Secretaries immediately on your arrival at Conference.

ROBT. W. VAUGHAN,
Statistical Secretary.

CHURCH EXTENSION NOTICE.

As the editors of our Annual Conference Minutes for 1913, did not publish my post office address on page 18, as they did of other treasurers of Boards, I am put to the necessity of calling the attention of the preachers of the Mississippi Conference to the fact that my place of residence is Philadelphia, Miss. In remitting to me by money order, draw on P. O. at Jackson, Miss., and mail to me.

It would be a delightful task to act as your treasurer, if every preacher would remit to me before Conference convenes. Why not? Only ten thus far have sent in their money, and only two of these "paid in full," and they paid in the early part of the year.

On the presumption that every preacher takes and reads the Christian Advocate, I ask that you cut this notice out, and keep it for reference.

THOS. A. HOLLOMAN,

Treasurer Board of Church Extension, Miss. Conf.
Oct. 23, 1914.

LETTERS FROM RHEUMATICS.

Possibly you have imagined that you could never get your own consent to write a testimonial letter, but if you have ever experienced the excruciating pains of Rheumatism you can at least appreciate the feelings of those who have been relieved of this terrible disease by drinking the Mineral Water from the justly celebrated Shivar Spring at Shelton, S. C. This water overcomes many diseases, including Indigestion, Gout, Uric Acid Poisoning and Liver and Kidney diseases, but no patrons of the Spring are more enthusiastic in their praise of the water than those who have been relieved of their Rheumatism.

Hundreds of letters like the following have been received by the Management:

Dr. Crosby, a South Carolina physician, writes: "I have tested your Shivar Water in several cases of Rheumatism, Chronic Indigestion, Kidney and Bladder troubles and in Nervous and Sick Headaches and find that it has acted nicely in each case, and I believe that if used continually for a reasonable time will produce a permanent cure. It will purify the blood, relieve debility, stimulate the action of the Liver, Kidneys and Bladder, aiding them in throwing off all poisonous matter."

Dr. Avant, of Savannah, writes: "I suffered for years with a most aggravating form of stomach disorder, and consulted a number of our best local physicians, went to Baltimore and consulted specialists there and still I was not benefited. I had about dispensed of living when I began to use Shivar Spring Water, and in a short time was cured."

Mr. Rhodes, of Virginia, writes: "Please send me ten gallons of Shivar Spring water quickly. I want it for Rheumatism. I know of several who were cured of Rheumatism with this water."

Editor Cunningham writes: "The water has done more good than any medicine I have ever taken for Rheumatism. Am entirely free from pain."

Mr. McClam, of South Carolina, writes: "My wife has been a sufferer with Rheumatism and after drinking twenty gallons of your Mineral Water was entirely cured of the horrible disease."

Mr. Carter, of Virginia, writes: "Mrs. Carter has had enlarged joints upon her hands, caused by Rheumatism. Shivar Spring Water removed every trace of the enlargement. The water is simply excellent."

If you suffer with Rheumatism, or with any chronic disease, accept the guarantee offer below by signing your name. Clip and mail to the Shivar Spring, Box 17R, Shelton, S. C.
Gentlemen:—I accept your guarantee offer and enclose herewith two dollars ($2.00) for ten gallons (two five-gallon demijohns) of Shivar Spring Water. I agree to give the water a fair trial in accordance with instructions which you will send, and if I derive no benefit you are to refund the price in full upon receipt of the two empty demijohns, which I agree to return promptly.

Note—The Advertising Manager of the New Orleans Christian Advocate is personally acquainted with Mr. Shivar. You run no risk whatever in accepting his offer. I have personally witnessed the remarkable curative effects of this Water in a very serious case.—Adv.

CONSCIENCE THE GUIDE.

When a man's conscience tells him that his present lot is just the situation in which he should "abide with God," let him rejoice and not repine, and magnify the opportunities and duties of just that environment. Dr. Horace Bushnell was sometimes urged to remove to other fields than the Connecticut capital, in which he spent his life; but, contented with his lot, he replied with a gentle naivete that Hartford would be a "good place to be in on the morning of the resurrection." It should be the desire of every man that when Gabriel sounds the reveille the heavenly herald may find him at the post of duty.—Zion's Herald.

THE CHOCTAW INDIANS IN THE NEWTON DISTRICT.

The following paper was presented at the recent Newton district meeting, and as the subject is one which should prove of interest to all our women we take pleasure in publishing it in our columns.

I was asked to represent the Choctaw Indians at this Conference. This is a branch of Social Service that appeals most strongly to us. We have 1200 Choctaws in this district. They are our charges. God has intrusted the care of them to our hands, and no other district is blessed with such an opportunity.

Twice has the Government tried to remove them to Oklahoma and many have gone. These 1200 have elected to stay in the land of their fathers, where their dead for centuries are buried, and where a few, a very few of them, own their little farms. Can we blame them for not leaving? We owe them much love and care, they once owned all of these lands which we now claim, and were paid but a pittance for them.

When our ancestors and the Indians were at war, the Choctaws were ever the white man's friend. Not once did they fight against us. Though Tecumseh and the Prophet tried to turn them against the whites, their old chief, Pushmataha, resisted their persuasions and aided General Jackson in punishing the Creeks and Cherokees for the murder of the white people. They are our friends. They are quiet and law-abiding, and pure in their family life. Their only vices are drinking, taught them by the white people, and ball playing of which they make a bloody battle. It is hard to believe, but there are about 200 of these Indians in Neshoba County who are pagans. In this enlightened age and in our district, surrounded by supposed Christians, they are worshippers of the sun.

One of our local preachers, a Choctaw, Brother Sim Tubby, explained their religion to me. He said, "I, too, used to have that religion. I was reared that way. The Choctaw believes in a Great Spirit, but he cannot comprehend what he cannot see. The sun represents the Great Spirit, and its light and warmth are the manifestations of him." In their ignorance they worship the sun, instead of what it represents. "Then," he said, "when an Indian feels called upon to pray, he cannot believe his prayer can rise higher than the sound of his voice. So he builds a fire, and smothering it down until it makes a great smoke, he leans over and prays his prayer into the smoke that it may carry it up to the sun. 'Did you realize that the heathen were at our very door? And do you know that there are white men, Southern white men, who try to keep these Indians from becoming Christians? Who tell them that the preachers mean no good but are trying to trick them in some way and get all their money, and urge them to refuse to let the preachers come among them? And why? So that they, these white men, may sell them whiskey, and induce them to play their ball games, that they may bet on them, as others, not quite so low, would bet on a dog or a cock fight! Do you wonder that they reject Christianity if these men represent to them a Christian people?"

The Roman Catholics, the Baptists, and the Methodists have had missions among them but after the last removal to Oklahoma, all the churches have neglected them, the idea seeming to be that they have left the country.

Our church is now trying to help them, the presiding elder of the Newton district visiting and preaching among them and baptizing their babies, whenever he can. The intelligent Choctaw local preacher, Brother Sim Tubby, of whom I spoke, has charge of the work and associated with him are several other local preachers who have begun their work.

The people are hungry for the gospel, all who will allow preaching among them. Their preachers held several great revivals this summer, resulting in many conversions. They make good, faithful Christians. They contribute to the Conference claims as they are able, even if it is only a nickel or a penny. In one family the children even had the little dog to give his part and handed in an envelope with "J. P." marked on it, explaining to the presiding elder that that meant "Jippy" and that "Jippy" had actually picked it up and put it in.

They are very poor and needy. The women sometimes walk miles, often carrying their babies, to sell the baskets they make with so much pains and labor. And they almost give them to us in order to get a little money to buy some of the necessities of life, and the calico dresses they deacrate so gorgeously.

Their schools are poor and of low grades, only a few months of primary public school taught generally by very inexperienced teachers, mostly Indians who can spell and read and write but little. Our Mississippi school laws should insure them better schools, but who is to see to it? These schools are poorly attended. Few of the girls go to school at all, and the women are very ignorant. I asked Brother Tubby why this was, he said, "The captains of the Choctaws," I think he meant the chiefs, but thought his meaning would be plainer if he said captains, "long ago forbade the women to learn any language but their own Choctaw, and forbade them to speak to white men." This alas, was for their protection. "And so," said Tubby, "under influence of the older women the little girls are kept out of school."

But the Christian men, are begging for an education for their children, and urging the women and girls to study, and they are pleading that we help their women. Do not their needs appeal to us as much as do the cries of the women of China and the islands of the seas?

I told you that the Choctaws were begging for an education. Through the liberality of Rev. J. S. Purcell, President of our school at Montrose, there are two there studying, that they may better help their people. They are Tom Jackson, and his girl wife, Lolie. Brother Purcell is giving them their tuition, but as they are not able to enter the other classes he has had to employ one of his young men students to teach them, paying him a small sum, I think, $5 per month. Then they must live. They have a tiny house of which the rent is $2.50 per month, and they must have food and clothes.

We must not allow this generous educator, who is just starting in his work there, to feel the burden of these expenses. In fact, the presiding elder had faith enough in the people of this district to promise that these expenses would be met. How easily it can be done if each Missionary Auxiliary will promise to send a stated sum per month, during the eight months of the school session, and how easy it will be to divide our provisions with them, that large bills at the stores may not accumulate.

Money and provisions may be sent to Rev. J. S. Purcell, Montrose, Miss. I am sure you will all find joy in such service.

Mrs. E. W. FEATHERSTUN.

NOTABLE EXAMPLES.

An auxiliary in Texas writes that at a recent meeting they discussed the hard times and unsettled conditions owing to the war, and decided that this was a proper time for self-denial. They had pledged $37.50 for the foreign work, but made it $50 that afternoon. They say it was the most spiritual meeting they had ever had, and we do not doubt it, for whenever we begin to practice self-denial we are getting closer to our Savior, and the closer we get to him the more spiritual our lives will be. If all of our auxiliaries would only emulate this example, what a wonderful stride we should make in our mission work. The advances for which our laborers have been so earnestly praying would be an assured fact. Before the year draws to a close can we not put forth an earnest effort to increase our pledges? God has greatly blessed us in that our country has been kept out of the clutches of the great war dog. Have we not some gift to offer him? Remember how Mary gave her most precious ointment. Is he less dear to us than he was to her? No gift is too precious for the Master, for he gave himself for us.

STOPS TOBACCO HABIT.

Elder's Sanitarium, located at 1017 Main St., St. Joseph, Mo., has published a book showing the deadly effect of the tobacco habit, and how it can be stopped in three to five days.

As they are distributing this book free, anyone wanting a copy should send their name and address at once.—Adv.

CALOMEL IS MERCURY! IT SICKENS!

ACTS ON LIVER LIKE DYNAMITE

"Dodson's Liver Tone" Starts Your Liver
Better Than Calomel and Doesn't Salivate or Make You Sick.

Listen to me! Take no more sickening, salivating calomel when bilious or constipated. Don't lose a day's work!

Calomel is mercury or quicksilver which causes necrosis of the bones. Calomel, when it comes into contact with sour bile crashes into it, breaking it up. This is when you feel that awful nausea and cramping. If you are sluggish and "all knocked out," if your liver is torpid and bowels constipated or you have headache, dizziness, coated tongue, if breath is bad or stomach sour just take a spoonful of harmless Dodson's Liver Tone on my guarantee.

Here's my guarantee—Go to any drug store and get a 50 cent bottle of Dodson's Liver Tone. Take a spoonful to night and if it doesn't straighten you right up and make you feel fine and vigorous by morning I want you to go back to the store and get your money. Dodson's Liver Tone is destroying the sale of calomel because it is real liver medicine; entirely vegetable, therefore it can not salivate or make you sick.

I guarantee that one spoonful of Dodson's Liver Tone will put your sluggish liver to work and clean your bowels of that sour bile and constipated waste which is clogging your system and making you feel miserable. I guarantee that a bottle of Dodson's Liver Tone will keep your entire family feeling fine for months. Give it to your children. It is harmless; doesn't gripe and they like its pleasant taste.

Sunday School

OUR SUNDAY SCHOOLS.

By Rev. B. F. Lewis,
Chairman Mississippi Conference
Sunday School Board.

While the most important changes in our Sunday school laws relate to the General Board, some changes have been made affecting other phases of the work. Among them may be noted briefly the following:

1. (a) While the Conference Sunday School Board is still composed of one layman from each Presiding Elder's District and an equal number of clerical members, provision is made for an Executive Committee, composed of the Chairman, Secretary, and Treasurer. The election of these officers constitutes this committee. (b) It is now specifically stated that the Board "shall work in co-operation with the General Sunday School Board." (c) If there be a Field Secretary, he shall not only report monthly to the chairman of the Conference Board, but "quarterly to the General Board." The tendency of these regulations is to unify the Sunday school work of the Church.

2. The Quarterly Conference is no longer a Board of Managers in name only. Certain specific obligations are laid on it. "It shall be the duty of the Quarterly Conference to keep itself informed as to the needs of the schools under its care, and to see that they are furnished with all necessary equipment." If asked for, or deemed necessary they shall elect three of their number as members of an Advisory Committee composed of the pastor and officers of the Sunday school, and this committee of three shall make quarterly written reports to the Quarterly Conference.

3. "Let every Sunday school be regarded as a Missionary Society." Formerly the law was, "Let every Sunday school be organized into a missionary society auxiliary to the Board of Missions." Now, the mere organization of a school constitutes it a missionary society. The fourth Sabbath each month is designated as Missionary Sunday; the collection is to be kept separate and reported separately, and 10 per cent of the missionary collections in the Sunday schools are to be turned over to the General Sunday School Board by the Board of Missions for their use. The last Sabbath in April is now Children's Day instead of the third Sabbath in May as formerly.

4. While the pastor still nominates the Superintendents of all Sunday schools, the Superintendents nominate their assistants for election by the Quarterly Conferences. The Superintendent is required to organize his school according to the standard of efficiency after consultation with the pastor, to appoint teachers annually instead of for an indefinite time as heretofore, and to submit a written report to the Quarterly Conference touching items named in paragraph 263.

5. The pastor is urged to give special doctrinal instruction to the Sunday school scholars and to report to the Fourth Quarterly Conference and "annually to the Conference Sunday School Board the following items: (1) Number of Sunday schools; (2) Number of Officers and Teachers; (3) Enrollment in All Departments, including Cradle Roll and Home Department; (4) Members in Home Department; (5) Children on Cradle Roll; (6) Number of Training Classes for Officers and Teachers, or Individual Students of our Training Courses; (7) Number of Wesley Bible Classes; (8) Number of Sunday School Pupils Received into the Church during the year; (9) Amount raised for Missions; (10) Amount Raised on Children's Day and Sent to the Treasurer of the Sunday School Board; (11) Amount Raised for Other Purposes."

6. The Presiding Elder is enjoined to see that these regulations are carried out.

LOUISIANA NOTES.

By W. W. Williams.

Rev. E. G. Wood, of Pollock, states that his Sunday school is getting on nicely now. They have a Teacher-training class of 20 or more that meets on Tuesday evenings. They are studying "Training for Service" by Monninger. Brother Wood also states that the work at Eden is improving.

The Indian Creek Mission Sunday School is progressing nicely. The writer has visited it every Sunday for a month, the Sunday school of the First M. E. Church, South, Alexandria paying his expenses. These people eat only twice on Sunday, at 9 a.m. and 3 p.m., and spend the rest of the time at church. They hold a splendid prayer meeting before Sunday school. So no one is ever late to Sunday school—they are already there. They take great pride in their church. It is bright and cheery and everything is kept as if brand-new. Some are moving and building new homes nearer the church. They are studying hard to learn to read, and this practically, without a teacher. They will observe "World's Temperance Sunday" and are planning for Christmas exercises. They say they have made more progress in the last sixty days than in the last sixty years. Some Indians, hearing of the good work, are returning there from Texas.

Rev. J. F. Dring of Pineville is using a book called "The Methodist Armor" in his mid-week services, which are attended almost exclusively by the young people of the Sunday school. He makes the fundamentals of Methodism very interesting.

There are two Teacher-training classes in the First M. E. Church, South of Alexandria. The one composed of the regular Sunday school teachers meets on Wednesday evenings in connection with the prayer meeting, while the Epworth Leaguers hold theirs on Thursday evenings in connection with their business meeting and mission study hour. Mrs. G. E. Cameron teaches the last-named class, and her ability to teach a great deal most thoroughly in such a short space of time was a great surprise to all.

It is to be regretted that the Teacher-training classes at Boyce and Leconte have been suspended for the present.

In most of our schools the work in the Elementary classes seems to be taking the lead, while Teacher-training is being neglected. It is believed that trained teachers are needed worse than anything else at present.

Most any country Sunday school, no matter how small, can have a Teacher-training class if it is wanted. If the people live too far to make a special mid-week trip to the church, it can be taught in some private home and have the nearest neighbors to join the class; or it can be taught during the Sunday school hour; or it can meet immediately after the school session on all the Sundays when there is no preaching, and almost anyone can teach it who will thoroughly prepare in advance. And during the after session, if that plan is adopted, while the older ones are in the Teacher-training class, the children can first have a short recess and then practice Children's Day songs and recitations, thus gaining a veritable storehouse of knowledge and being constantly preparing for all the special days, such as Children's Day, Christmas, Easter, Decision Day, Promotion Day, Temperance Sunday, etc.

THE REAL DEFINITION OF LIFE IS NERVE-FORCE.

People often wonder what the difference really is between the living and dead body. Apparently nothing has been taken away, but still the complicated machinery of the body has stopped and cannot be started again. What is missing is "life" and the modern definition of life is "nerve-force."

This nerve-force must be distributed regularly all over the body. Directly it does not run smoothly ill-health will follow.

Dr. Miles' Nervine benefits the health by evening up the distribution of this vital force of life, and by taking all the "jars and jolts" out of the system.

In this conjunction the Rev. C. H. Cox, of Mason City, W. Va., has stated:—

"I have found Dr. Miles' Nervine to be unexcelled in all nervous disorders and I have always recommended it to any one whom I hear is suffering in this way. We also always keep Dr. Miles' Anti-Pain Pills on hand as we feel they are invaluable. No words can truly express the real merit of Dr. Miles' Restorative remedies."

Dr. Miles' Nervine can be used with advantage in all ailments which have a nervous origin or which have affected the nervous system. It is particularly beneficial in case of sleeplessness, nervousness, epilepsy, hysteria, chronic headache and neuralgia.

Dr. Miles' Nervine is on sale at all drug stores and is strictly guaranteed to benefit you or your money will be refunded by the druggist.

Makes Stubborn Coughs Vanish in a Hurry

Surprisingly Good Cough Syrup
Easily and Cheaply
Made at Home

If some one in your family has an obstinate cough or a bad throat or chest cold that has been hanging on and refuses to yield to treatment, get from any drug store 2½ ounces of Pinex and make it into a pint of cough syrup, and watch that cough vanish.

Pour the 2½ ounces of Pinex (50 cents worth) into a pint bottle and fill the bottle with plain granulated sugar syrup. The total cost is about 54 cents, and gives you a full pint—a family supply—of a most effective remedy, at a saving of $2. A day's use will usually overcome a hard cough. Easily prepared in 5 minutes—full directions with Pinex. Keeps perfectly and has a pleasant taste. Children like it.

It's really remarkable how promptly and easily it loosens the dry, hoarse or tight cough and heals the inflamed membranes in a painful cough. It also stops the formation of phlegm in the throat and bronchial tubes, thus ending the persistent loose cough. A splendid remedy for bronchitis, winter coughs, bronchial asthma and whooping cough.

Pinex is a special and highly concentrated compound of genuine Norway pine extract, rich in gumi-acol, which is so healing to the membranes.

Avoid disappointment by asking your druggist for "2½ ounces of Pinex," and do not accept anything else. A guarantee of absolute satisfaction goes with this preparation or money promptly refunded. The Pinex Co., 235 Main St., Ft. Wayne, Ind.

10 CENT "CASCARETS" IF BILIOUS OR COSTIVE

For Sick Headache, Sour Stomach,
Sluggish Liver and Bowels—They
work while you sleep.

Furred Tongue, Bad Taste, Indigestion, Sallow Skin and Miserable Headaches come from a torpid liver and clogged bowels, which cause your stomach to become filled with undigested food, which sours and ferments like garbage in a swill barrel. That's the first step to untold misery—indigestion, foul gases, bad breath, yellow skin, mental fears, everything that is horrible and nauseating. A Cascaret to-night will give your constipated bowels a thorough cleansing and straighten you out by morning. They work while you sleep—a 10-cent box from your druggist will keep you feeling good for months.

PACIFIC CONFERENCE.

By Rev. W. P. Andrews.

Bishop Mouzon closed his round of Conferences in the Western District with the Pacific Conference, which was held in the city of Stockton, opening Wednesday, October 21, and closing at noon of the 26th.

As usual this was a very harmonious Conference save that a few mutterings of dissatisfaction were heard after the reading of the appointments. This was to be expected. It could hardly be otherwise.

As in the Conferences in the Northwest, and in the Los Angeles, our new Bishop won his way into the hearts of all. He is spiritual, an able expositor of the Word, is brotherly in the chair and out of it, and yet is a firm presiding officer. His method of conducting the Conference is new among us. The first hour of each session, or the greater part of it, was devoted to Scripture exposition, the text being II Corinthians 1st to 5th Chapters. These expository addresses were clear, strong, orthodox, and were highly appreciated by preachers and laymen.

Reports were heard in open Conference only from the superannuates, the supernumeraries and undergraduates. The elders' names were called and their characters passed in rapid succession. One of the most interesting hours of the session was "Book Hour." The Bishop and Dr. Gross Alexander briefly reviewed a number of books, especially recommended for preachers. Mr. W. C. Everett, of the Dallas House, was on hand and took a number of orders during the session.

Another most interesting hour was the hour set apart to hear the fraternal delegate from the California Conference, Dr. S. D. Huttenpiller. The address was truly fraternal and well received. Even better received was the response of Bishop Mouzon, who devoted nearly thirty minutes to a discussion of the plan of union proposed by the Commission on Federation and adopted by our General Conference. He believes strongly in union, and that the proposed plan, with or without modification, should prevail. He insisted that the two M. E. Churches must get closer together or drift farther apart. He made similar speeches at all the Conferences on the Coast, and in addresses before preachers' meetings of the M. E. Church, telling them of some essentials in any plan to make it feasible. Indications are that all the Conferences of the M. E. Church in the West can be depended upon to favor substantially the plan of the Commission.

There was quite a shaking-up of the preachers. Of the old presiding elders, only J. J. N. Kenny, of the San Francisco district, was left undisturbed. Harold Govette, of the Fresno district, exchanges places with W. R. Thornton, in Oakland. C. P. Moore, Sacramento district, having served out his quadrennium, gives place to J. A. Batchelor, and was read out as Commissioner for the San Francisco and Oakland Memorial Churches. This means that he is expected to resume the matter of raising funds for these important enterprises left off by Brother Batchelor a year ago. The plan adopted last year, leaving the matter in the hands of the pastors and presiding elders was a failure. After eight successive years (under missionary rule), much against the wishes of his flock, J. A. B. Fry leaves Berkeley to take charge of the Fitzgerald Memorial Church in San Francisco. J. T. McClure comes from Texas to succeed Brother Fry, at Berkeley. He comes highly recommended, and we expect much of him in this university city. J. W. Horn goes from San Francisco to Salinas. J. A. Wailes, Fresno, and Mark Hodgson, Merced, exchange places.

A. S. Cecil and Jas. Healey joined the ranks of supernumeraries. Jos. Emery, D.D., and Henry Neate were added to the roll of superannuates. The former has spent fifty-six years as a preacher in California and Oregon, having begun his ministry in the Pacific Conference in 1858. He is now about four score years of age. He has served in almost every capacity, from pastor of a mission to presiding elder of a district, college professor and Indian Agent. He is greatly beloved by his brethren. Henry Neate is an Englishman who has been with us for thirty-seven years. He is a good preacher and a man of fine spirit.

The reports show the membership in the bounds of the Conference to be 8492, a slight falling off during the year. Owing to the financial stringency, the financial reports were not quite up to those of last year.

The sum of $447 was raised on the Conference floor on the expenses of preparing headquarters at the Panama-Pacific Exposition. We are expecting a great Exposition, notwithstanding the little trouble across the waters, and are hoping for a large representation from the South.

Our next session will be held in San Francisco. It is devoutly to be hoped that the Fitzgerald Memorial Church will be ready for it. Oh, that our people everywhere might be impressed with the importance to the entire connection of this great enterprise!

THE LITTLE PLANT.

"Oliver Wendell Holmes was once asked why he troubled to attend a small church where the preacher was a most ordinary man with no originality as a thinker. Dr. Holmes gave this fine reply:

"I go because I have a little plant called Reverence, and I must needs water it once a week or it will die."

"There are other and deeper reasons why we should go to a place of worship regularly—to confess our sins, to ask God's pardon, to praise him for his goodness, to encourage one another in our most holy faith. But there is also need to water the 'little plant called Reverence' which soon fades and dies unless we remember it at least once a week by assembling ourselves together for God's Worship."

It is only by trying to understand others that we can get our own hearts understood.—R. L. Stevenson.

Editorial

"Could we with ink the ocean fill,
And were the skies of parchment made;
Were every stalk on earth a quill,
And every man a scribe by trade;
To write the love of God above
Would drain the ocean dry;
Nor could the scroll contain the whole,
Though stretched from sky to sky."

This is God's world. He made and maintains it. His power upholds it; his sun lights and warms it; his dews and rains water it; his flowers perfume it; his voice marshalls the forces that make its harvests wave, and his hand paints and makes beautiful its skies. Blind indeed is he who cannot look through nature up to nature's mighty Creator, and recognize him as the preserver of our planet and the giver of all good.

Nothing is more beautiful than sincere gratitude, and nothing can excuse one for the lack of it when it is rightly due. It is a characteristic of every man of noble nature, and when a person can forget or lightly regard the obligations for kindnesses done, he is deficient in the primal elements of his being. So true is this that the world rarely forgives an individual who turns against and seeks to injure one to whom he is deeply indebted for helpful benefactions. What, then, ought to be said of a human being who forgets God and ignores his existence when his blessings have been rained upon his pathway from his earliest infancy? Ingratitude to our benevolent Creator is a sin of the blackest hue. The purer and holier the saint the more constant is the stream of praise that flows forth from his lips.

How can a Christian best show his love for the Master? Jesus answered this question in his memorable conversation with Peter after his triumphant resurrection from the tomb. When the penitent apostle affirmed his love for his Lord, he said, "Feed my lambs"—"Feed my sheep." It is by ministering to needy humanity that we must show our devotion to Him who has delivered us from our sins, who has given us the Holy Spirit to keep and guide us, and who has gone to prepare a place for us in the skies. The "soft livers" who dwell in costly homes and spend their days in ease and affluence, caring little for their struggling, perishing fellow-men, are not disciples after the Master's heart. It makes us weary to hear preachers high in the councils of the Church prating of having tarried in famous places and of having been given recognition by presidents, and kings, and emperors. A far nobler thing it would be to be able to write of having told the story of redeeming love in some dark abode of sin, or of having led some wretched prodigal into the kingdom. He who gets out among the lost and fallen and suffers and spends his strength to uplift and save them is most like Christ. Oh, that a passion for such service might burn like a consuming fire in the bosoms of all our pastors and people! It would clothe the Church with a new power and make the very gates of hell tremble.

SOME REASONS FOR THANKSGIVING.

We are again approaching our National Thanksgiving Day, and as we look over our own and other lands, it is not difficult to discover many things for which we should be profoundly grateful. God's blessings have continued through another year and still abound on every side. The vast machinery of nature has gone steadily on ministering to the needs and comforts of humanity. For this it was made in the beginning, and this is the end for which it is kept in operation. The preservation of a world such as ours is not less a miracle than its creation; nothing but a Divine intelligence and energy could conserve it and keep going its multitudinous forces and affairs. Wonderfully significant is the expression of St. Paul in Colossians, when, in referring to Christ, he says: "By him all things consist;" and in Hebrews he is referred to as "upholding all things by the word of his power."

When thus rightly understood, we see unmistakable manifestations of the Lord's love and care everywhere upon the face of the earth and in the vaulted skies above us. This is the message of the sun and moon and stars, of flower and field and forest, of river and lake and ocean, of mine and mart and manufactory, and of steam, electricity, magnetism, and every other force with a capacity to serve mankind. Life itself and all that maintains, enriches, and ennobles it are the gifts of God's generous hand. Constant and ceaseless pensioners upon his unfailing bounty are we, and well may we praise him for watching over and keeping us and the blessings which he showers upon us day by day. Even the sorrows and misfortunes which come to his children are permitted because they are meant to contribute to their spiritual development and perfection.

"He may chasten and correct.
But he never can neglect;
May in faithfulness reprove,
But he ne'er can cease to love."

Of all the nations of the globe, ours is undoubtedly the most highly favored. Particularly is this fact accentuated at this time when nearly the whole of Europe and some parts of Asia and Africa are engaged in the most colossal and frightful war of all the ages. Vast armies, numbering millions of men, are marching and counter-marching and meeting in deadly strife, amid the rattle of rifles and the booming of cannon; giant men-of-war, with frowning guns, are parading the seas and staining its waves with human blood, and the shouts of battle are even heard in the pure air above. Their treasure is being wasted; their fields are largely abandoned; their commerce is prostrated; their cities are being sacked and destroyed; their citizens are falling in death by the tens and hundreds of thousands; multitudes are in destitution and want, and anxiety and grief have taken up their abode in nearly every household. But our country is at peace with all the world, and though the shadow of the great war across the seas is upon our land, there is little real want among our people. As a matter of fact, there ought to be none at all, for though there is no market for some of our commodities, our food crops are more than adequate to meet the necessities of all our population. Let us, therefore, render devout thanks to the bountiful Giver of all good for the peace and plenty prevailing throughout our widely extended domain.

But in recounting the things for which we should be grateful, we should place first of all the spiritual blessings that the Heavenly Father has poured out upon us. Because the soul is more valuable than the body, these are worth more than his material benefits. His greatest gift to the world is Christ, and those who have him in their hearts are richer than all the millionaires of earth. Everything else may be taken from such an one, but he still has abundant cause for thanksgiving and praise. Even amid the awful desolations of war, like those prevailing in stricken Europe, the true disciple of Jesus may exclaim:

"I've found the pearl of greatest price,
My heart doth sing for joy;
And sing I must, a Christ I have;
Oh, what a Christ have I!"

But if God watches over the world, why the calamities that so often come in life—why this terrible war? We cannot tell. "Clouds and darkness are round about him"—"his ways are past finding out." This much we know: He made the earth a paradise; man in the exercise of his free moral agency wrecked it, and ever since he has been laboring to banish evil from it and reclaim it. For this, he sent his Son to bleed and die upon the Cross. He is not the author of war, but possibly he may permit it as a means of achieving some lofty end not discernible to the finite mind. Through appalling suffering alone does it seem possible for humanity to be borne onward and upward; but it is man himself who makes it so. God would lead him along a smooth and ever-brightening way, strewn only with the tokens of his love; but too often he will learn only in the school of the fiery furnace. Thus he punishes himself and his related fellow-beings. But those who suffer innocently here, as did Christ, will be amply rewarded therefor in the future. The vindication of God's moral government will be clear and complete in eternity. This is the meaning of those memorable words of the great inspired Apostle: "For I reckon that the sufferings of this present time are not worthy to be compared with the glory that shall be revealed in us." Whatever may be the disasters and heartaches and horrors of earth, they will pale into insignificance when set over against them are the triumphs and joys and unfading splendors of heaven. So, no matter what may be one's misfortunes and surroundings in life, if one is a true child of God,

"He can afford to trust, adore, and wait Till wide before him swings the golden gate."

"No friendship is worth the name unless it promotes our highest good, assisting us to escape from the manifold forms of selfishness, and to look at duty with a fresh impulse."

THANKSGIVING.

Do you give thanks for this or that? No, God be thanked.
I am not grateful
In that cold, calculating way, with blessings ranked
As one, two, three, and four—that would be hateful!

I only know that every day brings good above
My poor deserving;
I only feel that on the road of life true Love
Is leading me along and never swerving.

Whatever turn the path may take to left or right
I think it follows
The tracing of a wiser hand, through dark and light.
Across the hills and in the shady hollows.

Whatever gifts the hours bestow, or great or small,
I would not measure
As worth a certain price in praise, but take them all
And use them all with simple heartfelt pleasure.

For when we gladly eat our daily bread, we bless
The hand that feeds us.
And when we walk along life's way in cheerfulness,
Our very heartbeats praise the Love that leads us.

—Henry Van Dyke, in Outlook.

NATIONAL THANKSGIVING DAY APPOINTED

By the President of the United States of America.

A Proclamation.

"It has long been the honored custom of our people to turn in the fruitful autumn of the year in praise and thanksgiving to Almighty God for His many blessings and privileges to us as a nation. The year that is now coming to a close, since we last observed our day of national thanksgiving, has been, while a year of discipline because of the mighty forces of war and of change which have disturbed the world, also a year of special blessing for us.

"It has been vouchsafed to us to remain at peace, with honor, and in some part to succor the suffering and supply the needs of those who are in want.

"We have been privileged by our own peace and self-control in some degree to steady the counsels and shape the hopes and purposes of a day of fear and distress. Our people have looked upon their own life as a nation with a deeper comprehension, a fuller realization of their responsibilities, as well as of their blessings, and a keener sense of the moral and practical significance of what their part among the nations of the world may come to be.

"The hurtful effects of foreign war in their own industrial and commercial affairs have made them feel the more fully and see the more clearly their mutual dependence upon one another and have stirred them to a helpful co-operation such as they have seldom practiced before. They have been quickened by a great moral stimulation.
Their unmistakable ardor for peace, their earnest pity and disinterested sympathy for those who are suffering, their readiness to help and to think of the needs of others, have revealed them to themselves as well as to the world.

"Our crops will feed all who need food; the self-possession of our people amidst the most serious anxieties and difficulties, and the steadiness and resourcefulness of our business men will serve other nations as well as our own.

"The business of the country has been supplied with new instrumentalities and the commerce of the world with new channels of trade and intercourse. The Panama Canal has been opened to the commerce of the nations. The two continents of America have been bound in closer ties of friendship. New instrumentalities of international trade have been created which will be also new instrumentalities of acquaintance, intercourse and mutual service. Never before have the people of the United States been so situated for their own advantage or the advantage of their neighbors or so equally supplied to give to themselves and mankind.

"Now, therefore, I Woodrow Wilson, President of the United States of America, do hereby designate Thursday, the 26th of November, as a day of thanksgiving and prayer, and invite the people throughout the land to cease from their wonted occupations, and in their several homes and places of worship render thanks to Almighty God.

"In witness whereof, I have hereunto set my hand and caused the seal of the United States to be affixed.

"Done at the City of Washington, this 26th day of October, in the year of our Lord one thousand nine hundred and fourteen, and of the independence of the United States of America the one hundred and thirty-ninth.

WOODROW WILSON.

By the President:

ROBERT LANSING.

Acting Secretary of State.

"O GIVE THANKS UNTO THE LORD."

Rev. F. S. Parker, D.D., in the Epworth Era.

Read through the one hundred and thirty-sixth Psalm, omitting the refrain at the conclusion of each verse. "For his mercy endureth forever," noting that it is a poem that recounts a series of mighty acts of Jehovah: First, the creation of the universe, then the bringing of Israel out of Egypt into the land of promise. Now read the poem again. Imagine yourself in the court of Israel during a temple service in ancient Jerusalem. Around you are a great throng of worshippers. Mitered priests stand beside smoking altars, and on each side of the raised platform on which the altar rests is a choir of white-robed Levites. From one side the verse is chanted; it is an exhortation to "give thanks unto the Lord." From the other side comes the response: "For his mercy endureth forever." And so the verse and the antiphon roll back and forth like waves that beat upon the shore and then surge back as tides into the deep whence they came. Every ascription of greatness to God, every detail of his providential guidance and care of Israel is remembered only as a ground for thanksgiving; and each calls forth in a burst of glorious melody the foundation reason for giving thanks—"For his mercy endureth forever."

It is the graciousness, the loving-kindness of God that underlies every one of his providential acts, and a devout heart finds itself in full harmony with the refrain of our Psalm. It is the enduring graciousness or mercy of God that comes most into view, whatever may be the particular way in which it has been made manifest. As the Psalm is "said or sung" the ever-recurring phrase, "For his mercy endureth forever," seems to burst forth from a heart full of gratitude as the happy impulse of the bird rushes through its tiny throat to express itself in melody that refuses to be imprisoned.

Do we need an exhortation to give thanks? Paul bids us: "In everything give thanks." Do we need a Presidential proclamation to induce us to contemplate with gratitude the gifts of our heavenly Father? It is a good form to observe, at any rate. But a firm grasp of the great truth that God is gracious and that his loving-kindness is never set aside, whatever the appearance of things, will anticipate by spontaneous outpourings from grateful hearts all calls to thanksgiving. When Jesus rejoiced in spirit, his uttered words were: "Father, I thank thee."

When we think of our lives as they are related to God, the source of grace, we feel the impulse to give thanks, and the expression of this impulse wells up from our hearts like the refrain of the Psalm.

God is a Person, therefore his gifts are personal favors. They are favors because they come to us in excess of our deserving. We cannot feel grateful to blind force any more than one can pray to destiny. The child is grateful to his father for the favors that are prompted by a father's deep, self-giving love.

"We give thanks to God and the Father of our Lord Jesus Christ."

God is a Provider, therefore we must thank him. His providence and his grace are inseparable. He provides according to the purposes of his grace—that is, with a view to serving the real good of his children, not to gratify their whimsies. Paul was able to glory in the greatest affliction of his life when he received the words, "My grace is sufficient for thee."

And it is toward a full redemption that our Father directs our ways and determines our conditions. The "light affliction, which is for a moment," is so outweighed by the "far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory" that the Christians rejoice in God at all times and give thanks in everything.

But there is a need that we call upon all that is within us to bless the Lord; lest lacking expression the impulse grows weak, our lives then become joyless and therefore weak. Looking back over the events of the year since our last formal Thanksgiving day, let us follow our Psalm in giving thanks unto the Lord, for his mercy has surely been the source of all our good.

IF YOU ARE GRATEFUL, SAY SO.

If you are grateful, say so. Thanksgiving is only half thanksgiving till it blossoms into expression. Learn a lesson from the noble-hearted Indian in whose village the missionary, passing through, had left a few pages of the gospel in the Indian tongue. One Indian read and rejoiced. Measuring the missionary's footprint, he fitted it with magnificent moccasins, and traveled two hundred miles to give them to the missionary as an expression of his gratitude. Thus the missionary was enriched by the present, but the Indian was enriched far more by the thanksgiving.

But the going does not excuse us from the sending any more than sending excuses us from going. If giving still went by the rule of the tenth, as in the Scriptural days, then ten average Christians could anywhere constitute themselves into a church and support a pastor; and twenty could support both pastor and a missionary.

Train yourself to be grateful for the common blessings. There had been a great cotton famine in Lancashire, England. For lack of material to work upon, the mills had been idle for months, and there was great distress among the operatives. At last came the first wagon-load of cotton, the earnest of returning opportunity to labor. With what new eyes did the people look upon that commonplace material! They met the wagon in an exultant procession. They hugged the bales. At last, moved by a common impulse, they broke out in the noble doxology. A thousand blessings, now little noticed, would if once lost be welcomed with transport on their return.

No work is done at its best until it is done in an atmosphere of thanksgiving. Beethoven understood this. He had his piano placed in the middle of a field, and there, under the smiling sky, with birds singing around him, flowers shining and grain glistening in the sun, the master musician composed some of his great oratorios. We can all of us surround our work with the cheery atmosphere which our Father has breathed into all His works.

Some of the things for which we shall be most thankful some day are our apparent misfortunes. Looking back over my life, I can already see several places where my own will, which was thwarted to my great grief, would have spoiled my life; and one of my constant causes for gratitude now is that God did not let me have my way. Colonel Higginson wrote:

An easy thing, O Power Divine,
To thank Thee for these gifts of Thine—
For summer's sunshine, winter's snow,
For hearths that kindle, words that glow;
But when shall I attain to this—
To thank Thee for the things I miss?

—Amos R. Wells.

God never gives all he has to give; the time never comes when he has nothing more to bestow.—Rev. J. R. Miller, D.D.

THE GENEROUS GIFT OF THREE AGED SISTERS.

Some weeks ago I printed the proposal of an old saint to raise "The Woman's Fund to Aid Young Men" in pursuing their studies in our new University. The proposal has met with generous responses from many quarters in the Church. In my mail for one day last week came contributions which aggregated $126. From the many letters which have reached me with liberal gifts for this Fund, I noticed one which is so beautiful that I can not refrain from publishing it. It contained $100 and was as follows:

"Oct. 26, 1914.

"Bishop W. A. Candler, Atlanta, Ga.:

"My Dear Bishop: We wish to add our contribution to the beautiful thought of the "Saint in Israel" for the "Woman's Fund to Aid Young Men." We are three sisters, whose ages are 85, 82, and 75 years—descendants of the old Quaker stock of Clarks in Virginia, who believed in Christian education and building churches. God has blessed us with long life and Christian faith.

Yours sincerely,"

Already this Fund has provided aid for two students in the School of Theology who could not have finished their course this year without this assistance.

The gift of $2 by the old saint has done much good, and it will do more. There is no saying to what great results it may lead.

W. A. CANDLER.

WE HAVE, BUT DO NOT USE THEM.

Dear Dr. Meek: In a recent editorial in the Advocate, you said that it was a pity that the Church and State did not have, here and there, a few men who would die on the altar of truth and honesty rather than compromise with wrong. The Church and State have plenty of such men; but the great bulk of them are where they have no, or but little, voice in high places. The great pity is that the Church and State are drifting to the point where they are not willing to trust such men to run their machinery.

You know it was said that once upon a time an old Irishman was brought before an American court for drunkenness. He had some misgivings about the result of his trial. The presiding judge said: "Pat, I assure you, that you shall have a fair trial and a just verdict." Pat answered, "Faith, your Honor, that is what scares me most." It seems that is what the Church and State are most afraid of. Almost all things in the Church to-day are done by a board of trust or through a commission of authority. What they do, the Church must accept or be disloyal to those who have their hands on the machinery. Just what the end of all this is going to be, I think no one can forecast. We shall just have to wait and see what we shall see.

Mt. Pleasant, Miss.

W. R. WILLIAMS.

(We did not say quite what Brother Williams represents us as having said. Our exact language was as follows: "It is unfortunate that there are so many persons among us who can be so easily led into thinking that the easiest way is the safest and best way. We do not know of any thing that we think is so much needed in this day as a few men who would be willing to die for principle, if necessary. A flexible opportunism is the bane of the age in which we are living, both in Church and State." However, we have little fault to find with the utterance of our good friend, who is a man of the manliest mold, except that he seems to think that all true and loyal men can do in this day is merely to wait and see what will happen. On the contrary, we are of the opinion that the time has fully come when the rank and file of our preachers and people, in whose soundness and devotion to the Church and the cause of Christ we have great confidence, should speak out and make their influence felt. Personally, we have no doubt as to what would follow from the continuation of a quiet policy of "watchful waiting," the first fruits of which we have already had in the Vanderbilt outrage.—Editor of the Advocate.)

TO THE PASTORS OF THE NORTH MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

My Dear Dr. Meek: Permit me, please, to state through you to the pastors of the North Mississippi Conference that all brides will be cordially welcomed to the Conference session as the guests of Starkville if the grooms will notify me in advance at once; but that brides of many years standing, being so much more numerous, it will be impossible for us to find accommodation for. We much prefer the good old chivalric form, "Ladies before gentlemen," but in the matter of entertaining a Conference, it has to be "Gentlemen before ladies."

Our people are opening their homes most hospitably in preparation for the Conference, and we anticipate a delightful session; but so many are inviting guests in addition to the ministers and delegates to be entertained that the spaces left are few. So much, as host of the Conference this year.

Now, secondly, as Conference Secretary of Education, permit me to urge every pastor to do his level best for the educational collections this fall; and by all means not to discriminate against this assessment in dividing the amount received. A pro rata division among the several objects to which the funds go is clearly the proper disposition where collections are not in full and have been taken together.

I would remind our brethren that our Conference has done nothing as yet for our new University and Theological School at Atlanta, and that the school of theology especially is depending on these collections for its maintenance this year. In talking with one of the professors last summer, he remarked: "The school, Bishop Candler informs me, is very short of funds." I expressed astonishment, reminding him of the munificent gift of Mr. Candler. He replied: "Yes, but those securities have just begun to bear interest and it will be six months before any income is received by the school." So let us see to it that our Conference makes a liberal contribution through its regular assessments at least toward starting our new school of theology upon its important mission.

Remember, too, that our Conference colleges, Grenada and Millsaps, are looking to these assessments as that without which, as we heard President Countiss say recently, they must close their doors.

Assuring you of a hearty welcome to our town, and hoping that you will both come and go with rejoicing, to the good fellowship of all and the prosperity of the Church, I remain,

Cordially your brother,

THOS. H. LIPSCOMB.

Starkville, Nov. 11, 1914.

A SPLENDID GIFT.

During our recent Orphanage and Rally Day at Shreveport, aside from the fine response of the people to the appeal for the Orphanage, Mr. C. W. Blair gave $1000 to the Orphanage, as already announced. He first gave this on condition that $3000 additional be raised with which to pay off the debt against the Orphanage. But after further consideration Mr. Blair decided to give this money without condition, but hopes that it will be an incentive to other liberal-hearted people to give a sufficient amount to pay off this debt.

We accept with gratitude this gift, and sincerely hope that it will induce other of our people to make such gifts as will enable us to meet this debt by the close of the year. What an unspeakable honor it would be if we were rid of this debt! It seems a small thing for the great Methodist Church to raise as small a sum as $3000 by the close of this year for this worthy purpose, and we sincerely hope that those God has blessed will respond to this appeal, and let us pay off this debt by the year 1915. Any gift, small or large, will be gratefully received, and applied to this purpose if so ordered.

Sincerely,

ROBT. W. VAUGHAN,

Superintendent Louisiana Methodist Orphanage.

ORGANIZED INTERDENOMINATIONALISM.

There seems to be a general consensus of opinion that for the present, denominationalism is of service in the work of the Church. It provides for the differences of temperament, education, history and intellectual development. It also gives freedom to conviction, and affords such room as is needed to secure harmony in variety, without undue repression.

Denominationalism should be so managed that there would be an open door between all denominations holding to the same fundamentals of the faith. In order that a member could go without embarrassment and without suppression of personal convictions from one to another. A letter from an evangelical church should pass as a clean bill in the whole sisterhood of Churches. Those holding to denominationalism are thus more and more drawing closer and closer together, and in some more approximate relations are coalescing.

There is at the same time an organization growing up between the Churches, which is moving under the name of organic interdenominationalism. This claims to be a method of co-operation between the different denominations. It has already become much more. It has become an organization or a series of organizations, which are rapidly coming to supplant the Churches, and to draw away strength from them. These various organizations have their various local, county, State and national divisions, each having its secretaries and other officers. No modern interdenominational movement can go far until it has its well-salaried secretary.

One difference between denominationalism and organized interdenominationalism is that the latter does the talking, and the former does the work. The former is much concerned with the Gospel, and the latter with sociology. The latter seeks reform, the former regeneration. The latter looks for popular success, the former for divine truth and fidelity thereto. If interdenominationalism succeeds, it will supplant the Church, and thereby prove a snare and a delusion.

It is important that the Church awake to the situation, and maintain her life and principles. The various evangelical denominations are now on most friendly terms, and their true interdenominationalism, in which they co-operate freely and are mutually helpful in all local work, is well established. More than this is evil, and organic interdenominationalism is fast becoming a colorless comprehensionism. — The Presbyterian.

MORE TREASURES FOR OUR NEW UNIVERSITY.

Rev. J. E. Bird, D.D., pastor of the First Methodist Episcopal Church, Charleston, West Virginia, has presented to our new University at Atlanta, through Rev. G. W. Banks, pastor of our First Church at Charleston, a gavel made from wood of the Rehoboth Church, near Union, West Virginia. This Church was built in 1786, and was the first Methodist Church erected west of the Allegheny Mountains. In it Bishop Asbury held Conferences in 1792 and 1793. This is a most valuable and interesting contribution to the historical collection of our University, which is one of the richest collections of Wesleyana and other Methodist things in America, if not in the world.

In the collection are many autograph letters and manuscripts of John Wesley, Charles Wesley, Fletcher of Madely, Adam Clark, Joseph Benson, Thomas Coke, Lady Huntington, Toplady, Cennick, Edward Perronet, and others, and many other rare objects of historic interest.

The Louisiana Educational Campaign

A SUGGESTIVE UTTERANCE.

In the statement of Mr. Asa Candler which accompanied his million-dollar gift to the new University, appears this significant utterance: "I fully appreciate that $1,000,000 is insufficient to establish and maintain the university which is needed and intended by the Church. Indeed, no amount of money alone is adequate for such a purpose. The faith, the love, the zeal, and the prayers of good people must supply the force to do that which money without these cannot accomplish. But I trust all these precious things will be given, together with many other gifts, great and small, from people of large means and from people of small means, so that in due time the great institution which is proposed may be fully equipped for the blessing of men and the glory of God."

In our campaign in Louisiana we have tried to strike this same note in making an appeal for many small subscriptions. We have frequently met with the statement that our only hope was to get some one of large means to do large things for our colleges. As much as we would welcome large sums from individuals whom God has blessed with great means, we feel that if we could get a popular subscription from many people it would mean more for our colleges than large sums from one or a few individuals.

Our plan of securing a dollar a member for the next five years would solve our problem if our people would only take hold of it. With the multiplication of units of interest and support, we feel sure that larger gifts would follow.

The "Buy-a-Bale" and "Wear-Cotton," and other movements in behalf of the depressed cotton market have all been popular appeals. The fortune making enterprises of recent years, such as the motion-picture business and others, have been those which received small amounts from great numbers.

We have the plan, but no plan will work itself; nor can the Secretary of Education work it by himself. We beg our people and preachers to either fall in with the plan and help us work it or to suggest a better one.

PAUL M. BROWN.

NOTES.

The pastor who, in answer to our appeal for a full collection of the assessment for Conference Education, dropped us a card saying that he could not get anything from his people for Centenary College, has our thanks for the courtesy of an answer to our letter, even though it was discouraging. Anything is welcome that breaks the awful silence in many quarters on the subject of our educational work.

Ancient athletics furnished the great Apostle Paul with many an apt and striking illustration. What would modern athletics suggest to him? In reminding the Christian that he was surrounded by a great crowd of witnesses, would he make use of the modern term "rooters?" We are always sorry for the team that has no "rooters." Say, our campaign in Louisiana needs "rooters." Will you be one? Give us a yell! Somebody write us one between now and Conference and we will have the Centenary boys give it at Conference.

"DO WE NEED CENTENARY COLLEGE?"

Answer of Education Commission:

"We would emphasize the absolute necessity that is now upon the Church to have in each State at least one well-established central college, strong enough to battle successfully against the secularizing tendencies in education that today threaten the welfare of the Church and American civilization."

The writer interprets this to mean either a college for men and women, or a college for men and a college for women.

Answer of Roman Catholic Church:

"We find it necessary to maintain a system of schools in Louisiana for the purpose of religious education; we have a large number of parochial schools and academies and in addition four schools that do college work, one in the shadow of Tulane University."

If Methodism believes it has an important religious mission as a branch of Protestantism, Louisiana is the last State in the South where it can afford to retrench in the matter of Christian education.

Answer of the Baptist Church:

"We believe it to be absolutely indispensable to our life and the fulfillment of our mission to maintain a college in Louisiana. We are maintaining a co-educational school and have just successfully completed a canvass for $100,000 in its behalf."

Are we going to resign our share of the religious leadership of Louisiana to the Baptists?

Answer of the Methodist ministry:

"Our ranks were constantly recruited from the halls of old Centenary. We felt a keen loss both in numbers and efficiency, even during the short time between the closing of the old and the opening of the new. We have begun again to receive recruits from the new Centenary. If Centenary should not be able to 'Forward! March!' we will of necessity 'Backward! March!'"

Answer of the State Schools:

If the State schools should make a true confession, it would be: "No candidates for the ministry are found among our students. We have a great variety of attractive vocational courses which all our students enter, but none of these lead to the ministry. We cannot emphasize pure culture because young men and women must hasten into business. We cannot emphasize religion nor the Bible, in the nature of the case, however important they may be. Our teachers are not selected with reference to their religious qualifications. Therefore, if you, the Church, consider religious education necessary in Louisiana, you will have to furnish it."

The writer more and more sees the critical danger through which young people pass at the time of going off to school. The danger is present even under constant personal supervision of Christian teachers. The danger is so alarming under other conditions that parents may well beware. Shreveport, La. R. H. WYNN.

CALLED HOME.

Mrs. Katie McMeans, the beloved daughter of Rev. J. M. Brown, our pastor at Houghton, La., died at the Schumpert Memorial Sanitarium, Shreveport, La., Nov. 11, 1914, following an operation for appendicitis.

Mrs. McMeans was left a widow a number of years ago, and by great labor and sacrifice reared her three sons to manhood. These boys in devotion to their heroic mother brought her to Shreveport, built her a comfortable home, and were preparing to care for her the rest of her days. Within less than a month after the occupancy of her new residence came this fatal illness, the home circle was broken, and the life plans of her noble sons frustrated.

Mrs. McMeans was a noble Christian woman, fully prepared for the great change. Realizing that her illness was fatal, the few days preceding her death were days of outbursting happiness. She spoke radiantly of the end, made suggestions for the last offices of burial, gave her lovely little daughter to the care of her father, Brother J. M. Brown, and passed into the open sky.

Her funeral service was conducted by the writer, and the body was conveyed to her old home at Bastrop, La., for interment.

Church News

During a four years' pastorate at the Boston Avenue M. E. Church, South, of Tulsa, Oklahoma, Rev. P. R. Knickerbocker has received over 600 members.

Mrs. Thomas A. Edison, the wife of the great inventor, is a very helpful and generous member of the Methodist Episcopal Church.

The Protestant Episcopal Church of Maryland, in its recent annual diocesan convention, declared in favor of national constitutional prohibition.

The British Weekly of October 29 represented Dr. G. Campbell Morgan, of London, who is ill with typhoid fever, as doing as well as could be expected, but as not wholly out of danger.

Dr. J. A. Chapman, of Galloway, Fla., has sent Dr. J. Edgar Wilson, the editor of the Florida Christian Advocate, $100 for a life-time subscription to that good paper. May his tribe increase!

A Canadian correspondent of the British Weekly states that "Ralph Connor," whose home is in Winnipeg, Canada, may go to the seat of the European war with the 79th Highlanders, being their chaplain.

Emperor Yoshihito, of Japan, has given 50,000 yen ($25,000) to St. Luke's International Hospital at Tokio, which is under the auspices of the Mission of the Protestant Episcopal Church in that city.

The Bowery Mission of New York City recently celebrated its 35th anniversary. Addresses were delivered in twenty-five languages, which the Brooklyn Eagle says gave the occasion a Pentecostal flavor.

Referring to Founder's Day at Hendrix College, at Conway, Ark., the Western Methodist says: "The presence of Bishop Morrison was a great inspiration. His address was worthy of himself and his high office."

The press dispatches state that the Pope is expected to issue a pastoral letter in the interest of peace in Europe in the near future. We fear that his efforts in that direction will amount to little, if any, more than those of Mr. Carnegie's commission of clericals.

Mrs. Schroedter, a daughter of Bishop Burt of the Methodist Episcopal Church, has become a volunteer nurse in Berlin, being attached to the staff of the United States Ambassador to Germany, Mr. Gerard. Her linguistic acquirements are said to be very valuable to her associate workers.

Dr. J. W. Cunningham, of Monrovia, Calif., is in his 91st year. He was licensed to preach 70 years ago, and 68 years have passed since he was married, but he has been a widower about four years. For a long while he was one of the most active and useful ministers in the M. E. Church, South, and is now venerated and esteemed by all who know him.

The Baptist Record (Jackson, Miss.) states that the Woman's Missionary Union of that Church in Mississippi has raised this year $60,454.53, against $45,327.22 last year, a gain of 33 per cent. The State Missionary Secretary, Dr. J. B. Lawrence, attributes their success in securing funds to three things: (1) their splendid organization; (2) their knowledge of mission work; (3) their systematic methods of collecting money.

At a meeting of the Board of Missions of the Methodist Episcopal Church in Boston, Mass., last week, Bishop F. J. McConnell is reported to have declared that he did not expect any speedy settlement of the trouble in Mexico and that the missionaries should remain in that country. He furthermore said: "If we should agree to rest until Mexico is in a state of equilibrium, we might wait indefinitely. It is the missionaries there who will bring about peace eventually."

Rev. H. D. Knickerbocker is winding up a remarkably successful quadrennium as pastor of the Austin Avenue M. E. Church, South, at Waco, Texas. During his four years' incumbency he has received 829 members into the Church and raised $100,000 for church work, a part of which has been the establishment of one near-by mission and the maintenance in part of another. It was Brother Knickerbocker who chiefly developed our First Church of Fort Worth into one of the great congregations of Southern Methodism. He easily takes rank among the most efficient pastors in the Connection.

At the recent session of the Memphis Conference, Rev. T. W. Lewis was appointed to St. John's Church of Memphis, and Dr. T. E. Sharp to First Church in the same city, the two exchanging places after having served their former charges for a quadrennium. Dr. H. B. Johnston, who had served the Memphis District for the past two or three years with such signal ability, was assigned to the Brownsville District, being succeeded by Rev. A. J. Meaders. Dr. J. H. Stevenson was appointed to a professorship in Vanderbilt University, but the Conference declared that in making the request for this appointment it was not endorsing that institution or recommending that its people patronize it. The new university in Atlanta was endorsed and support pledged to it. If we mistake not, however, Vanderbilt sympathizers were left largely in control of the educational affairs of the Conference. Rev. J. H. Bass, of North Mississippi, was transferred and appointed to the Kevil Circuit, in the Paducah District, and Rev. A. C. McCorkle, who last year served Ridgeley Station, was transferred to the North Mississippi Conference.

MR. SAMUEL ROSEMAN WEEMS, of Homewood, Miss., who celebrated his 100th birthday on Sept. 24, 1914. A sketch of Brother Weems was printed in the Advocate of October 22, but this picture was not available at that time. Brother Weems has been a life-long and devoted Methodist, having been a member of the Church for 93 years.

FREE ORPHANAGE CAR.

Dear Dr. Meek: Will you please state that a free car for the benefit of the Methodist and Baptist Orphanages at Jackson, Miss., will be run over the Gulf and Ship Island railroad on Saturday, Dec. 5th, from Gulfport and Hattiesburg to Jackson. All pastors and Sunday school superintendents are urged to appoint committees and make a thorough canvass for donations of all kinds. Anything that children can eat or wear or use in school will be acceptable. Application has also been made for free transportation over the L. & N. from all points in Mississippi to Gulfport; so let all along that line get busy, too, and send things into Gulfport on the 3d or 4th of December so they can be loaded in the free car that will be run from there to Jackson on Dec. 5. Saucier, Miss. L. F. ALFORD.

A CAR WILL BE RUN.

The Illinois Central Railway will run a car from Aberdeen to Jackson, Miss., leaving Aberdeen Tuesday, Nov. 24, in which shipments for our Orphans' Home will be conveyed free of charge. All packages should be plainly marked, "Methodist Orphanage," and delivered to the station in time for the local freight train of that day, Tuesday, Nov. 24. I. D. BORDERS.

Secular News and Comment

Postmaster-General Burleson will, it is stated, in his annual report recommend the government ownership of telephone and telegraph lines.

President Wilson has announced that he will attend the Panama-Pacific Exposition immediately after formally opening the Panama Canal next spring.

The Northwestern Christian Advocate says: "One of the most impressive things about the German Army is its singing. The men break into song at every opportunity."

Ex-President Taft is stated to have become a Connecticut voter. In view of the returns of the recent election, we should not be much surprised to see Mr. Taft again nominated by the Republicans for the Presidency.

Several Mississippi weeklies have lately been printing their issues on paper made in that State. The mill making the paper used is located at Moss Point, Miss., and the material utilized for this purpose is sawdust.

Mrs. Daisy McLaurin Stevens, of Brandon, Miss., was re-elected President of the United Daughters of the Confederacy at the annual meeting of that organization, held in Savannah, Ga., last week. During her incumbency in this office Mrs. Stevens has discharged its duties with distinguished ability.

Theodore Roosevelt was 56 years old on October 27. The day found him campaigning in Pennsylvania, where he was scheduled to make sixteen speeches during the morning, afternoon, and evening. It seems well-nigh incredible that one should have had such a career as has this remarkably versatile New Yorker and still be a comparatively young man.

The Trade Edition of the Mobile (Ala.) Register, issued on the occasion of its 100th anniversary, is a thing of beauty. It blends the past and present in a manner that instructs, fascinates, and inspires. This historic journal is a credit to the fair city of which it is the chief newspaper organ and to our entire Southland.

Dr. Oscar Dowling, the official head of the Louisiana State Board of Health, was elected president of the Southern Medical Association in its meeting at Richmond, Va., on November 12. That honor could not have been bestowed upon any one who more justly merited it or who will wear it more worthily. Dr. Dowling's reputation as a physician and health officer is national.

There is talk of changing the State flower of Louisiana from the magnolia to the orange blossom. The magnolia is also the State flower of Mississippi, and Florida some time since designated the orange blossom as her State flower. In several instances the same flower has been adopted by more than one commonwealth.

The English Parliament is again in session. It will be asked by the Government to provide funds amounting to $1,125,000,000, which, together with the $500,000,000 voted at the last session of Parliament, is expected to meet expenses up to March 31, 1915. A million additional men have been called for to strengthen the army, which will bring the number enlisted up to 2,186,000. This does not include the territorials, who number nearly 600,000.

The situation does not seem to improve in Mexico. The convention recently held in Aguascalientes was dominated by General Villa and his associates, and declared, among other things, for giving the great estates of the country to the common people, "allowing payment of two-thirds the value where the titles are good, and calling for confiscation if resistance to such terms is offered." Gutierrez, the lately designated Provisional President, seems powerless to calm the storm and another outbreak of civil war seems to be impending.

It is stated that during the recent prohibition campaign in California a debate took place between Dr. Matt S. Hughes of Pasadena and Mrs. Lillian Burkhart Goldsmith, a former actress, the former opposing and the latter favoring the liquor traffic. We fell very much in love with Dr. Hughes when he came as a fraternal messenger to our recent General Conference, but we did not dream that he possessed such a vast amount of courage as this news item indicates. Hereafter let his name be written ahead of that of Horatius, Spartacus, and all others on the shining scroll of the world's bravest heroes.

THE THANKFUL HEART.

Once more the liberal year laughs out
O'er richer stores than gems of gold;
Once more, with harvest song and shout
Is nature's bloodless triumph told.

We shut our eyes, the flowers bloom on;
We murmur, but the corn-ears fill;
We choose the shadow, but the sun
That casts it shines behind us still.

O favors every year made new!
O gifts with rain and sunshine sent!
The bounty overruns our due,
The fullness shames our discontent.

—Whittier.

A THANKSGIVING MEDITATION.

I thank God for Christian parents whose solicitude and prayers have followed me every day of my life, have succored me in the hour of temptation and strengthened me for life's responsibilities, and have been a constant buoyancy to my soul when the fire has burned low.

I thank God for the spark of divinity in my soul that teaches me that I was not made for meanness and constantly urges me upward toward God.

I thank God for a spirit of human sympathy which brings me into touch with the great throbbing heart of humanity and will not let me live a wholly selfish life.

I thank God for good men and women, whose pure lives are a perpetual rebuke to my imperfections and make me believe in a possibility of my achieving personal goodness.

I thank God for the men and women who keep alive in me the belief in great ideals.

I thank God for a friend here and there to break the monotony along life's road, who thinks kindly of me, and whose friendship is unselfish and heroic.

I thank God for the great Friend whose abiding presence grows ever sweeter to me, and who forgives my sins and believes in me when others do not and I despair of myself; whose love is higher than the heavens, broader than the world around, deeper than the kingdom of death, and more enduring than the successive rounds of day and night.

I thank God for His Church and for a place in it in which to work and for a disposition to work.

I thank God for faith in Him and in his Son, the world's Redeemer.

I thank God for faith in men and women, for a disposition to believe in their goodness, to be sorry for their faults, to forgive their wrongs, and to wish them ever the greatest happiness attainable in this life and everlasting bliss and happiness in the world to come.

I thank God for enough sorrow to keep my heart tender and to make me sympathize with all others who sorrow.—Rev. Samuel M. Miller, in Nashville Christian Advocate.

THE UNIVERSAL BROTHERHOOD.

Beneath all the martial cruelty and all the racial animosities of the great war, the world is permitted to see a thousand tokens of the universal brotherhood. Our hearts are bleeding with wounds of sympathy, because we read of the sorrows of Louvain, the tragedy of Liege, or the midnight terrors of Antwerp. We condemn, with all the vehemence of righteous indignation, those who, under the folds of whatsoever flag, have made war the convenient occasion for the display of primitive savagery. We lament war itself, with a new and passionate hatred of the false ambition and the brutal avarice which feed the springs of war in every land. We weep with the desolate widows and the helpless orphans of every battle-wounded nation. But there is a gleam of consolation and a ray of hope in the many evidences of undying human sympathy in the very midst of this calamity of the ages; a sympathy which defies the sword, and crosses with hurrying feet all the artificial chasms of national enmity, and ministers with the balm of kindness, at the bedside of a wounded foe.

The last message of a dying German soldier closed with these words of chivalrous gratitude: "Tell my father and mother how kind the French officers were." And, on the other hand, the French forces, on recovering a lost city, found that the German surgeon in charge of the hospital had treated the French wounded with a kindness so impartial that they gladly left the hospital entirely to his management.

And which of these two manifestations of humanity is the more natural? Is warfare the deepest element of passion among the nations? Is hatred an intuitive passion? Is man a demoniac in his final motives? God forbid! War and bloodshed and all the deadly sins of men and of nations, may indeed find a real home in fallen humanity; but the ultimate image, which is the likeness of Jesus Christ, is surely a restoration of the original image, even the likeness of God, as bestowed in the Garden of Eden. God's natural man, if we may so express it, is not a man of avarice or envy or bloodlust. Man as God created him, and as God in Christ purposes to restore him, is a man of peace and of gentleness, a link of love in the brotherhood of the race; and how good it is in the vision of the kingdom of heaven, to see beautiful tokens of this ideal Christian manhood, even amidst the ruins of a universal war!—Methodist Recorder.

COLLEGE ENROLLMENT AND THE EUROPEAN WAR.

W. E. Hogan.

During the last sixty days we have read and heard much about the depressing effects of the Great War upon the Southern States. Cotton, our chief product, has been selling at about half its normal price; banks in many sections have refused to loan money upon the best of security; merchants have declined to make their usual purchases because of the uncertainties of the fall and winter trade; many commercial and industrial enterprises have been compelled to reduce their forces and curtail their expenses in other ways; in fact, our whole financial condition, viewed from any angle, has been far from encouraging.

Since the beginning of this financial depression, all of our colleges have opened for the session of 1914-15. In order to find out how their enrollment compares with that of last year, we have made inquiry from the colleges themselves. We wanted to see if there is a falling off in the attendance at our colleges in keeping with the general decline and reduction of all Southern commercial activities. While it is impossible to tell just how much the enrollment has been reduced from what it would have been under normal conditions, still, our investigation shows that as compared with last year's attendance, our present enrollment is very gratifying.

Of the twenty-four classified colleges, reports have been received from twenty-two. Three of these have a considerably larger attendance than they had at this time last year; four have a slightly increased attendance; four have practically the same attendance; seven have a slightly decreased attendance; and four have a considerably decreased attendance. Of the eleven colleges which show no decrease in attendance, eight are for men, or co-educational, and three are for women; of the eleven showing a decreased attendance, five are for men, or co-educational, and six are for women.

Of the twenty-three unclassified schools, reports were received from twenty-one. Of these, six have a larger attendance than they had at this time last year; six have about the same attendance, and nine have a decreased attendance. Of the twelve showing an equal or increased attendance, eight are for women, and four are co-educational; of the nine showing a decreased attendance, seven are for women, and two are co-educational.

The total enrollment last year of the twenty-two A and B grade colleges which reported was 5826, as compared to 5283 the first five or six weeks of this session. This is undoubtedly a most excellent showing for our colleges in the face of the tremendous odds against them.

The total enrollment last year of the twenty-one unclassified schools reporting was 4133, while they had enrolled 3278, up to October 20 of this year.

These figures are encouraging. They show that our people are wisely curtailing expenses in other ways than denying their children the privilege of attending college, and that our young men and women are determined to secure the advantage of a college education in spite of the war, the low price of cotton, and the common cry of "hard times." These figures also show that our own Methodist endowed colleges can meet a most trying financial situation as successfully as can any other institution. The whole Church should support with their sympathy, their patronage, and their prayers, our college authorities who are so heroically keeping our higher educational institutions up to their normal condition at a time when practically all other interests in the South are suffering great loss.

Nashville, Tenn.

CHRISTIAN WORK IN MEXICO.

War is altogether terrible, but like other great calamities, it drives to God men who, in times of peace and safety, give little heed to their spiritual interests. Many evidences of this have been gathered from Europe and in our own country. It is not surprising, therefore, to learn that in Mexico, despite the devastation of the country by war, and perhaps on this very account, the people are turning to the churches in greater numbers than ever. Reports are coming to Dr. John W. Butler that the Methodist missions in Mexico, of which he has long been the very capable superintendent, are flourishing with unusual success. This is particularly true in the great centers, where the religious services conducted by our missionaries are supported by larger companies of worshipers than have ever before attended them.—New York Christian Advocate.

MORNING GIFTS.

A little bird sang his glad sunrise song;
A flower gave its sweetness the morning long;
The sunbeams brought daylight, clear and strong;
And the world was a pleasant place.
A little boy said, "I'm bigger than they,
So, of course, I've something to give to the day,
For I love the day, with its work and play."
So he brought a happy face. —Unknown.

THE BOOK OF THANKS.

"I feel so vexed and out of temper with Ben," said Mark, "that I really must—"

"Do something in revenge?" inquired his cousin, Cecelia.

"No! Just look over my Book of Thanks."

"What's that?" said Cecelia, as she saw him turning over the leaves of a copybook nearly full of writing in a round, text hand.

"Here, it is," said Mark, and he read aloud:

"March 8—Ben lent me his hat." Here again:

"January 4—When I lost my shilling Ben kindly made it up to me."

"Well," observed the boy, turning down the leaf, "Ben is a good boy, after all."

"What do you note down in that book?" said Cecelia, looking over his shoulder with some curiosity.

"All the kindnesses that ever are shown me. I do not forget them, as I might do if I only trusted to my memory. So I hope that I am not often ungrateful; and when I am cross or out of temper I almost always feel good humored again if I only look over my book."—Central Christian Advocate.

MISS ANN SLOCUM'S THANKSGIVING.

"I do think that Thanksgiving is beautiful," said pretty little Mrs. Winship, looking up from her fleecy knitting. "It does one so much good to try to actually count their blessings. I think I am thankful for everything as it comes along, but when I come to think up my mercies as I do at Thanksgiving, I'm so thankful I can hardly bear it."

"Humph!" said Miss Ann, with a ring of bitterness in her voice. "It's all very well for you to talk about thankfulness, and to feel it; you've had nothing to do but beautiful things all your life long. Helen Winship, you ought to be thankful. Think of the difference in our lives: you're dainty and pretty as a picture; you've been petted by everybody all your life. You have always had a beautiful home, and never had hard work to do. But I was as homely as a hedge fence in January always; no one ever kissed or petted me. I suppose you think I forget those things, but I used to long for them until it seemed to me my heart would break. You may well be thankful from the depths of your heart, but I fail to see any cause for my being so."

Mrs. Winship's eyes filled with tears, and her voice was very tender. "I know it, Annie," she said, going back to her friend's girlish name. "I've ever so much to be thankful for, a thousand times more than I deserve. I wish I could share some of it with you, but, dear, I've a thought for you. Because you have gone without, you know better than I do, for instance, how other hearts ache for the things they go without, and how much you can do. It is more blessed to make others happy than it is to be so ourselves, is it not, Annie?"

Mrs. Ann dropped her sewing and looked out of the window. Rob and Annie, her dead brother's children, were coming down the street; she had taken them four years ago when they were left orphans. She remembered now, as she watched them coming along towards the house in a grave, unchild-like fashion, how Annie had cried for a pretty white apron that she could wear once in a while, and Rob had pleaded, with something like a quiver in his boyish voice, for some clothes that didn't look as if they belonged to his great-grandfather. Had she ever bestowed upon them any of the petting and loving ways she had so longed for herself in her young days? It seemed to Miss Ann that the scales fell from her eyes.

"I've treated those children just exactly as I've been complaining that I was treated," she said, turning to Mrs. Winship.

"But you will not any longer, will you, dear?"

"I've been a blind, selfish woman, but my eyes are opened now, and I don't believe I'll shut them so again. You can go home now, Helen. You've been a good angel to me, but I want to be alone now for a little while to think it out. But you may be sure of one thing, I'm thankful for you, if for nothing else."

So Mrs. Winship went home, and Miss Ann went up to her own room, shut the door, and bolted it. She never told any one what she thought or did the hour she was shut up there, but when she came out she called the children to her.

"I want you to get ready to go down the street with me," she said. "Thanksgiving is coming, and I think we must have some new clothes for it. Rob wants a new suit, I believe, and Annie, you shall have some white aprons for every day, and a pretty new dress for best. Can you both be ready in fifteen minutes?"

"Oh, Aunt Ann, are you really going to buy me a new suit?" asked Rob.

"Yes, my boy, that is what I intend to do."

Rob hesitated a moment, then put out his hand. "I can't tell you how much I thank you," he said, "but I'll work just as hard as ever I can, truly I will, to help pay for it. I've got fifty cents that I've been saving for a year toward getting it myself, and I will give it to you now."

"No, Rob, I want to get the clothes for you myself, so keep your money for a knife or anything else like that you want."

"Oh—oh, Aunt Ann, can I get a knife?" cried Rob.

"If you want one you may, and if your fifty cents won't get a good one, I'll give you enough more."

Rob looked at his aunt in amazement for a moment, then obeying a sudden impulse, he threw his arms around her and gave her a vehement, boyish hug, after which operation he turned a couple of somersaults on the kitchen floor. "I had to, or I should a-busted," he said to Annie afterward.

"Well, well," said Aunt Ann, looking as frustrated as could be, "why, really, what is the boy doing? I guess, Annie, we will have to look for a new dolly while Rob is getting his knife, won't we? Why, bless me, child, what are you crying for?"

"I can't help it, I'm so happy," sobbed Annie. "I've wanted a nice, pretty dolly so it most seemed to me I couldn't bear it."

Well, that was only the beginning. Miss Ann never did things by halves. She taught herself to be tender and loving, and instead of thinking about herself all the time and murmuring at her troubles, she turned her attention to those about her, and tried to give pleasure to others.

"I'm thankful with all my heart and soul," she whispered to Mrs. Winship as she came out of church Thanksgiving Day.

"I do actually believe Aunt Ann is growing pretty," said Annie to Rob. "Seems to me she is."

"I believe so, too," he answered. "Anyhow she is good."

And Miss Ann, who happened to overhear this conversation, "thanked God and took courage."—The Christian Intelligencer.

THE LITTLE CHOIR BOY.

Georgie had a sweet little voice and dearly loved to sing. One morning in Sunday school it rang out so clear and true, the Dean, passing through the room, said:

"That little boy ought to be in the choir."

How glad and proud Georgie was. He could hardly wait until Sunday school was over to tell his mother all about it. He practiced with the other choir boys and did his very best to learn, and the last Sunday in Lent he was ready to be one of those who lead in the procession.

"You are sure you won't be frightened, dear?" asked mother.

"Oh, no, mother," answered Georgie. "I couldn't be. I'm just singing for Jesus, and He won't let me be afraid."

"I am so glad you have learned that," said mother, "and you will find it is always true."—The Shepherd's Arms.

HAD NEVER SEEN POP CORN.

The "New York Christian Advocate" tells of some little foreigners who had never seen pop-corn:

When a box of goodies sent by generous friends was opened at the Deaconess Home in New York, there were among the children present two German girls, a little Italian boy, Vera, a little Polish girl, and her Italian playmate.

Hammer and chisel were given opportunity to assist in the opening, says the deaconess. Creak, creak, and then the boards flew off in splinters. "Ah!" "O!" "Look!" "Good!" "Um!" followed by the questions, "And what is that on sticks?"

"That is pop-corn. Have you never seen it this way before?"

"No-o. How do you cook it?" was the puzzled reply. "In milk, and put butter, salt and pepper on it?"

"No, indeed. I'll show you how."

And surrounded by the excited girls, the deaconess led the way to the dining room, taught them how to take the corn from the cobs, and then how to pop it.

When it was time to go, each was given some corn to take home, that they might treat those at home. And all said, "We are sorry that those who gave this corn cannot be present."—The Presbyterian.

CONCERNING THE ADVOCATE.

How about your subscription to the Advocate? If you have not renewed it, it is very important that you do so at once. It is earnestly hoped that every pastor will look after the renewals in his charge before leaving for Conference. If every preacher in our territory would secure one new subscriber between now and the time that the Conferences meet, it would increase our circulation by approximately five hundred. The brethren are urged to see the Publisher as soon as possible after the Conference sessions open, as our three patronizing Conferences convene at very nearly the same time and he needs to do his work and move on. The end of the year is at hand, and unless they are renewed within the next three or four weeks MANY SUBSCRIPTIONS WILL HAVE TO BE DISCONTINUED.

REV. N. B. HARMON'S OPEN LETTERS.

We have within the past few weeks published two open letters from Rev. N. B. Harmon, of the Mississippi Conference, to Dr. Gross Alexander, the editor of the Methodist Review Quarterly. We make no apology whatever for having carried these communications, because there is not in the entire Connection a minister who is more loyal to Southern Methodism than Brother Harmon, and we realized that he was writing out of the deep convictions of his heart concerning a matter which he conceived to be of great importance. As we see it, he had a perfect right to give expression to his views and to propound to the distinguished Editor of our Review the inquiries which he saw fit to address to him; and we think that his interrogations were entitled to respectful consideration and a frank answer at the hands of Dr. Alexander. Especially was this true as his character was a guarantee that he was not engaging in mere captious fault-finding, but that he was really concerned for the welfare of the Church and honestly seeking information.

Why a Policy of Silence?

If the Doctor believes that his management of The Review is that which is wisest and best and such as the 2,000,000 Methodists of the South would approve, why should he hesitate to set forth the reasons which underlie it and to justify before the general public the phases of it called in question? We should think it would be a sincere pleasure for one charged with the administration of an important public trust for the benefit of the whole Church to answer any reasonable inquiries from a reputable source with respect to his manner of handling it. Wherefore, then, the profound silence with which our leading Methodist Editor has treated the questions addressed to him? Is he afraid to speak out and meet openly and squarely the issues which have been raised and repeatedly brought to his attention? The course which he has pursued has certainly been such as may lead some to suspect that this is the case. High as is the position which he holds, surely he would not without some very strong reason place himself in the attitude of treating with indifference, not to say contempt, a brother minister with a standing as good as his own, who conscientiously questions the wisdom of certain features of the influential periodical belonging to the Church, for the making of which he is responsible. The Doctor's say-nothing policy, according to our judgment, has been neither brave nor creditable.

Either Harmon by no means stands alone in the views which he has courageously advanced; the sentiments which he has expressed are shared by many. That an official organ of the Southern Methodist Church should become a sort of free forum in which modern rationalism and infidelity are paraded and, to some extent, endorsed, is nothing short of astounding; yet this is undeniably what has come to pass. We have had scholarly and widely known men in other Churches to express to us their surprise at the character of some of the articles published in our Review and their belief that their influence could not be otherwise than harmful. Yet when its Editor is respectfully asked why this is allowed, he deigns not to answer a word.

General Attitude Wrong.

Let it be distinctly understood that we are not objecting to having the teachings of Eucken, Harnack, Nietzsche and other men of unsound faith set forth in The Review, that they may be antagonized and refuted. We are willing to have it range all the wide fields of thought, provided it holds firmly to the true faith and earnestly combats whatever conflicts with it. It is with the general attitude of The Review that we are disposed to find fault. As we see it, it is entirely too tolerant of the prevailing skepticism of the day, and too little set for the defense of the integrity of the Holy Scriptures and the standard doctrines of Methodism. Herein lies the chief difference between the great Southern Review that was edited by the renowned Dr. Albert Taylor Bledsoe and the publication now being issued under the guiding hand of Dr. Alexander. The former took cognizance of the high priests of error, but only to hammer their productions to pieces, that the truth might not be hindered in its glorious forward march; whereas the latter leaves the affirmations of heretics unchallenged, and often commended in a way that might lead to their acceptance and spread further their poisonous influence. If any man doubts the correctness of this statement, let him carefully re-read Brother Harmon's citations and if he is fair and open to reason he cannot but be convinced. It is our firm conviction that no unsound utterance ought to be admitted into our Review and left unexposed if it is calculated to do harm. Southern Methodism holds to a creed that is in harmony with the plain teachings of the Divine Revelation and considers it so important that she safeguards it with restrictive rules and makes every minister who enters one of her Conferences solemnly obligate himself to support and defend it. All her periodicals are maintained to advocate her articles of belief and nourish her membership in a sound Christian faith. So, for any one of them to make its columns a medium through which modern infidelity, whether in or out of the Church, may propagate its blighting views is, as we see it, to betray its mission and fail in the right execution of a sacred trust.

A Fact of Much Importance.

As Brother Harmon has stated, The Review is now in the course of study for our young preachers. This makes it specially important that it should be a sound and faithful exponent and champion of orthodox Christianity. To make its pages a kind of free and open court where all sorts of sects and cults may have their wares exhibited upon terms of substantial equality, and into which the young and untrained minister may come and pick out for himself what he likes, is, in our opinion, scarcely the service that this periodical was designed to perform. We think that our young preachers need intellectual guidance, instruction, and establishment in the true faith, rather than an exposition of all the various beliefs and isms and a boasted freedom to surrender to their subtle logic or to break through the tangled web of their sophistry, according to their own capacities and inclinations.

The Church's Greatest Menace.

We do not hesitate to say that, in our humble judgment, the greatest menace to the welfare of the Christian Church at this time is the "rationalism" that is masquerading under the name of progressive theology. "According to your faith, be it unto you," is the great law of the Divine Kingdom, and when faith weakens, the spiritual life dies in the hearts of men and the power of God departs from them, though like Samson, they may not know it. Wherever the higher criticism largely obtains, doubt has paralyzed the spiritual energies of the Church and a cultural reformation is being substituted for a Scriptural regeneration. Penitents are rarely seen at the altar and the joyous testimonies of new-born souls are seldom heard. If there is a single distinguished higher critic in the world-to-day who is a great evangelist and soul-winner, we do not know his name. Of course, there are those who will calmly pronounce us an excited alarmist who is seeing huzaboos where none exist, but it is these complacent and easy-going gentlemen themselves who need to get their eyes open. The Northern Methodist Church is to a considerable extent poisoned with this pernicious teaching. It has even found its way into its Sunday school literature in a persistent attempt to eliminate the supernatural from the Bible, and has become such a widespread menace that a magazine, "The Bible Champion," has been established in New York to combat it. The Northern Presbyterian Church is having much of the same trouble, and some of its ablest papers are speaking out in no uncertain tones against the drift away from the apostolic faith. The British Wesleyan Church is shot through with higher criticism and for eight years in succession has had a decrease in membership; and some of the most discerning men now living have declared that the present colossal war in Europe is the product of the rationalistic teaching in Germany, which is being handed out to us in America by so-called Christian scholars as if it were a new and nobler revelation from God. Does all this look like there is no reason to be concerned?

Dr. J. Benson Hamilton, the brave defender of the faith in the Northern Methodist Church, declared a few months ago that ours is the most orthodox branch of Wesleyanism in the world; but if it is to be kept so we must have a different policy for our Review and there must be greater vigilance exercised throughout the Connection. This is an hour of golden opportunity for our Church. In launching our two new universities we have a chance to provide for our young ministers instruction that is sound, spiritual, and calculated to inspire them with loyalty to our standards and an evangelistic passion. If we fail to do this, great indeed will be our culpability. We will have gained nothing at all by the establishment of our new schools if we continue to do in Atlanta and Dallas the same kind of teaching that we have been doing at Vanderbilt. The fact that it would be done in an institution under the ownership and control of the Church would not make matters any better; on the contrary, it would make them worse, because it would strip us of the excuse that the situation was beyond our reach and give to it more directly our endorsement. The time has come when true men everywhere need to show their colors and stand up fearlessly for the "faith once delivered unto the saints." A longer timorous policy of silence may bring consequences too serious ever to be remedied.

The True Standard of Measurement.

That The Review is an interesting and entertaining magazine there is not the slightest doubt; but that is not the true standard by which to measure the worth of any Church journal. The proper questions to be asked in determining its value are, Is it really helpful to the cause of Christ, and does it make those who read it richer in spiritual life and firmer in their convictions as to the essential truths of the Divine Revelation?

The Best Church Loyalty.

Dr. Alexander perhaps thinks that all he needs to do is to be quiet and keep his own counsel and that the Committees on Publishing Interests at our Annual Conferences still continue to write endorsements of The Review and to sing its praises. And so very probably many of them will. We Methodists are great endorsers. Far too often it is the case that a thing only needs to be ours to command our full store of commendatory adjectives, regardless of what its real merits may be. It is high time that in such matters we were learning to discriminate and be careful as to our words. The best Church loyalty is that which stands up resolutely and uncompromisingly for the things which are vitally essential to the Church's welfare, such as her Articles of Faith and her Constitution (the superior importance of which she has shown by protecting them with restrictive rules), and not that which blindly supports every Church institution and enterprise, regardless of the influence it may exert upon the fundamental features of her faith and polity. Let our preachers carefully re-read Brother Harmon's letters and decide whether, in the fear of God, they can afford to endorse Dr. Alexander's policy of permitting such utterances, as he has cited, to appear in our Review and leaving them absolutely unchallenged.

We shall only add that if Dr. Alexander desires to explain to the Methodist public the grounds of his policy, the columns of the New Orleans Christian Advocate are wide open to him.

THE CHURCH AND PHILANTHROPY.

The following from a New York letter to The Times-Picayune is quite pertinent and suggestive at this time:

"Church people give $3 in every $4 to strict benevolence in ordinary periods, and are said to be keeping up that record in present contributions to the Christmas ship, Red Cross and special European relief funds. They are also helping, through their missionary societies, Christian work in mission fields whose home support has been cut off or greatly reduced, because coming from Belgium, Germany, Holland, Scotland and England. These church givers have just been warned by leaders of benevolence in the principal cities that they must reserve something for larger relief in America this winter. Universally throughout the churches the people are saving they will spend less money for Thanksgiving feasts, less money for clothes, and less money for Christmas presents."

We have often had occasion to say that the Christian Church is the world's great unfailing fount of philanthropy, and that the benevolent spirit manifested in and through the various fraternal organization of human origin is due very largely, if not wholly, to its influence. The above statement is strongly confirmatory of that view.

THE NEW DISCIPLINE.

Through the courtesy of our Publishing Agents, Messrs. Smith & Lamar, we have on our table a copy of the Discipline of 1914. Except that it is not annotated, we consider it an improvement upon its predecessor of four years ago in every respect. It is not so thick, and there are several minor features that we consider a distinct gain. For high class work in printing and book-making, our Publishing House is hard to surpass. Every Methodist ought to have a copy of the Discipline and inform himself as to its contents. And, along with the Bible and our standard Hymnal, it ought to be in every Methodist family. No Methodist home is complete without it. Our pastors would, we think, do well to exhort a little on this subject from the pulpit, and offer to take orders for this compact and illuminating little volume which contains the rules and regulations of our Church. One cannot be a good Methodist without knowing what Methodism stands for. Wake up, brethren, and wake your people up!

HELP OUR ORPHANAGES.

We hope that at this Thanksgiving season the Methodists of Louisiana and Mississippi will remember our Orphanages at Ruston and Jackson, which are feeling appreciably the effect of these stringent times. Where our congregations have their own Thanksgiving services, let the offerings taken be sent to these noble institutions; or if there is a union celebration of the Day, let the funds be divided between the denominations participating and let the part coming to our people be given this direction. There ought also to be at this time many who, moved by their gratitude to God for his abounding goodness, will count it a privilege to send to Brothers Vaughan and Williams a special personal contribution to this cause. We must not forget these needy children who are dependent upon the Church for their support and education.

PERSONAL AND OTHER NOTES.

Plans have been adopted for a $200,000 Carnegie building at Vanderbilt University.

The Western Christian Advocate (Cincinnati) calls attention to the fact that Bishop Hendrix is the senior active Bishop of American Methodism, having been elected to the episcopacy in 1886.

Rev. J. L. Weber, D.D., pastor of the Madison Heights Church of Memphis, Tenn., is conducting a revival meeting at Millsaps College this week. The new Millsaps Main Building will be formally opened on Tuesday, Nov. 24.

The Educational Anniversary at the North Mississippi Annual Conference will be held on Thursday evening, December 3. The principal address will be delivered by Dr. H. C. Howard, Professor of Systematic Theology in the Biblical Department of the new Atlanta University.

The Advocate will be represented editorially by the following brethren at our approaching Conference sessions: At the Louisiana, by Rev. C. A. Battle, of New Orleans; at the Mississippi, by Rev. O. S. Lewis, of Brandon; at the North Mississippi, by Rev. Olin Ray, of Jonestown.

From the Vanderbilt Notes in the Nashville Banner of November 14, we take the following: "The theologs are planning to pull off a big stunt Thanksgiving night and celebrate Vandy's victory over the Tigers with a big banquet in Wesley Hall."

In commenting upon Dr. Pinson's explanation in last week's issue of the Advocate, we inadvertently referred to the Cincinnati meeting as taking place in August, when we should have said in July. This, however, does not at all weaken the force of our statement.

Writing under date of the 15th inst., Dr. Geo. S. Sexton, pastor of our First Church in Shreveport, La., says: "We had a great day yesterday. The attendance was large at all the services and there were 9 accessions to the Church, two of them being on profession of faith."

We are publishing in this issue of the Advocate two re-print articles—"Christian Work in Mexico," and "Organized Interdenominationalism"—which we hope that none of our readers will overlook. They are both quite suggestive and are well worth meditating upon at this particular time.

The Louisiana Conference will have an admirable place to meet this fall. Shreveport is one of the most progressive and charming cities in the South, and our First Church there, in which the sessions of the Conference will be held, is one of the finest religious edifices in this section of the country.

We acknowledge ourselves indebted to Rev. A. S. J. Neill, of LeCompte, La., for a club of 6 subscriptions, forwarded on November 11. Brother Neill is one of the hustling, growing men of the Louisiana Conference, and he believes that it is worth while to make an effort to place the Advocate in the homes of his people.

Writing under date of Nov. 10, Rev. S. D. Howard, of Baker, La., says: "I had a fine service at Bethel on the first Sunday in this month, at which I received three persons into the Church on profession of faith. One of these was a Roman Catholic woman, whose husband and three children it was my further privilege to baptize."

The Wesleyan Christian Advocate, the organ of Georgia Methodism, has been advising that preachers be moved as little as possible this fall. In our opinion, this suggestion of our contemporary is wise and timely. It costs money to move, and we fear that few of our pastors will have any of that to spare under the conditions now existing.

The Woman's Missionary Society at Shannon, Miss., we learn, has observed the "Week of Prayer" with a large attendance. The offering amounted to about $10. The interest in the work is good, as the large increase in the membership of the society during this year and the contributions made, which have amounted to almost $200, clearly show.

From the Texas Christian Advocate of Nov. 12 we take the following: "Rev. Theo. Copeland, D.D., after eight years of successful work in St. Louis, was transferred to the Mississippi Conference at the late session of the St. Louis Conference. He made an enviable record in that great city as pastor of two of its leading churches. Dr. Copeland is an eloquent preacher and a most efficient and successful pastor."

We are publishing elsewhere in this issue of the Advocate a notice of the death of Mrs. Katie McMeans, of Shreveport, a daughter of Dr. J. M. Brown, our pastor at Haughton, La., which occurred at the Schumpert Memorial Hospital of that city on Nov. 11. Dr. Brown and the three worthy sons of the deceased will have the sympathy of many friends in their sore bereavement. May the Heavenly Father graciously comfort and sustain them!

Dr. I. L. Peebles, of Meridian, Miss., has lately brought out two new pamphlets—"Imputed Righteousness and What it Is," and "Are Men and Women Equal?" They are both able and suggestive discussions and deserve a wide circulation. The price of each is ten cents. Send at once to the author, or to Smith & Lamar, Nashville, Tenn., and secure these pamphlets. We hope to mention them at greater length in the near future.

The one hundred and twelfth anniversary of the birth of Rev. Creed Fulton will be celebrated at Emory and Henry College on Nov. 28, when the corner-stone of a new astronomical observatory and physical laboratory, that is to bear the name of Mrs. Fulton, will be laid. The principal address of the occasion will be delivered by Bishop R. G. Waterhouse, and the Misses Fulton will present a paper entitled "Recollections of Our Father."

Rev. I. D. Borders, of Aberdeen, Miss., makes a statement concerning the running of a car for the benefit of our Orphanage at Jackson, which our North Mississippi preachers and those in the northern part of the Mississippi Conference would do well to look up and read carefully. We hope that this car and also the other cars that are to be run will be filled to the very top with good things that will delight the hearts of Brother and Sister Williams and their very large family.

Our esteemed friend, Dr. W. H. Huntley, presiding elder of the Seashore District of the Mississippi Conference, refers to the status of the work in his "diocese" in the following poetic manner: "The pressure is severe financially, but the spirit is hopeful, and the future will show us worthy of this beautiful sea-lined land, in which many faithful Christian people live." We have in hand a somewhat reminiscent note from Dr. Huntley which we may let the readers of the Advocate see next week.

Misled by a note from a near-by minister (we will not tell his name), we erred in stating that Bishop Candler had dedicated our beautiful new church at Moss Point, Miss., on Nov. 8. The dedicatory service was held last Sunday, November 15, when the Bishop preached a characteristically strong and able sermon. This church, which is one of the best equipped houses of worship in South Mississippi, was erected by the Dantzer brothers in honor of their deceased mother, Mrs. L. N. Dantzer.

The First Methodist Episcopal Church, South, of New Orleans, has organized an Efficiency Bureau, which is composed of the following gentlemen: Mr. James Z. George, Chairman; Mr. W. W. Carre, Mr. C. F. Bowman, Mr. C. H. Wasson, and Mr. E. W. Smith. This is a movement in the right direction. Our churches in this day need to be up and doing. Particularly is this true of a down-town church in a large city. The pastor of this congregation is Dr. S. H. Werlein, who possesses a really evangelistic spirit.

Mrs. Alice Coleman Oats, widow of the late Rev. Q. A. Oats, who resides at Oakland, Miss., has an excellent piano of standard make, which she would like very much to dispose of at a greatly reduced price. The instrument cost when new $450, and it is in fine condition, having been used very little and the case being un-injured. Any one desiring to secure a choice piano at a bargain would do well to write Sister Oats at once. She also has quite a number of religious books, formerly belonging to Brother Oats, which she would be pleased to sell to any person desiring them.

Brother A. W. Bryan, of Oakdale, La., in a personal note to the Editor, adds the following statement: "We have built a new parsonage and new church from the ground up this year, and are in debt only about $560. We have about $4500 worth of church property here now, where we did not have five cents' worth last year." This is indeed a fine showing, and we heartily congratulate the Methodists of Oakdale and their excellent pastor, Rev. B. H. Sheppard, upon the remarkable progress which they have made. Louisiana Methodism is going rapidly forward in many comparatively undeveloped communities in the State.

The First Methodist Church at Columbus, Miss., of which Rev. W. L. Duren is pastor, has lately been thoroughly overhauled and a new Sunday school department has been constructed. This historic house of worship, which contains one of the finest auditoriums in the South, has been rendered much more up-to-date and attractive by these improvements, a more extended account of which, from The Columbus Dispatch, will be printed next week. The Methodism of the entire State of Mississippi is interested in all that pertains to this church, as the State Industrial Institute and College, which is usually attended by 300 or 900 young ladies, is located in Columbus.

Through the courtesy of Dr. E. H. Rawlings, we have had on our table for some time "The New Era in Asia," by Sherwood Eddy; "The New Home Missions," by H. Paul Douglas; and "The Social Aspect of Foreign Missions," by W. H. P. Faunce. These volumes have been brought out under the direction of the Missionary Education Movement of the United States and Canada. They are wonderfully informing and stimulating, and ought to be read by all our pastors and many of the laity. Being in paper covers, they can be purchased for a small sum. Order from the Publishing House of the M. E. Church, South, at Nashville, Tenn., or Dallas, Texas, or of Rev. G. W. Bachman, Winona, Miss.

In winding up the year's work, do not forget the Advocate. It will help much for you to mention to your people from the pulpit the importance of renewing their subscriptions and offer to attend to the matter for them. Two-thirds of our territory is in Mississippi, perhaps the most exclusively cotton State in the Union, and unless our friends will energetically help us there may be rocky times ahead for our paper. The Western Methodist, the official organ of the Arkansas and Oklahoma Conferences, has already had to reduce its size from sixteen to eight pages. To avoid a like disaster, we earnestly appeal to all our pastors to lend us at once a helping hand. Nothing suffers more in a time of financial stringency such as this than the Church press.

"Great Men and Great Movements" is the title of a volume of addresses by the late Bishop Charles B. Galloway, edited by Bishop W. A. Candler, which is just off the press of our Publishing House at Nashville. Bishop Galloway was preparing to issue these addresses in book form for the benefit of the Superannuate Endowment Fund of the Mississippi Conference when his death occurred and, carrying out his purpose, Mrs. Galloway has announced that the profits of the publication will be so applied. We predict for this volume a very wide sale, and we think that our pastors in Mississippi would do well to call the attention of their congregations to it. There are doubtless many persons in the Magnolia State who are not Methodists who would like to secure in permanent form these brilliant utterances of this great prince of the pulpit and platform. We shall speak at greater length of this admirable work at a later date.

THICK, GLOSSY HAIR FREE FROM DANDRUFF

Girls! Try It! Hair gets soft, fluffy and beautiful—Get a 25 cent bottle
of Danderine.

If you care for heavy hair that glistens with beauty and is radiant with life; has an incomparable softness and is fluffy and lustrous, try Danderine.

Just one application doubles the beauty of your hair, besides it immediately dissolves every particle of dandruff. You can not have nice heavy, healthy hair if you have dandruff. This destructive scurf robs the hair of its lustre, its strength and its very life, and if not overcome it produces a feverishness and itching of the scalp; the hair roots famish, loosen and die; then the hair falls out fast. Surely get a 25-cent bottle of Knowlton's Danderine from any drug store and just try it.

Mr. J. F. WILBURN, one of our oldest and most highly respected citizens, passed away on Nov. 4, 1914. Brother Wilburn was a man of very high character and had the confidence of all who knew him, many looking to him as a model. He had been a member of the Methodist Church for about thirty years and was a most active layman. He served several times as secretary of the district conference. He was true to his pastor, loved his Church and never let the cause of Christ suffer. He was modest and tender, yet bold and courageous. I am glad to have known and to have been associated with such a man. He every day exemplified by his conduct the truth of our Christianity. His work will abide. He leaves a wife, one son and two brothers, other relatives, and many friends to mourn his departure. But we know where to find him. Surely Christ will say to him: "Well done, good and faithful servant, enter thou into the joy of thy Lord." After religious service conducted by his pastor, we placed his body in the cemetery at Pickens, Miss., to await the resurrection of the just. His pastor,

J. D. SIMPSON.

Mrs. MARY F. COWAN was born in Warren County, Miss., on a plantation home, July 31, 1840, and died in Vicksburg, October 17, 1914. In 1860 she was married to Mr. Ludwell B. Cowan, to which union two sons were born, both of whom preceded her to the grave. Sister Cowan joined the Crawford Street Methodist Church, Vicksburg, by certificate in January, 1905. Financially, she was the largest individual contributor to the support of this church, and not a single worthy enterprise was called to her attention but was certain of a liberal contribution. Out of a loving, generous heart she delighted in giving of her means as the Lord had prospered her. Spiritually, she knew the Lord and loved his worship. Up to her last illness she was always present at all the services of the Church, the prayer-meeting included, and was thoroughly identified with every department of church work. After a long and painful sickness, her gentle spirit passed without a struggle into the presence of the Master, whom she loved and trusted. Almost her last words were that she had peace with God. Beyond any doubt, she now enjoys that peace and happiness that are the inheritance of the children of God. C. F. EMERY.

"The days of our years are three score years and ten, and if by reason of strength they be four score years yet is their strength labor and sorrow; for it is soon cut off and we fly away."

How truly does this passage portray the life of our dear mother, Mrs. VIRGINIA SIMMONS ELLIS, who peacefully fell asleep as she approached the four score milestone of life. She was born in Southampton County, Virginia, March 13, 1837 and died at the home of her son in Jackson, Miss., on June 21, 1914. On Oct. 13, 1853 she was married to Mr. William Frank Ellis, of Plymouth, N. C. Of this union twelve children were born, ten of whom survive her. Our mother was a most remarkable woman, not only in body and mind, but especially in those gentler virtues of soul which enter into the composition of a noble, Christ-like character. Her Christian influence, which began in early childhood was her constant thought. From early life she was a loyal member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, a regular attendant upon its services and a faithful worker in every good cause. Her Blbie was her guide. Left a widow with the responsibility of rearing a large family of children she often remarked that she needed the guidance and comfort which the Word of God alone could give. For many months she suffered from an incurable disease, but with Christian fortitude approached the end. With unwavering faith in her Savior she realized that she had "a building of God, an house not made with hands, eternal in the heavens."

HER DEVOTED DAUGHTER.

Miss MOLLIE A. WILLIAMS was born on May 24, 1848, and died at her home near Brandon, Miss., on Oct. 5, 1914. At the tender age of fifteen she gave her heart to God and united with the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, of which she remained a faithful and loyal member until the day of her death. With few words we may chronicle the mere facts of this life which has been lived among us; but to record the many acts of kindness and helpfulness bestowed on others would require volumes. Sister Mollie was a woman of intelligence, industry, and piety—a cultured Southern woman of the best type. Her home abounded in hospitality to her friends and neighbors. She always gave her pastor a royal welcome, and was never happier than when bestowing upon him or his family some act of kindness. Although she lived several miles from the old Shiloh Church where she held her membership, she attended the services with commendable regularity and contributed cheerfully and liberally to the claims of the gospel. Especially did she enjoy the annual camp-meetings which for so many years she had attended and helped to support. There was a sad appropriateness in the fact that she passed away and was laid to rest in the cemetery near-by while the meeting of this year was in progress. It was her lot to suffer much during the last months of her life, yet she bore it with Christian fortitude and died in the full assurance of a glorious immortality in that "House not made with hands eternal in the heavens."

A former pastor.

PAUL D. HARDIN.

Miss AMELIA BARTON KITTLE, at 12:30 o'clock p.m. Nov. 1, 1914 was called from her earthly home at Evansville, Miss., to her eternal home with God. As she played the organ for Sunday school on Oct. 25, no one dreamed that the death angel would call for her within the short period of a week, for on that day with her cheerful smile and loyal spirit she performed her duty and filled her place as she had been accustomed to do for these years. But the invisible was revealed and the unlooked-for came to pass at the time mentioned above. Her death was a distinct loss to the church at Evansville, of which she had been a member since the age of twelve. She had a place in that church as a loyal member and as the organist. She was a great believer in her Church, so much so that she was ever obedient to its obligations. In our knowledge there has never been manifested in any life a grander type of faithfulness to church duty than that shown by Miss Amelia. The church militant has lost, the church triumphant has gained. Her going away was an inexpressible loss to her home. She was sunshine, joy, and happiness there. Nowhere will her presence be so much missed. She leaves a mother, two brothers, and three sisters who will ever mourn her departure and cherish her memory. Her departure was a painful loss to the community, for she was known by all as a person who had a smile and a good word for every one. That peace which passeth all understanding was no doubt in her soul, for it was plainly written on her face and beautifully demonstrated by her life. Her body was laid to rest in the Elmwood Cemetery at Memphis, Tenn., on Nov. 2, Rev. J. D. Wroten conducting the service. We pray that our heavenly Father in his consoling power and strength may enter the hearts of these bereaved ones and give them the support needed to bear their great sorrow. Her pastor, J. D. WROTEN.

Delicious "Fruit Laxative" can't harm
tender little Stomach, liver
and bowels.

Look at the tongue, mother! If coated, your little one's stomach, liver and bowels need cleansing at once. When peevish, cross, listless, doesn't sleep, eat or act naturally, or is feverish, stomach sour, breath bad; has sore throat, diarrhea, full of cold, give a teaspoonful of "California Syrup of Figs," and in a few hours all the foul, constipated waste, undigested food and sour bile gently moves out of its little bowels without griping, and you have a well, playful child again. Ask your druggist for a 50-cent bottle of "California Syrup of Figs," which contains full directions for babies, children of all ages and for grown-ups.

Tidings From the Field

Franklinton, La.

Dear Doctor Meek: We are just closing here a revival campaign of unusual power and success. Thus far 37 persons have been received into the Church on profession of faith and there are quite a number of others to be taken in. The church here is in good condition and is doing good work. The Sunday school, while hampered for room, is doing splendidly. It has "run over" out into the yard, the church being too small to accommodate the classes. McCormack has wrought well in this field and is highly appreciated by his people and the whole community. Under his leadership there has been constructed, this year, a most splendid and well appointed, eight-room parsonage, and now there is some talk of a new church. After a few days of rest at home, I will be off for Missouri for a campaign of meetings. Please pray for me.—Thos. J. Norsworthy.

Nov. 7, 1914.

Choctaw Mission.

Dr. Meek: I beg space in the Christian Advocate to say a few words about our work here on the Choctaw Mission. We have just held our fourth quarterly conference which is the first fourth quarterly conference we have held on this charge in three years. We are indebted to many of God's people who have helped us both by their prayers and contributions, but most especially to Dr. H. W. Featherston, who sent us a horse and from his own pocketbook gave us money to fix up our home comfortably. We are indebted also to Rev. E. H. Cooley, of the Walnut Grove charge for the writing, and to Brother G. S. Ellis, publisher of the Dawn of Light, of Walnut Grove, for the publication of literature calling attention to our work among the Choctaws and to our great needs. The measure of our success in the work of Christianizing our people will be proportionate to the amount of help received from you who are able to assist us. So don't forget us because we are Choctaws, but pray for us because we are men and women trying to get out of the darkness. Any assistance in a financial way will be very timely and will bring its reward. May God bless everybody.—Simpson J. Tubby, Pastor.

Ringgold, La.

Dear Doctor Meek: Please allow me space to report some of the things accomplished on the Ringgold charge this year, which possibly may interest some of the readers of the Advocate. On Nov. 10, Rev. C. B. Carter, our presiding elder, held my fourth quarterly conference. After a splendid sermon from Gen. 17:1 and an abundant dinner, which had been prepared by the people of Rocky Mountain Church, we again assembled in the church for conference. I will give some of the items reported: During the year our church in Ringgold was painted inside and outside; the seats were stained; a new lighting system was installed, giving us brilliant light in all parts of the church. The parsonage has had a new dining room added; the house has been painted and other improvements made so that now the parsonage as well as the church, presents a very neat appearance. The work cost about $400. It was made possible by the zeal and energy of Mrs. H. R. Wimberly who raised all the money necessary to pay for it. We have held three revival meetings and the church membership has been toned up spiritually and much good accomplished which we believe will abide. The pastor and his family have received during the entire year many substantial tokens of the loyalty of the faithful members of the churches. We can not foresee what will be the final wind-up financially. There is much depression caused by the money panic, as this is a cotton growing section of the country. There is certain to be a large deficit in both the support of the ministry and on the Conference collections; but we have so much to be thankful for that we will not give up to despair.—H. B. Vandenburg.

Brandon, Miss.

I suppose it will be in order at this time for me to tell something of the Brandon work. This is the last month of the fourth year I have been on this charge. There is a feeling of sadness as I think that so soon my relation as pastor of these people will cease. No preacher in the Conference ever had more loyal friends or more appreciative congregations than the preacher of the Brandon charge. Happy indeed will be the lot of that preacher who is sent to serve it next year. Let me enumerate some of the good things that will fall to his lot. He will have one of the most comfortable and convenient parsonages in which to live that can be found anywhere. It has water works and a 9x9 bath room, with all modern fixtures. The next preacher will not have to be a "drawer of water nor a hewer of wood" for some time to come, as wood and coal are here ready for his use, as well as good water. Now some folks will say, "What is he going to do for exercise?" Well, Brandon has some hills of great length and height, and Methodist people are scattered all about on hill-tops and in hollows for miles around. Then there is a large garden spot which naturally produces cockle-burs and cocoa-grass. By diligence and persistence a splendid garden can be had. He will also have the very best of neighbors who believe in dividing good things, such as milk and butter, with the preacher. In this respect our lines have fallen in pleasant places. The church work is delightful. The Sunday school is alive and up-to-date. The Woman's Missionary Society is composed of as fine a body of women as can be found anywhere. The children are well organized in Juvenile Missionary work. It is always an inspiration to face a Brandon congregation. The men's prayer meeting which started a year and a half ago last April meets every Sunday afternoon in the Courthouse, while the women meet at the same hour in the Presbyterian Church. For three years in succession this pastor has carried up a full report to the Annual Conference and we are expecting to do the same thing this year. All this, in spite of the fact that the boll weevil moved here about the time I did, and has seemed to make Rankin County headquarters for the whole South.

Our last quarterly conference was held last Saturday, Nov. 7. Our beloved presiding elder was with us and preached strong and helpful sermons to our edification and delight. We all want him back on the district, provided "we" still remain in the district. If he is returned the Brandon preacher will have another reason for rejoicing. It is only a little while till the brethren will meet at Columbia. May the Lord's presence be with us in grace and power.—Osmond Lewis.

DEDICATION AT TALISHEEK, LA.

Dear Dr. Meek: Another word from the St. Tammany charge, if you please. Sunday, November 8, was a great day in Talisheek, La., for as previously announced, we dedicated our church at that place. The people entered heartily into the preparation for the service, which made it all the more enjoyable. Rev. M. B. Sharbrough of Columbia, Miss., preached for us at 11 o'clock. He was at his best, which means that we had a great message. It was profound and inspiring to every one present, and I am sure that it will be an influence for good to the entire charge for some time to come.

Thirty-eight years ago at this place and almost on the very spot, while on his first circuit and known as the boy preacher, Brother M. B. Sharbrough organized the first Methodist society at this place. It was the first society he ever organized. This made it very appropriate to have Brother Sharbrough with us at this time to preach the dedicatory sermon.

Rev. J. M. Henry read the dedication formula and prayed the dedication prayer, which was very impressive to this people. After this the doxology was sung and the benediction was pronounced by the pastor.

The women of the community having provided dinner at the church, we all then repaired to the table and partook of the many good things there spread before us.

Rev. J. M. Henry preached a very helpful sermon at 2 in the afternoon, nearly every one having remained after the dinner to hear him. We are always glad to hear Brother Henry preach, as we never hear him but that we feel better for having done so.

Brother Sharbrough preached for us again at 7 o'clock in the evening, at which service two united with the Church on profession of faith.

On Saturday, the 7th inst, Brother Henry held our fourth quarterly conference, and I am glad to say we had a much better report than we had at this time last year. The finances are pretty well all up to date, and we are going to Conference with a good report. To our heavenly Father be all the praise! T. V. PETERS.

REDUCED RATES.

Excepting the N. O. M. & C. R. R., all lines within the bounds of the North Mississippi Conference will sell tickets on the certificate plan to those who may attend the approaching session at Starkville, making a rate of one and one-third fares plus twenty-five cents. Certificates must be secured at the time of purchasing each ticket going to Starkville. These certificates will also be issued at Memphis, Tenn., to those passing through that city on their way to Conference. The N. O. M. & C. R. R. will sell tickets to and from Ackerman on like terms, making an extra cost of 25c to those going over that line.

J. R. COUNTESS, Secretary.

IMPORTANT NOTICE.

Official boards, pastors and presiding elders are requested to have all applications for aid ready for the Mission Board by Wednesday noon, the first day of Conference. These applications can be handed to either W. W. Drake or myself. It is very necessary that we have all the information possible; so we urge that the application blanks be filled out fully and accurately. These blanks are now in the hands of the presiding elders and can be obtained from them.

Statistical Reports.

The Statistical Secretaries have the new records to fill out and pastors must use new form of report blanks to correspond. These may be ordered of Brother Bachman, or of the Publishing Agents, and it will be well to secure them before leaving home that all items may be secured from records there.

Fraternally,
J. R. COUNTESS, Secretary.

MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

Class of the Fourth Year.

The Committee and Class of the Fourth Year of the Mississippi Conference will please meet in the Methodist Church at Columbia, Miss., at 9 a.m. on Tuesday, December 8, 1914. Every member of the class will be expected to be present. Those who have taken the Correspondence Course will please bring their certificates.

T. W. ADAMS,
Chairman.

CONCERNING STATISTICAL REPORTS.

To Pastors of the Mississippi Conference:

The statistical blanks will be mailed in due time to all pastors, with printed envelopes, for making reports to the Annual Conference. By observing the suggestions made by the auditors and resolutions of the Conference, you will greatly facilitate this work for the statistical secretaries and the auditing committee.

W. T. GRIFFIN,
For Committee.

EVANGELISM AND THE SUNDAY SCHOOL.

The large number of Sunday school scholars over twelve years of age who are not members of the church shows that the Sunday school as an evangelistic force has not been taken advantage of to anything like the extent it should. The World's Sunday School Association is trying to correct this shortcoming by sounding the evangelistic note with clearness and emphasis in its communications with the world-wide field. An illustrated card has been issued by the department of evangelization, Dr. George W. Bailey, chairman, showing graphically the necessity of giving the entire life for Christ. Religious papers with an aggregate circulation of half a million have given wide publicity to this thought-provoking message.

There is an encouraging response to this evangelistic emphasis. In Turkey the Sunday school workers in their recent annual gathering made evangelism through the Sunday school the center of their program. In Japan a great Sunday school campaign is going on simultaneously with the three-year evangelistic campaign inaugurated by the continuation committee of the Edinburgh Conference, and the aim of the Japanese leaders is to have the two campaigns supplement each other and proceed in the closest conjunction.

SAGE TEA DAKENS

HAIR TO ANY SHADE.

Don't stay gray! Here's a simple recipe that anybody can apply with a hair brush.

The use of Sage and Sulphur for restoring faded, gray hair to its natural color dates back to grandmother's time. She used it to keep her hair beautifully dark, glossy and abundant. Whenever her hair fell out or took on that dull, faded or streaked appearance, this simple mixture was applied with wonderful effect.

But brewing at home is messy and out-of-date. Nowadays, by asking at any drug store for a 50 cent bottle of "Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound," you will get this famous old recipe which can be depended upon to restore natural color and beauty to the hair and is splendid for dandruff, dry, feverish, itchy scalp and falling hair.

A well-known downtown druggist says it darkens the hair so naturally and evenly that nobody can tell it has been applied. You simply dampen a sponge or soft brush with it and draw this through your hair, taking one strand at a time. By morning the gray hair disappears, and after another application or two it becomes beautifully dark, glossy, soft and abundant.

ENCOURAGING.

Not long ago a canvass was made of sixty popular magazines to find out where they stood on the temperance question. Forty out of the sixty said space could not be bought, at any price, for liquor advertisements. "We should suspend business first," was the purpose expressed in one form or another by all the editors of these magazines. It is encouraging to find heroes throughout this country who put principle above money. The world is much in need of a consistent practice. If the editors of the daily papers would decline to insert liquor advertisements, the cause of temperance would be greatly benefited by such action. If every professing Christian would positively refuse to drink any whisky, the liquor business would suffer great loss. May God bless the everyday heroes of the temperance cause.—Gospel Advocate.

MEDICATED SMOKE
DRIVES OUT CATARRH

A Simple, Pleasant, Reliable Way, and It Costs Nothing to Try.

Dr. Blosser, who has devoted forty years to the treatment of Catarrh, is the originator of a certain combination of medical herbs, flowers and berries to be smoked in a pipe or ready prepared cigarette. The smoke-vapor reaches all the air passages of the head, nose and throat. As the disease is carried into these passages with the air you breathe, so the antiseptic, healing vapor of this Remedy is carried with the breath directly to the affected parts.

This simple, practical method applies the medicine where sprays, douches, ointments, etc., cannot possibly go. Its effect is soothing and healing, and is entirely harmless, containing no tobacco or habit forming drugs. It is pleasant to use, and not sickening to those who have never smoked. No matter how severe or long standing your case may be, we want to show you what our Remedy will do.

To prove the beneficial, pleasant effect, The Blosser Company, 450 Walton St., Atlanta, Ga., will mail absolutely free to any sufferer, a sample that will verify their claims by actual test. This free package contains a pipe, some of the Remedy for smoking and also some of our medical cigarettes. If you wish to continue the treatment, it will cost only one dollar for a month's supply for the pipe, or a box containing one hundred cigarettes. We pay postage.

If you are a sufferer from Catarrh, Asthma, Catarrhal Deafness, or if subject to frequent colds, send your name and address at once by postal card or letter for the free package, and receive our illustrated booklet.

EPWORTH LEAGUERS IN CHINA.

A few days ago I went with a company of Epworth leaguers to open a new street chapel which they are renting from funds provided by themselves. It is in a good location and they keep a reading and inquiry room open every afternoon and evening. It was opened not only for the evangelistic meetings which are held there by the "Volunteer Band," a company of our members who are ready to give of their time to the spreading of the gospel, but chiefly for the benefit of the merchants and clerks who are in large business houses near there.

Many of these are inquirers and probationers, but because of their business cannot regularly attend the meetings of the church. For this reason the inquiry room is kept open so that whenever they have a few minutes of time they may have instruction in the fundamentals of the Christian religion and Bible study.

Again this will be a place where any of them whose parents or employers will not allow them to pray in their places of business, which are their bedrooms as well, may go for prayer. Such a place is very essential in China.—W. M. Smith, Soochow, China.

A NOTE FROM BOONEVILLE, MISS.

Dear Brother Meek: Just a little more than two weeks and Conference will be upon us. I wish I could be there and meet that great body of consecrated men, as I have done in former days, but owing to continued sickness in my home, I can not be present.

This has been a successful year with us. Our faithful pastor, Brother S. A. Brown, has wrought well, and it has been the best year of his four. As he has served for a quadrennium, he will have to go to a new field at the close of this year. By his plain, practical ways and strong gospel preaching, he has won the hearts of the people here, and it will be with much regret that we will give him up. There are but few stronger men in the pulpit in our Conference than Brother Brown, and he hews to the line, letting the chips fall where they may. We feel that his work here has not been in vain and that the good seed that he has sown will continue to spring up and bring forth fruit in the days to come. We feel sure his lot will be cast in a pleasant place, and fortunate indeed will be the people whom he may be sent to serve.

As an evidence of how his people here appreciate him, on Thursday evening Nov. 12, at the residence of Brother and Sister Joe Walker, the members of his congregation and others gave him and Sister Brown a "shower," at which many were present, and there were a number of valuable gifts presented to them, consisting of silverware, cut glass, linen, traveling bags, hosiery, and many other useful and valuable things. Several made short and appropriate talks, to all of which Brother Brown replied with modesty and feeling. God grant that he may live long to labor in the Master's vineyard, and that he may always have souls for his hire!

We are very much interested as to who will succeed Brother Brown here. It will take a live young man, full of the spirit of the Master, if the work prospers. But we feel sure the Bishop and his cabinet will look well after our needs and will give us a good man—one that we will receive in the name of our Master and with whom we can heartily co-operate.

We enjoy reading the Advocate and consider it one of our best and strongest of church papers. We like the editorials, which are strong, impressive, and convincing. We endorse you, Doctor, in the stand you have taken concerning Vanderbilt matters, and against wordliness and worldly amusements.

HARDY W. REES.

A NOTE FROM BROTHER FULL- LOVE.

Dear Dr. Meek: I wrote you some time ago in regard to my meetings, stating that I had help in three. Bro. W. M. Young was with us at Rienzi, and gave us a series of soul-inspiring sermons. There were no additions to the church, but the membership was, I trust, lifted to a higher life.

Brother C. C. Clark, of Mantachie, was also with us in one meeting, in which the Holy Ghost fell on us at the beginning. I have not witnessed such a manifestation of the power of the Spirit in quite a while. The whole congregation was lifted to their feet by the time Brother Clark finished his sermon from Heb. 12:1, 2. In this meeting there were a number of conversions and accessions to the church. Brother J. T. Gullett, a local preacher, slipped in and spent a few days with me, preaching to the delight and profit of all who heard him. Quite a number were converted and united with the Church. In all, we have received nearly fifty into the Church. Well, God willing, we will soon look into each other's face. That God may bless you, is my prayer.

B. P. FULLILOVE, P. C.

IMPORTANT.

Louisiana Conference.

The chairmen of all Examining Committees and Conference Boards will be provided separate meeting places in our First Church building. The church is so appointed that it will not be necessary to go away from it to secure meeting places for the several Boards and Committees. The rooms for all Boards and Committees will be properly marked so that those interested may find them easily upon coming to the church.

All laymen, members of the Annual Conference, who have not been elected lay delegates to the Conference, are requested to write me at once if they propose attending the Conference session. We desire to furnish homes for all of them who expect to attend. Ministers who expect to bring their wives, should notify me immediately.

It is the purpose of the Committee in charge to let each member of the Conference know whose guest he will be, so that upon arriving in Shreveport, he may go at once to his home. The Methodist churches of Shreveport desire to give the best entertainment possible to the members of the Conference, and in order to do this, should have all special requests in our hands at once.

GEO. S. SEXTON.

CHURCH EXTENSION NOTICE.

As the editors of our Annual Conference Minutes for 1913, did not publish my post office address on page 18, as they did of other treasurers of Boards, I am put to the necessity of calling the attention of the preachers of the Mississippi Conference to the fact that my place of residence is Philadelphia, Miss. In remitting to me by money order, draw on P. O. at Jackson, Miss., and mail to me.

It would be a delightful task to act as your treasurer, if every preacher would remit to me before Conference convenes. Why not? Only ten thus far have sent in their money, and only two of these "paid in full," and they paid in the early part of the year.

On the presumption that every preacher takes and reads the Christian Advocate, I ask that you cut this notice out, and keep it for reference.

THOS. A. HOLLOMAN,
Treasurer Board of Church Extension, Miss. Conf.
Oct. 23, 1914.

LITTLE THINGS.

As I cannot see to read or do scarcely anything, especially at night, last night I was trying to occupy myself straightening a dresser drawer, until time to retire should arrive. This morning I saw a little folded paper on the hearth, and picking it up was on the point of throwing it into the fire, but took it to the light to see what it was, and found these words which helped me: "My dear brother Weems, who, as pastor, is so helpful to me, and whose earnest Christian life, is an inspiration to me," signed by one of our dear Christian teachers at Laurel, Miss. I thought there seemed nothing I could do, but the cry of my heart, what can I do? was answered in this little note: Live an earnest Christian life, and that may help some one. I feel I would be unworthy of my devoted, consecrated husband did I not try to be brave and to faithfully strive to lead an earnest Christian life.

I find so much help tendered me. One dear little Christian girl has offered to come every Sunday morning and take me to Sunday school. These seemingly little things are great events to me. She also offered to come and take me to the Junior League, of which she is leader. I wish she knew how these little attentions warm and cheer my heart.

My eyes now see with a clearer vision some things I did not appreciate so fully in happier days. My friends are very kind and precious to me and my faith in the Lord is strong, and I believe he will send me the help I need in his own good time. May God bless the dear old Advocate and make it a blessing to many others besides me. (Mrs.) S. G. WEEMS.
Newton, Nov. 10, 1914.

IMPORTANT NOTICE.

Dear Brother Meek: Please announce that the Illinois Central Railroad will run a car between Horn Lake and Grenada, Miss., to carry free all goods donated to the Orphanages in Jackson. ### THE CO-OPERATIVE HOME, CORINTH, MISS.

Miss Daniel writes enthusiastically of the progress of the Co-operative Home. She has eleven girls with her now, one of whom has been ill with fever for a month, but thanks to the kind care given her in the home, is now on the road to recovery. If the Corinth Co-operative Home had only cared for this one sick girl, giving her proper medical attention and good nursing, with a comfortable place to stay at a nominal price, it would have been worth while. But how vastly much more it has been and is doing!

We wish to express the thanks of Miss Daniel and the girls, as well as that of the whole Conference, to the Young People's Auxiliary of Holly Springs for the lovely donation sent in by that body of workers. It consisted of a quilt, spread, pillow cases, sheets, towels, gown and fifty jars of vegetables. The ladies of Corinth are still at work for us there. They have furnished, made and quilted sixteen quilts and are at work on ten more.—North Mississippi Bulletin.

CHINESE STUDENTS.

The readers of the Advocate will recall that the Chinese government decided to use the indemnity money returned to them by the United States after the Boxer trouble in the education of students. All members of missionary societies should rejoice over the ten young women who have been appointed to study in the United States this year: six of these girls have come from McTyeire College. It is a great opportunity which our colleges have in the education of these young women who will return to their homes as leaders among the people. It should be our constant prayer that they may go back strong in the Lord.

ALEXANDRIA DISTRICT MEETING.

The Alexandria District meeting was held in Bunkie, La., on Oct. 28, 29, 1914.

Mrs. Abel Bliss of Shreveport, the State President, and Miss Martha Nutt of St. Mark's Hall, New Orleans, were present.

Miss Nutt is among the foremost missionaries of that great metropolis of the South and is gaining a wide experience in her activities at St. Mark's Hall. Before coming to New Orleans, she was a missionary to Mexico for five years.

The opening meeting on Wednesday morning was given over to reports from all the auxiliaries in the different lines of missionary work. In the afternoon there were several talks on Stewardship.

On Wednesday evening Miss Nutt gave a very interesting address on the work and needs of St. Mark's Hall. It stirred one's heart to listen to this consecrated speaker as she told of the hard struggle they are having trying to give to the hungry the Word of God. She told of how she had been spat upon on the streets, and of doors that had been shut in her face when she went to some Italian families to tell of God's love. With all these trials they had reached over a thousand Italian families. Pray for the work of St. Mark's Hall. It needs your prayers and your help.

We had only about twelve delegates at the meeting, and very few members from all of the auxiliaries in this large district. Only a few, but each one felt that she had gotten at least one new idea to take home with her.

Miss Bliss could not be with us, having been called home by the serious illness of a brother. We regretted it very much, for all who have ever heard her speak look forward with a great deal of pleasure to her talks.

Bunkie gave us a very cordial welcome; in fact, we were invited to meet with them again next year. Alexandria invited us, too, and it was decided to go there, that place being more central. Mrs. J. E. GUARDIA.

WINONA DISTRICT MEETING.

The Woman's Missionary Society of the Winona District met in annual session at the Methodist Church at Carrollton, Miss., on Thursday, Oct. 22, with Mrs. H. M. Bryan presiding, Mrs. C. A. Neal, secretary, and Miss Louise Dunstan, of Winona, Corresponding Secretary of the North Mississippi Conference, conducting the Institute work.

On Thursday evening the Juniors favored the audience with several selections, and two good addresses were delivered—one on the work of the young people by Miss Lillie Hartwell, of Water Valley, and one on Christian Stewardship and Mission Study, by Mrs. J. W. Conger, of Valden, third Vice President of the Conference.

On Friday the delegates gave reports of the work of their societies, and Mrs. Walter Campbell, Publicity Superintendent, gave a lecture on Missionary Publications and their place in the work.

There were nine delegates present. The presence of so many Conference officers made the meeting very pleasant and very instructive to all who attended. Mrs. C. A. NEAL.

IF BACK HURTS USE SALTS FOR KIDNEYS

Eat less meat if Kidneys feel like lead or Bladder bothers you—Meat forms uric acid.

Most folks forget that the kidneys, like the bowels, get sluggish and clogged and need a flushing occasionally, else we have backache and dull misery in the kidney region, severe headaches, rheumatic twinges, torpid liver, acid stomach, sleeplessness and all sorts of bladder disorders.

You simply must keep your kidneys active and clean, and the moment you feel an ache or pain in the kidney region, get about four ounces of Jad Salts from any good drug store here, take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast for a few days and your kidneys will then act fine. This famous salts is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia, and is harmless to flush clogged kidneys and stimulate them to normal activity. It also neutralizes the acids so they no longer irritate, thus ending bladder disorders.

Jad Salts is harmless; inexpensive; makes a delightful effervescent lithia-water drink which everybody should take now and then to keep their kidneys clean, thus avoiding serious complications.

A well-known local druggist says he sells lots of Jad Salts to folks who believe in overcoming kidney trouble while it is only trouble.

CALOMEL WHEN BILIOUS? NO! STOP! MAKES YOU SICK AND SALIVATES

"Dodson's Liver Tone" Is Harmless To Clean Your Sluggish Liver
and Bowels.

Ugh! Calomel makes you sick. It's horrible! Take a dose of the dangerous drug tonight and tomorrow you may lose a day's work.

Calomel is mercury or quicksilver which causes necrosis of the bones. Calomel, when it comes into contact with sour bile crashes into it, breaking it up. This is when you feel that awful nausea and cramping. If you are sluggish and "all knocked out," if your liver is torpid and bowels constipated or you have headache, dizziness, coated tongue, if breath is bad or stomach sour, just try a spoonful of harmless Dodson's Liver Tone tonight on my guarantee.

Here's my guarantee—Go to any drug store and get a 50-cent bottle of Dodson's Liver Tone. Take a spoonful and if it doesn't straighten you right up and make you feel fine and vigorous I want you to go back to the store and get your money. Dodson's Liver Tone is destroying the sale of calomel because it is real liver medicine: entirely vegetable, therefore it can not salivate or make you sick.

I guarantee that one spoonful of Dodson's Liver Tone will put your sluggish liver to work and clean your bowels of that sour bile and constipated waste which is clogging your system and making you feel miserable. I guarantee that a bottle of Dodson's Liver Tone will keep your entire family feeling fine for months. Give it to your children. It is harmless; doesn't gripe and they like its pleasant taste.

PASSING OF THE WIDOW OF REV. ROBERT LAMBUTH.

The name of Robert Lambuth is now remembered by very few people. Yet less than fifty years ago he was one of the most popular and gifted young preachers in Mississippi. Indeed, among our preachers who have died early, probably only the sainted Steele had a stronger hold upon the heart of the Church. Robert Lambuth was the son of Rev. James R. Lambuth, and the brother of Rev. J. W. Lambuth, our early missionary to China, and the uncle of Bishop Lambuth. His father came to us from Alabama, where he seems to have been an itinerant minister. In Mississippi he settled north of Jackson, near Madison Station, where he lived until his decease. It was from this home that the Lambuth brothers went out into the Methodist itineracy.

Robert Lambuth was gifted, studious and devoutly religious. He rose rapidly in the Conference, and had before him the prospect of many years of usefulness when he fell a victim to what he conceived to be his duty. He visited a man sick with cholera, while assisting in a meeting in Canton. As a result, on the morning after his return to his home he was stricken with that dread disease and by 3 o'clock was dead.

He left a widow and one son. The son, Mr. Robt. Lambuth, is living at Meadville, Miss. The widow, familiarly known among all of her acquaintances as Aunt Kate, passed away at the home of her son on August 27, having attained to the ripe age of 75 years. Her maiden name was Bridger. She was the daughter of John and Nancy Bridger, and was reared near Brandywine Springs, in Claiborne County, Miss. She was married early in life, and was widowed at the age of twenty-eight years. She was afterward twice married, but was again a widow for many years before her death. During her later widowhood she divided her time between the home of her son and that of her favorite nephew, Mr. Frank W. Sharbrough, of Holly Bluff, Miss. She was taken seriously ill at the home of her nephew, but getting somewhat better, she returned to her son's home to die.

She joined the Methodist Church in early life, and was true to it all her days. She loved the Church and honored its ministry. Next to her Lord, Robert Lambuth always held the place of greatest honor in her heart. To the end of her life she revered his memory. She was reared in wealth, and during the life of Mr. Lambuth, was most tenderly cared for. But after his death, followed by the misfortunes resulting from the Civil War, her lot was not always an easy one; and for years, she was so afflicted with deafness as to render her life lonely. But she endured all with patience, and we hope that she is now where afflictions are no more and where joys will never cease.

SOUR, ACID STOMACHS, GASES OR INDIGESTION

Each "Pape's Diapiesin" digests 3000 grains food, ending all stomach misery in five minutes.

Time It! In five minutes all stomach distress will go. No indigestion, heartburn, sourness or belching of gas, acid, or eructations of undigested food, no dizziness, bloating, foul breath or headache.

Pape's Diapiesin is noted for its speed in regulating upset stomachs. It is the surest, quickest stomach remedy in the whole world and besides it is harmless. Put an end to stomach trouble forever by getting a large fifty-cent case of Pape's Diapiesin from any drug store. You realize in five minutes how needless it is to suffer from indigestion, dyspepsia or any stomach disorder. It's the quickest, surest and most harmless stomach doctor in the world.

RESOLUTIONS OF APPRECIATION.

Whereas it has pleased Almighty God in his providence and wisdom to remove from our midst our faithful and beloved brother, F. H. Holden, whom we deemed one of God's most faithful servants, and of whom we can say truly that he never missed attending divine service, and that he never missed an official meeting of the Church unless providentially hindered, and that he served efficiently as president of the board of stewards for a number of years, and as Sunday school superintendent for 20 years—a work he dearly loved—and whereas he was a man who was firm in his convictions, bold in his assertions as to where he stood, and whereas our hearts are grieved, and saddened by his being so suddenly taken from us; therefore be it resolved by this fourth quarterly conference the Wilson (La.) charge, held at Pine Grove Church this 24th day of October, 1914:

1. That we bow in humble submission to the will of Him who does all things well, and who governs his children with a hand of love, righteousness, and mercy.

2. That the grief-stricken wife and daughter have our deepest sympathy, and we pray that they may look steadily to him who is ever ready to comfort the bereaved.

3. That we shall ever cherish the memory of his faithfulness and Christian example.

4. That a copy of these resolutions be given to the loved ones and a copy sent to the New Orleans Christian Advocate for publication.

Signed: F. N. Sweeney, W. A. Woody, A. E. Miller, Committee.

A BRIEF TRIBUTE.

On September 24, 1914 the death angel came to our home and carried our mother to a brighter world where she will continue to serve her Master which was her delight while on earth. Our home is desolate without mother, who was its light. She was always cheerful and carried her burdens to her Savior in whose keeping she trusted. But she has gone now to the mansion prepared and ready for her coming. It is sweet to know that we shall meet her face to face some day if we are true and faithful to the Savior she loved and served so long. It is well with her, we know. He giveth his beloved sleep, and we look forward to meeting her over there where all is joy and peace and love. I ask the prayers of the readers of the Advocate that I may live so that I shall meet my mother and others gone on before who are near and dear to me, and my blessed Savior and dwell with them forever. My mother had always been a subscriber to the Advocate, and it is still a welcome visitor in our home.

NOTICE.

To the Pastors and Sunday School Superintendents of the Jackson District, Mississippi Conference.

My Dear Brethren: I take this opportunity of calling your attention to the Five-Cent Assessment made by the Mississippi Annual Conference on each member of the Sunday schools in the Conference for the support of the Sunday School Field Secretary. Your attention was called to this important matter through the Advocate and by personal letters from our Secretary and myself and you were urged to take the assessment early in the year. At this writing comparatively few of the Sunday schools of the Jackson district have responded to this urgent call. Let me beg you, brethren, to raise the assessment on your charge, or in your Sunday school, and send it to me at once. Do not let any one think that he can neglect this assessment, for this was imposed by an act of the Conference. Your assessments are not in full until this is paid.

Yours for the cause of Christ,

J. B. KING.

NEW ALBANY, MISS.

Dear Brother Meek: I have thought for some time that I would write the Advocate. I think, when our Father has been especially mindful of us in our labors, we should let it be known with thanksgiving and with praise, and perhaps thus encourage others on the way. I do not believe that in our work we acknowledge Him enough as a rule.

This, as we all know, has been an unusual fall on account of the great European war; so many being thrown out of employment by the mills, lumber yards and other industries suspending business. But regardless of it all, it has been one of our best years in the ministry. Everything was in better shape at our fourth quarterly conference last week, than ever before in my husband's ministry. Our Missionary Society has put more than $400 in improvements on the parsonage this year without giving a single entertainment of any kind, having taken Malachi 3:10-12 as a working basis and each member pledging a certain amount per month; and, we still will have money in hand to pay a large part on a new church carpet. So we feel that we have much to rejoice over. The part of the work I especially rejoice in is our Bible Study Circle which meets every Monday afternoon, except on the first Monday which is given to our business meeting. We have a really live, interested class studying God's Word. We have just about finished St. John, and will then take up Acts. I have the honor of being leader of this Circle and it has been a means of grace to me. Mr. Pope is putting forth special effort on a junior choir, and it would delight you, I am sure, to hear these New Albany children sing and see the number who remain to preaching services. I do believe we have more children to remain at 11 o'clock than any other church in Mississippi; and I should not be afraid to compare our prayer-meeting crowd with any. It is truly delightful to see how many of our people attend prayer-meeting. Now while I am telling you about our good things and praising our Father for them, I may as well tell you that we have more men who attend services here than at any church we have ever served, and we have served—well, a long time.

Before closing, I must tell you how we both appreciate the firm, uncompromising stand you always take for right as Editor of our Conference organ on all questions that arise. We believe that it is the only true way to maintain the integrity of our Church, and rejoice that you do it. With best wishes always for the Advocate and its Editor, I am,

Sincerely,
(Mrs.) S. L. POPE.

ANOTHER GREAT REVIVAL ON THE COLUMBIA (LA.) CHARGE.

Dear Dr. Meek: I am just back from my country church (Boeuf River), where I held a five days' meeting. As a result we took in 31 new members, many of them being among the most substantial citizens of the community. Several came from the Baptist Church. Nine new family altars were erected, and a new church will be organized on the 5th Sunday of this month with 50 members. This rounds up two hundred members on the Columbia work this year. I will hold another revival at our Grayson Church just before Conference, and will be assisted by Evangelist T. J. Norsworthy, of Yazoo City, Miss. I ask the prayers of my brethren that we may have another great victory. We are taking this country for Christ. I hereby promise you that I will make a general canvass for the Advocate if I am returned another year. I have sent in a few names this year, but I am determined that my entire official board, and many others, shall read our church paper during the year 1915. Yours for even greater success.

Rheumatism

A Home Cure Given by One Who Had it

In the spring of 1893 I was attacked by Muscular and Inflammatory Rheumatism. I suffered as only those who have it know, for over three years. I tried remedy after remedy, and doctor after doctor, but such relief as I received was only temporary. Finally, I found a remedy that cured me completely, and it has never returned. I have given it to a number who were terribly afflicted and even bed-ridden with Rheumatism, and it effected a cure in every case.

I want every sufferer from any form of rheumatic trouble to try this marvelous healing power. Don't send a cent; simply mail your name and address and I will send it free to try. After you have used it and it has proven itself to be that long-looked-for means of curing your Rheumatism, you may send the price of it, one dollar, but, understand, I do not want your money unless you are perfectly satisfied to send it. Isn't that fair? Why suffer any longer when positive relief is thus offered you free? Don't delay. Write to-day.

NOTICE TO LOUISIANA PREACHERS.

It will be absolutely necessary for the statistical work of the next Annual Conference to be accurately done, that each preacher reporting his work be provided with the new report blanks. The old report forms cannot be used with the new Statistical Tables. There are radical changes, and no reports will be received by the Statistical Secretaries except those on the new forms. It will be necessary, therefore, for each preacher to provide himself with the new forms before the meeting of the Conference. We urge you to order of the Publishing House at once a book of the new forms, and prepare your reports before you leave home for Conference so that they will be ready to hand to the Secretaries immediately on your arrival at Conference.

ROBT. W. VAUGHAN,
Statistical Secretary.

10 CENT "CASCARETS" FOR LIVER AND BOWELS

Cure Sick Headache, Constipation, Biliousness, Sour Stomach, Bad Breath—Candy Cathartic.

No odds how bad your liver, stomach or bowels; how much your head aches, how miserable you are from constipation, indigestion, biliousness and sluggish bowels—you always get relief with Cascarets. They immediately cleanse and regulate the stomach, remove the sour, fermenting food and foul gases; take the excess bile from the liver and carry off the constipated waste matter and poison from the intestines and bowels. A 10-cent box from your druggist will keep your liver and bowels clean; stomach sweet and head clear for months. They work while you sleep.

MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE NOTES.

By Mr. R. A. Maddox.

The Field Secretary has been very busy for the past three months; hence, having been away from home nearly all the time he has written no notes for the paper.

At High Hill, in the Homewood charge, they have a Teacher-training Class for the young people which recites the lesson during the session of the Sunday school, and in twelve months they will have a class to graduate as trained Sunday school teachers. Such work should be done in every school where there are young people.

At Purvis, two Bible Classes have been organized and enrolled with Dr. Bulla, our superintendent of that department at Nashville. Let others organize, and bring about an awakening in Bible study, for we will never have a revival of religion until we have a revival of Bible study and teaching.

Mr. N. Cockerham, of Terry, R. F. D., on Brother Crooks' charge, has just written the Field Secretary for literature on our course for Sunday school teachers. He says that he wants to get 50 persons to take this course. Who will be the next? God bless Brother Cockerham!

Now is a splendid time to begin the study of next year's lessons. Get the outline of the year's work on your mind and heart now. As we will be in the Old Testament, you might study its books of history, noting carefully the administration of the Judges and Kings of the Jewish nation.

As Conference approaches, we are caused to look back over the field and ask, have I done all I could in the Lord's vineyard this year? Souls have been saved, and souls have been lost. With which force have we been allied?

OUR SUNDAY SCHOOLS.

By Rev. B. F. Lewis,
Chairman Sunday School Board,
Mississippi Conference.

A few words about our literature. It is needless to speak of its excellence. A cursory examination will satisfy the most hypercritical that in mechanical make-up, quality of paper, subject matter, and literary finish, our Sunday school literature is not surpassed. Not only loyalty to the Church, but the inevitable result of putting such excellent mechanism, doctrinal purity, and chaste English into the hands of our youth will at once commend itself to all. Attention is here called to some proposed changes in this literature:

1. The Magazine. The General Sunday School Board, upon the advice of the Sunday School Editor, recommended that a special edition of the Magazine be issued for the use of those teachers using the graded literature. From this special edition will be omitted all matter pertaining to the uniform lessons, and in its place will be substituted such helps as will be useful to those teachers using the graded lessons. The value of this change will be seen when it is recalled:

(a) That there are ten thousand teachers in Southern Methodism today needing graded helps who have heretofore been unable to get any assistance whatsoever from our magazine in their work. They have had to battle alone with their problems. Ofttimes the inexperienced—and they have been many—have failed. Hundreds of teachers and scores of Sunday schools have abandoned the graded lessons, and often the graded Sunday school, because "they did not know how," had no one to instruct them, and did not know where to turn for aid.

(b) The graded teachers, being thus cut off from our leading workers periodical, not only become ignorant of the vast Sunday school field we are cultivating, but losing vital interest in it, naturally become indifferent or self-centered. In a very popular book published a few years ago, is to be found this pregnant sentence applicable here: "Out of sight, out of mind." This proposed change will relieve the situation entirely.

2. The Workers' Council. This will be an entirely new publication. It is especially designed for pastors, superintendents and other Sunday school officers. It will discuss primarily those methods and problems in which they are most vitally interested. It will be a kind of clearing house for Sunday school workers. Its value will be incalculable. The paper will be sixteen pages and cost 25 cents a year.

3. The Missionary Messenger will be another new periodical. This will be issued quarterly in monthly parts containing brief missionary items fresh from the mission fields, with a program for mission Sunday. This little paper will smooth the wrinkles from the brow of many a perturbed

Sunday school superintendent, clarify the atmosphere for many a missionary committee, and enable many a pastor to answer "yes" to question six of the Discipline. It will be sold at the exceedingly low price of two cents per year in quantities. The price will be no bar to universal use.

Permit a word of caution. Let not the missionary committee expect to find here everything desired, nor a program in every way adapted to the school. It is impossible to prepare a program in every way suitable to a school of a thousand pupils, thoroughly organized and equipped, and expect the same program to be used in a small school poorly organized and meagerly equipped. From headquarters must come only such a program as is capable of enlargement for the larger school, and of condensation for the smaller.

4. Our Little People. Only one other proposed change will be noted. Our Little People will be issued hereafter both in leaflet and quarterly form. This change is made to meet the call of those teachers desiring to give out sheets weekly to small children instead of having to give "quarterlies."

All these changes will be effective on January 1, 1914, and will be made without extra charge. Other changes are in contemplation, but due notice will be given.

THE ANNUAL CONFERENCE.

A Methodist Annual Conference is one of the most unique assemblages in the world. Dr. C. W. Carter, in his brilliant Semi-centennial address delivered to the Louisiana Conference about three years ago, declared that it was the only body of which he had any knowledge that conducted its business by means of questions and answers. This interesting form of procedure was instituted by Mr. Wesley, and in his day the questions propounded were searching ones probing into the preachers' spiritual life and methods of work and were made to count for much. Since then they have become much more formal and stereotyped, and within late years there has been some disposition to brush carelessly over some of these inquiries. Thus two or three years ago some of our Bishops were inclined to dispense with calling the name of every preacher in passing their characters, and instead only to call the name of each presiding elder and ask if there was anything against any pastor in his district. This, however, was clearly a violation of the law and we are glad to state that it has been some time since we have heard of such a procedure being adopted in any of our Conferences.

But some of the Bishops, we have lately noticed, while calling every preacher's name for the passage of his character, have fallen upon the plan of not permitting him to make a report of his year's work. This method is not illegal, but we do not at all like it. We think that when a minister has had struggles and hardships in a difficult field for twelve months, he is justly entitled to speak a word to his brethren concerning them, and that the interest and sympathy manifested by them in return is worth a great deal. In our opinion, the spontaneous developments resulting from conducting an Annual Conference in the old way are vastly more helpful and inspiring than the plan of having a cut-and-dried program, toward which we now seem to be drifting. Too much formal speech-making gets to be uninteresting and wearisome, and it is not a difficult thing to "institute" almost any kind of a public religious meeting to death. The dulllest district conferences that we have ever attended were those with programs pre-arranged as to every detail, and some of our Summer Bible Schools are even more trying and taxing. Ever since we have known anything about Annual Conferences they have been the best attended and the most sustained in interest of any of our Church gatherings. Where then is the wisdom of trying to make them like other assemblages which cannot draw and hold the attention of the people?

Another distinguishing characteristic of an Annual Conference is that it presents the unparalleled spectacle of a large body of ministers giving up all voice in selecting their own fields of labor and committing their interests and the interests of their wives and children absolutely into the hands of the Bishop and his Cabinet. If such an example of perfect consecration to a cause as this can be found anywhere else in the world, we do not know where it is. There are, to be sure, some disappointed ones among these men when the assignments to the charges are made, and occasionally one of them may make complaint; but it is a very rare thing when all of them do not go to their appointments resolved to do their best, and most of them do this without any murmuring whatever. If any one thinks that true heroism has perished from the earth, he needs as a cure for his pessimism only to watch the workings of the Methodist itinerancy. We do not by any means claim perfection for our preachers—they are human and have their frailties and faults—but after having lived and moved among them for more than twenty years, we give it as our deliberate conviction that, taken all in all, a body of men with nobler aims and purposes and truer and braver hearts does not exist upon our planet. They have had much to do with the making of this great nation in the past, and upon them its future must in no small measure depend. They belong to the "chivalry of God," and their sacrifices and labors are contributing largely to the extension of his glorious Kingdom both at home and abroad.

It is to be hoped that the thousands of Methodists in Mississippi and Louisiana will remember the approaching sessions of our Conferences in their prayers. They need to be overshadowed and directed in all their proceedings by the Holy Spirit, and for this we should earnestly supplicate the throne of grace. The Divine superintendence of the Church which is so outstanding in early history, as given in the Book of Acts, was not restricted to the Apostolic Period. It may still be had if we truly covet it and will rightly seek it. And, beyond any question, it is in this day, as it has ever been, the Church's supremest need. No man, or body of men, is sufficient for these things. They must have guidance from above to make them so. Jesus did not commission the disciples to go forth in their own wisdom and strength; but when he issued his command, he added, "Lo, I am with you alway, even to the end of the world."

BISHOP WATERHOUSE: A BRIEF SKETCH.

Richard G. Waterhouse was born in Rhea County, Tenn. (near Spring City), on December 24, 1855, being a son of Franklin Waterhouse, a prominent farmer of that county. He received his elementary education in the common schools of his native county and in the Spring City High School; he then became a student at Hwassee College, where he remained a year, after which he attended Emory and Henry College, from which institution he was graduated in 1885. His work in the ministry has been somewhat varied in character and uniformly successful. He was first a junior preacher on the Kingston Circuit of the Holston Conference; then for two years he was a missionary in the Cumberland Mountains, and later served as city missionary in Knoxville in connection with Centenary Church. After this he was four years pastor of the Church Street congregation of Knoxville, and for two years served as presiding elder of the Radford District. In 1892 he was elected to the Chair of English in Emory and Henry College, and the next year became President of that historic institution, a position which he filled with distinction for seventeen years. When he became the official head of Emory and Henry College it owed a debt of $41,000; this he liquidated and increased the equipment of the College to the amount of $75,000 or $80,000, and during his administration the attendance increased from 100 to more than 230. He was five times elected a delegate to the General Conference, was a delegate to the Inter-Church Conference on Federation in 1905, and was for eight years a member of the General Board of Education. He was elected to the episcopacy at the General Conference which met in Asheville, N. C., in May, 1910.

Bishop Waterhouse is a man of magnificent physique and of a strikingly impressive personality. In appearance he somewhat resembles the late Rev. J. S. Oakley of the North Mississippi Conference, who was so generally admired and loved. Bishop Wilson, seeing Brother Oakley in an audience over which he was presiding, once addressed him as Brother Waterhouse and asked him to lead in prayer. Bishop Waterhouse possesses a remarkable clarity of judgment and a decidedly practical turn of mind. He is genial, social, and entertaining in conversation, and has a large and sympathetic heart. It has never been our pleasure to hear him in the pulpit, but he has the reputation of being a preacher of great force and impressiveness. For the past four years he has been living in Los Angeles, Calif., and has had charge of our work in the Far West, where his leadership has been most helpful and where he has won the confidence and high esteem of all. The Methodists of North Mississippi will give him a cordial reception, and we pray that his presidency and ministry may prove to them a great blessing and give a forward impetus to all the work of the Church in their territory.

PROHIBITION SWEEPING FORWARD.

Commenting upon the returns from the late prohibition elections, The Presbyterian, of Philadelphia, says:

"Of the States voting for State-wide prohibition last week, California and Ohio went wet. In California the question cannot be raised again for eight years. In Ohio, 77 out of the 88 counties voted dry, but the two cities of Cleveland and Cincinnati gave the large liquor vote that overcame the rest of the State. On the other hand, five States have voted dry in the past month and a half—Virginia, Oregon, Colorado, Washington and Arizona. Instead of 71 per cent of the United States area being dry, now 75 per cent is dry. Instead of 46,000,000 people living in dry territory, there now are 52,000,000 people under the white flag of prohibition.

Alabama and Idaho have elected legislatures pledged to prohibition, and legislative enactment will speedily follow.

All this is highly encouraging to the friends of temperance, and indicates a growth in sentiment which must eventually sweep out of existence the whole nefarious liquor business."

THE CIRCUIT RIDERS.

Do you know those war-scarred heroes, and why all their faces shine?
Can you tell me, gentle comrade, where they've been?

They're a troop of Circuit Riders from the "far-flung battle line,"

Where the foe of man is fighting hard to win.

These knights of God are coming from the mountains and the seas,

Shout it not, for they are humble, modest men;
They are coming from the conflict to report their victories

And to hear their marching orders, "Go again."

Some have climbed the rugged mountains and with faces toward the dawn

Have seen a gleam of gold along the gray;
Have seen the mist of morning like a silver veil withdrawn

Before the light of God's on-coming day.

Some have watched along the seashore, where the storms are breaking wild,

God's rescue men who stand along the shore;
They are men who fear no danger when the mad
waves high have pilled;

They are bravest when the storms most loudly roar.

You can feel hell's pillars trembling when these men are on their knees;

For they dare the Arch Friend's fell malevolence,

And the world is being lifted by their importun-
ing pleas;

For they loose the power of God's Omnipotence.

They can storm the forts of heaven with their thunderbolts of prayer!

They can move our Ancient God upon His throne;

For their faith knows no denial, "Ever on to do and dare,"

Is the motto of these men to self unknown.

They are men in dire privation who stand bravely
at their post,

And they count not even life to them as dear;
They are quick to hear his summons and they never count the cost,

When the Captain calls each man replying,
"Here."

Some have fallen in the battle and their weary flesh is dust,

For them the sunset hush-call has blown;
And their unforgotten ashes are the nation's sacred trust.

While their soldier-spirits march before the throne.

O to fall as they have fallen, and to win as they have won!

O to stand with them and hear the King's behest:

Come ye blessed of my Father to the Kingdom of His Son

Enter ye, our faithful soldiers, into rest.

METHODISM IN STARKVILLE.

By T. H. Lipscomb.

Methodism and Starkville began life together. The town (named for the Revolutionary hero, John Stark), was incorporated in 1837, and the first Methodist Church was organized in 1835, a year after the settlement of the town. An old chronicler writes in 1838, "Starkville is already a growing place, with two hotels, five stores, two groceries, an academy with fifty students, two churches, a Presbyterian and a Methodist, and four attorneys and two physicians."

It was not, however, until 1839 that the first Methodist Church was built—a small brick building with open fireplace, used also as a schoolhouse. Among the charter members of the church and first officers of the town are found the names of Elijah Hogan and R. A. Lampkin. In the little brick church the grandparents of the town to-day recall the learning of their A B C's. Rev. E. R. Strickland was appointed at the close of the year 1839 as the first regular pastor, with Edward Phillips as junior preacher. Samuel Hawkins was pastor in 1840; John J. Jones in 1841; P. B. Bailey in 1842-3. Asbury Davidson and J. M. Pugh served as presiding elders in these early days. Jas. A. Godfrey, T. J. Castle, Whitfield Harrington, and W. G. Millsaps were among the pastors from 1815 to 1860. An eye-witness, yet living, tells it as true that one of these, before the war, reported at a quarterly conference that he had received as his salary for the three months two pair of woolen socks and 20 cents in money; adding that he was satisfied, for he believed the people had done the best they could."

The walls of the brick church becoming unsafe, and having to be propped by heavy timbers leaning against the church as tent-ropes, it was, during the fifties, though continuing in use as a schoolhouse, superseded by a new and larger frame church, plain in exterior, but with galleries on the interior, supported by turned columns, around three sides of the building. Negro members sat in the galleries during the morning services, and in the afternoon the entire building was turned over to them, at which time the pastor of the church preached regularly to crowded houses of colored people only. During these days there were no organs, the hymns were "lined," and the singing led by a solemn brother of very matter-of-fact temperament. It is told as true (we record only history), that on the pastor's entering the pulpit on one occasion to begin the service, instead of announcing the first lines of a hymn as usual, he said, "My eyes are dim, I cannot see, I left my specs at home; please, sing." Whereupon, the tune-raiser thinking it a hymn, began to sing the words, "My eyes are dim," etc. We have no record that the break caused even a ripple of merriment, for those were serious days. The war pastors of the church were Jas. W. Walton, — Carlisle, Ransom Jones, and E. H. Mounger, with C. D. Wade as presiding elder.

Until 1870 Starkville and Pierce's Chapel (long since defunct) were united in one pastoral charge, but since the organization of the North Mississippi Conference Starkville has been a station appointment.

In 1885, during the pastorate of Rev. J. S. Oakley, the present larger and more commodious church was built on the site of the other two; but facing south (after much controversy), instead of east, as the former church had faced. The membership has grown from 99, as the records show, in 1864, to 502 in 1914. In recent years elegant art glass windows and a pipe organ have been installed. During the present year a Sunday school addition 40x36 feet, has been added to the church, to accommodate the school with an attendance now of over three hundred; and on the corner lot adjoining an elegant new parsonage has been built at a cost of $5000. Other improvements in anticipation of the approaching session of the North Mississippi Conference are also being made.

Once before, in 1888, during the pastorate of Rev. Thomas Cameron, now an aged veteran living at New Albany, the Annual Conference convened at Starkville, Bishop Chas. B. Galloway presiding. Delightful memories of that occasion, at which Bishop R. G. Waterhouse will preside, is looked forward to by the entire com-will preside, is anticipated by the entire community with much pleasure.

Since the war, the following well known ministers of North Mississippi Methodism have served the church as presiding elders and pastors.

Presiding elders: K. A. Jones, 1865-70; A. C. Allen, 1870-75; R. G. Porter, 1875-79; T. W. Dye, 1879-80; T. C. Wier, 1880-84; J. D. Cameron, 1885-89; W. T. J. Sullivan, 1889-91; T. C. Wier,

AUTOGRAPHS WANTED.

In the library of our new School of Theology there are autograph letters of the Wesleys and of nearly all the presidents of the British Wesleyan Conference. There are also letters of nearly or quite all the Bishops of American Methodism; but we have no letters of Bishops Soule, Capers, Early, Kavanaugh, Doggett, and Parker. These are very much desired. If friends who may have autograph letters of these great men will send them to me, the authorities of our new University will appreciate most gratefully these contributions to the rich collection which is already in the library.

Brother John R. Pepper has sent me recently the watch seal of Bishop Asbury—a most interesting thing, indeed. WARREN A. CANDLER.

REV. T. H. LIPSCOMB.

Rev. T. H. Lipscomb, the pastor of the Methodist Church at Starkville, Miss., where the North Mississippi Conference will convene on Dec. 2, was born in the near-by town of Columbus, Miss., on March 23, 1877; and is the sixth son of Dr. W. L. Lipscomb, for many years a practicing physician of that city. His education was obtained at the Franklin Academy, Columbus; the A. & M. College, the Peabody College and the University of Nashville, and at the Drew Theological Seminary, Madison, N. J.

Before entering the ministry, he was for three years principal of the Itta Bena Graded School, during two of which years he was secretary of the Mississippi State Teachers' Association, and an instructor in physics and physiology in the State Summer Normals.

Feeling called of God to preach the gospel, he resigned his connection with educational work and for three years studied theology, graduating from the Drew Seminary near New York City in 1903, with the degree of Bachelor of Divinity. Since then, he has served pastoral charges in the North Mississippi Conference, beginning his ministerial labors on the Winstonville Mission.

In connection with his pastoral work he has been a frequent contributor to religious periodicals, and for a number of years was reporter for the Commercial Appeal at Annual Conference sessions.

In 1910, the Methodist Publishing House at Nashville issued a book from his pen entitled, "Conscience and Its Culture; or Through Conscience to Christ," which has been very favorably reviewed by the religious press, both in the North and in the South. More recently, a series of articles contributed by him to the New Orleans Christian Advocate, entitled, "The Things Methodists Believe," has been put in pamphlet form by the Church and issued from the Publishing House.

During the past quadrennium he has been chairman of the Examining Committee for admission on trial into the North Mississippi Conference, and for three years Conference Secretary of Education. In the spring and summer of the present year he has represented his Conference at educational gatherings of the Church at Nashville, Tenn., and Lake Junaluska, N. C. On September 30 he was strongly supported (though he did not at all seek it) for the Secretaryship of the Department of Ministerial Supply and Training of Southern Methodism, with headquarters at Atlanta, and came within two votes of election.

He came to Starkville two years ago from the pastorate of the Methodist Church at Lexington, with his wife and four children, three boys and a girl; and since his coming 80 new members have been received into the Methodist Church, an elegant new parsonage has been built, and a large addition made to the church for the better accommodation of the Sunday school.

REV. W. W. WOOLLARD,

Presiding Elder of the Columbus District, within the Bounds of Which the Approaching Session of the North Mississippi Conference Will be Held.

William W. Woollard was born in Tate County, Miss., on November 11, 1865. He was converted at his home church in Senatobia, Miss., in August, 1882, and immediately joined the Church; and in the winter following was licensed to preach, Rev. T. B. Malone being at that time his pastor and Rev. C. N. Terry his presiding elder. Besides the common schools, he attended the McTyre Institute, at McKenzie, Tenn., and Vanderbilt University. He was admitted on trial into the North Miss. Conference at West Point, Miss., in December, 1886, and was ordained to deacon's orders by Bishop J. C. Keener, and to elder's orders by Bishop Charles B. Galloway. Brother Woollard has filled many of the leading appointments of his Conference, among the number being Rosedale, Okolona, Aberdeen, Winona, Water Valley, Tupelo, and Columbus. He has also served as presiding elder of the Aberdeen and Greenville Districts, making a remarkably fine record in that responsible office. He is at present, and has been for a number of years, a trustee of Millsaps College and a member of the Publishing Committee of the New Orleans Christian Advocate. He is happily married and has three children. He is a man of studious habits, is widely read, and has a large fund of information. No man in his Conference has studied the subject of Christian missions so extensively as has he, or is so familiar with that branch of Christian literature. He is easily one of the ablest Methodist ministers in his State, and possesses in an unusual degree the elements of leadership. And, better still, he is deeply spiritual, warm-hearted, and brotherly, and can always be counted upon to stand for the highest ideals and best traditions of Southern Methodism. The North Mississippi Conference owes much to him.

IF WE NEED CENTENARY, WHY DO WE FAIL TO SUPPORT IT?

Last week I asked the question, "Do we need Centenary College?" Dr. Wynn has answered it affirmatively. I am now asking another question, viz.: "Why do we fail to support it?"

I hope some one can be found to give us the correct answer. If Centenary, with all her years of service to God and man, does not justify the support of our members, there has been a woeful lack of work in her behalf. Again, I propound the query, If we need Centenary College, why do we fail to support it?

The Why of Centenary College.

Early in the history of our country, the Churches established schools. There was a realization of the fact that civilization needs something more than culture—that it needs Christian culture. Of late years these Church schools have, in many instances, failed to keep pace with the State schools. Mississippi in 1913 had about 1100 boys and girls in Church schools and about 2300 in State schools. The Churches of that State do better than those of most all our Southland. Louisiana hasn't a single well equipped Church school, excepting the Catholic schools. The Protestant churches of our State do not educate their children under Christian influences. Centenary is designed to fill this want. She is also looked to as a place where our young preachers can get an education to qualify them for their work. If we need educated preachers and Christian laymen, we need Centenary College.

Centenary College: Its Present Condition.

There are occasions when it is best to be brutally frank in giving information. This appears to me to be one of them.

Centenary College is dying! Unless something is done before the present session is over, the old college will surely close her doors, thus ending an honorable career. When the Board of Trustees met in July, there were several members who voted against prolonging the agony. They felt that it was unwise longer to continue the struggle, and that the honorable thing to do was to discontinue the school. It was only because of the intervention of the business men of Shreveport that this was not done. They put up enough money for current expenses for part of another session, hoping that the Conference would do something. I warn the members of our Church, ministers and laymen, that Centenary College cannot weather another session without help—not a little help, but substantial help. There must be at least $50,000 for another building, $10,000 for equipment, and sufficient endowment to justify the employment of enough competent teachers. Neither Dr. Wynn, nor any other man, can do the impossible. The school will die at the end of the present session unless something is done which is more substantial than passing a few resolutions.

Centenary College—The Plant.

Shreveport has about 35,000 people, nine railroads, many factories, paved streets, and very few blind tigers. It is a much more moral place than is usual with cities of her size. The Methodist Church is especially strong. The First Church represents an investment of fully $150,000; the Noel Church of $80,000; the Texas Avenue Church about $12,000; the Queensboro Church about $3000; and the Cedar Grove Church about $2000.

Centenary College owns 40 acres of land in the city limits, easily worth $2500 per acre, and a building worth $30,000, on which there is an indebtedness of $5000. The total value of our property is conservatively $130,000. There is here the foundation for a great school, but the school must yet be built. Can we do it?

REV. JOHN H. MITCHELL.

Rev. J. H. Mitchell, son of Rev. W. B. and Mrs. Sarah S. Mitchell, was born in Oxford, Lafayette County, Miss. He was granted license to preach at the early age of 17, and by appointment of the presiding elder served part of a year as junior preacher on the Grenada Circuit, and one year as pastor of the Greenwood Circuit, after which he spent some time as a student in the Theological Department of Vanderbilt University. He was admitted on trial into the North Mississippi Conference in 1877, his first appointment at the hands of a Bishop being the Snow Creek Circuit, which he served for two years. Following this, he served Booneville and Rienzi for a couple of years, after which he was stationed at Iuka, where he remained for a full quadrennium, during which time a comfortable home was purchased for the preacher. He next served (four years each) our churches in Corinth and Macon, after which he was made presiding elder of the Durant District. During the four years that he spent on it he raised and expended $2000 in the liquidation of a debt on the district parsonage and in its improvement. For the next two years he was pastor of Greenwood Station, where he led in the construction of the beautiful church in which the Methodist congregation in that progressive city still worship, which at that time was a phenomenal achievement.

In 1890 Bishop Candier appointed him presiding elder of the Winona District, on which he spent a full quadrennium, during which he rescued the parsonage of that district from a growing and threatening debt of $1300, and expended $800 in improving it. After serving Greenwood Station again for one year, he was placed in charge of the Aberdeen District, which he traveled for four years; and from there he went to a three years' pastorate at Water Valley, where he raised the money to pay the larger part of a debt of several thousand dollars on the splendid new house of worship in that city, which had been erected in the face of many difficulties under the pastorate of his predecessor, Rev. W. W. Woolard. For the last three years he has been serving the Corinth District, where one of his achievements has been the purchasing of a most superior home for the presiding elder in the city of Corinth.

Out of a pastoral experience of 37 years, Brother Mitchell has served only twelve charges, and fifteen years of the service that he has given to the Church have been spent on districts. He is a practicable and forcible preacher, a tireless worker, and possesses business ability of a high order. Wherever he has labored the interests of the Church have gone steadily forward, and perhaps no preacher in North Mississippi is more generally known and appreciated by the great body of the people. He has left his impress enduringly upon many communities, and for a long time has been a recognized force in his Conference.

THE JOINT BOARD'S LAST APPEAL BEFORE CONFERENCE.

To the Members of the Mississippi Conference:

Dear Brethren: As your servants and the servants of the Church of God who are responsible in a slight measure above yourselves for the care and welfare of our superannuated preachers and the widows and orphans of our deceased preachers, we make this last appeal before our annual meeting at Conference.

First—We ask that you set the first Sunday of December as the day throughout the Conference when the preachers whose charges have deficits shall make a last appeal for this most sacred cause.

Second—We request the presiding elders to assist the preachers and people in all the charges reporting up to date a deficit in making the first Sunday of December the time for paying in full this assessment. This is the last Sunday before Conference.

Third—We would remind you again that whereas the pastors and presiding elders have boards of stewards upon whom they depend for the collection of the assessments made for them, the superannuated preachers and our widows and orphans, for their support depend entirely upon the active preachers of the Conference.

Fourth—We believe that if this cause is properly presented, even in this time of stringency, the people will come to the relief of these aged men and of our helpless and dependent widows and orphans. The board appeals to each man to do his very best.

Fifth—The Board would call your attention to the statement of our Book Agents, Messrs. Smith & Lamar, that Bishop Galloway's volume of addresses has been issued for the benefit of our Superannuate Fund. Let every preacher become an agent for this book and help this most sacred cause.

MY PRESIDING ELDERS.

By Payton A. Sowell.

Mr. Editor: As an editor, I am sure your eyes saw an article in the Midland Methodist, published some time since, for you must "needs have the faculty to recognize the good things in print" (?).

But as nearly every name mentioned in that communication was associated with me in Tennessee, I did not allude to one man who came to be my "under Bishop" in the Louisiana Conference.

Rev. J. I. Hoffpauir is my presiding elder. His name indicates that he may be of either French or German extraction, according to his pleasure or circumstances. I cannot decide which he is. I am convinced, after ten months association with him that he is all of three things: A Methodist, a gentleman and a Christian.

He moves among the charges and the pastors as quietly as the summer breezes blow, and yet we all know by the glow in our spirits and the cheer in our hearts that our good presiding elder has held a meeting among us and has spoken the things concerning Christ. If all the presiding elders in the Louisiana Conference are as refreshingly courteous as Rev. J. I. Hoffpauir, this Tennessee preacher would find it a delight to serve at least one good station under each one of them.

In many ways I have enjoyed the year under the live oaks of Louisiana. The kind little flock of Jeanerette has been thoughtful of the man who came among them last December an entire stranger. I feel that it has been a great personal privilege to make over thirty new sermons this year. I must say that among the pleasant things of the year, have been the acquaintance of the Editor of the New Orleans Christian Advocate and reading its bright pages.

THE DEDICATION OF THE MOSS POINT METHODIST CHURCH.

By Prof. R. Linfield.

With frequent floods of God's beautiful sunlight breaking through the superb art glass dome to glorify the occasion, and with hundreds of hearts lifted in thanksgiving and praise to the God of our fathers, the splendid new church at Moss Point was dedicated by Bishop W. A. Candler on Sunday, November 15.

The occasion, besides its impressive ritualistic and ceremonial features, brought with it a permanent benediction to the great congregation assembled, and the Spirit of the Most High breathed so mightily upon the people that it would not have caused surprise had some of the assembled saints burst out with loud hallelujahs. All conditions were propitious and every heart felt a prophecy of the blessing that the hour was to bring to the church people of the little city. People of all faiths were present, the Presbyterian and Baptist pastors coming with their respective flocks to join in the service of praise with their Methodist brethren. The popular and scholarly pastor, Dr. B. F. Jones, was radiant as he sat for the first time in the new pulpit and surveyed the wondrous beauty of the new temple. The Presiding Elder, Dr. W. H. Huntley, breathed forth in his prayer the profound feeling that pervaded the congregation with an almost visible presence. The great Bishop, so well beloved in these parts as wherever else he is known, and so mighty an agent of the Lord Christ in proclaiming the priceless verities of his Gospel, brought with him a holy presence, and as he thundered forth the triumphant principles of the religion that he loves so dearly, his face shone with a heavenly light and his personality seemed surcharged with the powerful truth that he proclaimed. Truly the Spirit of God was there.

Announcing as his text Paul's charge to Timothy to hold fast to the religious training that he had received from his pious grandmother and mother, the Bishop preached for an hour about the steadfastness of faith in the God of Abraham, of Isaac and of Jacob—the God of our fathers, who has been the same and will be the same throughout all generations. It would be useless for an ordinary man to attempt to epitomize or measure one of Bishop Candler's sermons or to describe its effect on a congregation. It must be sufficient to say that, on this occasion, he transported the hearers to heights from which they were loath to descend, feeling as did another that it would be good to build tabernacles and encamp there in the holy region of lofty spirituality into which their spirits had been elevated.

After the close of the sermon the officials of the church, a splendid body of good men and true, assembled in front of the altar when their spokesman, Hon. C. H. Wood, impressively presented the building to the Church. He gave a brief history of the Moss Point Church and stated that there were living and present only three charter members of the first congregation, Mesdames Kate Moore, Clay Vaughan, and Miss Mary E. Griffin. Immediately following the impressive ceremony of dedication, Bishop Candler broke forth into the beautiful old hymn, "I Love to Tell the Story," followed by hundreds of voices, and thus was dedicated the sacred edifice with an outburst of religion that lifted the people up to meet the glorious presence descending from above. It is safe to say that there will never be a more religious service held in the church than that which marked its opening for the worship of the God of our fathers.

There lived in Moss Point in the earlier days Mr. and Mrs. L. N. Dantzer, godly and pious people, who loved their church and supported it liberally with their substance, their prayers and their punctual attendance on its ordinances. They reared a family of sons and daughters, bringing them up to love their Church and to answer its every call for service. The father and mother have passed away leaving the world richer for their lives, and bequeathing a family of stalwart men and splendid women to enrich the day in which they live. The father's memory is enshrined in the handsome public school building that he presented to the little city and which stands just across the street from the new church. Now come the sons and daughters and present to the Church this exquisitely beautiful new temple of worship in honor of their sainted mother.

The building with its elegant appointments can not be described adequately by means of adjectives. It is truly a melody of architecture. The involuntary exclamation of those seeing it for the first time is, "Oh, how beautiful!" Built at a cost of approximately $20,000, it embodies in its classical architecture every fine point of art, and in its arrangements and furnishings, every means of comfort and convenience. Nothing is overdone, nothing is out of proportion, nothing is susceptible of criticism; its exquisite proportions, its handsome Ionic columns, its beautiful art glass windows and dome, its tasteful mahogany finishings, its elegant and comfortable furniture, its excellent system of steam heat, its scientific provisions for light and ventilation, in fact its every feature combining easily in a perfect composite of utility, dignity, comfort and grace.

Adjacent to the main auditorium and available by means of rolling partitions is the Sunday school room into which open nine classrooms, a room for the Epworth League, a ladies' parlor for the women's societies, a nursery and the pastor's study. The Sunday school department is equipped with an electric bell system and the classrooms are separated by rolling partitions.

No wonder, then, that the Methodists of Moss Point are filled with gratitude and pride, and no wonder that the talented choir excelled themselves in furnishing and leading the anthems of praise on the glorious occasion, assisted by that artist in song, Mrs. W. H. Tebbetts of Mobile. The Dantzer family may well cherish a feeling of entire satisfaction when they view the excellence of their work and contemplate the lasting monument that they have erected in honor of their mother. A number of the descendants of the sainted couple occupied reserved pews during the service of dedication and thus bore testimony not only to their filial devotion and the affectionate remembrance in which the dear departed ones are held, but also to their abiding faith in the religion that permeated the household of the pious progenitors of the family.

Church News

Three Bishops attended the recent session of the East Oklahoma Conference: Bishop Murrah, who presided, and Bishops Hoss and Mouzon.

A new $25,000 Methodist Church, which will be called "Galloway Memorial," is in process of construction in Memphis. Rev. T. G. Lowry is the pastor.

The Baptists of Louisiana have recently brought to a successful completion a campaign to secure $100,000 for Louisiana College, their State school at Pineville. This should encourage the Methodists of the State to press their campaign with greater enthusiasm and vigor.

Bishop Candler was recently the chief preacher at the celebration of the 148th anniversary of the old John Street Church of New York City, which is claimed to be the oldest Methodist house of worship in the United States. The New York Christian Advocate pronounced his discourses upon that occasion as "brilliant" and possessing "captivating force."

Evangelist J. A. Bowen, of Birmingham, Ala., sums up his year's work as follows: "I have assisted in 20 successful meetings—11 of these being in Alabama, 7 in Mississippi, and 2 in Florida. I have preached 515 times and have traveled over 5000 miles. The conservative estimates of pastors show at least 800 conversions and 500 accessions to our Church, while quite a number united with other communions." Brother Bowen is one of the sanest, safest, and most effective revivalists in Southern Methodism.

Large success has crowned the labors of Dr. O. E. Goddard, pastor of our First Church of Galveston. There have been 255 members added to the Church, most of them joining on profession of faith under the pastor's ministry, all claims have been met in full and a balance of several hundred dollars left in the treasury with which to begin the new year. This church is said to be almost perfectly organized and it is stated that its affairs are conducted in quite a business-like manner. Herein doubtless in some measure lies the secret of this remarkable showing.

The Holston Conference had, during the Conference year recently closed, 12,797 professions of religion and 7839 additions on profession of faith. The number of Methodists within the bounds of the Conference is 73,903, and the Sunday school enrollment is 73,283. The number of family altars erected was 1531. This shows what can be done by an aggressive evangelistic campaign, wisely conducted. We should like to see our new Conference boards of Missions in Louisiana and Mississippi follow the example of the Holston Conference Board and get busy along this line.

AN ADDRESS TO THE CHURCH.

(In view of the extraordinary conditions now prevailing throughout the world, the Board of Missions at its recent meeting requested Bishop W. R. Lambuth, Mr. John R. Pepper, and Miss Belle H. Bennett to prepare a message to the Church. This address, which should have the earnest attention of every pastor and missionary leader in the connection and should be read from every pulpit, appears below.)

The nations of Europe are engaged in a life-and-death struggle. It is an hour that tries men's souls—a day of testing. We in the United States remain neutral, and should thank God for peace within our borders and with all peoples. But the world has become a neighborhood, and we must share in the consequences, if not in the direct responsibilities of a great war. No man liveth unto himself. We are affected socially, morally, and economically. A fearful strain has been put upon our civilization and our institutions. Even the progress of the kingdom is involved on the material side. There is serious interruption of travel and transportation, and it is with increasing difficulty that our distant fields are reached with funds and supplies.

Is Christianity on trial? Civilization may be. Militarism is and ought to be. Christianity is not. The impregnable rock upon which vital Christianity is based will stand long after these troublous waters have subsided. But it has been said: "If the Churches throughout the world possessed the same candor as the stock exchanges, they would do what the latter have done—close their doors." The stock exchanges are doing business on a narrow margin. Commercial policies, rather than altruistic principles, are in control. No wonder they close their doors.

But this is no time for the Church to go out of business. It has no intention of doing so. It is the very time to be most active about the King's business—the work of healing the sick, succoring the helpless, comforting the bereaved, and seeking the lost. Thank God, this is what Christianity has been doing through the ages and will continue to do. The overwhelming sentiment of this country against war, especially a war of aggression and in favor of peace, is proof that Christianity has a conscience and that its conscience is not dead.

This in the theater of war is man's extremity. But man's extremity is God's opportunity. It is an opportunity on this side of the Atlantic to live up to the gospel of a Christian brotherhood, of faith, and of love. It is an opportunity to minister to hundreds of thousands of women and children who will starve this winter if we do not help. It is an opportunity to pray and work for peace such as has come to no other nation in the history of man. It is an opportunity to prepare for the incoming millions, the tramp of whose feet at the close of this war may already be heard upon our shores. The cry of our brother becomes the call of God. Let us throw wide open the door and lend a helping hand.

REV. G. W. BACHMAN, Of Winona, Miss.

To do the supremely great work for which Providence and the centuries have prepared us we as a Church must be ready. There is no lurking responsibilities already laid upon us. It is a day when we must bear our own burden and that of the other man. Our first duty is prayer; our second is to get our finances in order. Our missionaries, at home and abroad, are dependent upon our fidelity. They are to-day in greater financial straits than we are. If we fail, they suffer. If we retrench, they must retreat. But retreat is a word we have never taught our missionaries. They do not know how.

The end of the fiscal year is upon us. Let us have full collections for missions in every Annual Conference not yet held. In those which have been held we respectfully urge, in behalf of the Board of Missions, that the claims for the coming year be pressed early and returns sent in. This applies to the women as well as to the men. The case is urgent. This is not a note of alarm; it is a call to action. The year has been one of great crops. The yield of wheat and cotton has been almost unparalleled. The size of the crops and the closed markets have been the embarrassment. Our church membership is largely in the cotton belt. We are not unmindful of the financial situation, nor do we minimize its grave significance to merchants as well as to planters. But bankruptcy of faith in God is much more to be dreaded than bankruptcy in finance. And then we are not starving. We are not naked and homeless. We are not exposed to the wintry weather of Belgium. Our lesson of economy and self-denial was learned in a terrible civil war. That lesson was for ourselves. Can we not now practice severe economy for the sake of others on our own firing line in China, Africa, and other fields? If the home base fails at this critical hour, we will jeopardize what we have already won. We have faith in our Church. She always responds when she sees her duty.

Above all, we make an earnest plea for intercessory prayer. Our Church faces a gigantic task, but one not too great for her Lord. There are no metes and bounds to his grace and no limits to his power. The limitation is with us. Paralysis of purpose comes from infidelity. We must not be straitened in our faith. New standards of liberality and sacrifice must be set up.

Our prayers must go beyond our own missions and include the missionary societies of Europe and their workers. Those of Great Britain and her colonies contribute forty per cent of all that is given to foreign missions, and the Continental societies twenty per cent. This leaves the balance for the United States. It is not difficult to see how this war may seriously cripple the missions of the world if they fail to raise their quota or we miss the vision of our opportunity. At a time when a transformation of startling magnitude is taking place in foreign lands and non-Christian peoples are open to the gospel as never before we need to give thanks to Almighty God, humbly confess our sins and shortcomings, and with supreme faith in Jesus Christ to go forward to meet the issue of the hour, confident of victory in his great name.

CHURCH DEDICATION.

Dear Brother Meek: Bishop Collins Denny will dedicate the Capitol Street Methodist Church of Jackson, Miss., on December 6. All former pastors are invited to be present. During my pastorate of four years 500 persons have been added to the Church. We have recently purchased for $6000 a two-story residence for a parsonage. It is located on West Capitol Street, fronting Poin-dexter Park. The next preacher will have a most delightful home. I leave this people with regret, but I shall rejoice at some other man's good fortune. You are cordially invited to be with us at our dedication. Cordially,

J. M. MORSE.

WHY I GO TO CHURCH.

I go to church because I find there peace, a respite from the secret burdens of the heart, a resting from human labors, a separation from the uproar of life.

I go to church because I like to hear the teachings of the preacher, whose soul is dedicated to God, whose field is as wide as God's universe, whose theme is the destiny of man.

I go to church because I hear the teachings of the philosophy of Jesus, the Incomparable Man.

I go to church because I find there consolation and hope—because I see there the Dawn and not the Sunset.—The Presbyterian Standard.

THE PAN AND THE SPOON.

By Adelbert F. Caldwell.

One day a cake was to be made, and when the spoon it heard,
It said, "I'll do my part in this; it must by me be stirred."
The pan, alas! that morning did not have a smiling face;
It somehow took the spoon's words in exceedingly poor grace.
"Well now, I guess," it said aloud, "I'll let the spoon just see,
It needn't always have to stir the things folks put in me!"
The spoon then didn't leave its place upon the pantry shelf,
But answered, "So then, Mr. Pan, just stir the cake yourself!"
The pan it tried, but flour and spice and eggs and milk and salt,
Mixed not at all; the cake was spoiled—but it was not their fault.
Then said the pan, with sorry tone (it was not learned too soon),
"To make a cake I see I must be aided by the spoon."
It has a work in life to do, like knife and fork and cup,
Or other objects weak and small—if but to stir things up!"

THE WORD THAT TEDDY PERKINS BACKED UP.

By Helen M. Richardson.

"Huh! you can't do it!"
The voice had a jeering tone that was not pleasant to listen to.
"I can!" Teddy Perkins emphasized the assertion by a stamp of his little foot. "Say, mother," he appealed as Mrs. Perkins at that moment appeared upon the scene, "Donald says I can't get V. G. in conduct for a week; and I say I can! I know I can! Don't you believe it, mother?"
"Why, yes; if you know you can, of course you can," mother said with an encouraging smile.
"But 'know' is a pretty strong term to use, son, unless you can back it up," she cautioned.
"You'll see whether I can back it up!" the little boy declared, straightening himself.
Teddy was mischievous, and apt to be careless about his conduct marks, although he was quick to learn, and in his lessons V. G. appeared quite often upon the cards that he carried home for his parents' signatures.
His brother Donald was a little jealous of the readiness with which Teddy mastered his lessons, for Donald was not as quick to learn as his wide-awake little brother, although he excelled him in conduct. If Donald's V. G.'s could have been transferred to Teddy's card, or Teddy's to Donald's, the result would have been a card to delight the eye of any fond parent or appreciative teacher.

The next day Teddy started to school with a new light in his eyes. He walked directly to his seat, even before the school was called to order, which was a very unusual thing for Teddy Perkins to do. In vain, Dick Jones stuck pins in his arm and tickled his neck with a feather from his seat behind; Teddy kept his eyes studiously fastened upon his book until his tormenter got tired of his efforts and also went to studying.

Once when Teddy raised his eyes he caught Miss Durkee watching him approvingly; and thus encouraged he managed to keep out of mischief for one-half day, at least. The afternoon was easier to get through, because it was shorter; and there was not a prouder boy in Spencer than Teddy Perkins when he rushed into his mother's presence at four o'clock, and triumphantly held out his report card, where V. G. stood at the end of every line.

"Bravo! I am indeed proud of my little son!" his mother asserted.

A thing which has once been accomplished becomes easier each time it is attempted. And at the end of the third day Teddy decided that it was quite easy to bottle up his mischief until recess time and then let it all out at once, and be ready for another hour of quiet study when the bell again called the class to order.

When Friday night came he could hardly realize that a whole week had actually passed without a single disfiguring mark upon his report card.

"I said I could, and I did!" Teddy replied, throwing back his shoulders when his teacher questioned him concerning it. And then he went on to explain why he had been led to make so positive a statement.

"What has been done once can always be done again," Miss Durkee encouraged.

Teddy thought it queer that his mother should say the same thing when he held the transformed card before her approving eyes some time later.

But the strangest thing of all to Teddy was when he found himself also repeating Miss Durkee's words whenever he was tempted to misbehave at school, until, in a very short time, it would have been as difficult for him to have disobeyed the rules as it before had been for him to be good.

"If you know you can, of course you can," is a motto that Teddy is now very fond of using.

When his mother hears him she usually asserts, with a twinkle in her eye: "'Can' is a strong term, but my little son has proved to me that he can back it up."—The Child Hour.

AUNT JANE'S SPELLING.

"Sensitive?" is she, repeated Aunt Jane. "She'd better get over it as quickly as possible."

Mabel and Gertrude looked at each other, but Aunt Jane's eyes were bent on her sewing, and she said no more.

After a little silence Gertrude ventured: "I should as soon think she could get over being tall or blue-eyed. Some people are born with sensitive nerves and some are not, I suppose."

Aunt Jane's voice was a bit more energetic than usual as she said: "Were you born playing that lovely piece you gave us on the piano last night?"

Both girls laughed, thinking of the hours of patient practice Gertrude had given the nocturne after all her years of study.

"Not exactly, auntie," she answered. "That was born of years of anguish and toil."

"And don't you suppose," queried Aunt Jane, carefully matching her bias stripes, "that one can train nerves as well as fingers?"

The girls looked at each other again and finally admitted that it might be possible.

"I remember," Aunt Jane continued "when Brother Tom laughed at some biscuits I made. I cried, and Tom was rebuked and sent from the table in disgrace. I should have been taught to laugh too. I couldn't bear to have Tom prick the bubble of my conceit. Sensitive should he spelled s-e-l-f-i-s-h a good many times."—A. M. L. Hawes, in the Morning Star.

HOW HE GOT HIS NOM DE PLUME.

By Robert Edwin Meek.

Samuel L. Clemens, the great American humorist, is known to the majority of the reading public of this country by his pen name, "Mark Twain." The origin of this name is both interesting and worth noting. It is to be found in a book by Mr. Clemens, entitled, "The $30,000 Bequest and Other Stories," where it occurs in a biographical sketch of the author purported to have been written by one Samuel E. Moffett, but possibly by Mark Twain himself. It will be borne in mind by the reader that some time before the outbreak of the Civil War Mark Twain lived for a while on a steamboat on the Mississippi River, during which time he was serving an apprenticeship preparatory to becoming a river pilot. In those days this occupation paid well, but required unusually keen powers of observation and was one by no means easy to master. Mark finally succeeded in getting his license, but about that time the war broke out and the navigation of the Mississippi was stopped. Later on he got into the habit of writing weekly letters to the daily papers criticizing the members of the Legislature of Nevada—then a Territory. He did not want to sign his own name as that would get him into serious trouble—for those were days when dueling was in fashion—so he had to find a fictitious name. His mind turned back to the days he had spent on the river, and remembering how he used to hear the old leadsman cry out, "Mark twain!" when the water was only two fathoms deep, he adopted those words as his nom de plume.

HOW ABOUT YOUR SUBSCRIPTION?

Have you renewed your subscription to the Advocate? If not, you should do so at once. Many names will be dropped in the next few weeks, and you will not want to miss the editions containing the proceedings of the Conferences. Why not hand the money for your renewal to your pastor and let him settle with the Publisher at Conference? We again earnestly request our pastors to see the Publisher as early in the Conference sessions as possible. He is a busy man and must do his work and get back to the office. Let every preacher try to secure a full list of renewals and at least one new subscriber from his charge. We are depending on you, brethren.

"GREAT MEN AND GREAT MOVEMENTS."

This is the title given by Bishop Candier, under whose supervision it was issued, to a volume of addresses made by the late Bishop Charles B. Galloway. These utterances cover a wide range of subjects and are grouped under three leading heads:

1. "Methodism and the Methodists." This division embraces the following discussions: "Methodism, a Child of Providence;" "The Methodism of Tomorrow;" "A Message to the Mother Conference of Methodism;" "A Message to the Methodists of Canada;" and "Charles Wesley, the Hymnist of the Ages."
2. "Mississippi and Missisippians." This part includes the "Oration at the Dedication of the New Capitol of Mississippi;" "The Life and Times of Jefferson Davis;" "Lucius Q. C. Lamar, Orator, Statesman, and Patriot;" "Address at the Dedication of Millsaps College;" and "Mississippi's Welcome" (delivered at Jackson in 1890 to recent settlers from the North and West).
3. "Other Matters of Moment." The themes treated in this section are: "The Ethics of Politics;" "Ministerial Ethics;" "The Sabbath the Bulwark of Social Order and Good Government;" "A Jubilee Address" (delivered at a missionary meeting in Boston in 1896); and "The South and the Negro."

The fact that these addresses emanated from Bishop Galloway is in itself a guarantee that they are of superior excellence and are well worth a careful reading. The South has ever been a land of eloquence and has given to the Nation many of its ablest and most brilliant orators; and among the very best of these this gifted minister is entitled to a high place. He belongs in the class with Prentiss, Lamar, Davis, Ben Hill, George F. Pierce, and James A. Duncan. And, while as Bishop Candier says, the charm of his magnetic personality and the resonant tones of his magnificent voice cannot be conveyed to the printed page, few speeches read so well as those of this great master of assemblies. His thought is never confused or obscure; his style of expression is clear and striking, and beautiful and stirring passages abound.

But it is not only as fine specimens of oratory that these addresses are valuable. They are informing, suggestive, and nobly inspirational. Bishop Galloway was a religious statesman as well as a great public speaker. Few men of his day had so clear an insight into existing conditions and the significance of the movements going on about him, and he possessed in a remarkable degree the historic instinct which enabled him to analyze the characters and weigh the service of distinguished workers in Church and State and to appraise their achievements at their true value. Hence his observations and discussions are justly entitled to consideration at the hands of students and earnest seekers after truth.

We have no hesitancy in predicting that this volume will live and be widely read. It has in it too much matter of solid worth and sparkles with too many rhetorical gems ever to cease to be in demand. There are single addresses in it as, for instance, the one on Jefferson Davis, or that at the dedication of the Mississippi Capitol, that are worth many times the price of the publication. Personally, we regret that Bishop Galloway's lecture on S. S. Prentiss does not appear in the work, but Bishop Candier told us some months ago that he did not have it in hand. Whether it was preserved among Bishop Galloway's papers we do not know.

The price of this interesting volume is $1 net. It ought to have a place in every library, public and private, in Mississippi. And, of course, every Methodist preacher ought to count it a happy privilege to own a copy. It can be had of our Publishing Agents, Messrs. Smith & Lamar, Nashville, Tenn., or Dallas, Texas, or of Rev. G. W. Bachman, of Winona, Miss. It might be well for the preachers of the two Mississippi Conferences to drop Brother Bachman a card notifying him in advance that they will desire a copy of this work when the Conferences meet in Starkville and Columbia. He would then be certain to have an adequate supply on hand and they would thereby save the postage. As we stated last week, by Mrs. Galloway's instruction, the proceeds of this publication will be given to the superannuated preachers of the Mississippi Conference, of which Bishop Galloway was a member prior to the time that he was made one of the General Superintendents of the Church. A debt of gratitude is due Bishop Candier for superintending the issuance in printed form of these illuminating discourses, which have appreciably enriched our Southern Methodist literature.

A SUGGESTIVE TESTIMONY.

The following extract from an article entitled "The Church in New York History," which appeared in the New York Christian Advocate of October 22, is quite suggestive:

"What have New York's churches done for New York? No one can estimate the good that has come of them. Said McAdoo when police commissioner:

"Were it not for religion and the faith behind it there are not enough policemen in all the world to keep order in the city of New York."

"Religion keeps order. It does more. It is not only a conservative, order-keeping influence; it is a dynamic, onward-pushing force. The churches of New York, struggling up through poverty and persecution to success, have done much to generate those flinty, rock-backed, courageous qualities which have made New York capable of her greatness."

That the statements made above are well-founded, we do not at all doubt. The influence of the Christian Church upon our social order is far broader and deeper than most people realize; indeed, the Church is the great upholder of human society. Many who are given to sneering at her are in reality among her greatest debtors, owing to her the good order, peace, and security of life and property which they enjoy. We once heard that noble veteran of the North Mississippi Conference, the lamented J. W. Honnoll, declare that, crude and imperfect as are the teachings and forms of worship of most of the Negro churches of this section, but for the influence that they exert there would scarcely be any such thing possible as living in quiet and safety in this Southland; and we are inclined to think that his statement was well within the limits of sound reason and of truth. The Church, faithful to the teachings of her ascended Lord as to man's immortality and accountability to God for his conduct here and exhibiting the mind that was in Christ and bringing to bear upon human hearts an unseen power not of earth, is the great bulwark and preserver of empires and civilizations and the hope of the world.

LAMENTABLY TRUE.

The Presbyterian (Philadelphia), one of the ablest religious weeklies in the United States, in its issue of November 11 devoted its leading editorial to defining the various forms of unbelief—Agnosticism, Atheism, Pantheism, Deism, and Infidelity. Toward the close of his interesting discussion, the Editor makes the following pointed and pertinent statement:

"Tom Paine and Voltaire were both infidels, but not atheists. The difference between the infidels of their time and many of these days is that they owned up to their infidelity, and were not connected with the Church; while in a number of cases modern infidels believe and teach just what Paine and Voltaire taught with regard to the Bible, but at the same time take shelter in the Church and under the name of Christianity, and, like the Trojan horse, are seeking overthrow of the Church from within. The modern infidel does great mischief through his very insidiousness."

DENOMINATIONALISM NEEDED.

The following brief quotation is from Bishop Galloway's memorable fraternal address delivered before the British Wesleyan Conference:

"Another good result of our centenary year was the development of a more intelligent denominational loyalty. I accept with all its consequences the statement of a discriminating writer, who says: 'The first duty of a denomination is to be denominational.' If Methodism be a distinct, divine institution, if God has raised us up for a special and imperial mission, we must be obedient unto the heavenly vision and loyal to the lofty purposes of our great commission. I rejoice in denominational intercommunion and co-operation in the spirit and purposes of an evangelical alliance, but I detest and repudiate ecclesiastical boot-blackening. Michael Faraday is reported to have said: 'I like a smith's shop and everything about smithery. My father was a smith.' So I rejoice to testify that I like the Methodist Church and everything about Methodism. My father was a Methodist."

PERSONAL AND OTHER NOTES.

Rev. J. A. Bowen, of Birmingham, Ala., says he hopes to look in on the coming session of the North Mississippi Conference. The brethren will be glad to see him.

A revival meeting began at Gloster, Miss., where Rev. J. E. Williams is pastor, on Friday evening, Nov. 20. The preaching is being done by Rev. Dan E. Kelley.

Brother Pastor, do not forget your co-worker, the Advocate, in rounding out things for Conference. It has sought to help you during the year; will you not now remember and seek to help it? We believe that you will.

The Methodist congregations of New Orleans will unite in a Thanksgiving service at Rayne Memorial Church at 11 a.m., Nov. 26. The sermon will be preached by Rev. J. G. Snelling, pastor of the Carrollton Avenue Church.

Programs have been issued for an Organ Recital, by Mr. James R. Clark, at the Carrollton Avenue Church of New Orleans on Thursday evening, Nov. 26, at 7:30 p. m. The numbers will include a soprano solo, "Abide with Me," by Miss Mary Wood.

Rev. Hayes Howell, who served our church at Arcadia, La., a portion of this year, has ordered us to send his Advocate to Tulsa, Texas. We are pleased to know that Brother Howell has a pleasant field of work in the Lone Star State.

The Woman's City Mission Board of New Orleans held its regular monthly meeting at the Mary Werlein Mission on Wednesday afternoon of this week. This Board is made up of a number of capable and wide-awake workers for the Master's cause.

The following friends, to whom acknowledgment has not been made elsewhere, have our thanks for two or more subscriptions, sent in within the past few days: Rev. C. H. Strait, Rock Springs, Miss., 2; Rev. E. H. Cunningham, Myrtle, Miss., 3.

Rev. Robert Randle, of Eros, one of the worthy veterans of the Louisiana Conference, gave us a club of subscriptions from his charge a few days since. We appreciate his kindness in looking after the interests of the Advocate among his parishioners who, he says, speak well of the paper.

Mrs. J. S. Summerlin, of Sherman, Texas, has our thanks for a renewal subscription to the Advocate, accompanied by some kindly words of appreciation. We have never made a practice of printing commendatory things said of our paper, but we are grateful for them and they encourage us not a little.

Do not send your pastor to Conference with a deficit on his salary, when by a number of people paying a little more it would be easy to make up what would be a considerable amount for him to lose. Scattered through whole congregations, these shortages would not tax any one much.

At the recent session of the Central Texas Conference, Rev. H. D. Knickerbocker was assigned to Temple, and Rev. H. W. Knickerbocker was transferred to the West Texas Conference and stationed at the Tenth Street Church of Austin. These ex-Louisianians are among the most effective pastors in the Lone Star State.

Bishop Collins Denny during the session of the Mississippi Conference at Columbia will be entertained in the home of Mr. and Mrs. R. D. Ford. Mr. Ford is a direct descendant of one of the brothers of Rev. Thomas Ford, at whose home—about fourteen miles from Columbia—the second session of the Mississippi Conference was held one hundred years ago.

The Shreveport (La.) Times states that the interment of the body of the late Mrs. Katie McMeans, who died at the Schumper Sanitarium of that city following an operation for appendicitis, was made at Bastrop, La., Rev. C. M. Grice having charge of the services. A notice of the death of this choice Christian woman was published in last week's issue of the Advocate.

Dr. and Mrs. J. M. Henry, of New Orleans, will give an informal reception to the Methodist ministers of the city and their wives on Friday afternoon, November 28, from 3 to 5 o'clock. Dr. Henry is finishing a quadrennium of very successful service as presiding elder of the New Orleans District, and both he and Mrs. Henry have a large number of friends in the Crescent City.

Rev. W. W. Mitchell, though somewhat hindered by illness, has had a great year at West Point, Miss. Though no protracted meeting has been held, there have been 67 additions to the Church, and all departments of the work are in a prosperous condition. The indications also are that a full financial report will be made to the approaching session of the Annual Conference.

Rev. W. H. Saunders, our capable pastor at Fernwood, Miss., writing on November 16, says: "Three more Sundays will wind up the work of this Conference year. This charge has things in readiness for our annual gathering." Fernwood is one of the choice appointments of the Mississippi Conference and always more than pays its assessments. It embraces among its members some very fine people.

Of Bishop Murrah's presidency and service at the East Oklahoma Conference, the Western Methodist says: "He impressed the Conference from first to last with his quiet dignity, his unflinching patience and courtesy, his grasp of detail, and wonderful ability to advance business without undue haste * * *. He preached a great and inspiring sermon Sunday morning in the chapel of the Normal College."

We trust that friends who have lately sent us matter for publication will be patient with us. We have at present considerably more copy than we can use, and we assure them that their articles will appear at the earliest dates possible. We also beg them to remember that the Editor will necessarily have to be out of his office most of the time for the next two or three weeks, as our patronizing Conferences will be in session.

Rev. R. H. Harper preached a helpful sermon to a good congregation at the Parker Memorial Church of this city last Sunday at 11 a. m., using as his text Ecclesiastes XI:1: "Cast thy bread upon the waters; for thou shalt find it after many days." In the course of his discussion he made a tender and moving appeal for the Conference Claimants Fund, which goes to the support of superannuated preachers and the widows and orphans of deceased ministers.

In a letter to the Editor on Nov. 21, Rev. L. M. Lipscomb, of Sardis, Miss., says: "We are rounding the year's work hopefully and will have a fine financial report at Conference. We will have to our credit a new parsonage for which we paid $3250—spot cash." It does not surprise us to learn that this excellent charge, with Brother Lipscomb's hand on the helm, will make a good showing at Starkville. Nothing else was to be expected.

Rev. A. W. Turner, State Superintendent of the Louisiana Anti-Saloon League, writes as follows: "Rev. H. B. Carre, President of the Anti-Saloon League of Tennessee, will deliver a prohibition lecture in the First Methodist Church at Shreveport on Tuesday evening, Dec. 3, the night previous to the opening of the session of the Annual Conference. Let every pastor and layman who can, arrange to be on hand for this lecture. The hour will be 7:30 o'clock."

From the North Carolina Christian Advocate of November 19, we take the following: "Bishop Waterhouse impresses one as every inch a Bishop in his physique. Portly, and well poised in every movement, he would command attention in any assembly of men. There is some advantage, too, in the presence that is commanding; nevertheless, Bishop Waterhouse is not dependent upon mere physical presence, but when he speaks commands attention for the strength of his utterances."

In a business letter to our office on November 21, President R. E. Bobbitt, of Mansfield College, adds the following note: "Despite the war, we are having a splendid attendance upon the College. We have a larger faculty and better accommodations, and, beyond question, are doing better work than at any time during my presidency." We are glad to have this cheering message from Mansfield. The Methodists of Louisiana are most fortunate in having Brother Bobbitt at the head of this historic institution. He is one of the most progressive and resourceful educators in the State.

A note received from Hazlehurst on November 15 stated that Rev. J. A. Bowen was there in a meeting with Dr. W. H. LaPrade, and that the outlook was propitious for a gracious revival. Brother Bowen at the recent session of his Conference—the North Alabama—was continued in the office of Conference evangelist. His address is 3338 Highland Avenue, Birmingham, Ala. All mail sent him there will be certain to reach him. Brother Bowen is a revivalist of great power and wholly free from objectionable methods; and we are glad that he has been re-commissioned to go on with his great work for the Master.

Rev. W. W. Holmes, President of the Louisiana Conference Board of Missions, requests us to state that the Board will meet in the First Methodist Church of Shreveport on Wednesday, December 9, at 2:30 o'clock. See the statement which Brother Holmes makes on Page 12 of this issue of the Advocate.

Dr. W. F. McMurry, Secretary of the General Board of Church Extension, spent last Tuesday in New Orleans. He had been attending the session of the Texas Conference at Bay City, Texas, and stopped here on business. From New Orleans he went to Gulfport, Miss. The Doctor was looking well and was in his usual genial mood.

Rev. W. W. Murray, pastor of the Eucutta (Miss.) Circuit, writes as follows: "I am now winding up my quadrennium on this charge. I have had four pleasant and profitable years here. I am hoping to make a creditable showing at Conference." Brother Murray states that his brother-in-law, Mr. Leslie Smith, of Bude, Miss., underwent a serious operation at the State Hospital in Jackson on Nov. 15. He stood the trying ordeal well, but the physicians are apprehensive about his condition. We regret to be informed of Mr. Smith's illness, and we pray that a favoring Providence may smile upon him and lead to his recovery.

Dr. B. F. Jones, of Moss Point, Miss., writes: "Dedication Sunday, November 15, was a royal day for Moss Point. Bishop Candler was at his best. He preached with such wonderful fervor and tenderness that the entire congregation was stirred. The audience was immense. I was sorry that you could not be with us." It would indeed have been a rare privilege to have been with Dr. Jones and his worthy flock on the great occasion mentioned. We know of nothing that we enjoy more than to sit under the ministry of our Georgia Chief Pastor, who is one of the Nation's really great preachers. We are carrying a more extended account of the Moss Point dedication on another page.

Writing under date of Nov. 16, President A. F. Watkins of Millsaps College says: "New boys are coming in every few days. Our matriculation in the College Department, that is to say from freshman to senior inclusive, numbers now 20 in advance of the entire enrollment in that department during the last session. Our freshman class numbers between 85 and 90. Prof. Henderson is improving and expects to go to New Orleans about the last of this week. His illness is a source of two-fold distress to us: we are grieved on account of his personal affliction, and also because of our loss of the assistance of one whose service to the College promised to be very great, both as an instructor and administrator."

The Western Methodist, in its report of the proceedings of the East Oklahoma Conference, has the following reference to Bishop E. E. Hoss: "Our own Oklahoma Bishop, E. E. Hoss, was present, as he said, from force of habit, and his genial fellowship and spiritual pulpit ministries were a benediction and were greatly enjoyed. Because of his unswerving loyalty and complete devotion to the Church, Bishop Hoss has found a large place in the heart and thought of Southern Methodism. His friends are legion. He gave an illuminating and informing lecture on 'The Life and Times of McKendree,' preached a helpful and deeply spiritual sermon, and by request of Bishop Murrah, addressed the class received into full connection in his inspiring and brotherly way."

The Beaumont (Texas) Enterprise states that Rev. Walter J. Johnson, pastor of the First M. E. Church, South, of that city, has had a remarkably successful year in his work. Since the last Annual Conference 192 members have been received, and 29 infants have been baptized. During the three years of his incumbency as pastor there have been more than 600 additions to the Church, and two mission congregations have been developed, one of which is ready to become independent and be served by its own pastor. The First Church of Beaumont is one of the largest Methodist congregations in Texas, the present membership numbering 1516. The Sunday school enrollment, in all departments, is 1437, and the total amount of money raised for all purposes during the present year is $17,288.10. Brother Johnson is a transplanted Mississippian, being a son of Col. J. M. Johnson of Holmes County.

Through the courtesy of our Publishing Agents, Messrs. Smith & Lamar, we have received the "Charlie Circus" series of books for children (three in number), by William James Morrison, as follows: "Among the Indians of Brazil;" "In the Wilds of Brazil;" and "Hunting and Trapping in Brazil." These little volumes, though of thrilling interest, are in reality a series of natural history stories, that are quite instructive and helpful. They are beautifully bound and illustrated and may be depended upon to charm and fascinate the reader, especially small boys and girls. The author, Dr. Morrison, whose home is in Nashville, Tenn., was also the composer of the "Willie Wyld Series" of children's books, which had a large sale and made such a fine impression upon the public. The price of each of the present series is 50 cents, and they may be ordered of our Publishing Agents, at Nashville, Tenn., or Dallas, Texas, or of Rev. G. W. Bachman, Winona, Miss. Parents could not find choicer Christmas books than these for their children. We most heartily commend them.

Dr. Geo. S. Sexton sends us the following important notice: "I wish to state that the assignments for entertainment during the session of the Louisiana Conference have been made. We are mailing both to the guests and to the hosts notices, which make it inconvenient for us to make any changes. All those who have not sent any special requests are notified that it is now too late. The Entertainment Committee has done its best to comply with every request and has provided a home for everyone who they knew was going to be here."

"ADMIRABLE."

My Dear Dr. Meek: I wish to commend most cordially your brief editorial under the caption above in a recent number of your valuable paper. And I wish to add special emphasis to the well-deserved praise of the English people which you so gracefully award them. In statesmanship they have led the world in modern times, and one of my chief pleasures is derived from perusing their periodical literature. Being of French and Irish descent, without a drop of English blood in my veins, I feel that I may praise the English without suspicion attaching to my motive.

Since the war blazed out in Europe the English press has contained unlimited denunciation of the much-vaunted German culture, which moves me to say that I have long held the opinion that that same German culture was far more to be dreaded than the menace of her military ambitions. Her theological speculations and rationalistic doctrines have already gone a long way towards modifying and corrupting the time-tested doctrines of orthodox Christianity in all lands. "Made in Germany" has been branded upon all of her products, which includes her theology. I have but recently seen it stated that her scientists have gravely announced that the results of investigation demonstrate that the Savior was not a Jew, but that he was a German. Could presumption go beyond that?

And let it be noted that the French lead the world in scientific activities and discoveries as well as in literary accomplishment, but unlike the Germans they have modestly refrained from exploiting their culture before an admiring world, in derogation of the achievements of others.

German theological opinion has found a warm welcome and great favor in England, and I fear that when peace returns our English cousins will not have the moral indignation requisite for the expulsion of this poison from their system.

More deplorable still is the fact that America has drunk copiously from the same fountain and that even the conservative South is not free from the infection. Worst of all, it seems to make its victims intellectually dishonest and secretive. One never knows when he is up against one of the dopers. Just before the recent meeting of our General Conference I rode for some distance on the train with one of the Church's leading ministers and conversed freely with him on this and other subjects. When I parted from him I would have sworn that he was sound on every issue before the Church, but imagine my astonishment when I learned that he had lined up with the enemy on every important proposition at Oklahoma City, and when I was later told that he is a higher critic! How can one deal with such men?

Miss MARY LAWRENCE was born on Feb. 10, 1841, and died on July 25, 1914. Between these two dates was encompassed a life of great good to the world. She became a Christian in early girlhood, and for a generation her name and influence has been intertwined with every good work in this community. Though almost a life-long invalid, her activities in church work were remarkable, because they were backed by a full consecration to the Master's service which impelled her to deeds of "noble daring." Her influence and power were especially felt in the Sunday school and Woman's Missionary Society. Her mortal remains were interred in the old Filmore Cemetery, but her sweet spirit basks in the sunlight of God's immediate presence. J. M. B. Houghton, La.

Miss VELORA BELL MURRAY daughter of Mr. and Mrs. W. E. Murray was born on March 4, 1890, near Pelahatchie, Miss., and died at Soso, Miss., Nov. 10, 1914. She joined the Methodist Church when a child ten years old and always took an interest in church work. She would lead in prayer meetings and seemed to enjoy any religious work that she could do. During her last illness she was patient and never complained of anything. She told me that she was prepared to go, that God had forgiven her sins. Just before she died she sang "I'm on the Glorious Gospel Train." She sang several times on the day before her death. She leaves a father and mother, five sisters and four brothers to mourn her departure. While we can see her face no more here on earth we hope to meet her in a brighter world than this.

Her brother,
 W. W. MURRAY.

HENRY ALANSON LOCKWOOD was born in Alabama on May 2, 1864, and died in Alabama on July 3, 1914. He was married to Miss Maggie Grimes Oct. 16, 1887. Of this union were born seven children, two of whom are dead. He joined the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, at Timpson, Texas in May, 1891. He lived for several years at Pelahatchie, Miss., where he was engaged in the sawmill business. It was here, as his pastor for more than three years, that I knew him and learned to love and appreciate him. He was a good, true man. He loved the Church and was faithful and loyal to all of her interests. It was a pleasure to be in his home where everything was pleasant and congenial. He was public spirited and stood for the best interests of the community where he lived. In his death the community suffered a heavy loss, the faithful and noble wife of his youth, with whom he had lived for nearly 27 years, was bereft of an devoted husband's love and care, his children lost a good father, and the Church a faithful member. We buried him at Pelahatchie, Miss., on the evening of July 9, 1914. Farewell, but not forever!

W. J. DAWSON.

Mrs. JULIA ANN COX was born on Dec. 31, 1844, and died Oct. 6, 1914. She made a profession of faith in Christ when nine years old and joined the Methodist Church. She was married to Mr. W. W. Cox on Dec. 11, 1872. Of that union were born six children, four of whom live to mourn their loss of a devoted Christian mother. She was the victim of a horrible cancer of the tongue and mouth that robbed her of speech for many weeks before her death. Her patience in all her affliction was beautiful. Her faith in God was bouyant and abiding to the last. She was a great sufferer, but she bore the painful encroachments of that terrible affliction without murmuring; indeed, her fortitude through her continued suffering was amazing. She leaves the heritage of a godly life to her husband and children. Her religious life was quiet and unobtrusive, but her faith in God was strong and beautiful. She loved her home and family and gave her devotion and service to make home a place of love and confidence. The home is now broken up, because the mother and wife is gone, but memory clings fondly to its hallowed associations because of what she was there.

O. G. HALLIBURTON.

On Sunday morning, July 12, 1914, at 7 o'clock the death angel came to the home of Mrs. Martha Johns and took away the spirit of our grandfather, JAMES DAVID JOHNS. He was born on June 19, 1847, so his age was 67 years and 24 days. Grandpa was taken suddenly ill and did not long survive the attack. He leaves a wife, one daughter, a son, four grandchildren, and a host of friends to mourn their loss. Grandpa was thought well of by every one who knew him. It is very sad to be at home and not hear his voice and footsteps. He was very feeble in his last days. We feel that we will find Grandpa and all the family who had preceded him together at the pearly gates awaiting our coming, when we leave this world. Grandpa had one daughter, wife, and son who passed before him into eternity. We are sure it was a joyful reunion when he reached that happy home, but it will be a greater meeting when we all get home together. Grandpa's body was laid to rest in the Adam's graveyard at Auburn, Miss. The funeral was conducted by Revs. R. H. Barr and T. F. Swanson. May the Lord bless and comfort his family and mourning loved ones. His granddaughter, (Mrs.) JANIE ROGERS.

DAVID F. ARCHER was born on Feb. 8, 1841, in Pickens County, Ala., and he moved to Mississippi and joined the Church in his youth. He did brave service in the Civil War. On Dec. 22, 1865 was married to Miss Katie Gann who died Oct. 12, 1901. He married Minerva Baxter on March 2, 1902, and departed this life Oct. 2, 1914. His second wife and two young children survive him. Brother Archer knew the Lord, loved his Church, and was a faithful, active member. He served a great part of his life as a steward and a trustee, and so long as he was able, was active in the Sunday school, either as superintendent or a teacher. He was a great lover of music, and many will remember him for years to come in connection with some songs he loved to sing. I first knew Brother Archer about 28 years ago at Lauderdale, and my clearest memory of him is in connection with hearing him sing, "He's the Lily of the Valley." He moved to Poplarville more than 25 years ago, where he spent the remainder of his life. Methodism and Christianity felt greatly the uplift of his influence, and much of their success in this section is to be attributed to his life and labors. He lived to command the confidence and respect of all who knew him, and all believe he has gone to receive a Christian's reward. He gave assurance in the last hours of his illness of peace and his acceptance with God. Another soldier of the Cross has laid down his armor and gone to receive his crown.

His pastor, H. P. LEWIS, Jr.

RECIPE FOR GRAY HAIR.

To half pint of water add 1 oz. Bay Rum, a small box of Barbo Compound, and 1-4 oz. of glycerine. Apply to the hair twice a week until it becomes the desired shade. Any druggist can put this up or you can mix it at home at very little cost. Full directions for making and use come in each box of Barbo Compound. It will gradually darken streaked, faded gray hair, and removes dandruff. It is excellent for falling hair and will make harsh hair soft and glossy. It will not color the scalp, is not sticky or greasy, and does not rub off.

Tidings From the Field

Rocky Springs, Miss.

I enjoy reading the letters from the young preachers so much that I think it is time for me to write one. Brother T. J. O'Neil came to us at Hickory Ridge on the third Sunday in July, and preached two sermons a day until Thursday night. The meeting resulted in 7 additions to the Church. Brother O'Neil did some good preaching and endeared himself to all who heard him.....On the first Saturday and Sunday in August Rev. T. W. Adams came to Carpenter to hold quarterly conference and preached some excellent sermons. Brother Dan Kelly came that night and preached for a week and charmed every one who heard him. The Church is always strengthened by Brother Kelly's preaching. Everybody wants him back another year. There were 7 members added to the church..... Rev. W. T. Griffin, of Gulfport arrived at Willows on the third Sunday morning in August and greatly revived the church there, and 7 persons united with the Church. And at my next regular appointment there were 3 more additions, making a total of 10 at Willows.....Since I have been on this charge, in addition to the regular appointments, I have been preaching at a schoolhouse and have just closed a meeting there in which there were 29 additions—20 to the Methodist and 9 to the Christian (Campbellite) Church, making a total gain of 44 members for the entire work. We are far behind with our finances, but are doing the best we can under the circumstances.—C. H. Strait.

Logansport (La.) Charge.

Dear Dr. Meek: The fourth quarterly conference of the Logansport charge was held at Longstreet on the 7th inst, with Rev. Wm. H. Coleman, P. E., in the chair. Brother Coleman preached a very interesting and helpful sermon at 11 a.m. The conference convened at 2:30 p.m., every church in the charge being represented. Owning to the financial depression, the charge was, as a whole, somewhat behind; however, the stewards of three of our churches guaranteed to pay their pro rata of the shortage in ministerial support, and I am going to do my best on the Conference collections. But for the financial depression the Logansport charge would have been in class A on all lines at the meeting of our Annual Conference. We have received exactly 100 members on profession of faith and 18 by certificate. Brother Coleman preached three very helpful sermons at Logansport on Sunday, Nov. 8. At the afternoon service, which was held for the young people, three were added to the Church. After the preaching on Sunday night a church conference was held at which the people decided to ask for the full time of a preacher; so unless the order is countermanded some preacher will have a very pleasant station at Logansport next year. Because of my illness Dr. R. H. Wynn, President of Centenary College preached to my people at Longstreet and Bell Baur on the third Sunday in October and at Logansport the fourth Sunday. His sermons were of the highest class. At Logansport there were 3 accessions to the Church the day he preached.—Francis R. Power.

First Church, Columbus, Miss.

With the completion of the new Sunday school annex building, the First Methodist Church is equipped with one of the finest and most modern and up-to-date plants in the city, if not in the State. The new building is nearing completion and will be ready for occupancy Sunday morning, Nov. 15, at which time the formal opening will take place. Superintendent Pegues is making special arrangements for the occasion and all departments will be formally installed in new quarters.

A representative of the Dispatch, in company with Dr. W. L. Duren, pastor of the church, made a tour of inspection of the entire plant yesterday morning. The new building, which adjoins the magnificent old structure immediately in the rear, is modern in every respect and handsomely finished throughout. The first floor will be occupied principally by the Men's Baraca class with a large assembly room in the west corner, which will be equipped with mahogany chairs and other furniture of like quality. On the same floor is located the cooking room and appurtenances, which is one of the modern features of the new building.

The second floor will be occupied by the Wesley King's Messenger class and the Young Ladies' Philathea class. These rooms will be modernly equipped and finished.

In the main building the big auditorium on the first floor, which was formerly used by the Sunday school as an assembly and class room, has been divided into twelve class rooms, with a smaller assembly room in the center. The class rooms are separated by old English finished movable doors fitted with obscure or frosted glass. With this arrangement the school will be equipped with the facilities for a thorough and efficient organization, embracing the modern class unit plan with each class provided with a separate room. The windows of the entire lower floor of the old building have been fitted with prism glass which adds very materially to the attractiveness of the general appearance of the building. Large swinging doors have been installed both at the front entrance to the Sunday school department on the first floor and the main auditorium on the second floor.

Difficulty has been encountered during funeral services in carrying caskets up the front steps entrance to the auditorium, and this has been obviated by the installation of a casket elevator at the right of the rostrum in the rear of the building. In the future funeral parties will enter from Sixth Street, the casket will be deposited in the elevator and conveyed to the auditorium floor, being met at the entrance by the pall bearers and the balance of the party.

The entire plant, both the old and new building, is equipped with the latest and most approved steam heating system, which adds materially to the comfort and convenience of the auditoriums and class rooms.—Columbus (Miss.) Dispatch (Nov. 11).

The man who proclaims that he has no sympathy with missions proclaims his meagre estimate of Jesus Christ. Somehow he has failed to realize the greatness of him who is the Savior of the world.—Rev. W. G. Fullerton.

Sunday School

MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE NOTES

By Mr. R. A. Maddox.

Three things to do in Teacher-training: 1. Get a class of young people in the Sunday school to take a Teacher-training course at the Sunday school hour; this will train future teachers. 2. Enlist the teachers of the school in a week night training class; or, if not enough can be interested, get some at least to take a home study course; this will train present teachers. 3. Enroll the classes with Dr. H. M. Hamill, and never quit until the course is finished and get your diploma.

Suppose that "when the roll is called up yonder," I am there myself, but that all through the eternal ages I am unable to find a single person who is there because of my having led him to Christ, how much will heaven mean to me?

My dear pastors and superintendents, as you are now looking around to find what it is that you have failed to do, and must finish before going to Conference, just think a moment, have you taken the five-cent assessment? If you have not, please do it, the funds are needed very, very much.

Suppose you organize that Wesley Bible class right now, and enroll it with Dr. Bulla, our superintendent of that department. We all agree that we should have an organized Bible class in every Sunday school, and then it is loyalty to enroll it.

The Young Ladies Bible class, at Forest, has paid $10 this year for the maintenance of the Field Secretary and they are going to pay $5 more. Will others do that next year? I wonder why more of our Bible classes do not do something like that? They help causes. Will they help the institution of which they are a part?

"SOME FACTS ABOUT OUR SUNDAY SCHOOL WORK."

In the Advocate of November 12, under the above caption, Rev. H. L. Norton wrote a very pointed article which I have just read with pleasure.

He says: "The U. S. A. Presbyterians pay their Secretary $1500 and expenses. The Southern Presbyterians pay their Secretary $1800 and expenses. The Baptists in Mississippi employ two men paying one of them $1800 and expenses. The Secretary of the interdenominational work draws a salary of $2400 and expenses. (Here he omitted saying that besides the Secretary, the interdenominational work maintains two field workers each of whom receives a salary of $1200, making a total of $4800 and other expenses amounting to a grand total of $9000 a year, or $750 per month—enough to support a single missionary in the foreign field for one whole year!) Our own Field Secretary is paid a salary of only $1400 a year, and out of that has to pay his own expenses."

After making the above statement, he further says: "Brethren, there is something wrong somewhere." He is right—there is something wrong somewhere, and if he will read again the emphasized words above which I have inclosed in parenthesis, and remember that not less than seventy-five per cent of the astonishing sum given to the interdenominational work comes out of Methodist pockets, he will see where the trouble lies. The Presbyterians and Baptists are standing royally by their own men and pouring their money into the treasury of their own Church while Methodists, with their spirit of latitudinarianism, sometimes mis-called broadness, are putting their money into the treasury of the interdenominational work. In the meantime, the Sunday school work of their own Church suffers. If our people would, under the obligation of their solemn vow of church membership, stand as royally by the institutions of their own Church as do the Presbyterians and Baptists, there would not be the slightest difficulty in maintaining our Field Secretary, who, as Brother Norton well says, is as good as the best. The truth is, I do not believe he has his equal in the State; yet he receives a smaller salary than any other man in the field. As I have already indicated, the whole trouble is to be found in the enormous amount of money given to the interdenominational work, seventy-five per cent of which is paid by Methodist people. This is why in previous articles in the Advocate I have contended that as a Church we should withdraw from the interdenominational work, and give our time and money to the cultivation of our own potato patch. Mark my prophecy, if we do not do it, we shall have to withdraw our man from the field. JNO. W. RAMSEY.

CONFERENCE ASSESSMENTS.

This is the time of year when the church officials and pastor feel the embarrassment and need of some better system of raising the money for our Conference assessments. To my mind there is but one way to ever successfully raise this money and that is to educate our people, and that education must largely come through the pulpit.

The money for the Orphanage is easy to raise, because people are informed as to the work being done by that institution. Next perhaps to this in its hold upon the people is missions.

I have been raised in the Methodist Church but I have my first sermon to hear on the workings of Methodism so far as its business machinery is concerned. How many of our people know anything about our Publishing House—how Smith & Lamar got their jobs and that they are servants of our Church, and that the profits from the business go to support our superannuated preachers? How many of our people know anything about why they should pay money to the American Bible Society, or to Church Extension, or to the Bishops, or for printing the minutes, or for church education (when we have our public schools) and the many other things that ought to be supported?

Preachers may say people ought to read. Certainly they ought, but how many people would ever be saved and join our Churches if all maintained the same attitude toward reaching them? Our preachers are not as systematic and progressive as they ought to be. Preachers allow themselves to get into a rut and employ the same old tactics year in and year out, whether they get results or not. If the Church of God does not keep abreast of the times, we will fall far short of our high calling, for the devil is progressive in his business.

Many of our Louisiana preachers can recall the day when they have served churches in our small towns where the church was the leading attraction; neighbors, friends and the young folks met there. To-day our small towns have picture shows, cold drink parlors, public libraries, club rooms, and other really harmless amusements and meeting places, and they take our people's money freely because they offer something attractive. Too many of our churches and preachers are using the same old tactics and preaching about the same style of sermon every Sunday that they have been doing for years.

Our Sunday schools are far outstripping our preaching services because they are using a system and are keeping abreast of the times. It is very easy for a preacher to get into a rut, but if he sees the church is falling down at any point why not go to the official board, which usually has some good business men on it, and ask for suggestions and have them to advise him as to his weak points even if it is in the preaching, and then apply the remedy, for none of us, not even preachers, are without faults. Ignorance as to the doctrines and workings of our church is our greatest hindrance in raising assessments. A LAYMAN.

REV. D. B. PRICE.

At the last annual meeting of the Board of Church Extension the Executive and Finance Committee was authorized to secure the services of a well-qualified man to assist the Corresponding Secretary in looking after the constantly increasing business of the office of the Board.

The General Conference immediately following strongly endorsed the avowed purpose of the Board of Church Extension to increase its Loan Fund Capital to not less than one million dollars during the next quadrennium, and left to the Board the employment of such agencies as in its judgment are necessary to accomplish this end, together with the proper care of other interests for which the Board is responsible.

At a meeting of the Executive and Finance Committee of the Board held October 13, 1914, after careful consideration, Rev. D. B. Price, of Helena, Montana, was selected as Assistant to the Corresponding Secretary. Brother Price has been a member of the Montana Conference for many years, and has represented the Board in the Northwest in much of its work in that general section. He will move to Louisville and take up the new duties, for which he has been selected, at an early date.

Rev. D. B. Price leaves behind him in Montana a record for fidelity and efficiency unsurpassed in the several capacities in which he has wrought, and brings to his new office a well-trained mind, exceptional platform ability, and superior business judgment. Those who know him best believe that the Board has made no mistake in calling him to this important task.

FROM THE GIBSON MEMORIAL CHURCH, VICKSBURG.

Dear Dr. Meek: We have just closed a series of revival services at Gibson Memorial. I failed to get any one to assist me but my people stood by me and we had a good meeting. There were 10 accessions to the Church, and the membership was blessed.

We have expended $8000 on our new church this year, and while it is still unfinished, we are in it, with the auditorium finished and the basement very comfortable for the Sunday school, League, Mission Societies, etc.

Since my last report on the window fund I have received $2.50 from Dr. A. F. Watkins, for which he will accept our thanks.

Doctor Meek, please allow me to thank you for your editorial deliverance in the Advocate of Nov. 19, which I think was not only due to Brother Harmon for his brave and timely warning, but due also to every subscriber to your valuable paper. In your strong utterance you gave forth no uncertain sound. Doctor don't cut me off at this point, for I just want to say through the Advocate that you have not only shown yourself to be a worthy and safe Editor of one of our very best periodicals, but also a man who is able and not afraid to defend "the faith once delivered to the Saints." With best wishes, I beg to be your friend,

L. L. ROBERTS.

IMPORTANT NOTICE.

Official boards, pastors and presiding elders are requested to have all applications for aid ready for the Mission Board by Wednesday noon, the first day of Conference. These applications can be handed to either W. W. Drake or myself. It is very necessary that we have all the information possible; so we urge that the application blanks be filled out fully and accurately. These blanks are now in the hands of the presiding elders and can be obtained from them. W. W. HOLMES, President Louisiana Board of Missions.

MEDICATED SMOKE DRIVES OUT CATARRH

A Simple, Pleasant, Reliable Way, and It Costs Nothing to Try.

Dr. Blosser, who has devoted forty years to the treatment of Catarrh, is the originator of a certain combination of medical herbs, flowers and berries to be smoked in a pipe or ready prepared cigarette. The smoke-vapor reaches all the air passages of the head, nose and throat. As the disease is carried into these passages with the air you breathe, so the anti-septic, healing vapor of this Remedy is carried with the breath directly to the affected parts.

This simple, practical method applies the medicine where sprays, douches, ointments, etc., cannot possibly go. Its effect is soothing and healing, and is entirely harmless, containing no tobacco or habit forming drugs. It is pleasant to use, and not sickening to those who have never smoked. No matter how severe or long standing your case may be, we want to show you what our Remedy will do.

To prove the beneficial, pleasant effect, The Blosser Company, 450 Walton St., Atlanta, Ga., will mail absolutely free to any sufferer, a sample that will verify their claims by actual test. This free package contains a pipe, some of the Remedy for smoking and also some of our medical cigarettes. If you wish to continue the treatment, it will cost only one dollar for a month's supply for the pipe, or a box containing one hundred cigarettes. We pay postage.

If you are a sufferer from Catarrh, Asthma, Catarrhal Deafness, or if subject to frequent colds, send your name and address at once by postal card or letter for the free package, and a copy of our illustrated booklet.

NOT NOTICED.

Often people complain when they go to church and are not noticed by their fellow-men. One is led to think they go to church to be noticed by men. They should go to church to worship God. Usually those who complain most attend church the least. They do not exert themselves in the least to speak to anybody, but appear to think that everybody is under obligations to speak to them. Every Christian is under obligation to do all he can for the salvation of others. If he is busily engaged in the Master's service, he is not waiting for somebody to speak to him, but is doing his best to lead others into the light of the gospel.—J. C. McQuiddy.

FOREIGNERS IN AMERICAN UNIVERSITIES.

It may be to many a surprise to learn that during the last year nearly 4000 students from foreign countries were enrolled in 275 different American colleges and universities. One is prepared to read that China had 594 and Japan 336 students here, but the following items are unexpected: Great Britain and Ireland were represented by 212 students, Germany 122, Russia 124, France 45, Sweden 41, Italy 38, Austria Hungary 34, Switzerland 29, Norway 26, Greece 22, Spain 20, Netherlands 19, Bulgaria 15, Roumania 6, Belgium 4, Portugal 3, Montenegro 1. New Zealand was represented by 56 students, Egypt by 15, Liberia by 2, and South Africa by 44. From the American possessions, Hawaii sent 108, Porto Rico 215, and the Philippines 111. India had 162 students, Turkey 143, Korea 13, Persia 21, and Siam 13. Of the Latin American countries, Mexico with 223 students, heads the list.—Missionary Review of the World.

"RHEUMATISM" Cured to stay Cured

By one who had it.

My Dear Reader:—
—1911—
I am an old lady nearly 90 years old. My life's work among the sick is nearing its end. At the age of 50 I was terribly afflicted with rheumatism; I suffered untold agony for nearly five years. I have been a herbist, nurse and student of roots and herbs for nearly 70 years. I diagnosed and formulated a cure that cured me, and it never returned. I have treated nearly 7500 rheumatic sufferers, some of the most pitiful cases imaginable; I effected cures in practically every case. I want you to read my treatise on the "cause and cure" of rheumatism. "Don't suffer"; it is easy to get well. My treatise is FREE; send for it to-day; you will then know what to do, and how to do it.
Sincerely yours,
LYDIA E. SMALL,

GET RID OF HUMORS AND AVOID SICKNESS

Humors in the blood cause internal derangements that affect the whole system, as well as pimples, boils and other eruptions, and are responsible for the readiness with which many people contract disease.

For forty years Hood's Sarsaparilla has been more successful than any other medicine in expelling humors and removing their inward and outward effects. Get Hood's. No other medicine acts like it.

NORTH MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

Admission on Trial.

All candidates for admission on trial at the approaching session of the North Mississippi Conference will meet the Examining Committee in the Sunday school rooms of the Methodist Church at Starkville, Miss., on Monday night, Nov. 30, at 7 p.m.

The examinations will be conducted as during the past quadrennium, on the subjects named in the Discipline of 1910.

Let every man come with his head full of knowledge and with his hands provided with paper, pen, and ink.

T. H. LIPSCOMB,
For the Committee.

Rev. Dr. J. W. Price, of Clarksdale, Miss., will preach the annual sermon.

Please allow this further statement: At the last meeting at Tupelo, Rev. G. W. Bachman was elected president; Rev. John Ritchey vice-

What Does Your Mirror Say to You

If Your Face Is Not Fair You Are Not Fair to Your Face. Use Stuart's Calcium Wafers and Banish Pimples, Etc.

Before beauty can ever be realized it must have a complexion that adds to its lustre, that makes a magnificent face contour radiate an artistic color. The charm of all beauty rests chiefly in the clear skin, the pure red blood, the soft, cream-like complexion.

"It is an Exquisite Joy to Look In My Mirror Now—Stuart's Calcium Wafers Gave Me Back My Clear Complexion."

Stuart's Calcium Wafers act directly upon the sweat glands of the skin, since their mission is to stimulate the excretory ducts. They do not create perspiration, but cause the skin to breathe out vigorously, thus transforming perspiration into a gaseous vapor. The calcium sulphide of which these wafers are composed consumes the germ poisons in the sweat glands and pores, hence the blood makes a new, smooth skin in a surprisingly short time.

You will never be ashamed to look at yourself in a mirror, once you use Stuart's Calcium Wafers. Not will your friends give you that hinting look, as much as to say—for goodness sake, get rid of those pimples.

There is no longer any excuse for anyone to have a face disfigured with skin eruptions, when it is so easy to get rid of them. Simply get a box of Stuart's Calcium Wafers at any drug store and take them according to directions. After a few days you will hardly recognize yourself in the mirror. The change will delight you immensely. All blemishes will disappear.

All druggists sell Stuart's Calcium Wafers at 50 cents a box. A small sample package mailed free by addressing F. A. Stuart Co., 175 Stuart Bldg., Marshall, Mich.

president; and Rev. Henry C. Morehead secretary.

A personal and urgent invitation is hereby given to each of the members of the Association, and especially to those on the Honor Roll, to attend and give their comrades the pleasure of their presence and the benefit of their counsel. Brethren, be sure to come to Conference.

HENRY C. MOREHEAD,
Secretary.

MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

Admission on Trial.

The Class for Admission on Trial into the Mississippi Conference will meet the Committee in the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, at Columbia at 10 a.m. on Tuesday, Dec. 8, 1914. Come prepared for a written examination.

W. H. SAUNDERS,
W. W. GRAVES,
H. P. LEWIS, Jr.,
Committee.

Class of the First Year.

The Committee and Class of the First Year will please meet in the Methodist Church at Columbia, Miss., at 10 o'clock, Tuesday, December 8.

JNO. D. ELLIS,
H. M. ELLIS,
L. L. ROBERTS,
Committee.

Class of the Second Year.

The Class of the Second Year will please meet the Committee in the Methodist Church at Columbia, Miss., Tuesday, Dec. 8, 1914, at 2:30 p.m. The members of the Class who have taken the course through the Correspondence School as well as the others are requested to appear before the Committee.

M. M. BLACK,
J. Y. BOWMAN,
L. E. ALFORD,
Committee.

Class of the Fourth Year.

The Committee and Class of the Fourth Year of the Mississippi Conference will please meet in the Methodist Church at Columbia, Miss., at 9 a.m. on Tuesday, December 8, 1914. Every member of the class will be expected to be present. Those who have taken the Correspondence Course will please bring their certificates.

T. W. ADAMS,
Chairman.

CONCERNING STATISTICAL REPORTS.

To Pastors of the Mississippi Conference:

The statistical blanks will be mailed in due time to all pastors, with printed envelopes, for making reports to the Annual Conference. By observing the suggestions made by the auditors and resolutions of the Conference, you will greatly facilitate this work for the statistical secretaries and the auditing committee.

W. T. GRIFFIN,
For Committee.

CONCERNING RAILROAD CERTIFICATES.

The members and delegates of the Mississippi Conference, which is to meet at Columbia on Dec. 9, will secure the usual certificates when they purchase their tickets showing that they have paid full fare going. These certificates will give you return fare for one-third plus 25 cents. All roads in the State will give this rate except the N. O. M. and C. I wrote twice to the proper person, sending a stamp for reply, but my letter was never answered. Those who travel over this road will do well to get certificates. I will sign them for you, and perhaps you can get the reduction in return. Don't fail to get certificates when you purchase full fare tickets.

W. M. SULLIVAN.

COPIES OF JOURNAL WANTED.

If any brethren have surplus copies of the Journal of the Mississippi Conference of 1913, please mail them to Dr. A. F. Watkins at Jackson, or to me at Meridian, or take them to Columbia.

G. S. HARMON.

BOILS NEEDN'T BOTHER YOU.

Gray's Ointment puts an end to them right away. This remarkable ointment was first prepared in 1820 by a North Carolina physician. For nearly a century the American people have found it the most effective preparation for all eruptions and abrasions of the skin, burns, cuts, wounds, bruises, boils, carbuncles, ulcers, sores, etc. It speedily heals the skin trouble, and prevents the development of blood poisoning, which not infrequently rises from a neglected sore or cut. "The best remedy I ever tried for risings, and all my friends who have tried it say it beats anything they ever used," writes Miss E. M. Manley, Auburndale, Fla. Keep a box in the house. 25c at druggists. Get a free sample by writing W. F. Gray & Co., 306 Gray Bldg., Nashville, Tenn.—Adv.

THE LIFE OF TRUST.

What a vast portion of our lives is spent in anxious and useless forebodings concerning the future, either our own or that of our dear ones! Present joys, present blessings slip by and we miss half their sweet flavor, and all for want of faith in Him who provides for the tiniest insect in the sunbeam. O when shall we learn the sweet trust in God our little children teach us every day by their confident faith in us? We who are so mutable, so faulty, so irritable, so unjust; and he is so watchful, so pitiful, so loving, so forgiving! Why cannot we, slipping our hand into his each day, walk trustingly over that day's appointed path, thorny or flowery, crooked or straight, knowing that evening will bring us sleep, peace, and home?—Phillips Brooks.

FOR RHEUMATISM AND NEURALGIA.

Drink ten gallons of the celebrated Shivar Mineral Water, shipped from Spring—only two dollars. Money cheerfully refunded on return of empty demijohns if you say it failed to relieve. Enthusiastically endorsed by leading physicians and citizens as America's greatest curative water. The same guarantee applies to Sciatica, Nervous Headache, Stomach, Liver, and Kidney diseases. Address Shivar Spring, Box 17T, Shelton, S. C., U. S. A.

NO FAILURE WITHOUT TRIAL.

One cogent answer to the charge that Christianity has failed, because it has not restrained the nominally Christian nations from the present fearful war in Europe, is to be found in the statement that Christianity has never been tried. Civilization has never been Christian. The cause of the war is that the nations have ignored or set aside the principles of the teaching of Jesus Christ in their diplomacy and adjustments. The nations have not made the venture of faith—they have not been summoned, as in the olden time, to repentance and works meet for repentance. Christian people have not set their faces like flint against the iniquity of war.—Pittsburgh Christian Advocate.

BATON ROUGE DISTRICT MEETING.

The Baton Rouge District meeting was held at St. Francisville on Friday, Oct. 30. The State President, Mrs. Abel Bliss of Shreveport, Miss. Martha Nutt, head resident at St. Mark's Hall, New Orleans, and delegates from Wilson, Baker, Baton Rouge, East and West Feliciana were present. Three sessions, were held—morning, afternoon and night. The church was beautifully decorated with pot plants and cut flowers. Quite a number of our home people from the country attended the sessions.

The address of welcome was made by Miss S. Raynham, our local president, and was responded to by Mrs. Bliss.

The annual report was read by Mrs. B. E. Eskridge, the district secretary, and showed 14 auxiliaries in the district, 10 of which are united—2 have only the foreign department, and 2 the home. Seven Junior divisions were also reported. The financial report was as follows: Foreign dues paid $86.97; foreign pledge $175; Home department dues $11.82; home pledge $100.

Excellent papers were read on the following subjects: "Need of Volunteers" by Miss Mattie Hooper, of Baker, La., and "God's Supremacy in My Life" by Mrs. H. S. Johns, of Baton Rouge, La. Missionary literature was presented by Mrs. S. L. Riggs.

Mrs. Bliss conducted the sessions with great ability, and her helpful, inspiring talks will long be remembered.

Miss Nutt presented her work at St. Mark's Hall in a strong, impressive manner. The Bible half-hour conducted by her was especially helpful. Her consecration and earnestness of purpose was felt by all present. We feel that our own auxiliary has been greatly blessed, and some of us, as Jonah of old, have found the "Nineveh" that God has been trying to direct us to these many years.

The children were not forgotten, for in the afternoon a meeting was held for them at Memorial Hall next door to the church.

We feel grateful for the opportunity of having had the district meeting in our church. It was a source of inspiration to our women and an added stimulus to the work.

Mrs. S. L. RIGGS.

THE COMING OF THE FOREIGNERS.

During the month of September only 22,000 foreigners entered the port of New York, as compared with a total of 108,500 during September, 1913. This heavy decrease in the number of immigrants will likely continue for some months. With the close of the war we may expect a great flood of immigration from the countries of Europe. This at least has been the experience of our country for the years following the European wars of the past century. The countries now at war must lose heavily of their force of workers—not alone from the destruction of war, but this drain on their resources will continue for some years after peace has been declared. We should be ready for the coming of these people of other nations; but, whether ready or not, they are coming. If peace brings us the prosperity many predict, there will be room and to spare.—Nashville Advocate.

FROM THE BOONEVILLE AUXILIARY.

On Sunday evening, October 4, our Missionary Auxiliary gave a public meeting carrying out the program as outlined for October in the Missionary Voice with some variations.

Our pastor, Rev. S. A. Brown, prayed a very earnest, uplifting and beautiful prayer for the "devout women who labor in the Lord." The music by the choir was ideal for the occasion, and was well selected and well rendered under the leadership of Director Dunmore.

Our President's greeting to the young people was a masterful address, full of warmth and spirit, yet so loving, kind and simple that even the "tiny tots" drank in the loving story of Jesus blessing the little children, and after an appeal to them to send the glad tidings to their little "cousins" across the waters, the "Missionary Boat" was filled with their offerings, their little boxes, a doll and a Bible—the shield of faith and helmet of salvation. "What the Bible says about Stewardship," was ably discussed by Miss Mattie Reynolds.

The "Harvesters" was well represented by many members of the auxiliary, some impersonating deaconesses and others missionaries. All did their part well, but Miss Lochie Rankin by Mrs. Bynum, and Bishop Lambuth by Harold Barnett deserve special mention. "The Master Wants You" was discussed in a general way. Instead of a special appeal to the young people, and closed with the story of "The Woman Who Gave Herself" found in the Voice.

"New Styles in Hats and Dresses" as suggested in a recent number of The Voice, created some merriment, and the little girl who wore the costume made a strong plea for The Voice and went out through the audience soliciting subscriptions.—North Mississippi Bulletin.

THANKSGIVING TIME.

The statement, "To whom much hath been given, much shall be required of," seems to apply in a peculiar manner to the people of our nation at the present time. In these times of war and sorrow in the countries of Europe, we have much for which to be thankful. There is bloodshed and devastated lands; here it is peace and comparative prosperity. Our lives have fallen in pleasant places, and we should be moved to make our thanksgiving this year one ever to be remembered. Our missionary work is suffering; let us rally to our commanders and let our thanksgiving take the form of a special offering for the work. Urgent calls are being made by our Mission Board, and everywhere the plea is for full collections, and even more. This is the season for giving unto the Lord; so ask yourself the question, "What shall I render unto the Lord for all of his benefits to me?" If you answer it on your knees, you will find that your prayer will be the key which will unlock the door to your storehouse. In Malachi 3:10 we find these words: "Bring ye all the tithes into the storehouse, that there may be meat in mine house, and prove me now herewith saith the Lord of hosts, if I will not open you the windows of heaven and pour you out a blessing, that there shall not be room enough to receive it." Why is it that there is such a lack of funds for our work? It isn't God's fault. No, no! We will not bring the tithes into the storehouse, and yet we pray for the advancement of the work. If the millions of prayers which ascend daily reached the throne of grace and brought down an answer, "there would not be room enough to receive it," and the evangelization of this world would soon be an accomplished fact. Let us fulfill the condition, and God will fulfill the promise.

NOTICE TO LOUISIANA PREACHERS.

It will be absolutely necessary for the statistical work of the next Annual Conference be accurately done that each preacher reporting his work be provided with the new report blanks. The old report forms cannot be used with the new Statistical Tables. There are radical changes, and no reports will be received by the Statistical Secretaries except those on the new forms. It will be necessary, therefore, for each preacher to provide himself with the new forms before the meeting of the Conference. We urge you to order of the Publishing House at once a book of the new forms, and prepare your reports before you leave home for Conference so that they will be ready to hand to the Secretaries immediately on your arrival at Conference.

ROBT. W. VAUGHAN,
Statistical Secretary.

Quickest, Surest Cough Remedy is Home-Made

Easily Prepared in a Few Minutes. Cheap but Unequaled

Some people are constantly annoyed from one year's end to the other with a persistent bronchial cough, which is wholly unnecessary. Here is a home-made remedy that gets right at the cause and will make you wonder what became of it. Get 2½ ounces Pinex (50 cents worth) from any druggist, pour into a pint bottle and fill the bottle with plain granulated sugar syrup. Start taking it at once. Gradually but surely you will notice the phlegm thin out and then disappear altogether, thus ending a cough that you never thought would end. It also loosens the dry, hoarse or tight cough and heals the inflammation in a painful cough with remarkable rapidity. Ordinary coughs are conquered by it in 24 hours or less. Nothing better for bronchitis, winter coughs and bronchial asthma.

This Pinex and Sugar Syrup mixture makes a full pint—enough to last a family a long time—at a cost of only 54 cents. Keeps perfectly and tastes pleasant. Easily prepared. Full directions with Pinex.

Pinex is a special and highly concentrated compound of genuine Norway pine extract, rich in guaiacol, and is famous the world over for its ease, certainty and promptness in overcoming bad coughs, chest and throat colds.

Get the genuine. Ask your druggist for "2½ ounces Pinex," and do not accept anything else. A guarantee of absolute satisfaction, or money promptly refunded, goes with this preparation. The Pinex. The Pinex Co., 250 Main St., Ft. Wayne, Ind.

AFRAID OF A BUTTON.

An odd bit of news crept into the papers the other day, stating that a religious badge of some sort was found on the chopping block of a butcher shop which had been robbed. The presence of the emblem near the rifled safe led the detectives to believe that the burglar, feeling the conflict between his conscience and his desire, laid aside the sign of his faith before proceeding with his crime.

Whether or not the detectives were right in their conjectures about this man, it is certain that many people frequently do that very thing—lay aside their religion temporarily that they may break not necessarily the eight commandment, but some other item of the laws of God. It is a cowardly and ridiculous procedure. If colors are worth showing it is worth while being true to them.

Opinions differ about wearing religious regalia or emblems. To many Christians, a Salvation Army uniform, a Gideon or St. Andrew's or Y. M. C. A. button, a Christian Endeavor or Kings Daughters' pin is a pleasant and helpful sight. It gives visibility to the armies of the King or kings; it shows that people are not ashamed of their allegiance to Jesus Christ. Others who do not care to wear the outward symbol are glad to believe that the name of Christ is written in their hearts and strive to exhibit the signs of a Christian in faith and word and act. But whether the sign is outwardly or inwardly worn we must be true to it every hour.—The Christian Herald.

KNOWLEDGE THAT EVERY ONE SHOULD POSSESS.

You never know when you will face an emergency, either caused by sickness or accident, when there will be no doctor within call and when it will be compulsory for you to render what aid you can.

You can never tell at what time you may suddenly be taken sick or may be called to take charge of a sick or injured person when you will need some practical knowledge of medical matters.

Dr. Miles' Family Medical Guide contains that practical knowledge of medicine that every one should possess.

It is a little book that is full of practical advice and knowledge that will enable you to be of the greatest assistance to your doctor both before and after he is called in.

This book is divided into three parts. Part 1, Simple Treatment for Common Ailments. Part 2, What to Do in Case of Accidents. Part 3, Practical Laws of Health.

Special arrangements have been made whereby the readers of the New Orleans Christian Advocate can obtain this book free of charge for a limited time only.

It is a book that should be in every household in America.

Just write your name and address clearly, on a post card if you like, and send it to Family Medical Guide, Dept. V-1, MILES MEDICAL CO., Elkhart, Indiana, and you will receive one of these valuable books at no charge prepaid.—Adv.

SUNDAY SCHOOL HELPS.

By Rev. B. F. Lewis,
Chairman Sunday School Board Mississippi Conference.

Now that our General Sunday School Board has available funds, it can do, and has already begun, the work of preparing and gathering the already specially prepared, needed helps for modern Sunday school work. As rapidly as possible, these helps will be placed on the shelves of our own "Sunday School Supply Department" bearing the imprint of our own Publishing House. Books, tracts, leaflets, "round tables," etc., covering every phase of Sunday school work will be available. Some of these helps will be sold at a profit, others at cost, while some others will be for free distribution. It is not designed that the idea should get abroad from the above sentences, that our "Supply Department" is in the least behind similar departments of other denominations in most of its phases. Instead, we have been supplying some of the largest supply houses in the United States with certain Sunday school material, and at the Thirteenth International Sunday School Convention held in San Francisco in 1911, our exhibit of Sunday supplies, under the supervision of Mr. E. E. French, who for several years has held the position of Superintendent of Sunday School Supplies for us at Nashville, took the first prize. This, too, in competition with that far-famed Sunday School Supply House, David Cook, of Elgin, Illinois. But in the Editorial Department, where we have suffered so much from lack of funds, we are now branching out. What we as a denomination need, we as a denomination are now preparing.

Among the helps now being prepared and offered are certain manuals for Sunday school superintendents and teachers. Three will be very briefly noticed.

1. "A Superintendent's Manual on the Introduction and Use of the International Graded Lessons."

This little book of only 186 pages including title page, table of contents, and four appendices, is the fullest, sanest, most practical, and satisfactory presentation of the development of the idea, growth and demand for, and the underlying principles of, the Graded Lessons, it has ever been my good fortune to read. This manual also deals with the essentials in organizing and grading a Sunday school, the difficulties usually encountered, and the best means of overcoming them. It tells how to introduce the Graded Lessons, and how to use them. It does not deal merely with the larger schools, as do most works of this character, but in the simplest possible way gives in full "A graded lesson scheme for a school with only six teachers," in which the Graded Lessons are used, and in which every pupil will get every year's work in its proper order from the first-year beginner to, and including, the fourth-year senior, with regular promotions, and yet with no teacher remaining with a group of pupils more than three years. It discusses clearly the effect of grading a school and of introducing the Graded Lessons into the school. It points out the new duties of the superintendent incident thereto, the obligation of teachers, of secretaries, cost of administration, and kindred topics. In short, there is scarcely anything called for by a corps of teachers desirous of putting their school abreast of the times, that is not touched upon directly or indirectly.

2. Another set of books of equal value are the Primary Plan Books. These are two in number. Plan Book No. 1 deals with the primary Graded Lessons in detail. It assembles under each month in regular order all the lessons for that month for each of the three primary years. Each lesson is treated separately—first year's lesson, second year's lesson, third year's lesson, for the first Sabbath, second Sabbath, and so on, throughout the year. Under each lesson is grouped the lesson title, Bible passage, memory verse, aim of lesson, directions for hand work, and full direction for the use of the related work.

Book No. 2 contains a series of programs for the primary superintendents, one for each of the fifty-two weeks. These programs are adapted to the lessons for the day, and relate the three lessons of the three classes in the Department. In addition, there are musical programs, children's prayers, physical exercises, equipment for officers and teachers, etc. Of course all these programs are suggestive. The experienced teacher will, in most instances, not only be able to make her own program, but prefer to do so. But to those just beginning, these books will be a boon.

Other helps are already available, and still more will be offered. A card to our efficient Superintendent of Supplies, Mr. E. E. French, 810 Broadway, Nashville, will bring you all you need.

A NEEDED CHANGE AT THE CONFERENCE LOVE FEAST.

By appointment of the brother presiding at the Louisiana Conference Love Feast last year, it was the writer's lot to assist in passing the water in that feature of the service, and we had our thoughts drawn forcibly to the contrast between the modern sanitary code as touching the individual drinking cup and our passing the same glass to a hundred people. When we observed the various types of lips that embraced that glass—tobacco stained, saliva moistened, fever parched, covered by unkept beard, backed by unwashed teeth, and perhaps emaciated by the death dealing, consumptive germs—we were glad that we got the first chance at the glass. We believe in and practice our belief in the individual drinking cup, and we are free to say that we can never again drink the draught that we pass to our people on these Love Feast occasions, and we think that there is need for a change. Such a custom is at variance with all modern science and social customs, and we can't afford to contradict the ethical tastes of educated people, the declaration of science and the legislation of health boards just because our fathers did that way.

For one we don't drink from the dippers of our parishoners—we take our own cup with us, not only because we don't want to drink after them, but because we don't think it fair to force them to drink after us, and we can never drink after the hundred various types of communicants that take part in our Conference Love Feasts, and we move that this part of the service be abandoned as one of the things that "pass away."

A REVIVAL AT WOODVILLE, MISS.

Dear Dr. Meek: This town has witnessed one of the best revivals in its history under the preaching and leadership of Rev. Dan E. Kelley, Conference evangelist. The attendance upon the meeting was good from the start, and gradually increased until the place of worship was taxed beyond its seating capacity. At the beginning we requested the co-operation of members of all Churches. Step by step, many fell into line and helped to make the meeting successful. It was attended by Methodists, Presbyterians, Baptists, Episcopalians, Disciples, Roman Catholics, and Jews, who contributed to its success and felt its influences. Brother Wilson, the resident pastor of the Baptist Church, aided greatly by his presence, prayers, and influence. John Kelley, a layman, and brother to Dan, led the choir with a cornet and did it well. The organist and members of the choir punctually, efficiently, and faithfully contributed their part, which was by no means small. All enjoyed the splendid singing, above which could be heard the musical notes of John Kelley's horn!

Upon the whole, the meeting was great. Scores who were touched, or quickened, promised to give up sin, especially presumptuous wrong-doing, and to be more faithful in discharging every duty. Many new family altars were erected. Thirty-six children and young people and one adult joined the Churches as follows: Methodist 30, Presbyterian 4, and Baptist 3. Nearly everybody in Woodville is a member of some Church.

One of the good results of the meeting is a more fraternal spirit between the various denominations. Kelley preaches genuine love and charity toward all men, and comes as near delivering a finishing blow to sectarian bigotry as any preacher I know. He has a splendid personal appearance, native ability, mental equipment, spiritual endowment, and a commanding voice. He uses good language. If, occasionally, he uses some other kind, or a word that is not very choice, he does so on purpose.

He is full of fun, wit, humor and foolishness, natural and acquired. Whether consciously or unconsciously, he is in style, words, maneuvering, facial contortions, hard licks, etc., Dan Kelley, Sam Jones, Jim Smylie, and Simon Peter, Richardson all in one, and frequently the one separated from the other. He is sensational occasionally, and cuts enough "didos" to give entertainment. He handles sin without gloves, and deals more with popular sins, society evils, etc., than "spes mea Christus." He has an emotional spirit, and weeps frequently while speaking. He does not make as many propositions as some evangelists, and those he makes are reasonable and sensible. He does not open the doors of the Church for members until near the close of the meeting.

He probably made a few mistakes or said a few things from the pulpit not suited to the best taste, yet we are all glad he came, and rejoice over the good he did the Church, town, and surrounding community. He expects the pastor (whom he helps) to say "Amen" at least semi-occasionally, and if he fails, the congregation will hear from Dan!

Permit me to add that we have had a fine year here. The local Church will make a splendid report to the Annual Conference through the pastor. All the collections were either in hand, or in sight before the Kelley meeting. We hope to do our duty by the Advocate before leaving for Conference. Fraternally,

JNO. D. ELLIS.

Woodville, Miss., Nov. 20, 1914.

any year of my three, but those who know Mansfield know that, while under the circumstances it may hurt somewhat, the church will pay its assessments in full. In other respects we have done well. We are now preparing to enlarge or remodel our house of worship to accommodate our growing Sunday school and increasing congregation. We have received 246 in the past three years, 126 having already come in this year, with more to follow. Our Woman's Missionary Society is flourishing, raising more money per capita perhaps than any other society in the Conference, and is strictly tabooring every form of device for money-raising, and depending solely on direct giving. Our young people's work is in good condition. We have three Epworth Leagues, as well as the Juvenile department of the Missionary Society. This is my third year in the best charge, in many respects, in the Conference. THOMAS H. MORRIS. Mansfield, La., Nov. 20, 1914.

MILLSAPS COLLEGE NOTE.

Dear Dr. Meek: It will be of interest to all the friends of the College and of the students to know that protracted services under the auspices of the Y. M. C. A. are now in progress with Dr. J. L. Weber of Memphis doing the preaching. He is preaching strong sermons and the hall is full at every service. The Holy Spirit is present and much good is being accomplished. Dr. Weber is a forceful and earnest preacher. All classes are now being held in the new Main Building, though the work is not quite finished. A reception is planned for next Tuesday evening to celebrate the formal opening of the building.

It is a matter of great regret that Professor Henderson, of the Preparatory School, continues sick.

The College students and faculty take part to-morrow in "Clear Water Day," which is a "red letter day" for Jackson in that the new filtration plant will be formally started, though it has been in operation for about a week. People here scarcely realize that they are at home.

Very sincerely,

G. L. HARRELL.

Jackson, Miss., Nov. 19, 1914.

GREAT PREACHERS.

Writing in the Methodist Laymen's Herald (Sutton, W. Va.), Rev. G. W. Banks, who was their pastor-host, says: "The Bishops' Mid-year Meeting was held in Charleston, W. Va., beginning October 30 and closing with a great day of pulpit and platform service, Sunday, November 1. Bishop A. W. Wilson, who is past eighty years of age, preached a truly great sermon at First Church on Sunday at 11 o'clock. He preached as well as he did when we first heard him twenty years ago. Other Bishops were assigned to other pulpits in the city and in Huntington and Montgomery. I believe that our Southern Methodist Bishops are the greatest preachers in the country. It was certainly an uplift to our churches here to have them."

Marked pulpit ability has, with a few exceptions, been characteristic of our Bishops ever since the Southern Methodist Church came into existence. Bascom, Kavanaugh, Pierce, Wightman, Capers, Marvin, Paine, Doggett, Keener, Coke Smith, Galloway, and others were luminous expositors of the Divine Word and impressive masters of persuasive speech. The Northern Church has also had many pulpit giants in its episcopacy. We are rather inclined to think that Bishop Matthew Simpson was the most eloquent preacher that American Methodism has produced. In all our reading of sermonic literature we have never read a discourse that we thought was more brilliant and able than his sermon on "The Resurrection of Christ." The Methodist system and spirit seem to have a tendency toward making great preachers. We once saw it stated that it was Henry Ward Beecher's contact with Methodist preachers when he was a young pastor in Indiana that set his heart on fire and gave him his impassioned style of delivery.

One would think that there are such traditions of splendid pulpit power connected with the Methodist bishopric that small men would hardly presume to aspire to it, but we regret to say that some do. The fact that they aspire is proof conclusive of their smallness. The bacillus episcopus, like the hook worm, gets into many systems in this day; indeed, it is quite amusing to see what clerical specimens are sometimes afflicted with it. No preacher is large enough for the episcopal office who either seeks or covets it. It furnishes a really great man a magnificent opportunity to make his influence widely felt for good; but we scarcely know any other position that so exposes and accentuates weakness and mediocrity. It is no place for little fellows, and when one happens to get into it, it is nothing short of a tragedy.

"Let us resolve each day to do at least one act of kindness to some one."

"If everybody would look on the bright side of life there soon would be no other side."

BISHOP COLLINS DENNY, D.D.

Collins Denny was born in Winchester, Va., on May 28, 1854, being a son of William R. and Margaret Collins Denny. He attended the Shenandoah Valley Academy, in Winchester, and later Princeton University, where he received the M.A. degree. He then entered the University of Virginia for the further prosecution of his studies, where he was graduated in English, Literature, and Moral Philosophy, and also in Law, receiving the B. L. degree. Soon after he began the practice of law in Baltimore, where he was married to Miss Lucy C. Chapman. He joined the Baltimore Conference of the M. E. Church, South, in 1880, and speedily came to be recognized as one of its ablest and most useful members. In 1886-7, by episcopal appointment, Dr. Denny visited our missions in the Orient in company with Bishop Wilson. On his return he was elected Chaplain of the University of Virginia, a position which he held from 1889 to 1891, when he was called to the chair of Moral Philosophy in Vanderbilt University and continued to hold that place until he was made one of the General Superintendents of our Church. Dr. Denny was elected a member of the Book Committee in 1894 and was its Chairman from 1893 until 1910. In 1908 he was our fraternal messenger to the General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, which met that year in Baltimore. He represented the Baltimore Conference in five General Conferences and received a large vote for the episcopacy at the General Conference which met at Dallas in 1902 and also at the one that met in Birmingham in 1906. He was elected to the Bishopric on the first ballot at Asheville, N. C., in 1910, receiving 229 of the 303 votes that were cast. He has five children, two of whom are the wives of Methodist ministers. He resides at Richmond, Va.

Conference.

Bishop Denny is a man of pronounced views, of forceful personality, and unusual versatility. He is one of the most scholarly men in the Episcopal College, has a fine legal mind, is a trained parliamentarian, and has few equals as a presiding officer. He is the Secretary of the College of Bishops, and renders in that capacity a service for which he is pre-eminently fitted. As a preacher, he is strong, original, and wonderfully suggestive. Without apparent effort, he almost invariably reaches a very high level and gives his hearers a discourse such as but few men are capable of delivering. This will be his first visit to Mississippi as one of our Chief Pastors, and the members of the historic Conference over which he is to preside will give him a hearty reception. They are to be congratulated upon having the services of so discerning and resourceful an administrator.

AT INESTIMABLE COST.

None on earth can ever know what it has cost the servants of God to enable the preacher to make his summary in the report given in at Conference. These figures just say that so much has been paid to the minister, so much upon the Conference collections, and so much for specials, but the sacrifice and the labor of saving are not in the calculations upon the table. Some of the dollars represented may have cost some good man or woman thousands of times more than other equal amounts had cost some one else. What eloquent language the statistical tables would speak if speech to them were possible! They would relate the prayer and service of the minister as he went about winning souls for the Master; they would tell of self-denial in clothing and food by others who helped the church to pay out in full.

The doubtful may say in a lighter vein that the day of such sacrifice is over, that people are not now denying themselves to any remarkable extent. This may be true of some, but there are many who fill every condition named in the matter of service and sacrifice. They may be found in almost every church; they bear their burdens silently and prayerfully, and they are largely the source of inspiration for the Lord's work.

The salvation of the world must be worked out at infinite cost. The Church is dealing with remarkably earnest things. There is no lighter side to the matters of spirituality and salvation. Christ was so earnest in his labors that he had not time for the treasures of earth. Even the foxes had holes and the birds of the air had nests, but the Son of Man had no time to even supply a resting place for his head. The beautiful sacrifice of the Master is not to be made an excuse of, however, for economic indolence. C. A. B.

BISHOP W. A. CANDLER.

Warren Akin Candler is a native of Georgia, and was born on August 23, 1857. He was educated at Emory College, at Oxford, Ga. From the earliest beginning of his ministry he was recognized as possessing an extraordinary degree of intellect. Though yet comparatively a young man, he has filled pretty nearly all the positions open to a Methodist minister, having been a pastor, a presiding elder, an editor, a college president, and since 1898, a Bishop. Bishop Candler's career has been such an active and unusual one that even to outline it would require vastly more space than we at present have at our disposal. He is one of the great celebrities of world-wide Methodism and his fame has extended into all lands. As a preacher, he ranks with the foremost in the nation, and he writes as well as he speaks. He gives the Church every week for the Sunday School Magazine illuminating notes on the Sunday school lesson and furnishes the Atlanta Journal weekly a characteristic article on some timely topic. He also does a considerable amount of more substantial literary work and is the author of a number of able and helpful volumes. The Methodist Publishing House in Nashville has recently issued, under his superintendence, a number of the addresses of Bishop Galloway in book form, and he is known to be writing at this time a life of Bishop Galloway and also biographies of Bishop Thomas Coke and the late Dr. Young J. Allen, the renowned Southern Methodist missionary to China.

But Bishop Candler is not merely a student—he is also an active and tireless worker in carrying forward the enterprises of the Church. The Wesleyan Christian Advocate of last week declared that perhaps his two most outstanding achievements will finally be what he has done toward the making of Methodism in Cuba and of our new University in Atlanta. Bishop Candler is a man of strong faith, of a large and tender heart, and of a profound sense of obligation to God and humanity. He is a great Christian in the full meaning of the term and one of the masterful personalities of his time. The Louisianians are most fortunate indeed in having him to preside over their Conference.

THE LOUISIANA CONFERENCE HOST.

George Samuel Sexton, son of J. R. and Mary (Justice) Sexton, was born at Middleburg, Tenn., on June 10, 1867. He married Miss Sally Gray Mosely, of Jefferson, Texas, and has one child, a son. He was educated in the public schools and at Hendrix College, at Conway, Arkansas. He has served the Church in various capacities, having had charge of missions, circuits, important stations, having been a presiding elder and Assistant Secretary of the General Board of Church Extension, and being at present a member and secretary of the General Committee which has in hand the work of erecting a representative Methodist Episcopal Church, South, in Washington City. He was the organizer of the St. Paul's M. E. Church, South, of Houston, Texas, and it was under his administration that the magnificent edifice in which that congregation now worships was constructed at a cost of $212,000. He was the chairman of the delegation from the Texas Conference to the General Conference which met in Asheville, N. C., in 1910; was for a time Chaplain of the 6th Texas Infantry, and later was Chaplain of the First Texas U. S. V. I. during the Spanish-American War; was Grand Prelate of the Grand Commandery, K. T. of Texas, 1906-10; and is a 32d Degree Mason (A. A. S. R.). The Degree of Doctor of Divinity was conferred on Brother Sexton by the Kentucky Wesleyan College in 1910. He was appointed pastor of the First M. E. Church, South, at Shreveport by Bishop Candler in December, 1913, where he has made a fine impression and is accomplishing a great work for the Master. Dr. Sexton is tall and striking in appearance, is genial and affable in his manners, possesses remarkable energy, and is a fluent and forcible preacher. The Church at large owes him much for the masterful manner in which he has led the movement to secure at the National Capital a house of worship worthy of the 2,000,000 Methodists of the South.

SHREVEPORT AND THE LOUISIANA CONFERENCE.

Shreveport, La., where the Louisiana Conference will meet on December 9, is one of the most enterprising and progressive cities in this section of the South. It is situated in Caddo Parish, which is noted for its rich oil fields and other material resources. It has a population of about 35,000, splendid streets, good hotels, many imposing buildings, a number of railroads, many industries, and a constantly growing trade. And, best of all, it has outlawed the saloon and is much more moral than the average American city. It has a fine system of public schools and its people are, as a rule, intelligent, refined, and orderly.

Nearly all the Protestant denominations are well represented in Shreveport, but Southern Methodism is easily in the lead. Our First Church there is one of the really great congregations of Southern Methodism. The new house of worship, recently constructed by this flock under the wise and able leadership of Dr. G. E. Cameron, cost approximately $125,000 and is a magnificent edifice. The Sunday school of this church is one of the largest and best organized in the Connection and is making its influence widely felt for good. Besides this great organization, we have four other churches in the city as follows: Noel Memorial, representing an investment of $80,000; Texas Avenue, representing an investment of $12,000; Queensboro, representing an investment of $8,000, and Cedar Grove, representing an investment of about $2,000. All these congregations are virile, active, and growing.

Shreveport is also the seat of Centenary College, which has a beautiful site, with good street-car accommodations, in the suburbs, and property holdings estimated to be worth $130,000. We do not know of an institution anywhere in the Church that has a finer location, and it is to be hoped that the approaching session of the Conference will devise ways and means to relieve it of its present financial embarrassment. We do not hesitate to say that, in our opinion, this is now the paramount duty of Louisiana Methodism, and that in this undertaking she ought to have the assistance of the Church at large.

We regret that we were not able to secure a more detailed account of the planting and development of Methodism in this metropolis of Northwest Louisiana. We tried to do so, but failed to find anyone who was willing to undertake the task of writing it.

Shreveport is a charming convention city, and we dare say that the approaching session of the Louisiana Conference will be one of the most delightful in the entire history of that body. The reports that have reached our office have seemed to indicate that the Church throughout the State has had a healthy growth during the year, and we pray that this annual review of the work may bring to our preachers and people much encouragement and great inspiration.

WHAT IT COSTS.

Mr. Daniel A. Poling, who is connected with the temperance work of the Christian Endeavor Society, in an address at the National W. C. T. U. Convention held in Atlanta, Ga., recently, stated that the yearly liquor bill of the United States is more than $2,000,000,000. He further said: "Eliminate the drink bill of this Nation and you will have an era of prosperity that is incomparable. Seventy-five per cent of the drink bill of the United States is paid by the laboring man—by men whose homes go lacking because of insufficient money."

One of the most amazing things in human history is that the intelligent peoples of the globe have so long tolerated the blighting liquor traffic. But more than ever before they are getting their eyes opened as to its awful effects and are rising up against it. It would indeed be a great day for our country from every standpoint if all the saloons within its borders were closed. And we believe that that happy time is surely coming. May God speed its arrival!

Shreveport.

REV. W. H. COLEMAN,
Presiding Elder of the Shreveport District,
Within Whose "Diocese" the Coming Session of the Louisiana Conference Will be Held.

Brother Coleman is one of the substantial and growing young men of his Conference. Among the charges that he has lately served with great acceptability are Homer and Ruston; he was also on the Baton Rouge District for one year where he wrought most efficiently and was in high favor, when Bishop Candler laid hands upon him last fall for the Shreveport District, which is in many respects the leading district in Louisiana. He is a man of deep spirituality and of a kindly, gentle bearing, but he has strong convictions and the courage to maintain them. He is popular as a preacher and knows how to reach the hearts and consciences of men and lead them into the Kingdom. He is orthodox, thoroughly loyal to the Church, and is magnifying his present office. Brother Coleman worthily represented his Conference as a delegate to the last General Conference, which met in Oklahoma City. He gives promise of large usefulness to the Church in the coming years.

THE CHURCH AND THE STATE UNIVERSITY.

Doubtless many readers of the Advocate have read the excellent article under the above title in the Quarterly Review for October which presents in a practical way the obligation and opportunity of the Church with respect to the religious life of the students in the State universities. The article ought to have a wide reading among the leaders of our Church, lay and clerical. It is my purpose to bring the thought suggested home to our local situation, and apply it definitely to the obligation that the Louisiana Conference owes to the students of our State University at Baton Rouge. In doing this, I would emphasize the fact that there is no conflict between this obligation and the duty of adequately equipping our own institutions. No man is more thoroughly convinced of the immediate necessity of putting our own colleges on a firm foundation and securing for them all the patronage possible than I am; but the fact will remain that a large proportion of the sons of Methodist homes in Louisiana will continue to attend the State University and their religious life must be provided for.

The facts of the situation at present are:

1. There are about 175 students registered as Methodists in the university each year. These young men and young women will become the leaders to a large degree in the future life of the State. To reach them with a really effective religious leadership in this formative period of their lives and rescue them from the powerful secularizing influences that are always present in such an institution will probably mean more to the religious development of the State than an equal effort exerted in any other direction. Perhaps this is especially evident when we remember that a large proportion of the students are taking agricultural courses, and, in the new development of rural life, will become leaders in the country life of the State. A well directed effort at this point may mean much for the future of this development which is at the base of the building up of the State.

2. In addition to these students who are our special charge, there are about 45 students from foreign countries who, if they were effectively reached by evangelical influence in these university days, might become a powerful foreign missionary force, particularly in the Latin-American countries from which the most of them come.

3. Under existing conditions very little is or can be done to reach this student body, from the fact that the local pastor, even if he were ideally equipped for the spiritual leadership of student life, is debarred from adequate service in this direction by the demands of one of the heaviest pastorates in the Conference. The effort is made, with some degree of success, to enlist these students in the Sunday school and League, and those in the barracks are required to attend the morning service on Sunday. The pastor tries, in the multitude of other duties, to visit the students in the barracks or boarding houses, but it is impossible for him in this way to reach comprehensively the needs of these young people, for whom our Church is directly responsible.

DR. R. H. WYNN,
President of Centenary College.

4. The local church is not able and ought not to be expected to carry the entire financial burden of maintaining a proper ministry to these young people from Methodist homes throughout the State. It is a Conference responsibility which must be met by the Conference.

5. The following definite suggestion is submitted for the consideration of the Methodist people of the State: A student pastor ought to be secured at once whose duty would be to lead and organize the religious life of the University students as far as our Methodism is concerned, working in co-operation with the First Church and its pastor. His position would be that of an assistant pastor, and while his primary duty would be to work among the students, he could doubtless be of service to the local church in many ways. I am sure that the First Church would provide a part of his support.

In pursuance of such a proposition, we have already been investigating what can be done toward securing a proper man for such a work, and toward financing the undertaking, but in some way we must have help from the State at large. The Boards of Missions and Education ought carefully to consider this matter, for it is both a pressing part of our educational problem and a definite and important missionary demand. Perhaps if the matter is properly presented, the funds for carrying this work can be secured from Methodists throughout the State who are specially interested either as patrons or upon general grounds. Perhaps the General Board of Education may see its way to help, but the Education and Mission Boards of the Conference ought definitely to consider and attack the problem and see that it is provided for in some way. Broader plans may be developed after thorough study of the situation, but certainly this provision, which has been delayed too long, ought to be made at once.

A PASTOR'S WARNING.

The following from the pen of a prominent Baptist pastor of Ohio, in the Journal and Messenger, is worthy of careful reading and prayerful consideration by all church leaders:

"I wonder sometimes where we are going to land. The people seem to have lost all sense of personal relation to their Lord, and naturally have no interest in the progress of his kingdom. The standard of morality is lower—not immoral, perhaps, so much as unmoral. The moral principle does not grip as once it did. The fact is that the age does not want a moral code to which it shall bring its conduct for scrutiny. That spirit is in our Churches all over this city, and, as men speak their heartaches to me, I guess other cities are troubled that way as well as we. I am amazed at the number of meetings I find myself in for the transaction of business of the kingdom with never a word of prayer—just business, cold-blooded and heartless as buying and selling steel rails. We are businessizing the Lord out of his place and authority everywhere. Business courtesy has a larger place than New Testament precedent. An appeal to the New Testament is often self-imposed ostracism. The loneliness of it all sometimes comes over me, with a depression that is unbearable. I have wished sometimes that I could spend the rest of my life in some mission field, where I could get away from the 'sounding brass' of this cultural religion which spends itself in all kinds of service because it is the prevailing fad, but does nothing because it is a loving expression of a personal relation to the Lord. It is a form of religion, sure enough, but as hopeless and helpless to save men as the outer darkness."—Southern Christian Advocate.

A NOTABLE RECORD.

Malachi B. Sharbrough was born in Claiborne County, Miss., sixty years ago, being a son of an itinerant Methodist preacher, Rev. Frank W. Sharbrough. He was reared mostly in Jasper County in the same State, but from the age of sixteen to twenty lived in Brookhaven. He was educated at such private schools as the country then afforded and attended Centenary College for two years. He joined the Mississippi Conference when twenty-two years old, and for two years served the Covington Circuit in Louisiana,

REV. M. B. SHARBROUGH,
Host of the Mississippi Conference.

then a part of the Mississippi Conference. Then in response to a call issued by Bishop McTyeire, he volunteered for work in California, and spent eighteen years in the Pacific Conference and ten years in the Los Angeles Conference. While in the Far West, he served all classes of appointments from the poorest missions to the best districts. He was presiding elder of the Colusa, the Fresno, the Los Angeles, and the Arizona Districts, and was stationed at San Diego, Calif., when he transferred back to his home Conference. After returning to Mississippi, his first charge was the Harrison Circuit; he was then appointed to Madison Circuit, after which he spent four years on the Hattiesburg District, making a notably fine record. He has been pastor at Columbia for two years, during which time he has won his way into all hearts and is now bringing to completion a handsome new brick church which will cost approximately $23,000.

As a preacher, Brother Sharbrough ranks with the best in his Conference. He has always been a close student and a hard worker, and has left his impress lastingly upon every field in which he has wrought. But better even than his sermons (which are of a superior quality), is the influence that emanates from his charming and inspiring personality. He has a beaming face, a heart of the purest gold, and a presence which at once commands attention and wins one's confidence. To see him is to trust him, and to know him is to love him. He is his own best credential. We should like to have his record behind us, and what we believe to be his prospect ahead of us. May the Lord continue to bless his abounding labors, and spare him to Mississippi Methodism for many years to come!

METHODISM IN COLUMBIA, MARION COUNTY, MISSISSIPPI.

By Rev. M. B. Sharbrough.

Methodism was planted in Marion County soon after its introduction into Mississippi. Just one hundred years ago on the 14th day of November, 1914, the second session of the Mississippi Annual Conference assembled in this county at the residence of Rev. Thomas Ford, a local preacher in the Methodist Church. The house in which it was held is about fourteen miles from Columbia and is now the property of Mrs. Mary Ann Ford Rankin. It is worthy of note that the place has not passed out of the hands of the family that owned it a century ago, and that the residence in which the Conference met is still standing substantially as it then was—being the only monument left in the community of those early days. However, there are in and around Columbia a goodly number of descendants of either the Rev. Thomas Ford, or of his brother, who are generally worthy and prosperous people, some of them being among our leading citizens and most, if not all of them, being members of the Methodist Church. Thus has the generation of the upright been perpetuated and blessed.

Ever since that second session of the Mississippi Conference there has doubtless been Methodist preaching in some parts of the country, which was duly followed by the organization of Methodist churches; and as Columbia has always been the county seat, and as Methodism has ever been aggressive, it is reasonably certain that there must have been occasional pulpit ministrations here by our itinerants almost, if not quite, from the date of the Conference above mentioned. According to the memory of the oldest Methodists now living in the community, Columbia was a regular monthly Methodist preaching appointment before the Civil War, but there is no recollection among the people, or any record of any kind that we can find, of any church organization prior to the year 1865. In that year Rev. G. A. Givings, then a member of the Mississippi Conference, established the Church here. Of the first members of the organization then effected, Mrs. Nancy Ball, the widow of Rev. J. A. Ball, a local elder, largely through whose influence the church was started and kept up, is still living, as is also Mrs. Annette Barnes. The others of that early company have passed into the great beyond.

For some years after this organization took place, as well as previously, the services were held in the old Courthouse which yet stands, though a new one was constructed several years ago. In the year 1882 the first church ever erected in Columbia was built by the Methodists. It was a modest but substantial chapel, seating about 200 people. In the year 1903 this structure, having been outgrown, was enlarged so as to give it a capacity for seating comfortably an audience of about 400, and was re-dedicated by Bishop Galloway. This enlarged edifice also soon proved insufficient in its facilities for the needs of the congregation and became increasingly so as the years passed. Especially was this true as the Sunday school, many of its classes every Sunday, after the opening services, being forced to repair to the schoolhouse for their recitations. So last year a new church was projected and this year it has been completed.

The foundation of the new structure is of concrete, and the walls are brick, the outer layer being vitrified and thus impervious to the moisture. The roof is of slate, and the building is plastered on the inside, except where wood was necessary. The regular auditorium is rectangular—almost a square. Its front is finished with a tower and steeple on one side, and a tower (yet incomplete) on the other. The doors and windows are of Tudor-Gothic style and the arches within are made to correspond. Otherwise the whole building is classic throughout. Two entrances, one on each side, lead into the auditorium. The pulpit is in the middle of the front end and the pews are arranged accordingly. It will seat 350 people. Back of the regular auditorium is the Sunday school department. Where this begins the building widens about fourteen feet on each side. In these spaces are the entrances, and immediately within the stair cases go up. This department, too, is rectangular, but is wider than it is deep. In the front and center of this department is the Sunday school auditorium, which is immediately in the rear of the regular church auditorium, with which it almost exactly corresponds except that it is smaller. It is seated in precisely the same manner as the church auditorium, and is separated from it only by a curtain; and when this is drawn the two spaces become practically a single auditorium with a seating capacity for 600 persons. Back of the Sunday school auditorium, on both sides, up-stairs and down-stairs, are Sunday school classrooms—more than twenty in all—which together will seat about 600 people. These are separated from the auditorium and from each other by partitions which easily roll up, so that some of them, or all of them, as may be needed, can be made a part of the two large blended auditoriums, and when all the rooms are thus opened, a congregation of 1200 can be accommodated with seats, all being within easy hearing of the preacher.

The total cost of this commodious structure, including the seats, but not the lot, will be about $23,000. The work of constructing this building has been carried forward almost entirely by the laity. The pastor has not been required to take a single subscription, nor has he handled a cent of the funds, except in a few cases where certain amounts passed incidentally through his hands. The subscriptions were taken mostly by Mr. J. N. Worthy, Mr. James Ball, and Dr. Maxwell. The collections were made and the work was superintended by Mr. J. N. Worthy, who was made agent for the Building Committee, and who for some months, being employed by the Committee, devoted his whole time to the work. But when not so employed he gave the enterprise a large share of his attention and much of the success achieved has been due to his untiring efforts.

The present membership of our church in Columbia is approximately 400, and with the splendid home and facilities for work which this congregation now has, its future seems very bright. Thus has Methodism grown with the growth of this community in the past; and we pray that it may continue to keep pace with its development in the years that are yet to be.

Dr. J. W. Moore, pastor of Centenary M. E. Church, South, of Chattanooga, is holding a series of church conferences with a view to getting his congregation interested and enlisted in the work of the Church. This impresses us as a wise movement.

At the thirty-third annual meeting of the Woman's Home Mission Society of the Methodist Episcopal Church, held in Syracuse, New York, October 21-28, Mrs. W. P. Thirkield, the accomplished wife of Bishop Thirkield, was re-elected president, receiving 228 out of 229 votes cast. This remarkable vote attests the efficiency of Mrs. Thirkield in this responsible office, as well as the high esteem in which she is held by her fellow-workers. Of course, the vote which she did not receive was her own.

FROM DR. W. H. HUNTLEY.

(In response to a request for some data from which we might write a brief account of his life and labors, Dr. Huntley sent us this note, authorizing us to use the whole of it, or none of it, as we pleased. The Moss Point dedication referred to by him is now a thing of the past, but that fact does not alter the value of the information given concerning himself.—Editor of the Advocate.)

"The most prominent influence in my life leading to my entrance into the ministry has been the strain of teacher ancestry, dating to the third generation before. Several of the best years to me were spent in school work in Georgia, my native State. The action of the Trustees at La Grange, on the completion of the first High School building there—a community steeped in an educational atmosphere—in selecting me for principal before I was 21 years old, was to an extent traceable to my training through generations. Mr. John Temple Graves was elected assistant, and at my request was elevated to co-principalship with me.

"Old Jefferson Street Church, Natchez, the seat of our Annual Conference last year, was the Church which licensed me to preach, and in later years has been one of my appreciated pastorates.

"For the rest—the struggle and advance along several years of the history of the Mississippi Conference—detail melts into such perspective as to forbid the temptation to stop specially at any point. I should pass the limits of your space and kindness, opening the treasures of the heart, expressing the affectionate results of many experiences with Christian men, were I to write of these things. Friendships have come, sorrows have dimmed the skies, and hope has left me at times in deepest shadows; but my faith in Jesus Christ has been at the height and the helm through all the years. Without him, it would have been not only possible but certain that life for me would have been failure.

"I am leaving for Moss Point, to be present at the dedication of the Dantzler Memorial Church tomorrow. Bishop Candler was in earlier times my dearly loved classmate and chum. The years have weighted him with burdens far beyond the ordinary.

"The A.B. degree came to us at the same Commencement at old Emory, and three or four years later, the Master's degree was conferred. Getting under the burden of the institution's mission to Georgia Methodism, Warren became its president, lifting it and leading its students nobly, for I forget how many years, until his election to the Bishop's chair.

"It will be a great pleasure to be with him a while tomorrow, slipping for an hour back into balcyon days and nights ambrosial, chatting of the past and poking into memory's bright but long-unused chambers where college-mates romped, loved, fought, and upholstered character."

"A NEEDED CHANGE AT THE CONFERENCE LOVE FEAST."

By a Circuit Rider.

Brother Lowrey's article in last week's Advocate under the above caption (certificate of arrest) strikes at a world-wide Methodist custom. It is evident that he no longer wishes a free ticket to a Love Feast with "B" printed upon it, such as John Wesley gave those whose "seriousness and good conversation" he had no reason to doubt. Brother Lowrey's recommendation that the Love Feast "be abandoned as one of the things that pass away" does ominous violence not only to primordial custom, but to everything the Love Feast has stood for. It has "always been a valued feature of Methodist economy" in all the world, "the members partaking of bread and water in token of brotherly love. The occasion has served for a free expression of Christian experience, and religious emotion, where falling ardor was rekindled, where hesitating resolutions were strengthened and stimulated, and where new zeal was born."

I agree with the old Romans who said: "malus usus abolendus est" (an evil custom ought to be abolished), but there are not enough evils about a Love Feast, even where two or three cups only are passed around to relegate it to desuetude.

What is the history of the Love Feast, and

REV. N. B. HARMON,

Of Yazoo City, One of the Most Alert and Useful Pastors in the Mississippi Conference.

what does it stand for? Kitto says: "The Greek term for love (agape) was used by ecclesiastical writers (most frequently in the plural) to signify the social meal of the primitive Christians, which generally accompanied the Eucharist. Much learned research has been spent in tracing the origin of this custom; but though considerable obscurity may rest on the details, the general historical connection is obvious."

He also says that the agape was "a symbol of Christian love, and a striking exemplification of its benevolent energy. However soon its purity was soiled, at first it was not undeserving of the eulogy pronounced by the great orator of the Church: 'A custom most beautiful and beneficial; for it was a supporter of love, a solace of poverty, a moderator of wealth, and a discipline of humility! * * * In modern times social meetings bearing a resemblance to the agapae, and in allusion to them, termed Love Feasts, have been regularly held by the Church of the United Brethren, or Moravians, and the Wesleyan Methodists. Also in Scotland by the followers of Mr. Robert Sandeman."

Sandford's Cyclopaedia says: "According to Chrysostom, the Agape was a common feast symbolizing the community of goods when it no longer really existed, to which the rich brought provisions, and the poor who brought nothing were invited. At first it was observed probably every evening in connection with the celebration of the Lord's Supper. It closed with the holy kiss."

Christian people in modern times do not observe the Feast with as many "provisions" as did the primitive Christians, but bread and water are passed around in token of brotherly love, and gifts are made on the outside to the poor and to charitable institutions which prove the "brotherly love."

If Brother Lowrey had lived in the Apostolic day, or shortly afterward, I am sure the fear of microbes would have prevented him giving some pious brother a resounding smack! It will not surprise me next, to hear that he refuses to talk over a telephone, and that he carries around with him a bag of sterilized atmosphere!

It is likely also that he overstates the case by saying: "When we observed the various types of lips that embraced that glass—tobacco-stained, saliva-moistened, fever-parched, covered by unkempt beard, backed by unwashed teeth, and perhaps emaciated by the death-dealing consumptive germs, we were glad that we got the first chance at the glass."

What kind of folk live in Louisiana, belong to the Annual Conference, or attend upon Love Feasts, that they are thus represented? Connectional officers from abroad should be warned that they may hold in readiness a fumigating, disinfecting liquid spray the moment they enter the confines of old "Luzianne!" If Brother Lowrey's article is read by educated folk in other directions, they are liable to set up a quarantine against everything "made in Louisiana."

If we should let "the declarations of science" dictate to us what we should do religiously, then there would never even be a religious gathering of any kind within closed doors, because science teaches that the crowded congregation inhale a large portion of the oxygen of the air, which alone can sustain life. The air of a church is also impregnated with carbonic acid gas, which produces drowsiness in those who inhale it, and death in case they inhale much of it.

The individual communion cup may be more in accord with modern science, and the ethical tastes of educated people—and seriously I do not object to the innovation—yet the single cup passed around is Scriptural and Apostolic, and better preserves the idea of "communion." If a fellow dies from some germ contracted at a Love Feast, or the Eucharist, he will die in a mighty good cause! It has not been proved, however, that any have thus died.

"READJUSTMENT IN MEXICO."

By Bishop E. E. Hoss.

Mr. Editor: If I did not have so much respect for Dr. Pinson, I should be compelled to say that his recent article on this subject in answer to mine of prior date reads like an attempt to confuse the issue. Nobody, as far as I am aware, has sought, or is seeking, to hinder any wise rearrangement of our work in Mexico, provided it be made by competent authority. What I, at any rate, have opposed is an injudicious scheme got up and forwarded without the direction or consent of the General Conference. Nor do I intend that Dr. Pinson, or anybody else, shall consciously or unconsciously misrepresent my attitude.

As to the Committee on Latin America, which by Dr. Pinson's showing met in January, 1914, and started this whole movement, I desire to say that it had no authority to do anything more than make recommendations to our General Conference. I must add, to the credit of that Committee, that the recommendations which it actually did make were entirely general in character and not at all identical with those which Dr. Pinson is now seeking to thrust upon the Church. Why they were never presented to the General Conference, I do not pretend to know. When any great and serious changes in the administration of our mission work are contemplated, the General Conference ought to be consulted in advance, and allowed to lay down the limits within which negotiations may be conducted. Otherwise we are in danger of being involved in plans which the Church as a whole can not approve, as we are in the present time.

As to the Laredo meeting of February, 1914, the fact is that it was not a spontaneous assembly of the missionaries, but was gotten up by the Secretaries of the General Board, who went thither at a large expense with a cut-and-dried programme, and used all their official power to have it adopted. It was not our missionaries, therefore, "who had the honor of leading in this great movement." The missionaries did not lead. I make this statement on the authority of gentlemen concerned, and whose standing for veracity and integrity can not be successfully challenged. Nor is it true that the action taken by this gathering was identical with the measures adopted later at Cincinnati and now presented to the Church for acceptance.

As to this Cincinnati meeting, who appointed the so-called delegates to it? The General Conference did not do it. The Board of Missions did not do it. Who took it upon himself to assume this power? It is time that we were knowing whether just anybody, without express authorization, is to be at liberty to perform functions of this sort. In my judgment, we had no "delegates or representatives" at that gathering. But I should not be surprised to learn that in spite of this fact, the Church, through the Board of Missions, paid the bills.

As to the last meeting of the Board of Missions, I repeat again that only four of the Bishops were present. The rather jaunty way in which they are informed that their absence was their own lookout, and the further intimation that it did not matter much whether they were absent or present, does not relieve the situation. At that particular season of the year the Bishops are all busy with engagements of one sort or another, and which can not be easily canceled. Whatever others may think about it, they at least take their duties seriously, and are not inclined to belittle the significance of their office. If they had supposed that the Secretaries were going to try to rush through so revolutionary a piece of work, they would probably have dropped everything else to be present. As it is, they have since expressed their formal and deliberate opinion about it all, and are willing to go to the General Conference on the record.

When the Board meets again, Dr. Pinson will be called upon to make a much fuller and more satisfactory showing than he has yet done. Men will be present who know the territory involved from thirty years' experience. Bishop Candler, who has presided over the Mexican Conferences six times, and is thoroughly familiar with every part of it, will also have something to say. I suggest, therefore, that the present attempt to whistle all questions down the wind will not prove very wise. The Church at large wants to know all the facts, and even our "peons" in Mexico, as they have been rather sneeringly styled, are entitled to be informed. For the present, I do not care to say more; but if Dr. Pinson and his associates insist on making further statements, I shall answer them down to the root of the whole question.

P. S.—I should like to know whether Dr. Pinson is aware that the General Conference, on motion of R. C. Elliott and J. F. Corbin, passed the following resolution:

"Whereas the present disturbed condition of Mexico has made it necessary for our American missionaries to withdraw from that country; and, Whereas our Mexican preachers and membership remaining in Mexico are separated from us and communication with them is rendered difficult by reason of existing conditions, and as our Mexican brethren are liable to be discouraged and possibly may be led to believe that their Church has lost or may lose interest in them now:

Therefore, be it Resolved by this General Conference that our Mexican brethren, preachers and people, are as dear to our hearts as they have ever been and that they have our deepest Christian sympathy and love, and they are the subjects of our daily prayers for their personal safety and spiritual welfare; that we have not and shall not withdraw our confidence from them, and we pledge them that as soon as circumstances shall permit we will return to them to serve them as faithfully as God shall enable us. And in the meantime we beg our Mexican brethren to remain faithful to their Christian vows and duties and to join us in earnest prayer for the return of peace to their beloved land and for the wider opening of the doors of Mexico for the entrance of the Gospel of Christ."

"THE MOST CRITICAL BATTLE FIELD."

By Bishop Warren A. Candler.

The tide of student life turning more and more to the United States from foreign lands, and especially from Oriental lands, is one of the most significant facts of the present time. It is attracting the attention of thoughtful men in all parts of our country and in all walks of life, and well it may. The welfare of our nation, as well as that of other nations, is vitally involved. It is not too much to say that the welfare of mankind is involved.

If the schools into which these foreign students enter are thoroughly Christian in character, the effect of the movement will be to hasten the Christianization of the world.

If on the other hand, these institutions impart skeptical tendencies in thought and unchristian modes of life to the students coming to them, the effect will be to impair, if not destroy, religion in the world. Students from the Orient can not retain their Oriental religions after studying for a time in American institutions. None of the faiths of the East can live in the light of such educational centers. But if these students do not become Christians while being enlightened, they will be in a worse condition on leaving our country than upon coming to it. It will be both cruel and injurious to take away their old faiths without giving them something better instead. Moreover, they will punish us for their loss, if we thus impoverish their religious natures. If the populous nations of the Orient are induced to throw away their old religions and are not made Christians at the same time, they will overrun Christendom with godless hordes of heathen troops who will spare nothing before them. means something worse than the return of "the Dark Ages."

These views are brought in sight by a recent utterance of Mr. John R. Mott. In his report to the Student Volunteer Convention in Kansas City he made the following strong statement:

We would call attention to the presence in our North American institutions of higher learning of the large and increasing number of students from Oriental and other non-Christian countries. These student migrations bid fair to increase in volume. The students who have thus come among us will on their return to their native lands wield an unusually large influence. This is particularly true of those coming from lands like China, which are in such a plastic condition and which are now adopting the Western civilization. We should befriend them in every way in our power, seeking to facilitate their plans and to render them practical service. We should see that they are exposed to the best side of our civilization and are led to understand clearly that what they most admire and we most value in our national and social life is traceable to the principles and spirit of pure Christianity, and that the things about our civilization which most displease them as well as ourselves are due not to Jesus Christ, but to the lack of Jesus Christ. We should lead them to investigate thoroughly the teachings of our religion, especially the life and work of Christ himself. We should seek to guide them into a reasonable and vital faith in the living Christ and should pray that an increasing number of them may devote their lives to the service of Christ in their native lands, some as Christian ministers and others as lay leaders. These men and women, who in so many cases represent the flower of the lands from which they come, were they to consecrate their lives to Christ's cause, could do far more to advance his Kingdom among their people than an equal number of foreign missionaries.

The most critical battle field from the point of view of the Volunteer Movement is not the Moslem world, not the educated classes of Japan, not the literati of China, not the citadels of Hinduism, not the areas of neglect in Latin America, but our own American and Canadian universities and colleges.

Mr. Mott is entirely within the limits of sober truth when he says the most critical field in our times is in the colleges and universities of North America. Their influence, whether good or bad, will largely determine the world's religious condition for years to come, if not forever.

It must be candidly confessed that a ruinous rationalism prevails in many of the wealthiest institutions of learning in the United States. The secularists control some of the richest educational plants in our country, and they are deliberately seeking to secularize as many of the institutions of the Churches as can be seduced from the control of their devout founders by offers of money from secular sources.

The Churches are pressing their collections for foreign missions, and sending out missionaries. In this they do right; they could not do less without rebellion against their Lord who has laid upon them the great commission to evangelize the world. But they should not overlook the fact that godless institutions of learning may send back to the Orient annually more educated atheists than the missionaries sent forth by all the Churches.

The missionary work of the Churches must be re-inforced by strengthening with all possible speed their colleges and universities. Otherwise much of their missionary money will be expended for naught. The Churches can not do their missionary work abroad without doing their educational work at home. This is too plain for argument and the fact calls for prompt, vigorous, heroic action. If the schools of the Churches are inferior to the institutions of the secularists, the Christian religion will be depreciated by Oriental students.

The critical field in the warfare for the evangelization of the world is in the colleges and universities of North America.

THERE IS ALWAYS A WAY.

There is always a way to rise, my lad,
Always a way to advance;
But the road that leads to Mount Success
Does not pass by the way of Chance;
It goes through the stations of Work and Strife,
Through the Valley of Persevere.
And the man that succeeds while others fail
Must be willing to pay most dear.
For there's always a way to fail, my lad,
Always a way to slide,
And the men you find at the foot of the hill
All sought for an easy ride.
So on and up, though the road be rough,
And the storms come thick and fast;
There is room at the top for the fellow who tries,
And victory comes at last.

—Richard Burton.

SKIPPING HARD THINGS.

Some people have the habit of skipping everything that is difficult. This habit begins in childhood, in school. Easy lessons are learned because they need no great effort; but when a hard one comes in the course it is given a half-hearted trial. When reading a story the hard word is skipped over, not mastered.

The habit thus allowed to start from childhood easily finds its way into all the life. The boy does the same in the play-ground. When the game needs no special exertion he gets through it very fairly; when the game is hotly contested and the victory can be won only by a struggle he drops it. He does not have the persistence for a great effort.

The girl who lets her school lessons master her, who leaves the hard words unread and the hard problems unsolved, soon begins to allow other hard things to master her. The home tasks that are disagreeable, or that require special effort, she leaves unattempted, or to her sister.

And so at last the habit of doing only what is easy and pleasant, and skipping what is hard and disagreeable, pervades the whole life, with the result that nothing brave or noble is ever accomplished, and the person never rises to anything above the commonplace.

This habit of leaving and shirking hard things damages our character. The difficult things are put in our way, not to stop us in our course, but to call out our strength and develop our energy.

If we never had any but easy things to do, things which require no effort, we should never get strong. If we timidly give up whenever we come to something hard, we shall never outgrow childhood.

The Indians say that when a warrior slays a foe the strength of the conquered man passes into the victor's arm. This is true of the difficulties and obstacles of life which we master; we get the strength of each victory into our own hearts.

The skipping of hard things and leaving them behind has a hurtful influence also on the future. In school the unlearned lesson is but one in a series, but on examination day we feel the lack of knowledge. A lad does not like mathematics, and a girl does not like spelling, and they fail to master these two subjects. By and by the lad comes up to a profession in which mathematics is essential, and the door is shut to him. The girl has an opening in which correct spelling is necessary, and the way is barred to her. Both these young people have spoiled their own future through the habit of skipping what is difficult.

The lesson is: Be thorough; go to the root of things. Anybody can conquer when the conflict is easy, when the opposition is feeble, and the enemy is cowardly. Seek to do the difficult things. There is nothing noble or brave in doing what every one else can do.—The Young Soldier.

SPEAKING AT RANDOM.

Helen M. Richardson.

"If you ever do that again, Bobby, I'll whip you within an inch of your life!"

Now Bobby knew that his mother did not mean a word of this appalling threat, and it slipped from his mind like water "sliding off a duck's back," so to speak. Bobby did not even try to figure what that "inch" of his "life" might possibly hold for him. The threat was too vague for his young mind to grasp, and he did not attempt to wrestle with it. His mother might whip him, and she might not. Most likely she would forget all about it, just as Bobby would.

This habit of speaking at random is very easily acquired. Parents say things that they do not really mean to their children every day, and forget them, often, as soon as the words have passed their lips. But the effect of these random utterances upon the mind of a child is far-reaching.

If mother says that she is going to whip John the next time he does a certain forbidden thing, and then fails to carry her threat into execution, John remembers it, if she does not, and governs his actions accordingly. And the next time his mother makes a similar statement it goes in one of John's ears and out the other; and he takes the chances that it is nothing but idle talk, and that the threat will not materialize any more than the last one did.

The child who constantly hears dinned into its ears the promise of punishment to follow some act of disobedience, but who fails to receive the promised chastisement, is learning a lesson in prevarication that will be apt to leave a lasting impression upon its young mind. It isn't going to happen because it never has happened, is an optimistic way of looking at many threatened evils. And what is more optimistic than youth?

Our words of praise, or of blame, should always be thoughtfully chosen. Indiscriminate flattery is as pernicious in its effects as is unmerited reproof. We are too prone to voice a thought without first considering the effect it will be likely to produce upon the mind of the listener.

It is the random word that we are sure to regret when we allow ourselves time for reflection. If we could only teach ourselves to remember that the uttered word can never be recalled, and that its utterance has made a lasting impression for good or for evil upon some young mind, there would be fewer random speeches to regret.

Then, too, an exaggerated statement never carries the weight of a few well-chosen, decisive words. The mother who quietly reminds her boy that he will be punished if he disobeys her and then invariably lives up to that reminder, will not be obliged often to repeat the experiment. Whereas, random threats, like random shots, seldom hit the mark, and are, at the best, simply wasted energy.—Zion's Herald.

RUNNING A PAPER.

Jim Jones he was an editor—that's what he tried to be;
He bought himself a printing press and started in to see
Just what there was in editin', but when he'd canvassed 'round
Some fifteen hundred editors in that town he found—

They all knew more about it than he could hope to know.
They told him: "You must run her, Jones, and run her so and so.
Be sure to boom the Baptists—they's sure to help you out,
And give the good old Methodists a good salvation shout.

"Give every man a notice—be sure and let it be known
Whenever Major Jinks is seen perambulating in town.
Put in a few free locals for all the stores and give Away some free subscriptions if you wish your sheet to live.

Well, Jones, he did just what they said, for fear they'd make a row,
But the more he tried to please 'em all, the more they told him how.
Until at last he took his book and laid it on the shelf,
Then ran the paper in the ground and followed it himself. —Unidentified.

CONFERENCE REPORTS.

The report blanks to be filled in and submitted by the preachers at the Annual Conferences are calculated to bring out every point possible relative to the condition of the various charges. The matters of membership, church property, woman's work, Epworth Leagues, Sunday schools, and finance are the subjects of this detailed source of information. Each preacher usually being able to give the exact figures relative to his charge that are required in this blank, a comprehensive knowledge is obtained of the local status of affairs. And when the aggregates of the reports appear in the annual minutes the relative strength of the Annual Conference is evidenced. Perhaps these reports are more satisfactory at present than ever before. But there is still room for improvement. Often, not knowing the exact figures that should appear, the preacher estimates the best he can and accordingly fills in the blank. The matter of church membership is vital, but it is hardly possible that the figures representing the membership reflect the exact condition of any church. Though the precise number that is shown upon the church register appears in the report, there usually are more or less names upon the roll that have been lost sight of or who take absolutely no interest in the affairs of the Church. On the other hand, every church has many friends who take a part in its proceedings and help to pay its obligations, yet they will not allow their names to be added to the roll. And again, many churches of small membership are more virile than others with much larger rolls.

But these reports are indeed extremely important. They come as near telling the public what the church is doing as material facts can represent moral and spiritual forces. The discrepancy is always real, but it should be made as little apparent as possible. The preacher cannot make this report alone. The trustees must inform him accurately as to the church property, the women must submit the report of their work, the Sunday school secretary must supply him with the information from that important organization, and the Epworth League must be properly set forth in figures. Co-operation with the preacher by the officers and the whole membership is necessary to make up a satisfactory report. Obversely, it may be said that each figure, or amount, stands for some person or act and if a person falls in the spiritual life for which the church stands, the figures are so much belied.

Every report should be made out with the utmost consideration for every detail. It should represent the true condition of the charge, so far as it is possible for figures to do so. It should be written clearly and comprehensively. And this report should be given to the Statistical Secretaries at the first session of the Conference. Failure in these duties by one individual imposes hardships upon the Secretaries and reflects upon the whole Annual Conference.

But however accurate the reports may be, it nevertheless remains that there are some things that will never be known in a perfect way about any one charge. Figures can not tell what prompted the gifts of money and they can never weigh the amount of spirituality in the heart of the giver. Some churches are known for their liberality; others are known for their spirituality. There are two extremes that may well be avoided. On the one hand, is the church that pays and apparently has no spiritual life; on the other hand, is the church that manifests much effervescence but never meets its obligations. The church that is truest purges itself of a shirking attitude and arouses its membership to a noble and consecrated service. Giving money will not save a man; but neither will any other service of itself. The Spirit of God working in the heart and prompting true service and liberality makes for the salvation which is to be coveted.

C. A. B.

TEMPTATIONS AT CONFERENCE.

There are some temptations confronting every preacher at Conference that are most subtle and innocent in appearance, but which if they are not conquered sometimes lead to unexpected and undesirable results. The first of these is the apparently innocent indulgence of speaking critically of a brother minister in his absence. This habit, perhaps, is easier formed among a body of preachers than among almost any other set of men imaginable, for the reason that a minister is true and dependable regarding what he hears and does not tell the absent person what has been said of him. In most any other gathering this criticism would be dangerous because some one would likely tell, and the person criticised might forcibly resent it. Certainly nothing is meant in most instances in calling attention to the other man's idiosyncrasies, but it often causes a listener to form the wrong opinion about another without an opportunity on the part of the other man to give his side of the matter. Besides, the critic may share in the adverse effects of his own remarks, for the preachers at Conference soon learn who is continually making strictures on the other man. Then from another viewpoint, what right has a man to become an advocate for or against others? So often it is said: "That is a good man," or "I like this man." The impression is very often left upon the listener that so many of the other brethren cannot be classed as good men in a certain sense, and only after some experience among all the ministers does the falsity of the impression come to light.

In the second place, it is quite natural and reasonable that each one through the years should form his coterie of friends among the ministers, and that a good deal of one's time should be spent in their presence and enjoying their fellowship. It may be borne in mind, however, that the Annual Conference is being continually modified by the dropping out of some members and the coming in of new men. To some this modification takes place so silently that they are not conscious of it until the fact of the change is suddenly thrust upon them. So far as is possible every preacher should become acquainted with every other member of the Conference. Many may feel a warmth of friendship for the other brethren, but how are the latter to know about it unless this friendship is expressed? A kind word and real genuine expressions of love and esteem are never out of place in a Methodist Conference. May the time never come when a superficiality of manners and affected actions shall estrange the brethren at these great annual gatherings!

There is a vast opportunity for fraternal ties to be welded through the powerful Methodist system. Every preacher may become intimately acquainted with the other; this fraternity then separates and covers a large area; it convenes, again and apportions out the territory to meet present conditions. The problems of one man thus become the problems of each and all. It is like a great net that is thrown out and drawn in of its own power, living, vibrant, each portion supporting and adjoining the other, for one great service. But above all, the spirit of the ever-living Christ should unite this fraternity of men into a heroic army to carry forward the banner of the Cross.

MUCH TO BE COMMENDED.

It is now being confidently claimed that a cure has been found for pyorrhea alveolaris, or Riggs' disease of the gums and teeth, a widely prevalent and pernicious malady which hitherto has been considered incurable. Several persons have had a hand in discovering the new remedy, but to Dr. C. C. Bass, of New Orleans, belongs the distinction of ascertaining the method by which the new specific can be most easily and effectively applied. In a recent address before the New Orleans Academy of Sciences, Dr. Bass set forth at some length his views; from a report of which appearing in The Times-Picayune, we take the following:

"The plan of treatment now indicated is the injection of emetine until great improvement is manifested; and then to follow up the treatment with a wash of an extremely diluted fluid extract of ipecac. This could be applied as a prophylactic in brushing the teeth by putting one drop of ipecac on the moistened toothbrush. Too much ipecac would cause nausea, of course. This remedy is in the reach of everyone, and while it may not be sufficient for chronic cases, it will prevent the disease from appearing in the mouths of children and will check incipient cases.

"In the discussion following the lecture Dr. Wood, dean of the Dental Department of Tulane University, said he had observed the same results as noted by Dr. Bass, but he suggested that the application of the ipecac by compressed air instead of the brush might prove more efficacious. He had made experiments and had found correct every statement made by Dr. Bass.

"In reply Dr. Bass admitted the force of what Dr. Wood had said, but replied that the use of compressed air would require the services of an expert, and he did not think it necessary. The brush application would reach the trouble, and it required no skill in the application."

Dr. Bass's course in seeking to find such a method of applying his remedy as can be used by the people generally, instead of forcing them to seek the services of expensive specialists in order to secure its benefits, shows that he has the spirit of a true philanthropist, and it is deserving of the highest commendation. His disposition in this respect is in marked contrast with that of many physicians who when they have made a medical discovery seek to pose as public benefactors, but at the same time demonstrate that their chief object in the handling of their newly found remedy is their own personal financial gain.

No class of men have a finer opportunity to make their influence a blessing to humanity than those who are learned and skilled in the healing art.

COLORINGS.

Colors make the flowers beautiful. The whole aspect of nature is more pleasant to behold because the Father has tinted the world with myriads of hues. Applied with the hand of a master, colors blend to make a marvelous painting that will bring to the artist the homage of unborn generations. With colors does God paint marvelous pictures on the western sunset skies. Who has not sat before an open fire watching the embers glow and the flames leap with ever-changing colors that have set up pleasant and sometimes profitable trains of thought in the imagination? How a touch of color in a lady's gown will relieve, giving attractiveness and brightness to what would otherwise be an effect too sober.

Colors are sometimes beautiful. Sometimes they are not. There are the dark and murky colors. Who has not felt the depression of a long drawn-out succession of gray days? Colors make nature beautiful because applied by the hand of God. In the hand of one who does not understand or who is malicious they may bring dismay and distress. The story is told of a lad who unfortunately let fall a drop of coloring into a quantity of white lead. The boy sought to repair the damage done by vigorously stirring the whole mass. After a while to him all traces of the coloring seemed to have disappeared, but the trained eye of the painter told him that there was something that was wrong. To him the white lead was white no more. One small drop of coloring had caused the trouble. On the brush of a master this might have helped to make a wonderful painting that would outlast the ages.

Our lives are the drops of coloring that help to paint the whole great picture of man's history in the world. As colors affect each other, so do the lives that men live. In the hand of God their lives are blended to make the marvelous picture of man's history in the world. How many there have been who, through being used of God, have made this picture so different and so much more marvelous to behold! Quiet your mind. Let these come trooping before you: Prophets of the Old Testament times, saints of those days not prophets, saints and mighty ones of New Testament days, martyrs who spilled their blood to become "the seed of the Church," reformers who, knowing God, lived and died in his service, great preachers of all times, missionaries of the Cross who underwent hardships to save nations for God, humble saints in a thousand corners of the world whose names have not been known beyond a very circumscribed circle, and, above all, Him who said that it was his meat and drink to do the will of him that sent him—all these have been the particles of color that have made more glorious the painting of the history of man, wrought out by the hand of God.

Shall the Father be allowed to use our lives making more glorious this marvelous picture, or will the hideous colors of sin and Satan so mar them as to make the effect hideous to behold? God grant that the latter may never be the case!

PERSONAL AND OTHER NOTES.

The Editor acknowledges the reception of Thanksgiving Day greetings from a number of his friends, and assures them that their kindly messages were much appreciated.

Rev. H. L. Norton, of Purvis, favored us with some subscriptions to the Advocate on Nov. 25.

We are grateful to him for the service thus rendered the Conference organ.

The Protestant Churches of Alexandria, La., held a union Thanksgiving service at the Emanuel Baptist Church. Dr. G. E. Cameron was the preacher of the occasion and delivered a brilliant and eloquent sermon.

Rev. J. F. Waltman, of Gilbert, La., has our thanks for a club of six subscriptions, sent in a few days since. It is Brother Waltman's habit to take care of all the interests of the Church in the field of which he has charge.

Among the signs of progress in the West Monroe (La.) charge this year are a modern parsonage, an enlargement of the church and added Sunday schools rooms, and a doubling of the membership of the school. Rev. H. W. Ledbetter, the pastor, has wrought well.

We regret very much to be informed of the death of little Frances, the infant daughter of Brother and Sister O. P. Armour, of Macon, Miss., which occurred on October 24. They will have the sympathy and prayers of many friends in their bereavement and sorrow.

At the recent session of the North Carolina Conference, held at Washington, N. C., the address at the Educational Anniversary was delivered by Dr. F. N. Parker, of Trinity College. The Raleigh Christian Advocate says that Dr. Parker's effort was a most masterly one.

In Magnolia, Miss., union services were held at the Methodist Church on Thanksgiving day, and our pastor there, Rev. J. A. Moore, delivered the sermon, which was an earnest and impressive utterance. A free-will offering was taken for the four Orphans' Homes of Mississippi.

Rev. J. W. Lee, of Lake Providence, La., is rounding out his third year in that historic charge, and has had larger congregations and a better interest this year than during either of the previous ones. This was the first church ever served by Rev. Linus Parker—afterwards Bishop Parker.

Major R. W. Millsaps, of Jackson, Miss., states that, because of a very pressing engagement which cannot be deferred, he will probably not be able to attend the session of the Mississippi Conference. We do not need to say that he will be greatly missed by the brethren if he is kept away.

Dr. George S. Sexton, of Shreveport, La., in a personal note to the Editor, states that all our pastors in that city have had a prosperous year. We are glad, but not surprised, to know this. Fidelity is usually the price of success, and Brothers Sexton, Means, McCoy, and Hoffpauir are a faithful band.

Meridian, Miss., has recently enjoyed a union meeting, conducted by Rev. Walt Holcomb, the well known evangelist. We have no late information as to the results, but it was stated some days ago that great crowds were attending the services and that there had been more than a hundred conversions.

Rev. H. C. Morehead, of Sidon, Miss., the newly elected President of the Veteran Ministers' Association of the North Mississippi Conference, is taking much interest in that worthy organization. We are pleased to know that he expects to be on hand at Starkville on December 2, to meet and greet the brethren.

The Choctaw Indians, of the Indian Creek Mission, are pleading to have Rev. A. A. Phillips continued as their pastor for another year. He is stated to be the only preacher that they have ever really known, having been with them for about two years. They insist that no one else can fill the place as well as he.

Rev. J. B. Williams, of Ponchatoula, La., has lately been giving attention to the work of placing the Advocate in the homes of his people. We highly appreciate what he is doing in this direction. No one can be a Methodist of the best type without reading a church paper and keeping informed concerning the affairs of the Kingdom.

We are forced to close the forms for this issue of the Advocate on Monday, a day earlier than usual, as both the Editor and Publisher must be out of the office from that time until the last of the week. If any of the brethren should fail to get in notices mailed to reach the office on Tuesday, this statement will explain to them the reason why.

Though the weather in New Orleans was very inclement on Thanksgiving Day, a good audience attended the union service at Rayne Memorial Church. The message of the hour, which was delivered by Rev. J. G. Snelling, was an earnest and helpful one. The collection taken went to the fund to construct a Protestant chapel at the Louisiana Lepers' Home.

Rev. J. H. Foreman, of Wesson, Miss., has sent us an announcement of the death of Brother J. W. Leggett, the father of Rev. J. T. Leggett, one of the leading members of the Mississippi Conference, which appears on another page. We regret to learn of the decease of this worthy and useful layman, which took place on November 24, and we extend sympathy to the bereaved.

Brother James H. Walker, of Jackson, La., sent us last week a check for $1 for the Louisiana Educational Fund, and stated that he wished to join the Five-Year Club that Rev. Paul M. Brown has been organizing in the interest of that cause. His letter and contribution have been forwarded to Brother Brown, who will appreciate the interest that he has manifested.

The Methodist Church at Okolona, Miss., where Rev. J. H. Holder is winding up a quadrennium of fine service, has increased from 208 to 371 members within the last seven years. Brother Holder during his four years' incumbency has received 150 persons into the Church. This congregation now has a $19,000 house of worship and a $5000 parsonage is in process of construction.

On account of the inclemency of the weather on Thursday evening, Nov. 26, many people were kept away from the organ recital given at the Carrollton Avenue Church, of this city, by Mr. James R. Clark. Because of this fact it has been decided to repeat the recital on Thursday evening, December 3, beginning at 7:45 o'clock. Let all the Methodists of New Orleans who can, attend.

Miss Alice Winn, of New Orleans, writes as follows: "On Tuesday evening, Nov. 24, the Woman's Bible Class of Felicity Church gave a social to their friends in the Sunday school rooms. The rooms were beautifully decorated, and refreshments were served. On Thursday morning, the class prepared and delivered in person ten Thanksgiving baskets to inmates of St. Anna's Home."

The financial interests of the New Orleans Advocate will be looked after at the Louisiana Conference by Rev. T. D. Lipscomb, of Donaldsonville, La. The brethren are earnestly requested to see Brother Lipscomb as early in the Conference session as possible. The Publisher, Brother C. O. Chalmers, will be on hand at the two Mississippi Conferences and will be glad to see any one having business with our paper.

Bishop Collins Denny was suffering from a throat affection, and was in consequence somewhat indisposed, during the recent session of the North Georgia Conference, which convened in Marietta on Nov. 18. On this account he pressed Bishop Candler into service to address the class admitted into full connection and to preach on Sunday at 11 o'clock a. m. We trust that Bishop Denny will soon be entirely rid of his malady.

Rev. W. R. Williams has served the Mt. Pleasant Circuit of the North Mississippi Conference with great acceptability for a quadrennium, and at the recent session of the quarterly conference of that charge resolutions strongly commending his work were adopted. His fearless preaching and general efficiency were specially commented upon, and gratitude was expressed to the Heavenly Father for the many benefits of his faithful pastorate.

Rev. George H. Thompson, presiding elder of the Hattiesburg District, writing on November 24, says: "Brother J. S. Parker, pastor of the Seminary (Miss.) charge, who has been on the sick list for ten weeks, is still critically ill. He is now at the South Mississippi Infirmary at Hattiesburg." We regret very much to be informed of Brother Parker's illness. Let the brethren remember him and his anxious loved ones at the throne of grace.

Dr. T. B. Holloman on another page tells us something of his four years' work in the interesting little city of Port Gibson, Miss. Dr. Holloman is an old Emory and Henry man, and has long been regarded as one of the truest and ablest Methodist ministers in Mississippi. He has wrought well in his present field, and we hope that he may be assigned to another equally as pleasant and inviting in its opportunities. The charge that secures his services will be fortunate.

Mrs. B. F. Youngblood, of Wesson, Miss., writes as follows: "The ladies of the Woman's Missionary Society here made and quilted five quilts for the Methodist Orphanage at Jackson, besides contributing several other things of less value. They have also lately placed in the church furniture costing $100 and have paid the insurance on the church and parsonage." These sisters are obviously keeping busy in the Master's service. May the Lord bless and enrich them in their religious experiences!

Dr. R. H. Wynn, President of Centenary College, delivered an able and informing address before the Rotary Club of Shreveport last week, in which he reviewed the history of Centenary College and showed its value to the city of Shreveport. He also made an appeal to all to rally to the support of this institution and to assist in placing it upon a firmer and better basis and carrying it forward to larger things. We hope to give some extracts from Dr. Wynn's stirring utterance in the next issue of the Advocate.

Brother W. W. Williams, of Pineville, La., writes: "Our church here has had the most successful all-round year that it has had in quite a while. It will not pay the Conference assessments in full, but it will meet successfully all its other obligations. The pastor's salary has been paid in full every year since the re-organization of the church, and a majority of the members are requesting the return of Brother Dring, who has expressed himself as being perfectly willing to come back. At one or more of the quarterly conferences the presiding elder's percentage was more than paid."

We have in hand a printed copy of the annual report of Rev. V. C. Curtis, one of the Field Secretaries of the North Mississippi Conference. It shows that he has traveled 12,000 miles by rail and 650 by private conveyance. He has visited 127 churches in 103 pastoral charges. Of these charges, 23 are stations and 80 are circuits. Sixty-five institutes have been conducted, 336 persons have been enlisted in the Teachers' Study Circle, and 2400 pieces of mail, but not including circulars, have been sent out. These figures eloquently attest that Brother Curtis has not eaten any idle bread, nor allowed any grass to grow under his feet.

Rev. A. I. Townsley, of Rayville, La., writes: "Our Sunday school is supporting the Rev. Mr. Li Chi Mei of Huchow, China, this year. His salary has already been raised and forwarded to Dr. Pinson. This is acting as a great stimulus to our school. Last Sunday was 'Installation Day' for the Rayville officials. The 1914 Discipline makes the installation service an annual one. I like it. It can be made helpful and spiritual by a little preparation." Brother Townsley kindly sent us a program of the exercises on this interesting occasion, which we consider excellent in every respect. It is contrary to the rules of our office to print programs, but were it not for the great pressure for space that is now upon us, we should be tempted to reproduce this one as a kind of suggestion to the brethren.

Mr. Andrew H. Gay, a prominent citizen of Plaquemine, La., and a widely known Methodist, died at the Hotel Dieu early last Monday morning, Nov. 30, surrounded by several members of his family. Of the deceased, Dr. J. T. Sawyer, a long-time friend, in a note to the Advocate, says: "In the passage of Andrew H. Gay to his heavenly home, there went from our Church one of her staunchest members. I remember him as a brother and true friend, with whom I often stayed when in Plaquemine, and was always treated with the utmost hospitality by him and his excellent wife. He will be greatly missed by his many friends throughout this State and by the membership of the Church at Plaquemine. He was a Christian gentleman of the highest type." Mr. Gay's body was carried to St. Louis for interment.

Rev. H. M. Young, after serving the Coahoma (Miss.) charge for four years, writes: "With two new rooms recently added to our parsonage in Coahoma and both the church and parsonage painted, with the sticky varnish removed and a new hard varnish put on our pews at Lyon, and with a noble little band at Bobo, we are leaving a good work, and the best of all is that God has been, and still is, with us." On November 22 the officials of the Coahoma Church—Brothers R. L. Ralston, E. M. Fant, R. J. Howard, J. M. Wheeler, and Dr. C. L. Montroy—adopted the following resolutions and had them read to the public congregation: "Resolved, 1. That we appreciate and commend the work that Brother Young has done among us, and feel that our church has had a healthy growth during his pastorate, his helpfulness having been felt in all departments of the work. 2. We desire to assure him of our continued esteem, affection, and interest, and we hereby express the hope that he and his good wife may continue to be blessed with health, strength, and usefulness; and every good wish is extended to them for the future."

A CORRECTION.

Last week, as a result of taking out the wrong lines in type to make a slight correction, after the page proofs had been read, one of the paragraphs of Rev. T. H. Lipscomb's article, "Methodism in Starkville," was hopelessly muddled. It should have read as follows: "Once before, in 1888, during the pastorate of Rev. Thomas Cameron, now an aged veteran living at New Albany, the Annual Conference convened in Starkville, Bishop Charles B. Galloway presiding. Delightful memories of that occasion still linger, and the approaching session, Dec. 2-7, at which Bishop R. G. Waterhouse will preside, is looked forward to by the entire community with anticipations of much pleasure." We regret this occurrence.

Brother J. W. LEGGETT, the father of one of our beloved presiding elders, Rev. J. T. Leggett, left us yesterday morning and went home to God. Brother Leggett was born Jan. 15, 1842, and died early Tuesday morning, Nov. 24, aged 72 years 10 months and 3 days. Brother Leggett was converted while quite young and joined the M. E. Church, South, and was a true and loyal member of the same until the day of his death. It has been said by many of his friends that he was never absent from his church unless providentially kept away. He served his church for a long time as a steward and class leader, and was one of that type who believe in class meetings and he delighted in holding them. He leaves a wife, several children, and a host of friends to mourn their loss. A good man is gone. May God abundantly bless the wife and children that are left behind. We bow in humble submission to the will of Him who doeth all things well, and who governs his children with a hand of love, righteousness, and mercy! We mourn but not as those who have no hope, for we expect to meet him again.

J. H. FOREMAN, P. C.

Miss SARAH T. GIBSON passed from this life on Oct. 22, 1914, her death resulting from injuries received in an automobile accident. She was born in Green County, Ala., on Feb. 27, 1854, moving with her parents to Scott County, Miss., in 1871, and uniting with the M. E. Church, South, at Old Mutual Union Church, where she remained a faithful and true member till her death. Miss Gibson was one of the truest and best women we have ever known. She was unpretentious and unassuming. As a Christian she served God humbly, but with a courage born of an absolute trust in the sacrifice of the Son of God. The writer and his family had been closely associated with her for a number of years and loved her for her unfailing goodness, and the loving comfort and help rendered by her in times of sickness and trouble. The last tribute of love and respect was paid to her in the home of her nephew, Mr. Taylor Hurst, which had been her home, and from which place the body was taken to the Morton Cemetery and there interred in the presence of many friends and loved ones. We shall meet her again some glad day on the golden shores of eternity.

C. C. GRIFFIN.

Mrs. FRANCES E. BYRD (nee Barrier) was called home on Sunday morning, Oct. 18, 1914. She was born Jan. 1, 1857; and was married at the age of seventeen to Mr. Weldon Byrd. To this happy couple were born ten children, five of whom are living—three sons and two daughters. Many relatives and friends are left to mourn her going, but they do not mourn as those who have no hope. She was always religious and an earnest student of the Bible and mastered much of the Scripture. She firmly believed that the Bible was the instrumental cause of salvation and therefore "was not ashamed of the Gospel of Christ." She professed religion early in life and joined the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, and was a consistent member until death. She was a true friend to the New Orleans Christian Advocate. She gave her services to the sick and needy and looked after their temporal needs. Often she left home for weeks at a time to nurse the sick and carried with her such things as they needed. Truly, "she hath done what she could." She had an abiding faith in "godliness being profitable unto all things having promise of the life that now is and that which is to come." The writer conducted the funeral service at Dover Church in Yazoo County, and we laid her body to rest in the Dover Cemetery by the side of her husband, to await the resurrection morn.

J. W. PRICE.

IN MEMORIAM.

Sweet little Frances, the one month-old babe of Rev. and Mrs. O. P. Armour, of Macon, Miss., was translated from earth to heaven on Saturday morning, Oct. 24, 1914. She was here but a little while, and yet long enough to twine herself about the hearts of the smitten household. So in her departure the family circle was not only broken; but the heart of each was saddened. And yet while sad, because she is no more with them, they rejoice that she is with Him who said, "Suffer little children to come unto me and forbid them not, for of such is the kingdom of heaven." They cannot bring her back to them, but they can go to her. We sympathize with them in their sorrow, and rejoice with them in their hope and consolation.

"Safe in the arms of Jesus
Safe on His gentle breast
Safe from the world's temptations,
Sweetly her soul shall rest."

Macon, Miss.

J. E. JONES.

MRS. MARTHA EMMA RATLIFF.

In the early morning of Nov. 7 the spirit of this noble Christian woman took its flight from a world of sorrow and suffering to its home in the land of the blest. Sister Ratliff was the daughter of William Barnes and Mary Walton. She was born in Hinds County, Mississippi, on Oct. 2, 1838. She was married to J. W. Ratliff on Feb. 5, 1857, and for more than fifty years, hand in hand, they made the pilgrimage of life together. About six years ago her husband went on before, and was awaiting her coming on the other side.

Brother and sister Ratliff joined the Methodist Church early in life and were always loyal, faithful, and true. To them seven children were born, only two of whom survive—Brother J. W. Ratliff, the superintendent of our Sunday school at Edwards, and Mrs. J. L. Redfield.

Sister Ratliff was one of the old type of noble Southern women, and commanded not only the respect, but the love and admiration of all who knew her. The last conversation I had with her, just four days before her death, was about the Church she loved so well.

She attended the prayer service of the Woman's Missionary Society on Thursday afternoon; on Friday she seemed to be in her usual health, ate supper with the family at night, and about 2:30 o'clock the following morning passed away in perfect peace. She will be greatly missed in the home, in the Church and in the community. But we know where she has gone, and doubtless the "well done good and faithful servant" was her welcome in that city, whose builder and maker is God.

Tidings From the Field

Pineville, La.

I think it will be nothing but justice for me to write you a short letter telling you and the readers of the work that has been done on the Pineville and Tioga charge this year. In the first place, I feel that we have done very little when we think of the many blessings the Lord has bestowed on us. All of the churches on the work are in a better condition than they were when I took charge. We have added two appointments to the charge that had been left off and they are doing good work. The charge will pay more for the support of the preacher than it has in fifteen years. It has taken a great deal of hard labor to accomplish anything, but thanks be to God for giving us strength to carry on his work. The greater part of the membership of the churches say they want me to come back for another year, but it seems to me that we have other men in the Conference that are better prepared for this work than I am. However, if the Conference sees fit to send me back I will try to do my best. I want the Lord to have his way with me.—J. F. Dring.

Cockrum, Miss.

Dear Brother Meek: It is just one week now until Conference and it is certain that our preacher will have another home when it closes. Dear Brother Collins has served for a quadrennium. This makes us sad, for oh, how we love him for the great work he has done here. The helpful truths that he has taught us will keep alive sweet memories of him, and we feel that his work here has not been in vain; that the good seed he has sown will continue to spring up, and bring forth fruit in the days to come. There are few stronger men in the pulpit in our Conference than Brother Collins. As I have oftentimes said to Brother Dorman, when he would ask how we liked our preacher: "We have the best there is in the Conference." But now, as he must go to another field, we pray God's blessings on him and his work. We feel sure that his lot will be cast in a pleasant place, and fortunate indeed will be the people whom he may be sent to serve. We are very much interested as to who will succeed Brother Collins, but we feel sure Bishop Waterhouse and his cabinet will look well after our needs and give us a man that will make us a good shepherd, and with whom we as his flock can co-operate heartily. May the Lord bless the dear old Advocate and its readers!—(Mrs.) R. H. Elder.

Waynesboro, Miss.

We are progressing magnificently with the Lord's work within the bounds of this charge. Dr. I. L. Peebles, of Meridian, one of our Conference evangelists, was with us at Clara, Miss., on Nov. 14-17, and preached six stirring sermons on the essential doctrines of the Methodist Church. His messages from time to time were clear, forceful, and orthodox. The trend of thought depicted by this earnest evangel of truth divine was made so simple that the smallest school boy or girl could easily follow him as he dispensed the Word of God. And not a few of our people were greatly blessed, and better rooted in the doctrines and polity of our great Church. After having heard that man of God preach, we all felt like congratulating the "ego" over the fact that we were Methodists. I believe that Brother Peebles is the right man in the right place. Yea, I know that he is. For he has made the doctrines of the Methodist Church his constant study for lo! these many years, and I believe that it would be the wise thing for us pastors to have him with us more frequently than we do. Rev. C. W. Walley, a local preacher in the Methodist Protestant Church, and also the County Superintendent of Education of the County of Wayne, took it upon himself during our few days' meeting at Clara, to see what he could raise in the way of cash and groceries, etc., for the three pastors at Clara—the Baptist, the Methodist Protestant, and the Methodist Episcopal pastors. This great and good man of God was quite successful, and this pastor is very much indebted to him and the good people for the kindness shown to him. I have had the best year of my life as a pastor and servant of God, and, best of all, I feel like going on. Hallelujah!—Hilary Westbrook, Pastor.

Byhalla, Miss.

The fourth quarterly of the Byhalla Circuit, North Mississippi Conference, held Nov. 15-16, was an interesting occasion. The Conference, which was presided over by Rev. R. A. Tucker, our presiding elder, was well attended and the reports, in spite of the European war, were fine. The Byhalla Church has paid the preacher and presiding elder in full and the indications are that the Conference collections will be entirely met. The other two Churches, Emory and Fountainhead, are a little behind on the preachers salary, but the prospect is that they will pay in full at a later meeting to be held at Emory on Thanksgiving day, Nov. 26. These congregations are made up of people who love the Church, and the stewards are earnest workers in the vineyard of the Lord; so good reports are looked for at the later meeting of the board. The low price of cotton is having but little effect on the God-fearing people of this section who are doing their duty and trusting in the Almighty for future benefits. During the year the earnest labors of the pastor, Rev. L. A. McKeown, and the prayers of the people, especially those of the ladies, have been answered in the conviction and conversion of sinners.

On the circuit a total of 107 have joined the three churches; of this number the Byhalla Church received 94. The Sunday school, the Woman's Missionary Society, and the other enterprises of the Church were reported as being in a prosperous condition. On Sunday morning, Rev. L. A. McKeown preached to a full house, and at 7 p.m. Rev. R. A. Tucker, our presiding elder, preached; but the attendance was not as large as was expected, for the reason that a storm came up about 6:30 o'clock which kept many at home.

At 11 a.m. Monday the presiding elder delivered an instructive and entertaining discussion, using as a text 2 Timothy 4:7, 8. In a religious way, this has been an unusually prosperous year with us. Not only was the membership of the Methodist Church increased, but the hearts of the Presbyterians and Baptists were made glad by converts coming into the fold and joining their churches. We have many reasons to be thankful to the Lord for the blessings which we enjoy. One of these, and it is not the least, is that while Europe is in a gigantic war where hundreds of thousands are being killed and untold values of property being destroyed, our country is at peace with the world. ## Sunday School

LOUISIANA NOTES.

By W. W. Williams.

The school at Melville has just adopted the International course of Graded Lessons. Brother May reports the school in a flourishing condition. Two other schools have been organized on the Melville Circuit.

The writer will visit Pleasant Grove on the Pineville Circuit, in company with Pastor J. F. Dring and some other worker on Sunday, Nov. 29. The work of both the school and the Church will be discussed at some length. Pineville is contemplating the organization of one or more mission schools immediately after Christmas.

The "White Gifts for the King" service is to be used in the Christmas exercises by several schools in the Alexandria District.

The school at Glenmora is increasing rapidly in efficiency under the work of Prof. Lusk, Prof. Monroe, and others.

Several schools are proceeding with great care in selecting the most efficient, active members in the school to place on the new "Advisory Committee," and intend to make this Committee the most active part of the organization.

It is to be hoped that schools will order the new publication, "The Workers' Council" and use it judiciously in the meetings; and that they will use the "Missionary Messenger" once a month, having a specially selected member of the Missionary Committee in charge of the services on that day, using the Missionary Program.

Each school using the Graded Course of Lessons should have the new Magazine on the Graded Work for each officer and teacher. The articles in the Magazine have risen within the last year to a place second to none. It is to be regretted that some country schools do not use the Magazine at all.

A number of workers in the Alexandria District believe they could raise their pro rata share of the expenses from this district for a Field Secretary for the coming year by special and private subscription, provided a person is selected for the position who could make a success of it from the start. In case no action should be taken to this end, some have asked why it would not be feasible to have some one put on in this one district alone for part time at least. They at least expect to make an effort to organize the district early in the year 1915.

SUNDAY SCHOOL WORK.

After traveling over the Conference and working among our Sunday schools for more than two years, carefully studying their interests and seeing that we are not as completely organized for work as we should be, and that there is much latent power that should be utilized, I have the following plan to offer for the work beginning with the Conference year of 1915:

Let the presiding elders apportion the time of the Field Secretary to the various districts of the Conference, and then let him do the work in each district under the supervision and direction of the presiding elder. Let each district have organized in it a district Sunday school institute with the presiding elder as the ex-officio president and the lay member of the board in that district as vice-president, and holding this district institute at some time when most people can be reached, preferably on a fifth Sunday—beginning on Friday night and closing on Sunday night.

Now the feeders to this district institute should be an organization of the churches of each pastoral charge into a pastoral institute, and before holding the district institute let the Field Secretary visit each pastoral charge as directed by the presiding elder and hold there an institute for that charge, then after the district is worked in that way hold the district institute. In these institutes the Field Secretary should not do all the talking by any means. Let there be regularly elected officers of the pastoral institute and of the district institute.

The officers in the district institute should be a president, vice-president, secretary, treasurer, and a program committee. The first four named officers should constitute the executive committee of the institute, and this committee should elect a superintendent for each of the departments of the Sunday school work, viz.: Teacher-training, Wesley Bible Class, Home Department, Elementary Division, Secondary Division and Missionary. After one district has been worked in this way then go on to another.

I can see many advantages to be had from this plan, some of which I give below:

1. The Field Secretary would not be running from one side of the Conference to the other just touching here and there, in the same week or month; thus expenses would be greatly reduced.

2. The Sunday school workers on each pastoral charge and in each district would be brought together twice during the year and exchange ideas and methods of work. As it is now Sunday school superintendents in the same pastoral charge do not know what their neighbors are doing in the Sunday school field nor how they are doing it.

3. Different Sunday school workers could be put on programs thereby developing them and causing them to specialize on at least one subject.

4. Our workers could be located and developed, and there would exist a bond of sympathy between the workers on each charge which would broaden in the district institute.

5. Our Sunday schools would be more generally working toward the standard of efficiency as outlined by our Church; thus systematizing and unifying our efforts.

6. The finances of our work could and would be cared for in this plan. Let our Sunday schools send their delegates to this institute authorized to pledge their Sunday school for so much to carry on the work, and let the Wesley Bible Classes do the same. We would get much help from our Wesley Bible Classes, when as it is I only know one Bible Class in all our Conference that is helping to finance our work this year, and I must mention that class which is the Truth Seekers Class of the Forest Sunday school with Miss Carrie Pevey as teacher. They have pledged this year $15 for the work.

Now you see this plan on paper, but if the writer is the Sunday School Field Secretary for 1915, we think you will see the plan in operation in at least one district, and in all the districts if the presiding elders will help me do it, and I know that each one of them will be more than glad to help me do it. I have already talked the plan with one presiding elder and he is heartily in favor of it and wants the plan in his district next year.

I have only given here a brief outline of the plan, but all that read may understand that I am favoring a definite plan for the work. We are not organized as we should be. If any one has a better plan than this, please write through the paper to me, or write me a personal letter before Conference for I shall ask the board to agree on some definite plan for the work.

Think about it, pray about it, talk about it, and then let's work.

Yours for the cause,

R. A. MADDOX,
S. S. Field Sec'y Miss. Conf.

A NOTE FROM ZACHARY, LA.

Dear Dr. Meek: This scribe is not given to much writing, but will send some items from the Zachary charge. We held a meeting at Slaughter in August, which was truly a spiritual revival. There were fourteen received into the Church on profession of faith, and six by certificate. The church was much revived, and her spiritual life greatly deepened. In September we held a meeting in Etbel, which did much good. The Church was revived, and four were received on profession of faith. Rev. J. B. Williams was with me at Slaughter, and Rev. J. B. Fulton at Etbel. These brethren preached the gospel plainly, clearly, and with evangelical fervor. They fearlessly, but tenderly, rebuked sin, and held up to the sinner a full and free salvation by repentance toward God, and faith in the Lord Jesus Christ. Our people were much blessed by their ministry.

Our Church in Zachary was burned on March 8, and it has taxed the energy and liberality of our people to rebuild, but the people of the community, regardless of denomination, generously helped us. The kindly, helpful spirit of the people has touched us deeply, and convinced us that people generally appreciate the Church and her work and will show their faith in the Church and what she stands for, when her members are consistent and loyal to their king.

While our Church was burning the Rev. Mr. Wilkinson, of the Presbyterian congregation, came to me and said, "Worship with us," which we did for six months, during which time we held a union meeting. Their cordiality and constant courtesy made us feel with the Psalmist: "Behold how good and how pleasant it is for brethren to dwell together in unity."

We now have a pretty chapel with two class rooms, and it is almost paid for. I cannot say enough in commendation of those whose untiring efforts enabled us to rebuild our church. We are among a kind people, who love their Church, who are zealous for its success, and who appreciate their pastor. They provide a splendid home for him and his family, and honor him for his work. May great grace rest upon them!

Now, Mr. Editor, I could say much more, but like Brother Lee, of Lake Providence, the nearness of Conference warns me not to tell all the good things. I am afraid some brother might want my place. I have been here three years, and believe I can finish my time out.

Last, but not least, let me say we have a wide-awake presiding elder. The people like him, and we want him back next year.

Your Brother in Christ,

J. D. HARPER.

A NOTE FROM BROTHER WALKER.

Mr. Editor: After reading carefully two articles which appeared in the Christian Advocate of October 22—"The Peace of God" and "Concerning Bonds"—I decided to write you briefly concerning things hereabout. I have been at the Asylum at this place for about two months, having come here because of a nervous break-down to rest awhile and to take treatment at the hands of Dr. Pinson.

This is a great institution and is crowded with patients who are variously afflicted. I find that some of them like to get hold of a paper to read and I have distributed among them several copies of my Advocate and of the Pentecostal Herald.

There is a nice Chapel here which is well arranged for religious services on the Sabbath. Very fortunately the Protestants are keeping up regular appointments which is a great blessing to the congregations that attend. These congregations are made up of the same patients and the officials and employees of the institution and their families. They have a splendid choir consisting of about twenty good singers, about half of them being young men and about half of them ladies. There are both an organ and a piano in the chapel, which is well provided with comfortable chairs and song books. We also have some congregational singing during the services and I never saw better behavior and attention anywhere.

Brother Tim, a Presbyterian minister, preaches for us on the evening of the first Sunday; Brother Carruth, a Baptist divine, is with us on the night of the second Sunday, and Brother P. H. Fontaine, a Methodist minister, conducts the service on the third Sunday night. I feel that we ought to be grateful to these brethren for thus arranging their labors, as it enables us to have preaching three Sabbaths in each month. They are all fine Christian gentlemen and they certainly do preach the plain and practical side of the Christian life in a way to help their bearers.

Last Sunday Brother Fontaine selected as his theme "The Life and Character of Job," and he handled the subject in a very interesting and impressive manner. I believe that seed were sown by him that will bring forth fruit in the future.

Dr. Pinson, Superintendent of this institution, deserves much credit for his kindness to the Protestant worshippers here, as well as to those of his own faith.

If there is anyone who has any religious literature, either papers or books, to give away, if they will send it to me I will be delighted to distribute it among those here who, I think, would be helped by it.

Fraternally,

JAMES H. WALKER.

Jackson, La., Oct. 24, 1914.

OUR MERCIFUL GOD.

"Blessed are the merciful." The unmerciful man excludes from his own soul thereby the mercy of God. It is not that God will not have mercy, but it is true that man cannot receive mercy unless he himself be merciful.

"The mercy I to others show,
That mercy show to me."

"The quality of mercy is not strained,
It droppeth as the gentle rain from heaven

Upon the place beneath. It is twice blessed:
It blesseth him that gives, and him that takes."

The forgiveness of others is the condition upon which God forgives us. The exercising of mercy toward others brings God's mercy to our own souls.

"Blessed are the pure in heart." I am glad that it does not read, "Blessed are the great in intellect," or "Blessed are the rich in this world's goods," but "Blessed are the pure in heart." This brings the vision of God within the reach of all; for if all may not be rich or great, all can be pure.—Rev. Robert Forbes, D.D.

"RHEUMATISM"

Cured to stay Cured

By one who had it.

My Dear Reader:—1911—
I am an old lady nearly 90 years old. My life's work among the sick is nearing its end. At the age of 50 I was terribly afflicted with rheumatism; I suffered untold agony for nearly five years. I have been a hermit, nurse and student of roots and herbs for nearly 70 years. I diagnosed, and formulated, a cure that cured me, and it never returned. I have treated nearly 7500 rheumatic sufferers, some of the most pitiful cases imaginable; I effected cures in practically every case. I want you to read my treatise on the "cause and cure" of rheumatism. "Don't suffer!" It is easy to get well. My treatise is FREE; send for it to-day; you will then know what to do, and how to do it.

Sincerely yours,

LYDIA E. SMALL.

CONCERNING STATISTICAL REPORTS.

To Pastors of the Mississippi Conference:

The statistical blanks will be mailed in due time to all pastors, with printed envelopes, for making reports to the Annual Conference. By observing the suggestions made by the auditors and resolutions of the Conference, you will greatly facilitate this work for the statistical secretaries and the auditing committee.

W. T. GRIFFIN,
For Committee.

CONCERNING RAILROAD CERTIFICATES.

The members and delegates of the Mississippi Conference, which is to meet at Columbia on Dec. 9, will secure the usual certificates when they purchase their tickets showing that they have paid full fare going. These certificates will give you return fare for one-third plus 25 cents. All roads in the State will give this rate except the N. O. M. and C. I wrote twice to the proper person, sending a stamp for reply, but my letter was never answered. Those who travel over this road will do well to get certificates. I will sign them for you, and perhaps you can get the reduction in return. Don't fail to get certificates when you purchase full fare tickets.

W. M. SULLIVAN.

THANKSGIVING CARS FOR THE LOUISIANA METHODIST ORPHANAGE.

At the suggestion of that enterprising, consecrated Christian woman, Miss Mollie Higginbotham, of Mer Rouge, La., a Thanksgiving car was proposed for the Louisiana Methodist Orphanage. The matter was taken up with the railroad authorities and free transportation was promptly arranged. Under the direction of Mr. Lawson G. Higginbotham, W. M. Hunt, and L. R. Herron, the car was run from Bonita to Monroe over the Iron Mountain Railway. From the start the donations were large and generous. The car made stops at Bonita, Jones, Gallion, Mer Rouge and Collinston. At Mer Rouge four large wagon loads of produce from Oak Ridge, delivered by Mr. Joe Sam Rolfe, were loaded on an extra car. At Collinston quite a donation was received from Bastrop. Then each of these communities made most liberal donations, and long before the car had finished with the various stops proposed it was seen that one car was not sufficient, and it became necessary to add a second car. Donations were also received from Monroe and West Monroe.

The gifts consisted of almost everything in the way of produce, clothing and bedding. The contributions included three barrels of granulated sugar, eight barrels of flour, several barrels of meal and grits, over 200 gallons of syrup, over 100 bushels of corn, nearly 100 bales of hay, hogs, chickens, canned goods, lard, candles and fruits. It would be hard to enumerate all that was given, and every article was useful and helpful. One bale of cotton was given by Mr. Sam McDuffie of Oak Ridge, which will be sold for 10 cents per pound. The cars could have easily been valued at nearly or quite $1000 in value.

This remarkable response to this kindly enterprise is most gratefully appreciated by the management and inmates of the Orphanage, and we cannot begin to express our gratitude to all those who have contributed to its splendid success. The railroad people, from the high officials who granted free transportation of the cars to the brakemen on the trains and other employees who showed every possible courtesy to the people at all the stations, to the newspapers which published notices and rendered their valued help, to all these, and to all others who in these times of great stringency have in any way helped us, we are sincerely grateful, and we trust that God in his providence will abundantly bless them each and all.

Sincerely,
ROBT. W. VAUGHAN,
Supt. La. Methodist Orphanage.

SUNDAY CONVERTS IN PHILADELPHIA.

On the last Sunday in October nearly 1000 of the converts of the William A. Sunday meetings in Scranton and Wilkes Barre moved en masse on Philadelphia and conducted services in nearly four hundred of the leading churches of that city, both morning and evening. "In simple language," says the Public Ledger, "these men, many of whom scorned to enter a church six months ago give remarkable testimony to that change that took place in their lives when they accepted the invitation to 'get right with God.' They told of their redemption from the drink habit and other vices, of reunited families, of men who for twenty years reviled the Church, suddenly transformed into Christian evangelists, and of card-playing clubs and 'booze joints' changed into prayer meetings and Bible classes." Among this thousand Christian evangelists were bankers, policemen, firemen, letter carriers, railroad employees, carpenters, blacksmiths, office clerks, doctors, lawyers, merchants, ex-bartenders, and representatives of many other occupations. Their visit was in preparation for the Sunday meetings to be held in Philadelphia this winter. —Northwestern Christian Advocate.

GIVEN TO CHRIST.

It is related of General Gordon, affectionately known as "Chinese Gordon," that when the English government sought to reward him for his magnificent service in China, he declined all money and titles, but accepted a gold medal on which his name and a record of his thirty-three engagements were inscribed. After his death the medal could not be found. Finally it was learned that he had sent it to Manchester during a famine, with a request that it be melted and used to buy bread for the famishing poor. In his diary on that day were found written these words: "The last and only thing I had in this world that I valued I have given over to the Lord Jesus Christ." The love of Christ which passeth knowledge constrained him to give up his most valued possession for the relief of others. Yet such supreme sacrifice seems small in comparison with the great sacrifice of our gracious Lord. —Pittsburgh Christian Advocate.

EFFECTS OF WAR IN OUR MISSION FIELDS.

China.

Shanghai. — "Everything here is tense with excitement over the European crisis. This is one of the most cosmopolitan cities in the world, so we feel it on every hand. All Russians, Austrians, Germans, and French have been ordered out for service. Many of the manufacturing interests are owned by foreign capital, so thousands of coolies are thrown out of employment on account of the stoppage of shipping and the closing of all silk mills and other manufacturing places. This affects thousands of our women."

Soochow. — "Outside of Shanghai and the Shantung province, China is comparatively quiet. There is no danger whatever except from the displaced people who may seek to give the central government trouble. Schools are opening well."

Korea.

"So far we have felt very little effect from the European war. Nevertheless, we are distressed over the accounts of the terrible conflict and are praying for its end."

Cuba.

"Prices of food have gone up until it fairly gives us nightmare. We are almost afraid to look at the papers, yet this country probably is disturbed much less than almost any of the other mission fields."

Brazil.

"The European war has been felt most seriously in Brazil. The government, which is badly in debt, had been promised a large loan from France; when this loan was cut off on account of war, the whole country was in a state of panic. This war is turning Brazil upside down. It is the worst crisis ever known. Within two or three days food increased from 20 to 100 per cent in price. For a time all banks were closed. After a few of them opened, only 10 per cent of deposits could be withdrawn. Factories, firms, and workshops are closed. Thousands of people are without work, and thousands more are working on half time or less."

Mexico.

"Mexico is still too unsettled to make the reorganization of our work there possible. The Spanish Department is being carried on by native teachers in three places—Saltillo, Chihuahua, and San Luis Potosi. Missionary leaders feel deep concern on account of the decrees recently issued by the governors of several States forbidding religious instruction in all schools. These were unquestionably issued against the Roman Church. Let us be in prayer that the leaders of the new government may not enact laws that will hinder Christian education."

ATTENTION!

Auxiliaries, remember that the last day of December closes your accounts for the year 1914. Be sure to get your remittances to your Conference Treasurer not later than January 5. She must have it at this time or her report will be sent without it. Mrs. Ross, at headquarters in Nashville, will close her book January 20, and no money received after that date can get into this year's records.

CONFERENCE TREASURERS, LISTEN!

The Council meeting will be held earlier this year than ever before. The Council Treasurer must have all the money banked by January 20, as she will be rushed to get the fourth quarter's report and the annual report ready for the printer in time for this meeting. Send your money in time to allow for delay in mails.

SOME COMPARISONS.

Mrs. Ross's report for the third quarter of 1914 shows a total collection as follows:

From Conference Societies. $28,114.96
From other sources..... 7,665.17

Total ..... $35,780.13

It is difficult to compare these figures with those of the previous year because five Conferences failed to remit, and two Conferences reported this quarter for two quarters. But there is an increase of $1174.89 over the report of the third quarter of 1913. These increases were:

From Conference Societies.. $ 750.57
From other sources..... 424.32

Total ..... $1174.89

The growth of the third quarter of 1913 was more than six thousand dollars over that of the previous year. Let every individual make an earnest effort to pay up in full this month.

FROM TYLERTOWN, MISS.

Beginning on Monday afternoon November 8, the Woman's Auxiliary observed the "Week of Prayer" with a good attendance, concluding Sunday evening with an open service participated in by the Juniors and advanced members of the Young People's Auxiliary. A well prepared and highly interesting program was rendered. The offering amounted to a neat sum, which is much appreciated. We have some very earnest workers in our auxiliaries, and with our children and young people so enthusiastic in their new work, we feel that great things can and will be accomplished. Mrs. F. T. RAND,

Press Supt.

THE MENACE OF MORMONISM.

This was the topic of the program for the August auxiliary meeting outlined by the program committee at the home base, Nashville. Among the many good articles sent out for the preparation of the program was a leaflet giving some statistics as to the growth of the Mormon Church and the indifference with which other Churches regard it. The leaflet asked what was being done by the Nation or the States towards wiping out this evil; the impression made on the Young Woman's Auxiliary, Winona, by the whole program was so profound that the Recording Secretary was instructed to write to the Secretary of State for information as to Mississippi's attitude towards this menace. The reply came back promptly that there never had been any legislation against it, and, as far as the Secretary knew, any agitation, and he kindly gave some ideas as to methods of procedure in the event the matter was taken up by our women. Since then, we have been informed that Mrs. Walter Trotter and Miss Dunstan have written the Corresponding Secretary and Social Service Superintendent of the Mississippi Conference and to the Chairman of the Central Committee of the Women's organizations asking their assistance in getting a resolution passed by our Legislature, calling upon Congress to submit an anti-polygamy amendment to the Constitution of the United States, placing polygamy under Federal rather than under State jurisdiction. Twenty-nine States have already taken this step, but it is necessary for nine more to do so before the Constitution can be amended. Some literature has been received from the National Reform Association which has started the nationwide crusade, but as yet the movement in our own Conference has not been fairly launched. The women who studied the text book, "Mormonism, the Islam of America," should not need any persuasion to join in this campaign. Let us help the movement by talking of this menace and the means of destroying it until every member of our next legislature will be impressed with the importance of immediate action, and will take the necessary steps to place our State in line with the goodly number that are determined to stamp out the evil before it destroys us.—North Mississippi Bulletin.

TETTERINE CURES PILES.

Every sufferer from Piles ought to read these words from H. S. Hood, Bel-Aire, Mich.: "For 16 years I had been a sufferer from itching piles. I got a box of Tetterine and less than half the box made a complete cure." Tetterine gives instant relief in all skin diseases such as Eczema, Tetter, Ringworm, Ground Itch, etc., and constitutes a permanent remedy. 50c at druggists or by mail from Shuptrine Co., Savannah, Ga.

NO LINES TO BE DRAWN.

You can not draw any line whatever when you are dealing with the religious life. There are no provinces outside of it. It covers the equator and the poles, and thrusts its root into the core of the world of personality. If it does not go through and through a man, it does not go into him at all. That is the nature of religion—it is as thorough-going, as permeating, as life itself. It pulses into and suffuses the least things—as the life-blood warms the very fingertips—and says: "These are mine; these are sacred things." Make them so. Nothing is too small or too remote to have a vital religious significance. If we really and truly believe that, we will make an end of drawing those futile lines between what we call "secular" and "religious," commonplace and sacred. There are no such distinctions in the new life which the Lord Jesus Christ brought into the world. Like his own garment, that robe of life is still one piece, seamless, inseparable; and every thread that enters it runs straight through warp or woof, and intertwines with every other thread to form the entire fabric of character.—James Buckham.

MEDICATED SMOKE DRIVES OUT CATARRH

A Simple, Pleasant, Reliable Way, and
It Costs Nothing to Try.

Dr. Blosser, who has devoted forty years to the treatment of Catarrh, is the originator of a certain combination of medical herbs, flowers and berries to be smoked in a pipe or ready prepared cigarette. The smoke-vapor reaches all the air passages of the head, nose and throat. As the disease is carried into these passages with the air you breathe, so the antiseptic, healing vapor of this Remedy is carried with the breath directly to the affected parts.

This simple, practical method applies the medicine where sprays, douches, ointments, etc., cannot possibly go. Its effect is soothing and healing, and is entirely harmless, containing no tobacco or habit forming drugs. It is pleasant to use, and not sickening to those who have never smoked. No matter how severe or long standing your case may be, we want to show you what our Remedy will do.

To prove the beneficial, pleasant effect, The Blosser Company, 450 Walton St., Atlanta, Ga., will mail absolutely free to any sufferer, a sample that will verify their claims by actual test. This free package contains a pipe, some of the Remedy for smoking and also some of our medical cigarettes. If you wish to continue the treatment, it will cost only one dollar for a month's supply for the pipe, or a box containing one hundred cigarettes. We pay postage.

If you are a sufferer from Catarrh, Asthma, Catarrhal Deafness, or if subject to frequent colds, send your name and address at once by postal card or letter for the free package, and a copy of our illustrated booklet.

THE FOUR-YEAR OLDS.

Dear Doctor: It seems that the time has come for the entry of the Four-year Olds, and being of that class I suppose its my time to be trotted out. It seems to me but yesterday, nor scarce so long ago, since the harness was fitted for this track, and yet it's a fact that the book-makers have kept in view; and after the third grooming this colt is coming rapidly towards the goal—two more weeks and he'll go under the line for the fourth heat. During these rounds he has climbed many hills, and gone round many squares answering to the crack of the pastoral whip; strained often the pulling muscles tugging at the load behind the shafts; but this has not been without its compensation; for the roadster has been well groomed and received now and then the stroke of appreciation upon the cheek. What will be the verdict of the judges as to the time made, points scored, and dis-counting breaks, remains for the book-makers at Columbia to say.

One thing: This roadster has an approving conscience of having made as honest an effort to go under the line at the end of each heat with as much approval as upon any other race course it has been his good fortune to have been entered. As elsewhere, he has received good food and comfortable housing—only that and nothing more—is ready now to fly this track and ship away to another course, for entry as a four-year roadster. To others of the four-year class I would say, come and hear the carpenter putting down the matting, the plumber putting in the new stove and conveniences in the culinary department, and watch the painter as he puts the beautiful Confederate dress on the outside. On the inside are telephone, electric lights, water works. Violets, chrysanthemums, gladioli, salvia, roses and honeysuckle, in their season, will make glad the heart of the mistress of the parsonage, and the two trees bearing pecans will give occupation and pleasure to the younger members of the fortunate comers.

Port Gibson, or Gibson's Port, as it was originally called, has been upon the map for more than a hundred years, and for seventy-five of these it has supported a college of high grade for young women (and President O'Neil has taxed its capacity this session), which has given an atmosphere of refinement and intelligence to the community seen and felt by all. Our Presbyterian friends also have here an academy of high grade for boys, and no feature of the community life has been so pleasing and inspiring to this pastor, as the presence of these young people, on the streets and in the congregations upon the Sabbath; and besides this their chapels have been open to us, and a weekly visit has paved the way for a bond of sympathy and friendship, which we trust will last with the years. Almost without exception, the first half-hour on Fridays has been given to us at the City High School these four years, and the hearty greetings received upon the streets tell how these attentions have been accepted. Were it possible, I would grow eloquent upon the pleasures and possibilities of the work here in these institutions, and if I should make any distinction in my regrets in having to give this field into the care of another, it would be in having to sever my connection with these young people. Despite a constant exodus from this section, which has carried away nearly one hundred members in the four years, we will break about even in church membership, having added 72 during the quadrennium. An occasional familiar face tells of the return of some who, having tried it elsewhere, are coming again to the haunts and associations of other days. With books ready for the railroad; after a little hasty packing after the hook-makers have been heard from, we will be off to other scenes and newer friends. T. B. HOLLOMAN.

FAMILY MEDICAL GUIDE GIVEN FREE TO SUBSCRIBERS.

Prominent physicians have estimated that 68 per cent of the cases of sickness in America could be prevented if there was a more widespread knowledge of practical medicine.

The majority of us, up-to-date in everything else, obey the same rules of health that were the fruits of popular superstition in those days when practically nothing was known about preventive medicine.

In the hope that people will begin to see how important it is that they learn a little more about the ailments of the body, a practical medical guide is offered to all the readers of the New Orleans Christian Advocate Free of Cost.

The name of the work is Dr. Miles' Family Medical Guide. It is a work that has been very carefully compiled. It has been written in very plain language, omitting, when not absolutely necessary, all technical words and phrases.

It tells how to recognize various ailments. It tells what to do before the doctor arrives, or if he does not arrive at all. It tells what to do and what not to do in case of accident. It gives a few practical laws of health. It tells of how to take care of the sick room, of what to eat, of how to care for infants and other important details.

Send your name and address to

OUR ASSOCIATIONS.

A watchmaker said that a gentleman gave him an exquisite watch to regulate. It was as perfect a piece of work as was ever made. The watchmaker took it apart and put it together again twenty times, and could not find any defect, yet the watch did not keep good time. At length it struck him that the balance-wheel might have been near a magnet, and he applied a needle to it; he found his suspicions true, for there was all the mischief. The steel works in the other parts of the watch were in perpetual friction, yet with a new wheel the watch kept perfect time. If the soundest mind be magnetized by vicious associations, it must act irregularly.—Count Tolstoy.

A HELPFUL SERMON.

Dear Advocate: Let me say a few words relative to Brother Selby's sermon on the Sunday of our fourth quarterly conference at Topisaw. He used as a text, Isaiah 26:3.

There are two special reasons why the text itself struck me with considerable force: (1) It was the text used at the funeral of our first baby; (2) it has been my special passage of Scripture amid the testings along the way, and, of course, when Brother Selby announced it as his text on the above mentioned occasion, I naturally expected something specially for me, and I was not disappointed. Time and space would forbid me going into the details as to the sermon, even if I could; for, as he discussed this perfect peace that is the privilege of every true Christian, the tears of joy coursed down my cheeks and peace and glory so flooded my soul that I lost all the connections of the sermon and could only see and feel deep down in my soul the real, peaceful security of God's true children. Others present were free to express themselves as being greatly helped by the sermon; but I speak mainly for myself. It was a sermon that just fit my experience and it will be the means of making me appreciate more than ever before the true fatherly care that God has for his children, and it will also enable me in the future more fully to understand how I am to keep my mind stayed on the Lord. I want to thank God that while I write these lines that blessed peace is mine, and that the way grows more delightful, clearer and more joyful as the days go by; and some day I'll make the landing. Amen!

Yours in Christ,
J. A. WELLS.

LOUISIANA ANTI-SALOON LEAGUE

The annual convention of the Louisiana Anti-Saloon League was held in Shreveport, La., on Tuesday night, Nov. 10, 1914 at the First Baptist Church, the attendance being largely from North and Central Louisiana. Dr. E. O. Ware of Alexandria, president of the League presided, and Dr. C. P. Munday of Shreveport served as secretary.

The State Superintendent, Rev. A. W. Turner, reported to the convention that there had been much activity upon the part of the League in the State during the past year, and a marked increase in sentiment against the saloon in Louisiana; he stated that within the year one parish has been added to the dry territory, while none has been lost. He further said in the legislation secured at the recent session of the State Legislature the foundation has been laid for the enactment of an effective prohibition law by the next session of that body. Senator T. L. Dowling of DeSoto Parish, who with Representatives Shell of Moorehouse Parish and Locke of Calcasieu Parish, were the leaders of the Anti-Saloon forces at the recent session of the Legislature, addressed the convention. Senator Dowling reviewed the course of these bills in the Legislature and showed how the liquor forces of the wet cities of the State had been able, by the assistance of the legislators from "dry" territory, to prevent the "dry" part of the State from securing legislation affecting only violators of the prohibition law in its territory. These misrepresentatives from "dry territory" were severely scored by Senator Dowling, who also showed how the legislation offered by the Anti-Saloon league was amended and crippled at the open dictation of the liquor interests, committee action being even held up in one case until the bill could be sent to the attorney of the liquor interests at Monroe for revision.

The report of the Treasurer showed what had been collected and disbursed in the interest of the League work during the last eighteen months. The funds raised and expended amounted to $7383.59. There is a present deficit on Superintendent Turner's salary of $800.

The recent Statewide prohibition victories in Virginia, Washington, Oregon, Colorado and Arizona, and the tremendous effect these triumphs will have upon the submission of the National Prohibition Amendment, and the further marked gains in the number of congressmen favorable to this submission in the late congressional elections, was reported to the convention.

Following the recent visit of Dr. P. A. Baker, National Superintendent of the Anti-Saloon League of America, announcement was made of the immediate establishment of "The Home and State," at Dallas, Texas, as the official organ of the Anti-Saloon League in the Southwestern States, and also a large branch printing plant of the National League at Dallas. The convention instructed the Headquarters' Committee to make arrangements by which "The Home and State" will become the official organ of the State League, and a Louisiana edition given wide distribution over the State.

The convention further instructed that the committee accept the proposal of the National League to send the "Flying Squadron," composed of some of the League's best speakers, including Malcolm R. Patterson, Jno. G. Wooley, R. P. Hobson and others for a Statewide tour of Louisiana early in 1915, thus inaugurating a campaign in Louisiana for the election of a Legislature that will be responsive to the will of the people on the regulation of the liquor traffic, and which will not bow to the dictation of the liquor interests of the wet territory of the State. The convention also passed a resolution, renewing its challenge to the Police Juries of the Parishes and the Ouachita Parishes to submit the question of license or no license for the sale of liquor to the voters who elected them to office.

The newly elected officers are as follows:

President, E. O. Ware; Secretary-Treasurer, Dr. C. P. Munday; Vice Presidents, L. Herman of New Orleans, Dr. J. C. Barr of New Orleans, Hon. Crow Girard of Lafayette, W. W. Wright of Minden, T. H. McGregor of Rayville, J. R. Abels of Pontchatoula, P. J. Chapluis of Crowley, E. J. Carstens of New Iberia.

Headquarters' Committee: Dr. E. O. Ware, Claude L. Jones, J. I. Scales, W. P. Hall, R. W. Wynn, T. L. Dowling, Dr. C. P. Munday, C. W. Hardy, D. P. Eubanks, Dr. J. C. Barr, Dr. S. H. Werlein, Dr. L. D. Posey, W. W. Wright, Dr. W. H. Brengle, F. M. Ragsdale.

THE DUTY OF BEING INTERESTING.

I wonder sometimes, whether we preachers realize that it is our business to keep the congregation interested. If any member of the congregation were reading a book, and found it dull and unable to hold his attention, he would close it. Why should we expect audiences to go on listening with patience when the sermon has failed to grip them, or when the preacher has exhausted their faculty of giving attention? We must not be too ready to throw on the congregation all the responsibility for the impatience, and certainly impatience there is, at the length of sermons. The fault may be in ourselves, and we should ask ourselves what there is in ourselves and our preaching that makes the congregation get restless and perhaps irritable at the end of twenty-five minutes or half-an-hour. Is there something wanting in the matter or the manner of our preaching? Are we ourselves intensely interested in the sermon? I have heard sermons preached in such a cold-blooded, half-hearted way as made me feel the preacher himself was preaching because he had got to, rather than because he had a living message to deliver and was enjoying the delivery of the message. If the preacher himself enjoys the sermon, that is a long step towards securing the enjoyment of the congregation. I am afraid this tells against the preaching of old sermons. There are men who can preach their old sermons with ever-fresh zest, and they sound like new ones. There are others whose old sermons have failed to revive the creative feeling in the preacher, and he preaches them as if they were entirely outside his present experience. Such sermons will seem long though they may keep well within the half-hour limit. I have listened to sermons of an hour and a quarter by men like the late Dr. Dale and Dr. Fairbairn, and by Dr. W. L. Watkinson. I have listened to Dr. Campbell Morgan preaching for fifty minutes. I venture to say that nobody who heard them complained of the length.—Methodist Times.

CENTENARY COLLEGE.

Perhaps the most serious matter facing the Louisiana Conference now in session at Shreveport is the solving of the financial difficulties of Centenary College. In 1908, a year after the institution had been running at its present location at Shreveport, its resources were counted at $60,000 in property at Shreveport, $8500 endowment, $25,000 in property at Jackson, with an indebtedness on the Shreveport property of $7500. Besides this the people of Shreveport had taxed themselves voluntarily to the amount of $3000 per year for a period of ten years, beginning with 1907, for the maintenance of the college. Being located in the progressive city of Shreveport, where Methodism is proportionately stronger to the population than any other section of Louisiana, and being situated upon a valuable tract of land forty acres in extent with the new building erected at a cost of over $30,000, the prospect looked bright indeed.

But the fact has certainly dawned upon the Methodists of Louisiana that Centenary is not making the progress for which they had hoped. (1) The property at Jackson has never been realized upon, on account of formidable legal impediments and the expected $25,000 from that source has dwindled to practically nothing. (2) The $7500 debt has never been cleared away, since an indebtedness of $5000 hangs over the institution at present. (3) The endowment has not increased a dollar in the last six years. (4) The institution has not a sufficient income to pay running expenses from year to year and depends largely upon the $1600 that yearly comes from the Louisiana Conference and the $3000 from the people of Shreveport.

The menace to the institution lies in the fact that in two years after 1914 the voluntary tax of $3000 per year from the city of Shreveport will expire altogether. And the immediate trouble is that this $3000 income must go in the remaining years of its life to the paying of the indebtedness on the college and cannot be used for running expenses. Hence the embarrassment is a present one and cannot be deferred.

But Louisiana Methodism can never afford to lose Centenary. When the situation is not only known, but actually realized by the people, it may be a different matter. The State is fully able to maintain this college in a proper and adequate way; and it must be done. The speech of President Wynn before the Rotary Club, of Shreveport, not long since—a part of which is printed elsewhere in this issue of the Advocate—reveals the prominent part that Centenary has played in the educational history of the State. Upon the college depends also the supply of the ministry for the Methodist Church of the State. Without it many of the young men coming into the ministry would be compelled to apply for admission without any further preparation than that which they had received in the common school. Most of the luminaries of the Conference to-day are men educated at Centenary College.

The most dangerous course that could be pursued in the matter of religious education would be to entertain an idea of establishing a denominational adjunct at some non-denominational school, or to even emphasize any course of procedure that might be taken to favor the attendance of a like institution instead of our own. (1) The effect of such agitation would be to most materially weaken our cause before the people. The forces would be even more divided than they now appear. It might be reasoned that such a procedure was forced upon us, but that would in no sense clarify the situation in the eyes of the Church. (2) At the State institutions any religious tendency must necessarily suffer from the worldly attitude in general. Temptations are effective among young people about the same in most instances; and if a young man is placed in a card playing, dancing, and theatre going crowd, it is hard for him to be a mere spectator. To keep the Methodists curtailed, or to separate the theological candidates at such an institution would indeed be difficult unless they were present in such numbers as to furnish an atmosphere of their own. (3) No more inharmonious picture could well be imagined than a theological dormitory, or a Methodist adjunct in any sense, at one of the State institutions of the day where the candidates for the ministry would be subjected to the constant teachings of philosophical theories that find their bases entirely outside the realm of Christian thought. (4) If Methodism would have an undivided, orthodox and spiritual ministry it must be sure of the schools in which its preachers get their inspiration.

The task before the Methodists of Louisiana seems to be a hard one in many of its phases, but this is no time for discouragement or a backward step. Centenary College must be maintained. The Church will continue upon its upward course and the Heavenly Father will direct the forces of his Kingdom.

A NEEDED REFORM.

If Francis Bacon, who made the remark that "reading maketh a full man," could appear in the present age and among the present generation he would find this statement entirely too broad and general. Reading, unless accompanied by a desire to acquire knowledge, is largely a waste of time. It is said that the first Napoleon would not allow any one around him to read novels. In this the great Emperor was not without much to justify his position. Of course, we believe that there is no harm and much benefit to be derived from the reading of standard works of fiction, provided these do not crowd out entirely books of the non-fiction type.

Nowadays the librarians are boasting that more books are being drawn out of the libraries than ever before. This is doubtless true and in it is some room for gratification, but we ought not to be too optimistic because of this fact. The output of books is steadily increasing, but with the multiplication of good books comes that of bad books. In the book stores, department stores, and five-and-ten-cent stores of any large city are to be found large quantities of yellow-back novels. Hundreds, and perhaps thousands, of writers are flooding the market with these pernicious books. Evidently a large percentage of the reading public of this country has cultivated a taste for this trashy stuff. The average reader craves stories that are sensational and exciting, and as the life of man is usually devoid of thrilling events, the writer in his efforts to meet this abnormal demand, must rely chiefly upon his imagination. A number of yellow journals are circulated throughout this country and some of them have very large subscription lists. The newspapers that print all the scandals and disgraceful occurrences are likely to have a larger circulation than their more decent rivals. This demand for the exciting and unusual is not only found in cheap literature, but is also strongly shown in the patronage of the picture shows. The managers claim that they have to exhibit this class of pictures in order to keep from becoming bankrupt.

At the present there seems but one way to correct this perilous condition of affairs. We must educate our people and create in them a desire for the best. As long as a large class in society continues to read such stuff, how can we stand up and boast of the progress of education? The preacher exercises, or should exercise, a wholesome influence over the people whose souls are in his keeping. It is his duty to encourage the reading of good books and to see that all the members of his flock are warned against this class of literature, which is not only devoid of benefit to the reader, but which tends to have a very harmful effect upon his character. Much profit could be derived from a study of the history and doctrines of our Church, a fair knowledge of which should be expected of every layman. It is to be feared that in this respect we are not measuring up to the standard that was maintained by our fathers. At any rate, there is much room for improvement at this point, and we should as a Church address ourselves energetically to the task of bringing it about.

GOD'S BEST GIFTS.

The blessings of God come upon all mankind, but his richest gifts are to the righteous. We do not refer to wealth, fame, pleasure, or any physical possession, but to his indwelling presence with its accompanying peace and joy, to the other fruits of the Spirit which enrich and adorn the soul, to the capacity for highest usefulness which belongs only to the true Christian, to the glorious foretastes of heaven which ever and anon thrill and enrapture the heart, and to the inspiring future, made bright by the precious promises of the Divine Word. Are these choicest blessings yours? If not, they may be if you will rightly seek them. There is a path through life that all may walk with Jesus, and it "shineth more and more unto the perfect day."

LOOK TO THE HILLS.

We see some soul more dear than life,
Sinking in waves of sin and strife,
Blown by the winds from our control,
Farther and farther from the goal;
What shall we do when hope is gone?
Look to the hills! Pray on! Pray on!

When in the hour of pain and grief
Our hearts, while longing for relief,
Are filled with dread lest on the morrow
Will come a deeper, keener sorrow,
What shall we do when strength is gone?
Look to the hills! Pray on! Pray on!

Though oft the waiting time seems long,
Be patient. Sing a sweeter song.
God's time, his way, is always best,
Trust fully, trust and leave the rest.
His promise stands. Bid doubt begone!
Look to the hills! Pray on! Pray on!

We well can claim his promise rare,
And wait the answer to our prayer.
With thankful hearts we still can say,
"God's answer may be on the way."
We shall win if faith is strong.
Look to the hills! Pray on! Pray on!

God answers prayer. When in our need
His promises our lips can plead.
Our hands reach out to clasp his hand,
Our hearts respond to his command.
Assurance comes. The burden's gone,
Look to the hills! Pray on! Pray on!

EDUCATIONAL FADS AND FANCIES.

Important changes are expected in the public schools of Pennsylvania growing out of the recent election in that State; and not in it alone, but in nearly all the other States. The new governor-elect, Brumbaugh, was Superintendent of Education of Philadelphia when nominated, and his election means that more attention is to be given to the cause of education than it has heretofore received. Mr. Brumbaugh was in Louisiana for several years and his readers were recently adopted for our schools, but not without many protests.

The question of his personality, however, does not enter into the new school movement, which promises to arouse greater public interest in the schools. Pennsylvania has contributed liberally to this cause; has made vocational training a part of its school system, and seeks not only to give its youth a full schooling, but to aid them in selecting the trade and vocation for which they are best suited.

The keynote of the campaign promised, not only by the new Governor, but by the Superintendent of Education of the State, as well as of the city of Philadelphia, is greater simplification in the teaching, fewer changes in the text books and course of studies, and a riddance of the fashions, fads and fancies which have crept into the schools and which it is agreed are a curse and demoralization to the entire system. The evil will be recognized at once as the present greatest drawback not only in Pennsylvania but in nearly all the other States. It continues to grow worse, prevailing all over the entire country, including Louisiana. The idea has become fixed that our schools need constant changes in order to keep them "up to date," that they must have new text books, new methods, new studies every year, although these probably and naturally bring confusion to both the teachers and the pupils. Progress is of course desirable, but when progress becomes synonymous with more or less radical annual revolutions, it ceases to be of any advantage.

The fact is that we are trying to crowd too much upon the children. We cannot correct all existing evils and defects in the public schools, nor solve all the social, civic and industrial problems of the day. The importance of athletics and gymnastics is recognized, it is probably well to teach all children how to swim, but when we attempt to teach them also the virtues of conservation, the value of natural resources, to advocate peace as against war, to give them instruction on the high cost of living, of sanitation, sex hygiene, how the ballot should be cast, the patriotism of the flag, the preservation of forests, the prevention of fires, the abuse of alcohol and its effects—all excellent things in themselves—we overcrowd them, and the result is mainly confusion; and these are but a few of the many ideas we are trying to teach through the public schools. There are now a score of holidays, to each one of which the children must devote their mind and time—Labor Day, Arbor Day, Washington Day, Chalmette Day, etc.—these celebrations taking them away from their daily studies, and clearly interfering with the regular school course. There is too much "dabbling," too many faddish experiments and too many changes. Each year some of these fads are dropped, being found useless, unnecessary and superfluous, but only after a great deal of time has been wasted on them and much disorganization entailed, and for every fad dropped two new freak studies are introduced, the result of local suggestion or even prejudice. We seem to have adopted for our schools the Buckingham idea of being "everything at times, and nothing long." Education is apparently in an experimental stage, where no progress can be made except by the adoption of topsy-turvy methods every year or so.

We believe that the general public, with the exception of the experimentalists, will welcome the proposition of greater simplicity, a more solid education, fewer changes, and especially fewer fads, and we believe that both the teachers and children will profit under this new regime and policy, which is only a return to the old regime and which may be accomplished now by not trying to do too much.—Times-Picayune.

THE JAPAN MISSION TO THE HOME CHURCH.

(At the Annual Meeting, which convened at Arima Sept. 3, 1914, Bishop James Atkins was so impressed with the facts brought out by the Missionaries one evening during the session at a round table conducted by Dr. Ed. F. Cook, Secretary of Foreign Missions, now visiting the Orient, that he appointed a Committee of five to embody in concrete form the substance of the discussion for publication at home. The topic under consideration was the Mission of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, in Japan, and the conditions which give special significance and importance to it at this time. The following was the statement prepared by the Committee and adopted by the Mission at one of its sessions.)

The Mission of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, in Japan, in view of the claims that press upon us at the present hour, feels compelled to seek from the home Church an immediate strengthening of the position of our Mission in this country.

The Japan Methodist Church, organized as an independent body eight years ago and having now one hundred and forty-five ordained ministers and fourteen thousand members, has given every evidence of faith and devotion, zeal and energy, and has made steady progress. This fact of itself strengthens the call upon our Mission to extend into wider areas that work by which our Japanese Churches were first brought into existence and by the furtherance of which at this time the larger and more rapid growth of these Churches may be made possible.

That these wider areas exist, for mission enterprise, is shown by the recent survey conducted by the Federation of Missions, the result of which was to ascertain that eighty per cent of the entire population of Japan, or forty-eight millions of people, still remained unevangelized. The inadequacy of the Japanese Churches at their present stage of growth, the total Christian population being less than two hundred thousand, and of the Missions with their present strength and equipment, is deeply felt. The leaders of Christian work, whether Japanese or foreign missionaries, are of one mind as to the vital importance of reinforcing this field from the home Churches at this time.

But the urgency of this matter is not determined wholly by questions of territory and population. There are special conditions which give strength to the deep convictions we feel and to the obligation of our Mission to this field, and which point to the nature of the reinforcements needed. Among these conditions, mention may be made here of the increasing place of importance occupied by Japan in the Far East and among the nations; the high standard of technical efficiency set by the nation in its educational system on the one hand and the materialism controlling the educational aim and permeating the minds of teachers and students, on the other, alike rendering the endowment and better equipment of our schools and other institutions a matter of imperative importance; the perplexing problems arising out of the intellectual and social emancipation of womanhood, with the growth of the factory population, largely recruited from among women and girls; the better access now had to the rural districts, to the numberless towns and villages, the doors of which are now open to the Christian preacher whose message is eagerly received by the people; and of greater prevalence of irreligion and the downward moral trend, pervading Japanese society.

The present Christian forces have been made to feel the need of reinforcement in view of the general decline in the moral state of the country and in view of the new opportunity this condition has given, for the Christian Church to render a far-reaching service to the nation. Appalling corruption has been discovered in a number of departments of the national administration and even in the headquarters of the leading Buddhist sect. These disclosures, and the low moral tone of society of which they are an unmistakable symptom, have become the subject of wide comment throughout Japan, and the result has been a seriousness of mind and a consciousness of need which we have every reason to believe will lead to a better appreciation of Christianity as a religion of redemption. Prominent leaders in the Empire frankly point to the moral breakdown of the nation's secular programme and are asking where a moral and religious force can be found sufficiently vital to arrest the downward trend, some of them going so far as to admit that this can be found in Christianity alone.

Too great emphasis cannot be given to the fact that we are confronted with an opportunity, in view of these things, such as has not existed since the country was opened; a far greater opportunity than that of the "eighties," being not only more pervasive, but different in character. The Christian religion was welcomed then as being good and desirable; it is looked upon with favor or sought now as being positively necessary and by many as the nation's only hope. Furthermore, a desolation of heart is felt by many in every local community who have lived these many years without any form of faith and religion. A deep spiritual hunger is experienced by others who would readily respond to the call, if only bidden to the great feast. The cry out of the deep of the nation's soul is a call to the vaster deep of Infinite love of which the people are without knowledge. Beautiful indeed are the feet upon the mountains of Japan of those who at this hour in the nation's history bring good tidings to hearts and minds troubled with questions for which there is no answer except in the Gospel of Christ.

The situation is such as to summon anew the interest of the Home Church in this great field. The momentous and solemn obligations of the hour have been so felt by the Christian forces as to give rise to a National Evangelistic Campaign, which is opening the way for greater activity on the part of the Missions and Churches, and as to impel the Mission bodies to call for reinforcements. Mission schools by all means should be strengthened, as a bulwark against materialism and skepticism, and for the formation of Christian character and the interpretation to the Japanese of those ideals on which alone a stable civilization can be founded. And the evangelistic force should be greatly increased in order that a nation-wide movement may be carried forward for the dissemination of the saving truths of the Gospel.

We confess that anxieties trouble us. Just at this time when the call is for a great advance in the Christian evangelization of Japan, the clouds have thickened and overcast the sky in the home lands. Our prayer to God is that the great struggle in Europe may not distract the attention of the Church or interfere with its unalterable purpose to present Christ to those who need him; but on the contrary that it will inspire to greater sacrifice and incite to a more relentless warfare against the powers of darkness and sin.

After a careful survey of our field, we find that in order to strengthen the position of our Mission in response to immediate demands, the following reinforcements should be sent to us:

1. We desire to open twenty new stations for which resident missionaries are required.
2. We need twenty single ladies to be sent for direct evangelistic work.
3. Thirty new Church buildings are needed and a still greater number of Sunday school chapels.
4. Large endowments for our schools are needed, especially for the Kwansai Gakuin and the Hiroshima Girls' School.

GUARD THE DOOR.

During the fifty-six years of my connection with the Mississippi Conference quite a number of men have applied for and obtained admission into our Conference who proved to be of but little service (some of none whatever) to our Church. In 1857, the year I was admitted on trial, one Jas. P. Lindeman, came to us by transfer from some Conference north of Mason and Dixon line and was put in one of our best stations. He was the cause of trouble in the Church which lasted for years. Before the year closed he left for parts unknown. At the Conference in Woodville, in December, 1858, his name, by resolution, was stricken from the roll.

In 1872 a man who called his name Horton came to our Conference in company with Bishop Kavanaugh, with whom he had traveled for several days. If not weeks, claiming to be a preacher travelling for his health. I noticed he sat on the rostrum near the Bishop most of the time while Conference was in session. He decided to accept work in our Conference provided he could get it. He was sent to Canton. Quite likely some of the older people of Canton remember the man. He soon reached Canton and went to work with a vim. In a short time he endeared himself to the women and children. The Sunday school took on new life as well as the Church. He claimed to be a young widower, having recently lost his young wife. Often he was seen airing his wife's fine goods, of which he had a large trunk full, and would weep if any ladies were near, and by that means led them to believe he was devoted to his deceased wife. One morning the Mayor of Canton received a letter from a woman making inquiry about her stray husband. She said he had left her, taking her trunk and most of her fine clothes. She said she heard he was in Canton preaching under the assumed name of Horton. He left Canton that night. I heard that he afterwards turned up in North Carolina as a Baptist preacher under the assumed name of Warren. Others have imposed themselves on us.

We have had three blind men in our Conference during the last fifty years who were good men, and good preachers, but their blindness was a great hindrance in their work. One of them superannuated before he had been eight years in the work.

Now, as I see it, it is time to call a halt and "guard the door." Be sure we know what we are doing when we answer the first question, "Who are admitted on trial?" We need good men, strong men, physically, mentally, and spiritually; men who are created anew in Christ Jesus and are truly called of God to preach the Gospel. We need Spirit-filled men—men burdened with the souls of lost sinners—men who are wholly out on the side of God and the right—men who are not afraid to preach the truth—men who are too pure and good to make any sort of compromise with sin and the devil. So let us pray the Lord of harvest to send faithful, true laborers into the harvest fields.

PROCEEDINGS OF THE NORTH MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE

Reported by Rev. Olin Ray.

The North Mississippi Conference met in its forty-fifth session in Starkville on Wednesday, Dec. 2, 1914. Starkville is a splendid town of about three thousand inhabitants. These whole-souled people, regardless of denomination, threw wide open the doors of their homes and spared nothing conducive to the enjoyment of those who attended. Rev. T. H. Lipscomb, our energetic pastor, assisted by Messrs. J. J. Gill, B. F. Bell, F. L. Hogan, E. O. McIlwain, H. W. Nelson and Zeno Yates, had plans so perfected before the arrival of the delegates that they had no trouble in executing them. Mr. Yates is the host of Bishop R. G. Waterhouse, who is presiding over the body. The attendance of the members, both clerical and lay, is exceptionally large, and the spirit of brotherly love and optimism prevails among them.

At 9 o'clock a.m. Bishop Waterhouse called the Conference to order by announcing Hymn No. 1, after which Rev. W. W. Woollard offered prayer. The Scripture lesson from the Old Testament was read by Rev. S. M. Thames, and Dr. Stewart, of the Tennessee Conference, read the lesson from the New Testament. It being customary to open Conference with the Sacrament of the Lord's Supper, Rev. S. M. Thames, Dr. Stewart, Rev. W. W. Woollard, and Rev. J. H. Mitchell were invited by the Bishop to administer it. A great number came forward and partook of the bread and wine.

The business session of the Conference was begun by the calling of the roll by Rev. J. R. Countiss, secretary of the last Annual Conference.

Rev. J. R. Countiss was unanimously elected secretary of the Conference, with Rev. E. S. Lewis and Rev. V. C. Curtis assistant secretaries. Rev. W. M. Langley and Rev. J. J. Baird were elected statistical secretaries.

The hours of the Conference sessions were fixed at 9 to 12 o'clock each day.

Committees that had been nominated by the presiding elders were read by Rev. R. A. Tucker.

Question 22, "Are all the preachers blameless in their life and official administration?" was called and considered by districts.

Rev. J. H. Bell reported five new churches built in the Aberdeen District, and the finances equal to last year in spite of depression financially.

A report from J. A. Randolph, Chaplain in the United States Army, was read by the secretary.

Dr. Stewart, of the Tennessee Conference, Rev. H. H. Ahrens, representing the Times-Picayune; Mr. I. G. Campbell of the Publishing House, Nashville, Tenn.; Rev. J. A. Bowen of the North Alabama Conference, and Mr. C. O. Chalmers, publisher of the New Orleans Christian Advocate, were introduced to the Conference.

Dr. Stewart, of the Tennessee Conference; Rev. E. H. Cunningham is reporting the Conference proceedings for the Commercial-Appeal.

Rev. W. W. Woollard, from the Columbus District, reported 7 out of 17 charges reporting everything paid in full; good revivals in which more than three hundred were converted, and the Sunday school work wonderfully awakened through the efficient labors of the Sunday school secretaries. He said the pastors of the district had been faithful and earnest.

President G. R. Hightower, of the A. and M. College, was introduced to the Conference and extended a cordial invitation to its members to spend 2 to 3 p.m., Friday, at the college, which, on motion of Rev. R. A. Meek, was accepted.

Rev. J. H. Mitchell, from the Corinth District, reported 1000 accessions to the Church during the year, several new churches built, finances equal to those of last year and peace and goodwill abounding among the preachers.

Announcements having been made, the Doxology was sung, and the benediction pronounced by Bishop Waterhouse.

Thursday Morning—Second Day.

Promptly at 9 o'clock Conference was called to order by singing Hymn No. 548, after which a Scripture lesson was read from John 15 by Rev. H. M. Ellis, and prayer offered by Rev. J. A. Bowen.

Hymn 544 was sung by the congregation with earnestness and feeling. The roll was called by the secretary, Rev. J. R. Countiss, and many who were absent from the first roll call answered to their names.

The minutes of the previous day's session were read and approved.

Question 22 was resumed by Bishop R. G. Waterhouse, and Rev. W. S. Shipman, presiding elder of the Durant District, made the following report: 700 accessions to the Church; 3 new houses of worship erected and others repaired; 1 new parsonage constructed and other parsonages improved; and the ministers faithful in their work. The names of the elders in the district were called and reported for their respective charges.

A letter was read from Bishop W. A. Candler, of Atlanta, Ga., with reference to our new University, and referred to the Board of Education.

The following were introduced to the Conference: Rev. A. C. McCorkle, a transfer from the Memphis Conference; Rev. W. M. McIntosh, of Iuka, an evangelist; Dr. E. H. Rawlings, of Nashville, Tenn.; Dr. A. F. Watkins, President of Millsaps College, and Dr. W. M. Sullivan, Professor of Chemistry at Millsaps College. A report of the work done at Millsaps College was read by Dr. A. F. Watkins, after which he made a forceful speech in its behalf.

Rev. H. S. Spragins, of the Greenville District, gave an encouraging report of the work under his supervision as follows: Four new churches built; substantial gains in membership, and preachers loyal and faithful. He then called the names of the elders in his district, who reported for their districts respectively.

A committee on Conference Evangelization was appointed, consisting of Rev. W. S. Lagrone, Rev. R. O. Brown, Rev. W. M. Young, Rev. T. H. Dorsey, and Rev. O. W. Bradley.

Rev. R. A. Tucker, of the Holly Springs District, reported substantial gains in his district, 600 having been added to the Church. He then called the elders of the district who made reports of the work done in their respective charges.

In the name of the W. C. T. U., and with appropriate words, Mrs. G. T. Howerton presented Bishop R. G. Waterhouse with a beautiful bouquet of white chrysanthemums. This kind remembrance was accepted by the Bishop in fitting words of appreciation.

Rev. J. R. Countiss reported the work of Grenada College, and appealed to the Conference to give its support more strongly to the cause of Christian education among the young women of North Mississippi.

Rev. J. W. Dorman, presiding elder of the Sardis District, reported the year's work as having been both pleasant and prosperous, and that the preachers and people had done nobly. As he called their names, the elders of the district made their reports.

A report from the Methodist Hospital at Memphis was read by Mr. J. H. Shearer, E. V. Houston, Rev. J. E. Cunningham and Rev. J. M. Wyatt were appointed by the Bishop to consider matters pertaining to the hospital and make recommendations to the Conference.

Rev. B. P. Jaso of the Winona District reported several new churches built; many splendid revivals held, and the churches in a prosperous condition.

Announcements were made, the Doxology sung and the benediction was pronounced by Rev. J. W. Dorman.

Third Day.

The Conference was called to order at 9 o'clock a. m., using Hymn No. 181, "Savior, More Than Life To Me," after which the devotional services were conducted by Bishop R. G. Waterhouse, who read and commented on the 18th Chapter of Romans.

The minutes of the second day were read by the Secretary and approved. Dr. J. W. Price asked to be excused by the Conference from the remaining part of the session. This request was granted. Question No. 6 was called, "Who are received by transfer from other Conferences," and the following names were announced: Rev. A. C. McCorkle, from the Memphis Conference; Rev. W. C. Galceran, from the Denver Conference; Rev. W. R. Goudelock, from the North Texas Conference, and Rev. W. C. Harris, from the West Texas Conference.

Rev. S. M. Thames asked that he be relieved from the active work of the pastorate, and his name was referred to the Committee on Conference Relations for the superannuate relation.

The following were admitted on trial: W. D. Bennett, Norphilus Maxey, W. B. Baker, Guy Ray, W. J. White, J. T. Murrah and J. B. Conner.

The name of C. G. Smith was called and he was discontinued.

Dr. E. B. Chappell, Editor of our Sunday School Literature, at Nashville; Rev. W. M. Williams, manager of the Orphan Home at Jackson, Miss.; Dr. W. A. Jordan, pastor of the local Baptist Church, and W. Fred Long, secretary of the International Sunday School work in Mississippi, were introduced to the Conference.

A report of the Hospital Committee was read by E. V. Houston, after which the cause was presented by Rev. H. M. Ellis.

That some of the ministers failed to pass their examinations and bring up their courses of study, was the occasion of caustic remarks by Bishop Waterhouse. The Conference laid strong emphasis on the necessity of this part of our disciplinary requirement being executed. The young ministers involved faithfully promised to apply themselves to their studies and complete their Conference courses.

The new boards were elected for the ensuing quadrennium.

After the announcements were made, the benediction was pronounced by Dr. A. F. Watkins.

Evening Services.

The Sunday School Board was fortunate in having present Dr. E. B. Chappell, Editor of the Sunday School supplies, who delivered a great address to a crowded house of appreciative hearers, using as a foundation for what he had to say 1 Chron. 1:32.

Fourth Day.

The Conference was opened promptly at 9 a. m., by the use of Hymn No. 78, "Holy, holy, holy, Lord God Almighty." Dr. E. B. Chappell lead the opening prayer. "Rock of Ages" was then sung.

Bishop Waterhouse read the lesson from Matt. 5, and commented on these sayings of our Lord. He advised the ministers to stand for principle and right rather than for parties political.

Sentence prayers were offered by members of the Conference, after which, "A charge to keep I have," was sung.

Dr. W. F. McMurry, secretary of the Church Extension Board, Dr. Stovall Anderson, secretary of the Board of Education, and Dr. Brown, pastor of the local Presbyterian Church, were introduced to the Conference.

Dr. Chappell spoke to the Conference on the work of the Sunday school.

Report of the Methodist Orphanage was read by J. H. Shearer, and the work and needs of the Home were presented by its manager, Rev. W. M. Williams.

Report on the appointment of the Conference assistants was read by Rev. V. C. Curtis.

The financial report of the Joint Board of Finance was read by P. T. Callhoun.

J. M. Guinn, A. S. Briscoe, W. S. Selman, W. H. Hartsfield, J. E. Stephens, E. G. Mohler, and J. G. Johnson were elected elders.

Rev. E. C. Sullivan was granted location at his own request.

Rev. J. P. Wilson was located at his own request.

The Doxology was sung and the benediction was pronounced by Dr. W. F. McMurry, the Conference having adjourned to meet at 2:30 o'clock.

Afternoon Session.

Conference was called to order with Bishop Waterhouse in the chair.

The reading of the minutes of the morning session was dispensed with, and the names of those sustaining superannuate and supernumerary relations were called and their reports heard.

Rev. G. W. Bachman, after fifty-four years in the itinerant service, asked to be relieved of active work and given a superannuate relation, and his request was granted. The credentials of M. E. Tomlin were restored.

The class eligible to deacon's orders, consisting of P. F. Luter, B. F. Bullard, Melville Johnson, R. B. Burks, J. R. James, D. R. McDougal, J. D. Wroten, and W. J. Wool, was called to the chancel and addressed by the Bishop. This address, in which the life of Christ was held up as the one ideal to follow, was instructive and profitable. After answering the disciplinary questions, these young men were admitted into full connection.

Rev. O. P. Armour was granted leave of absence by the Conference on account of sickness in his home.

The Conference was delighted by an address by Mrs. T. W. Woodward, of Starkville, a daughter of our lamented Rev. Eldersy Porter, who represented the Woman's Missionary Society of North Mississippi.

J. L. Foster was received from the Baptist Church as a local preacher.

Judge E. V. Hughston, of Greenwood, was unanimously elected Lay Leader of the North Mississippi Conference to succeed himself.

Judge Hughston read a report on laity activities of the Church.

Dr. J. M. Sullivan presented the needs of Millsaps College in a stirring address, after which the remainder of North Mississippi Conference's part on the new administration building at Millsaps was provided for.

Dr. Stonewall Anderson, of Nashville, addressed the Conference on the work of education as conducted by the General Board of Education.

At the evening service the anniversary of the Church Extension Board was held. Dr. W. F. McMurry delivered an address, which was greatly appreciated by a large congregation.

(The proceedings of the remaining days of the Conference will appear in next week's issue of the Advocate.—Editorial note.)

REPORT OF THE LOUISIANA ORPHANAGE SUPERINTENDENT.

To the Hon. S. D. Pearce, President, and Members of the Board of Directors of the Louisiana Methodist Orphanage:

Dear Brethren: I take pleasure in presenting my report for the year beginning Nov. 15, 1913, and ending Nov. 15, 1914, concerning the work of the Louisiana Methodist Orphanage.

In many respects this has been the best year in the history of our operations. The undisturbed peace among the children and workers; the steady progress and development of the children in their school work; the ability to meet our financial obligations and the fact that we have passed another twelve months without the loss of one of our children by death, affords us sufficient reasons for praise and thanksgiving to the God of us all.

We have had under our care one hundred and two children during the year. Of these we now have ninety children in the home; placed six with relatives that can provide for them; found good Christian homes for three; two we have found positions for who are now making their own living; placed one in school at Mansfield Female College who is being provided for by her sister, and graduated one from the North Louisiana Industrial Institute who is now teaching, making a happy, independent living. We have had quite a bit of sickness during the year, suffering epidemics of measles, mumps, whooping cough and scarlet fever. But I am happy to report, to you that with all our sickness we have not lost one patient, or has one been left with any ill effects. Our children, in the main, are healthy, happy, industrious. They hold out the promise of making most worthy and useful citizens when they have reached years of maturity, and we have every reason to congratulate our great Church and people on the work already accomplished for many of the most hopeless, dependent and helpless of human kind.

We are most happy in at last finding a Matron who has the energy, the intelligence and adaptability for this work that has long been a felt need. We feel most fortunate in having Miss Lula Keller as our House Matron. We are equally fortunate in having Miss Bula Gustafson in the Sewing Department and Miss Mattie East-erling in the Dining Room and Kitchen work. All these workers are giving perfect satisfaction and we trust we will be able to hold them in their present positions. Since the 7th of September we have had Rev. I. T. Reams with us as assistant Superintendent. He has rendered faithful and efficient service, and we had hoped that we might be able to retain his services. But for reasons best known to Brother Reams, he has decided that he would rather return to the pastorate, and we will be compelled to secure the services of some other to assist in our work.

While this year has not been marked with any large gifts to our work, we have been able to secure ample funds to meet our obligations from the general collections over the State and the Conference. Mr. C. W. Blair, of Shreveport, has generously offered $1000 toward the liquidation of our indebtedness, and he hopes that others may be induced to contribute enough to pay off the entire debt at the earliest possible moment. Aside from this generous gift, Mr. Blair has always been a liberal supporter of our work, and we feel that his interest in our cause is a most valuable asset. We only hope that we may be able to find others like him, who will make it possible for us to secure the needed funds, not only to meet our indebtedness, but to make the improvements necessary for the satisfactory operation of a growing institution such as ours.

Our agricultural interests this year suffered severely from the drouth, yet we raised a fairly good crop of corn, had plenty of late vegetables, and raised an abundance of sweet potatoes for our own use. We also succeeded in making over 100 gallons of syrup, and have seed enough for our next crop. We also raised over 100 bushels of peanuts, and made nearly 100 bales of peanut hay. Because of the drouth we were not able to do very much canning, although we canned over 500 cans of tomatoes.

But for the present unpromising financial condition that confronts us, and because we are seriously hampered in our work by the need of improvements, we could look to the future with the greatest confidence and hope. We do believe there has never been a time when the people over the State were more deeply interested in our work. Our appeals meet with a ready and hearty response from the small contributors. Many of our children are well clothed by the various societies of the State. This interest is further manifested by the desire of some who are unable to pay money to help in the way of produce. Two communities are now planning to get up a car load of produce respectively. The railroads are giving free transportation to these cars. So, in spite of the depressed conditions, we feel confident that our people will do the best possible for our great and worthy cause.

Still we cannot operate our Institution without ready money. The salaries of the helpers necessary to our work must be paid in cash. Groceries and other necessary expenses can be paid for only in money. We cannot afford to make such recommendations to Conference as would hinder our great work, and yet, you would be just and fair to all other claims of our great Church. I trust the Spirit of our heavenly Father will guide you in planning for the future of our work.

Grateful to God for his blessings, with sincere thanks to all our people for their liberality and help, and confident of your wisdom and co-operation in planning for our future welfare, and pledging your honorable Board my most devoted services, I am, your faithful servant,

ROBT. W. VAUGHAN,
Superintendent.

THE CHILD AND THE BIBLE.

Why does the American mother give her small child everything before she gives him the Bible? Why does she wait until he is twelve or fourteen years of age before she puts into his hand that best gift? "He would not understand its pages," I hear some one say. But I beg to differ; children understand some of the "deep things" at an early age. Jesus said: "I thank thee, O Father, Lord of heaven and earth, because thou has hid these things from the wise and prudent, and hast revealed them unto babes."

Very often a boy or girl receives his or her first copy of the precious Book at Sunday school. To me this is sad. Mother, you should be the one to give your child a Bible; the blessed privilege is yours.

"Is God only for grown-up people?" asked a little lad, his big brown eyes full of wondering perplexity. "Of course not, Heath. Why do you ask?"

"Cause when I talk 'bout God and want a Bible all my own, you and father say: 'Wait till you're older.' How old, mother?" Yes, how old, mother?

Why do you give the children books of fairy tales, before they can read, with "Little Son, or Daughter, from Mother," written on the fly-leaf? Why do you not give the Bible before the book of nursery stories?

Perhaps some one will ask: "What effect would the giving of the inspired Word have upon a child?"

For answer, take a little one of three; present him with a Bible, and say to him: "This is God's Word, and mother wants you to own it and cherish it always; she will read to you from it until you are able to read it yourself." The baby eyes will brighten, the tiny hands reach out to receive the gift, and it will be fingered often and lovingly—nay, reverently—for there is a baby reverence for holy things. "My own Bible!" the red lips will say over and over.

What son or daughter can go far wrong with a praying mother, and a mother who makes the Bible first in her gift to her child?

Christ said: "Suffer little children to come unto me; for of such is the kingdom of heaven." And does he want his Word withheld from them until twelve or fourteen years have flown? "Remember now thy Creator in the days of thy youth."

Mother, it is for you to see to it that your child knows the Lord and his teachings at an early age.—Pittsburg Christian Advocate.

MORMON TEMPLES IN AMERICAN CITIES.

Already the Mormons have churches in New York, Chicago and Baltimore, and now the one hundred and fifty followers of the false prophet in Washington are planning to build a Mormon temple in that city. Having already absolute control of Utah, with a determining balance of power in several States, the so-called "Latter Day Saints" are becoming more aggressive every passing day. Their educational policy is a very shrewd one, having the same qualities of worldly wisdom which have in all ages characterized the religious oligarchy. They select a number of units from the multitude, and to this select few they give the highest education possible to the narrow superstition they are meant to perpetuate; and all the hundreds and thousands are left in a state of the most servile ignorance, that they may become the fit and ready instruments of error. America is already giving a certain drowsy attention to this great iniquity fortress in the mountains; but the situation calls for a wide-awake campaign of information, and for an intelligent crusade of public sentiment; and then, finally, the enactment of an anti-polygamy amendment to the national constitution. The transplanting of this social iniquity from the mountains to the capital city of America is an ominous symbol of its progressive influence in national affairs.—Methodist Recorder (Pittsburg).

CENTENARY COLLEGE.

(Dr. R. H. Wynn, the president of Centenary College, Shreveport, La., made a splendid address before the Rotary Club of that city at a luncheon Friday, Nov. 13, according to a report in the Shreveport Times. His address was so apt and applicable at this time on account of the present crisis in the history of Centenary that it seems well to quote from it. A good portion of this excellent address appears below.—Editorial Note.)

Operates Under Liberal Charter.

By special act of the Legislature in 1845, a very liberal charter was granted to the trustees of Centenary College empowering them to confer such degrees as are conferred by any university, college or seminary of learning in the United States. Under this charter the college still operates.

The ante-bellum period was a brilliant one in the history of Centenary. In 1857 a great central building of classic architecture was erected. This building contained an audience hall scarcely surpassed in the South, as well as ample appointments for all branches of college work. A survey of the old college register during this period shows that nearly every family of prominence in the State was represented on its pages, as well as a large percentage of adjoining States. There is a tradition that ex-President Jefferson Davis attended the College of Louisiana as a special student, and Hon. Judah P. Benjamin was without question a student in its halls.

Those who are familiar with the public life of Louisiana will note with interest among former students and alumni such names as these: Boatner, Richardson, Magruder, Moss, Kernan, Perkins, Kilbourne, Spencer, Carter, Young, Sanders, Ellis, Parlange, Sambola Jones, Wall, Dickson, Brigham, Brame, Miller, Gordon, Holcombe, Ponder, Murff, Standifer, Lewis, Sims, Faulk, Pharr, Gay, Scales, Randle, Fulllove, Barrow, Cason, McCormick, Atkins, Noel, and many others too numerous to mention.

Removal to Shreveport.

The change of location was the result primarily of an invitation from the business community of Shreveport, then operating through the Progressive League. The church did not take the initiative. This fact places a burden of continuous responsibility upon the citizens of Shreveport to lend their encouragement, financial assistance and hearty co-operation.

Notwithstanding the vigilance of the trustees it has been impossible hitherto, on account of legal obstacles, to realize financially from the old property. All that was possible to bring has been transferred to Shreveport. Judge Murff has, without charge to the college, successfully defended a suit brought by the State, through the attorney-general, but Mr. Pleasant seems to have found another ground on which to prosecute the case further.

The Methodist Church in Louisiana is unequivocally pledged to the support of Centenary College in Shreveport. It cannot and will not abandon its purpose of maintaining a college of full standard grade for what it conceives to be its mission in this State. There is no alternative. It cannot turn elsewhere. This mission is not sectarian—it has never been. A college is not a theological school. Our only graduate last June, now holding a good position in the public schools of the State, is a loyal member of the Baptist Church. We have members of various denominations on the board of trustees. The school is committed to the policy of a cultural education under positively religious influences. To promote this end, as stated above, plans are being made for a forward movement in December.

Shreveport Needs Centenary.

My conviction is that Shreveport needs Centenary College with its glorious traditions of the past and its achievements that are to be fulfilled in the future, more than it needs factories or expanding commerce.

In this connection I must also say that the local community always bears the heaviest burden of financial responsibility in educational enterprises of this character. In my judgment, Shreveport cannot afford to allow Centenary to achieve only partial success any more than the college constituency outside can afford to do so. Her men of means must not look askance as if in doubt and they could do no better than to select Centenary as one object of their beneficence.

Present Status, Need and Outlook.

A few final words: Even with our moderate income, the school is now doing what it professes to do. It gives a complete four-year college course in addition to preparatory or high school work, under a capable faculty and in accordance with approved educational standards. No graduates are now going out who have not earned their degrees.

Our needs, however, are great. More building is urgently needed. A more adequate endowment must be secured since no college can be supported by tuition fees alone. This work cannot be done in a day but our leaders are determined to achieve this result. Progress has been slow but when once the movement appeals a little more strongly to the popular faith and enthusiasm it will grow with ever increasing rapidity until the goal is attained. In the meantime our income has to be supplemented by an annual maintenance fund. During the summer a committee of citizens, four of whom are Rotarians, kindly volunteered to raise a subscription to meet an emergency, and while this work was left incomplete on account of disturbed financial conditions, yet practically no one who was asked to contribute, even though the war had begun, refused. I wish to publicly express appreciation.

Nature furnishes us a splendid opportunity for a beautiful college campus. There is no more beautiful situation in the State. Some scientific landscape architecture would make it a spot of beauty, of which the city might be proud.

I wish that it might be the determination of all that Centenary shall become a well-equipped and stable institution of this city, making its good influence felt in every stratum of our business and social life.

SOME OBSERVATIONS.

By Rev. Paul M. Brown.

At least six out of seven district conferences held during this year passed resolutions placing the full collection of the assessment for Conference Education as the minimum of our aim for this year and pledging their members to work to that end. In the action taken upon these resolutions, no dissenting vote was cast. Surely we will not be unmindful of these resolutions at the wind-up of the year's work.

In most of our pastoral charges there is at least one man or woman who could pay the whole assessment for Conference Education and not feel it. Would that God would put it into the heart of some of these to say to the pastor, "Let me take care of the assessment on our charge for Conference Education this year."

There are a few in each District who could easily take care of any deficit that may occur in the District. We believe that these persons would do this, if they could only realize the tremendous uplift and inspiration that would come to our educational work in Louisiana as a result of the payment of this assessment in full.

Last year the Louisiana Conference showed that it could raise one of the assessments in full, and that the largest in the list of "Conference Collections." No doubt this year it will duplicate last year's record in meeting this assessment, in spite of the adverse conditions prevailing. Can we not add our assessment for Conference education to this list for this year? Surely we can, if we will try.

"Providence, R. I., Oct. 22.—Rev. Philip S. Moxsen, of Springfield, Mass., described the needs of six congregational colleges for Negroes and mountaineers in the South at the Annual Convention of the American Missionary Association to-day. He said plans were under way for raising an endowment fund to provide an income of $250,000 annually for the six institutions. Rev. Alfred Layless, Jr., of Louisiana, and W. E. Wheeler of Tennessee, also addressed the Convention."

The above Associated Press dispatch is worthy of special attention. To secure an income of $250,000 requires an endowment of five million. Each of the six schools would receive more than $40,000, if the amount were equally divided. Let it be noted that these splendid objects in behalf of Christian education in the South are being sought by a great Missionary Board which has a very small representation in these States.

CENTENARY COLLEGE.

A Layman's Suggestion.

President Wynn has very clearly shown that Louisiana needs Centenary. I will go further and say that no State in the Union needs a Methodist College so much as does Louisiana. I have crossed the Continent four times, and seen a good part of the Lord's domain, but, as I see it, Louisiana needs that college more than she now realizes. Then, why is it in a dying condition? The answer is more than easy—it answers itself: Lack of that close connection between the school and the Church that is absolutely necessary for its success.

For many years the school was in the boundary of the Mississippi Conference, and was dominated by that Conference. This in a measure alienated the people and they became cool and negligent both of the school and Christian education. They had little interest in a school not under their control, and so there grew up all over the State a semi-contempt for Church education. Methodist boys were all sent to State schools, or out of the State, to be educated. This deprived the State of that loyal set of alumni that Centenary needs so much at this hour. As a child, I listened with positive rapture to the preachers and others talking of college days, as they often did in our home. How I longed for the time to come when I too would be a "Centenary Boy." Is it true now? How few boys hear of the old school! Preachers are not blameless, as they have not shown that loyalty that the Church had a right to expect of them.

Just another suggestion: Has a preacher a right to lay aside his god-called work for the schoolroom? I have serious doubts about it. The blessed Master was a teacher—but he taught the way of life. His last words, so far as we know, were spoken on that memorable morning beside the seashore, and three times he warned Peter to feed his lambs. Not a word about teaching them. But that is for each one to decide, though it seems to me that with the over-supply of trained teachers—laymen—we could supply our schools, and not rob the pulpit of the men it so sorely needs.

What is the remedy? It is simple, so simple that it amazes me that no one has offered it before, bring about a closer relation between the Church and the school. Nothing else will help in the least. How? Let the board of trustees meet and elect a layman—a business man preferred, who feels strongly upon the subject, and can tell about it—as Vice President. Give him a living salary, and if the preachers will open their pulpits to him, he will soon make things move. It takes a layman to talk to laymen. The very attitude of a preacher is against his doing this work. People are too ready to think it is self-interest and not the sacredness of the cause that is prompting him. It would be useless to waste space detailing a plan that I originated, but I will gladly give it to the man duly qualified to use it. Bishop Candler thought it not only feasible, but a most excellent way to bring about the conditions that we so seriously need in Louisiana. I suggested it to him, and he is considering its use in connection with the new University.

It would be useless to put a man in the field who was not on fire with zeal for his cause. One must be selected who can make a strong talk to the people in and out of the pulpit. There are many men who can do it in Louisiana, and I am sure the Board would have no trouble finding a suitable one.

P. S.—My grandfather was a member of the Mississippi Conference for more than fifty years, and my father for more than thirty years. Both have been many years in His Home. I was born in the State of Louisiana, and our family have been loyal to the old home State in all her trials and calamities. This is my excuse for entering the discussion about Centenary.

IF YOU AND I.

If you would smile a little more
And I would kinder be;
If you would stop to think before
You speak of faults you see;
If I would show more patience, too,
With all with whom I'm hurled,
Then I would help and so would you
To make a better world.

If you would cheer your neighbor more
And I'd encourage mine;
If you would linger at his door
To say his work is fine,
And I would stop to help him when
His lips in frowns are curled,
Both you and I'd be helping then
To make a better world.

But just as long as you keep still
And plod your selfish way,
And I rush on and heedless kill
The kind words I would say,
While you and I refuse to smile
And keep our gay flags furled,
Some one will grumble all the while
That it's a gloomy world.

—Edgar A. Guest, in Detroit Free Press.

NOT A FAILURE.

The State secretary looked over at his old friend, who was visiting him. "I wonder," he asked, "whether you would do me a favor, John?"

The Rev. John Fielding, gray-haired and kindly, smiled. "Try me and see," was his quiet reply.

The State secretary turned to a letter he had been reading. "I will. Now, then, a church in one of our Western districts has written, asking me to send them one who will preach for them next Sunday morning and evening. I know your thirst for souls, and so I thought of you. But it is a long, hard trip, and there's no remuneration, either. The society will pay your fare, but further than that it will not go. I rather hesitate about asking you—"

"You need not," replied John Fielding gently. "My chiefest delight in this world is to feel I'm serving Him. The matter of where I have to go to tell the story does not concern me. Of course I will go."

So into the parched and arid districts of the sun-baked West John Fielding went for that one Sunday.

He preached morning and evening in the only place the town afforded—a room over a grocery store. And because there were so few there and so little encouragement given him for the truths he had tried to make plain, he thought, after all, perhaps the long ride, there and back had been more than useless.

The incident passed from his mind; if he ever recalled it, it was with a feeling of regret that he had accomplished so little.

Time passed. Trouble came to the gentle, quiet minister, as trouble will come to all. His good wife died, his health failed about that time, and on account of it he was unable to accept a regular pastorate.

Funds ran low; finally he decided suddenly to spend the winter with his sister. He wondered as he boarded the train that particular morning what was going to become of him. "He could not dig, to beg he was ashamed."

The churches that he had served had been poor, the salary uncertain, and for this reason he had been unable to save. Now in his old age he had no money. With health impaired, what was he to do?

Finally with a sigh he dismissed the matter—God knew all that was on his heart; in some way he would be cared for.

Owing to some failure to make connections, his train stopped over for two hours in a certain city. John Fielding looked out of the window. It was an attractive city, with plenty of life and bustle, and it came to him that he would get off the train and walk about a little—the air might help him.

As he passed up the street, a tall, bowed figure in somewhat shabby clothes, some one tapped him gently on the shoulder.

He looked up to meet the gaze of a stout, broad-shouldered man with straightforward, keen eyes; a man in the prime of life, and evidently prosperous.

"I beg your pardon," the stranger said, "but did you not several years ago preach morning and evening in a room over a grocery store in a small town called Grey Rock?"

John Fielding nodded. "I did," he said.

"And your text in the evening—was it not John 3:16?"

John Fielding nodded again. "It was. You remember well."

"I have reason to. Let me explain. I happened to be spending Sunday in that town. I was a roving dissolute fellow at that time, caring little for anything but a good time as I saw it then. I drank, I gambled, I had even in my recklessness taken a shot at a man. That the bullet missed its mark was owing to no wish on my part. I had straggled into that little town that morning, ragged, unkempt, and out of money. I was in a desperate mood. Then I heard some one say that you were going to preach over the grocery store that morning. Something—I can not tell what it was impelled me to go to hear you. I went, and I liked what you said so well that in the evening I went again. Your text that evening was the one I have referred to; and, sir—his voice broke.

"Yes," said John Fielding gently.

"It was the means of my conversion. I stumbled out of that meeting a changed man. I was ashamed to speak to you in my ragged clothes, hut, oh, how I longed to!

"I got steady employment when I showed myself to be a man, and I prospered. I married and success seemed to crown all my efforts. How many times I have prayed God that I might see you, and thank you, and tell you what you, through Christ, had done for me! A sinner made whole—oh, that is what happened to me!"

He laid a firm hand on the bowed shoulder. "How is it with you," he said almost tenderly; "you look ill, weak?"

The two hours the train stopped over in that city were as only a few minutes to John Fielding, so delightful, so enjoyable they seemed. In all his life he had never met a friend like this man.

And before they were up John Fielding was provided for, as far as his modest needs went, for the rest of his life; provided for by this prosperous, fine-looking man, who declared nothing he could ever do would liquidate his debt.

"Why should I not? Have I not been praying God that I might meet and tell you what you have done for me?" And then he sang under his breath these words:

"A sinner made whole, a sinner made whole!
The Savior hath bought me and ransomed my soul;

My heart it is singing, the anthem is ringing,
For I was a sinner, but Christ made me whole."

The train after its two-hour stop steamed on its way, bearing with it a man very unlike the one who had alighted at that station two hours before. Provided for, through life! Praise God! Praise God! He thought of that Sunday morning and evening of long ago, when he had preached to that little congregation over that grocery store, and suddenly bowed his head. "Dear Lord, forgive me," he said brokenly; "I thought it was a failure."—Pittsburgh Christian Advocate.

GEORGE WHITEFIELD.

George Whitefield was born December 16, 1714, at Gloucester, England. His parents were innkeepers. He received a grammar school education in his native town and in 1733 was admitted as a servitor in Pembroke College, Oxford. About a year after his matriculation at Oxford he became identified with the Methodists under the leadership of the Wesleys. Because of his incomparable eloquence, his austerity of asceticism, and his untiring zeal in religious work, he was ordained deacon in the Episcopal Church in 1746 before he was graduated from college. His first sermon was preached in his home town at Gloucester Cathedral with wonderful effect. Soon after this John Wesley invited Whitefield to join him in labors in America. On May 7, 1738, he landed on American soil, but stayed only a few months on this trip. In 1739 he again sailed for America and for two years preached in all the principal cities of America with wonderful effect, especially representing his orphans' home at Savannah. Benjamin Franklin did not approve of the orphans' home because it was located so far from the central cities of America and he had determined not to contribute when Whitefield should speak upon this subject. He had in his pocket some copper coins, some silver pieces, and five pistoles in gold. As Whitefield proceeded Franklin said he began to soften and determined to give a copper, but at another stroke of eloquence he concluded to give the silver, but when the collection was taken he gave copper, silver, and gold—all that he had.

In 1741 Whitefield returned to England, and the separation between Wesley and Whitefield took place that proved insurmountable in their future ministry. Wesley preached and believed the doctrine of free grace, while Whitefield advocated the doctrine of election and perseverance. It is a matter of history that Whitefield was the agitator of the division between himself and John Wesley. Whitefield had attacked Wesley's preaching before sailing for England, and when he reached London Whitefield published his replies to the public. Wesley did not answer but once, saying: "You may read Whitefield against Wesley, but you shall never read Wesley against Whitefield." So the Tabernacle, the preaching house of Whitefield, was built not far from the Foundry, and from the pulpit of the Tabernacle Whitefield proclaimed his Calvinistic Methodism.

The lack of the power of organizing his work into lasting form made it impossible for Whitefield's doctrines to survive. As a preacher he probably has never had an equal in persuasive eloquence and forcible presentation. There have been great preachers who were perhaps more profound and more able to attract from a standpoint of the presentation of the truth of the gospel, but none has ever equalled Whitefield in the power of personal magnetism and in natural eloquence. In every city of America where he preached the halls and churches were crowded to their utmost in the attempt of the people to hear him. In London countless thousands thronged after the great divine. People in large crowds gathered in the halls before day so that they might have seats when the service began several hours later.

Whitefield paid seven visits to America. The last visit was made in 1769. On account of his excessive labors his health began to fail before he began this last voyage. On Sept. 30, 1770, the great preacher died suddenly at Newburyport, Mass., and, according to his request, his body was laid to rest under the pulpit of the Presbyterian Church of that town.

A MOST REMARKABLE GATHERING.

Very probably one of the most unique organizations in the world is a Methodist Annual Conference. It is a religious, an economic, and a social institution with all the various strata ingeniously wrought together and largely dominated by the purely religious element. There are religious bodies of other denominations which hold annual meetings with the social features of the Methodist Conference, but they leave the solving of the economic problems within the bounds of the gathering to the local fields from which the delegates come, while the Methodist Annual Conference studies the local field itself from first-hand knowledge, purports to send a man to that field, and through these ministerial agents it successfully advances its religious ends. It is also true that the Annual Conference is the most unique and the most necessary Conference of all the other Methodist gatherings. The General Conference, while it is more spectacular and has functions as a legislative body, is not the vital Conference of Methodism. The district conference has become mostly educative, yet still holding the important power of licensing and recommending preachers. The quarterly conference comes next to the Annual Conference in importance because it handles all the details of the individual charge. The church conference seems to have lost precedent altogether.

But the Annual Conference is the gathering that occupies the strict attention of every Methodist preacher and laymen. Its dominating influence of course is the making of the appointments for the succeeding year. This fact creates a profound interest in this body from the standpoint of every church and laymen. This is not an unholy interest, but one that is concerned with the vital questions of service and maintenance confronting each preacher and church alike. This Conference is a body of preachers and laymen gathered from a prescribed territory of a great Church to sum up what has been done in the preceding year, to judge the peculiar situation in each pastoral charge, and to re-appoint the preachers in the spirit of humility and prayer. The Bishop makes the appointments not only in name but in fact, but after all he must rely upon the reports and the judgment of the brethren to know how to make these appointments. It may be said that the Annual Conference is a body come together from a prescribed territory to consider its advantages and disadvantages, and to re-appoint the preachers to attain the best results from a spiritual viewpoint.

The time spent by the preachers at the meeting of the Annual Conference itself is highly instructive and uplifting. The opportunities of close acquaintance with other preachers furnish a variety of inspiration, and the great itinerant system operating to station a preacher in one place and then another over a large territory fits him with a wide experience and much power for usefulness. The Methodist Annual Conference becomes very much revered and loved by its members. To enter the ministry in this particular way usually means that one has formed an attachment for life.

"HEAR, O ISRAEL, THE STATUTES AND JUDGMENTS!"

The lofty theme of the fifth and sixth chapters of Deuteronomy, the greatest of the books of the law, is the giving of the ten commandments to the people of Israel by Moses. The picture is impressive and stirs the soul in admiration. All the hosts of Israel, the men, women, and children, are gathered together in one vast throng while Moses, the oracle of God, solemnly proclaims the statutes of the law which are to govern the people. Nowhere does Moses say that the laws he gives the people have been traced down from some ancient alien government and, after culling the statutes of these governments over, this is the result of careful selection from the very best that they afforded. But Moses speaks in convincing language and in the stead of God himself, saying: "I am the Lord thy God which brought thee out of the land of Egypt, from the house of bondage. Thou shalt have no other gods before me." And on through all the commandments Moses progresses giving the words of the law that have been dictated to him by God himself. All the former history of Israel had been experienced under divine leadership (when the people would submit to it). A pillar of cloud had preceded the marching hosts by day and a pillar of fire by night. When sin was committed within the ranks of the people it was regarded as unholy and unrighteous; the sinner was dealt with accordingly. These facts preclude any idea of Israel's progress without the special providence of God and without his specially inspired law by which they were governed.

"Hear, O Israel," say the Scriptures further, "the Lord our God is one Lord; and thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thine heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy might. And these words, which I command thee this day, shall be in thine heart: and thou shalt teach them diligently unto thy children, and shalt talk of them when thou sittest in thine house, and when thou walkest by the way, and when thou liest down, and when thou risest up. And thou shalt bind them for a sign upon thine hand, and they shall be as frontlets for thine eyes. And thou shalt write them upon the posts of thy house, and on thy gates."

When the divine source of the law is thus considered it becomes exalted and sacred to the heart of the believer. It is God's command, it is God's great law, it is God's voice that speaks to his people, and let the people hear.

There is no place for strategy in the life of the Christian. Sin is an eternal and fearful fact whenever the laws of God are violated, until the blood of Christ through belief and repentance wipes away its awful effect. Whether sin, when it is committed, is found out or not it is sin just the same and is just as fearful. The light regard for the law of God that the public may hold cannot ultimately mitigate its penalty upon the transgressor. There are no such things in the eyes of God as breaking a mere social law or a statute law where the penalty may be avoided or remitted. Before God every thought and act will be judged and the person will be dealt with accordingly. Many regard nothing as wrong unless public opinion condemns it. The Church of God can never afford to be influenced in its condemnation of sin and in its upholding of righteousness by the fluctuating opinions of the world about it. The voice of Moses comes down the centuries: "Hear, O Israel, the statutes and judgments which I speak in your ears this day, that ye may learn them, and keep, and do them."

Some say that the Church does not progress in its ideas as the times in which we live have progressed from the beliefs and customs of the past. The fallacy of such an argument rests in the fact that the times have never progressed from the essentials of life and death, and they never can. Methods, manners, habits, and speech are modified to suit the whims of a fanciful public. Modes of travel have changed, but travel itself is just the same. Manners of speech are modified, but speech itself is the same as it ever was. The expression of logic is never the same with two men, but logic itself is ever abiding. Habits of vision and objects of vision are shifted as the days go by, but vision itself is the same as it was in the days of Adam himself. With all the wisdom and learning that men think they have accumulated in books and in the brain, they have not altered by a single iota the vital facts of life and death. Birth is the same and death is the same, the body is the same and the food upon which it lives is the same, though all of these divinely imposed conditions be modified in appearances as much as men please.

The conclusion is that moral law can never be superseded. Our God is one God to-day as he was when the world was created. Christ is as much needed at present as when he came; in so far as men need to be redeemed. Sin to-day is the same as the sin that was committed thousands of years ago. The Church will ever stand as an impregnable fortress buttressed by the law of God and supported by the presence of the Holy Spirit, against the tides of sin and death.

The Psalmist recognized that sin was not a light thing; it was not to be wiped away by ritualism and form, for he said: "Thou desirest not sacrifice; else would I give it: thou delightest not in burnt offering. The sacrifices of God are a broken spirit; a broken and a contrite heart, O God, thou wilt not despise." The blood of a thousand bulls of Bashan spilled upon altars erected upon the lofty peaks of Lebanon might have been a sublime spectacle so far as appearances were concerned, but a river of the blood of bulls would never have wiped one solitary sin away of itself: there must be "a broken and a contrite heart."

The proclaiming of the sacred law of God ever impresses the true prophet with the great necessity of holiness in this divine calling. Isaiah was not prepared to preach until his lips had been touched by the coal from off the altar of God.

THE PASSING OF THE SALOON.

Fourteen out of the forty-eight commonwealths of this nation have made it illegal for intoxicating drinks to be promiscuously sold within their bounds. The day seems to be advancing when the whole country will be governed by national prohibition laws. The annual convention of the American brewers met a short time ago in the city of New Orleans. It is interesting to note some of the tactics employed to present in an acceptable manner the liquor interests of the country. One of the papers of New Orleans published a cartoon in which brewers were represented in modest dress and appearance, while some one remarked that he was expecting to see in the brewers types of rough men, when in reality they favored preachers. It cannot but be regarded as pitiable that any business should have to be defended on the ground of appearances. Everybody is acquainted with that decidedly brutish expression upon the faces of liquor drinkers as a type; but perhaps the cartoon referred to above will be taken as a balm and they will try to deceive themselves into thinking that after all they look like angels.

The papers of the city were full of the proceedings of this brewers' convention and pictures of its representatives decorated their pages in columns. The pictures in most instances appeared to be of decent gentlemen; perhaps they also were published for educative purposes. But if a few derelicts had been picked up about town and photographed as being the product of the business of the good looking gentlemen, a truer presentation of the brewers' business would have been given the public. Much seemed to have been said at this convention about divorcing the sale of whiskey and beer. It was advocated that beer parlors be established after the manner of soft drink stands. The cry was for advancement. All of this may be taken as an indication of the final end, which will be the driving out of the liquor traffic altogether. One may rest assured, however, that this will never come to pass until every subterfuge has been resorted to and millions of blood money have been spent in preventing it by the liquor men.

Let one never think that the love of drink and the matters of personal liberty keep the barroom in our midst. The real reason lies in the dollar behind it. The matters of school tax, political power, and other such forces give us the saloon. When the people become convinced that they will be better able to maintain themselves without the revenue the saloons will go. There are sixteen hundred open saloons in the city of New Orleans and they remain open every night and day of the week. Men, women, and children have been supplied with liquor from them throughout the years past. It is a fearful crime upon civilization in the interest of the dollar.

It is indeed a hard matter to touch upon the liquor question without using some strong expressions like "hell holes" and "liquor soaked" and they are true, but for the sake of good speech they are mostly left out. C. A. B.

THE NORTH MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

The session of the North Mississippi Conference that adjourned Monday was harmonious and satisfactory. The newspaper reports evidenced that the business of the Conference, under the efficient presidency of Bishop R. G. Waterhouse, was considered and disposed of with deliberation and good judgment. Seven young men were admitted into the Conference on trial; nine were admitted into full connection, and seven were elected to elder's orders. The Conference showed a healthy growth in Church membership. One district reported a thousand accessions during the past year, another reported six hundred accessions. The proportion of charges that brought up all collections in full seems to be up to the average. Several new churches were reported to have been built and many were repaired. It is impossible that we make an exact summary of the gains during the past year at this time, but the indications are that in spite of the severe depression along financial lines that have been experienced throughout the country at large the North Mississippi Conference has made an admirable showing.

The people at Starkville evidently were most cordial in their reception and entertainment of the Conference. Rev. T. H. Lipscomb, the genial and gifted host of the Conference, was reappointed pastor at Starkville. The next session of the North Mississippi Conference will be held at New Albany. C. A. B.

PERSONAL AND OTHER NOTES.

Rev. J. D. Ellis, our efficient Pastor at Woodville, Miss., paid the Advocate an appreciated call on Monday of this week.

The Advocate desires to acknowledge with thanks a card from Rev. and Mrs. H. K. McKee, of the Oak Ridge (Mississippi) charge, announcing the birth of their son, Hugh Kelsey McKee, Jr., who was born on Nov. 28, 1914.

Rev. T. B. Holloman, our Pastor at Port Gibson, Miss., preached the sermon at the union Thanksgiving service of the various Churches at that city. We hear that he preached a fine sermon to a good congregation. The offering taken was sent to the Mississippi Orphanage.

Rev. W. J. Porter, of the Blenville charge of the Louisiana Conference, sends the Advocate 13 new and renewal subscriptions, for which it sincerely thanks him. Brother Porter has held four revival meetings upon his charge this year; he has had 52 accessions to the Church. One new church building has been erected and another repaired. This is a noble record to bring to Conference.

Rev. W. T. Woodward, of the Tickfaw (La.) charge, was assisted in a series of revival services not long since by Rev. T. D. Lipscomb, of Donaldsonville, La. Revival campaigns were conducted both at Ferriday and Vidalia on the Tickfaw work, and the report is that both were quite successful. Brother Woodward is one of the well liked and efficient men of the Louisiana Conference.

Rev. R. F. Witt, who has the Silver City charge of the Mississippi Conference this year, writes the following to the Editor: "I want to say to the readers of the Advocate that the good people of the Silver City Charge, through the leadership of Brother E. B. Crawford, have presented to their pastor a lovely suit of clothes costing $40, for which I am profoundly grateful. May the blessings of God rest upon all of them."

Rev. M. L. White, of the Flora (Mississippi) charge, and his family have recently been the recipients of a most liberal "pounding" by the good people on the work led by the women of the Missionary Society. Brother White received groceries in such quantities as to sustain his family along that line for a period of two months. On account of the present financial depression the finances of the Flora charge are not what they might be. Certainly Brother White and his family have our good wishes and prayers.

Rev. J. E. Napper, a local preacher of the Monroe District, Louisiana Conference, writes the Editor the following: "I have had a delightful summer laboring in the vineyard as a local preacher. I have preached fifty-two sermons since the district conference, have held three revival meetings, have conducted seven burial services, not less than fifty have been converted in the meetings I have held, and I have received thirty-five into the Church. Two of the revival meetings were held for my son on the Anacoco charge with much success. May joy go with you and the dear old Advocate."

Rev. J. A. McKee, now a member of the Denver Conference and stationed at Walsenburg, Colo., writes the Editor of the Advocate the following lines: "We have been greatly grieved by the death of our father at Roswell, N. M., on Nov. 14. He was past his sixtieth year and had been suffering from a nervous trouble for more than a month. He was a devout member of the Methodist Church at that place. The funeral service was conducted by the pastor, Rev. Ellis Smith. His death was most triumphant—passing into his reward without a struggle. A true man and a good father has gone. Our mother, six children, and a multitude of friends, mourn his going, but not as those who have no hope."

Dr. and Mrs. J. M. Henry, at their home in New Orleans, were the delightful host and hostess to the Methodist preachers of the city and their wives on Friday afternoon, Nov. 27. As our Methodist constituency knows, Dr. Henry is the capable presiding elder of the New Orleans District. This year finishes the quadrennium of his successful ministry in this particular field. The social gathering was suggestive of the brotherly relationship of the preachers of New Orleans. The weather was extremely unfavorable on the day of this gathering, and the fact of the full attendance, in spite of the heavy rain and the long trip across the river, evinced the good will and love that all feel toward the presiding elder and his wife. When Dr. Henry is no longer the presiding elder of the New Orleans District the fact will not be without regret on the part of the present New Orleans preachers who remain in the city after Conference. It is not amiss to say that Mrs. Henry is a charming hostess indeed; she is gifted and talented, and wherever the lot of Dr. and Mrs. Henry may fall for the coming year, they will certainly win their way into the hearts of the people.

"It's a whole lot better to serve God without feeling like it than to feel you'd like to serve Him and not do it."

POSITION WANTED.

By man 42 years of age; has had 22 years steady employment in store as salesman, etc.; part of this time was in drug store (but not registered); at present employed in general store. Is a member of Methodist Church, having served as steward and general willing worker for years. Has a family, all members of Church. Would like to secure position in one of the following towns, or similar country, viz: Ruston, Homer, Minden, Mansfield, Many, Leesville, etc. Can furnish references from present or past employers; has never been discharged. Can make change on or before Jan. 1st. Address, W. M. Hunt, Mer Rouge, La.

Church News

A policy has been taken out insuring Westminster Abbey (London, England,) against damage by air crafts to the amount of $750,000.

Dr. James Cannon has resumed the presidency of Blackstone Female College, of Virginia, a school in which he has been financially interested for many years.

A library of choice books costing not less than $10,000, is embraced in Bishop Mouzon's plans for the Dallas Theological School, which will be opened next fall.

It is claimed that in the history of theological schools in the United States none has ever made a better showing in point of attendance the first year than our new Atlanta School.

Rev. W. A. Swift, Associate Editor of the Central Methodist Advocate, Lexington, Ky., and an evangelist of distinction, has lately been on a visit to Arkansas. Brother Swift never sounds any uncertain notes in his editorial work. He and Dr. E. G. B. Mann make a fine team.

Bishop E. D. Mouzon is said to be strongly in favor of the unification of American Methodism according to the plan submitted by the Commission on Federation and approved by our General Conference. Rev. W. P. Andrews, of California, thinks that all the Conferences of the Methodist Episcopal Church in the Far West will support this plan.

According to the Florida Christian Advocate, there are in the United States about 300,000 Indians, of whom approximately 195,000 are wholly or partly civilized; and among them there are 50,000 church members, and 55,000 who are said to be absolutely pagan. The Southern Methodists are doing an excellent work among these Indians, but they greatly need to enlarge and extend their efforts.

The Los Angeles Conference—a mission Conference with two presiding elder's districts—made an assessment of $200 for the School of Theology of the Southern Methodist University at Dallas, and the Pacific Conference, which has three districts, imposed for it an assessment of $500. This action of these Far-Western Conferences is to be much commended. They have set our stronger Conferences west of the Mississippi River a fine example.

The Christian Guardian, of Toronto, Canada, one of the ablest Methodist Weeklies published on this side of the Atlantic, has announced that hereafter it will print no obituaries. In making this announcement, the Christian Guardian says: "In view of the increasing pressure upon our space and in view also of the increasing expense of publishing a paper such as ours, we are sure that our readers will see the reasonableness and righteousness of this action."

Referring to the comparative growth of Churches in New York City from 1855 to 1905, the New York Christian Advocate says: "The outstanding fact in this comparison is the tremendous growth of the Lutheran Church. Its churches have increased from 7 to 123. Twenty-two per cent of the churches added to Greater New York since 1855 are Lutheran. Next to it the Protestant Episcopal body has added the most churches, but Lutheranism has added 116 against an increase of 93 in the Protestant Episcopal churches. The Baptist and Methodist have added precisely the same number—69. The Presbyterians came next with an addition of 56; the Congregationalists next with 26, and next the Reformed Dutch with 21. No other communion at work in 1855 has added 10 churches. The African Methodists have added 9, the Evangelical Association 6, the Moravians 5, the Unitarians 4, the Universalists have precisely the same number as in 1855, and the Society of Friends has 6 less churches than 50 years ago."

TO-DAY.

Don't tell me of to-morrow;
There is much to do to-day
Which can never be accomplished
If we throw the hours away.
Every moment has its duty;
Who the future can foretell?
Why put off until to-morrow
What to-day can do as well?

Obituaries.

Obituaries not over 200 words in length will be published free of charge. All over 200 words will be charged at the rate of 1 cent a word. Count the words and send the amount necessary with the obituary. That will save trouble all around. Otherwise the obituary will be edited down to 200 words.

Mrs. L. M. FUSSELL (nee Laura H. Howell), was born in Pine County, Minn., May 1, 1852, and died on Oct. 24, 1914. She was married to Mr. L. M. Fussell on Dec. 14, 1871, and to this union were born seven children, six of whom survive her. She united with the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, when quite young and lived a faithful Christian life. When the call came she was ready. Her lamp was always brightly burning. Her pure, sweet life was sufficient proof of her truly Christian character. To her home and church she gave her time and best talent, and like her Master, she went about doing good. All who knew her loved her and she will be greatly missed by her many friends. The Church will also feel the loss of one who lived her religion and was faithful and true in her loving service. Truly, she was one of God's faithful children and has gone to that eldorado where sickness and death are felt and feared no more.

"There generous fruits that never fall
 On trees immortal grow;
 There rocks and hills and brooks and vales,
 With milk and honey flow
 All o'er those wide extended plains
 Shines one eternal day:
 There God, the Son, forever reigns,
 And scatters night away."

Farewell precious mother, farewell until we meet thee again in our Father's house above. The memory of your precious life will ever fall upon our lives, like the dew upon the leaves and flowers. May the Lord help us to follow her example that we may be ready when the summons comes. We pray that a blessing from heaven may rest upon the bereaved ones.

Her pastor,
 J. A. McCORMACK.

RESOLUTIONS OF APPRECIATION.

Whereas, it has pleased the Supreme head of our Church and author and finisher of our faith to remove from us to a higher and more intimate circle our beloved and sweet-spirited brother, George Prentiss Woodward, and,

Whereas, he served this (Methodist) Church for many years faithfully, consistently, and earnestly; as an official, capable, diligent and punctual; as a member of the Church, devout and humble; justice, kindness and humility, his constant and natural virtues, and

Whereas, at the time of his decease Dr. Woodward was a member of our official board of stewards and had for several years served in this capacity with diligence and prudence, responding to every duty and responsibility; so that we have lost a beloved brother and officer of the Church, therefore be it resolved,

1. That this Church feels keenly the loss of one whose life was the exemplification of Christianity and the embodiment of civic virtue—a quiet, gentle, yet effective rebuke to evil and an inspiration toward that Christ-like life for which our Methodist Church stands.

2. That these resolutions be spread upon the minutes, or records, of our Quarterly Conference, that a copy be sent to the bereaved wife and children, with whom we mourn, and that a copy be sent to the New Orleans Christian Advocate for publication.

FROM A PREACHER'S WIFE.

Dear Dr. Meek: I have just received the Thanksgiving issue of the Advocate and have read your "Thanksgiving reasons" and Brother Parker's article entitled: "O Give thanks unto the Lord." I too, in looking back over the events of my past life feel like saying: "God is a provider." Perhaps this realization has been more apparent since we came to Texas away from our loved Louisiana Conference which was our home for over forty years. And although sometimes the way seemed hard, I can say from my thankful heart that I am glad my husband joined the itinerant ranks, even without my consent.

I enjoyed the little article in the Advocate: "The Book of Thanks." I wish I had written down every kindness that was ever shown us, but by now the book would be so large we could not find room for it in our Texas home. They are written, however, in my heart.

I ask the readers of the dear old Advocate—one of our best friends—to pray for us, and especially do I request this of our personal friends who have heard my dear husband preach the story of Jesus that never grows old and who have sung with "unworthy" me the "Old Time Religion." Brother Drake said to me once: "Sister Randle, I have another verse to this good song. 'Tis the old time religion; it makes me love to pray in public." And I also have another verse: "Tis the old time religion; it makes the Methodists love the Baptists." And I sing it vice versa too.

I am so thankful for the two articles referred to in the Advocate of this week, and I pray God's richest blessings upon our Editor and Publisher and upon our dear Louisiana preachers who are trying so hard to make up the Conference collections. And, O, we old superannuated preachers and their wives are praying hard that God will open hearts and pocket books so that the collections may be raised. God bless every one who reads these lines.

Mrs. T. S. RANDLE.

A REAL THANKSGIVING.

Just before Thanksgiving Day letters from friends kindly inviting me to spend the day with them, and containing sweet loving messages, were received and they warmed and cheered my heart. Then the companionship and help, so badly needed and prayed for, came. On the morning of the 26th a lovely box came from Laurel. A dear young friend had shared her feast with me and the manner in which the box was packed proved in the most delightful way that she had remembered all my fancies and tastes for the good and beautiful. And with the box was a precious thanksgiving letter which did my poor heart so much good. The little tokens of remembrance from near neighbors, so greatly appreciated by me, and a splendid basket from Edwards, arriving by parcel post, from my dear ones there, also containing a sweet letter, overwhelmed me with the goodness of God and with the great kindness of friends and loved ones. I pray that God will bless these dear ones who have helped me in these long months of loneliness and sorrow. I feel the presence of the Lord with me always, comforting and strengthening me. God bless the dear Advocate. S. G. WEEMS.

RECIPE FOR GRAY HAIR.

To half pint of water add 1 oz. Bay Rum, a small box of Barbo Compound, and 1-4 oz. of glycerine. Apply to the hair twice a week until it becomes the desired shade. Any druggist can put this up or you can mix it at home at very little cost. Full directions for making and use come in each box of Barbo Compound. It will gradually darken streaked, faded gray hair, and removes dandruff. It is excellent for falling hair and will make harsh hair soft and glossy. It will not color the scalp, is not sticky or greasy, and does not rub off.

Tidings From the Field

Braxton, Miss.

Dear Dr. Meek: As this is the only way I have of doing it, will you please allow me space enough to express my thanks and appreciation to the good people of Braxton, Dlo, Bethany, and Harrisville churches for the nice purse they presented to me. This was to purchase the pastor a suit of clothes, a gift by the good people on my charge. I assure them that I greatly appreciate it, and will not fail to remember them all in my prayers. I will also speak of the Thanksgiving service held at old Harrisville church last Thursday. The good people (I think the women) had the church decorated with everything imaginable that is raised on the farm in that community, such as pumpkins, cane, peas, pinders, and vegetables of every description. They had a great dinner on the ground consisting only of what was raised on the farm with the exception of the flour and salt. We had a great day. Wish you could have been there to have enjoyed with us the old-time custom of a country meeting, where most of the men wore their overalls. You know we have joined the overall brigade down here. I hope to work in the interest of the Advocate as I close this year's work.—W. B. Wal-drop, P. C.

Matherville, Miss.

Dear Dr. Meek: We are winding up our fourth year on the Matherville charge. The Lord has been good to us. We have received into the Church this year 53 on profession of faith and 9 by certificate, total 67. The churches were greatly revived, and three new prayer-meetings begun. One of our boys, Lenton Harger, 18 years old, is preaching nearly every Sunday. We have new churches; one of them is painted and the paint is ready to be put on the other; the work would have been done had weather conditions been favorable. A third church has in hand $35 for painting, and $17.50 has been spent on the parsonage. Some wood has already been hauled for the next preacher. We had a stewards' meeting yesterday, in spite of the fact that it rained all day, and nine stewards were present. One church was not represented. If they do not fall behind, that is, the one that was not represented, we will be able to make our report in full. The stewards raised their assessment for next year $170, and decided to use the envelope system. Brother J. A. Carmichael, a fine business man, one that believes in God, and pays a tenth to the Lord, is chairman, and he has some as faithful co-workers as one will find anywhere. Several of them pay a tenth. We have much to be thankful for and we give God the glory for what has been accomplished. I failed to mention that another church has part of the roof to re-cover, then they will finish the ceiling. Pray for us, brethren, that we may go where God can use us best.—Algie Oliver.

Donaldsonville, La.

Dear Dr. Meek: The Donaldsonville Sunday school observed Rally Day on Nov. 22. A splendid program was well rendered. From all reports the crowd was the largest ever gathered in the Methodist Church of Donaldsonville, the number present being 100. In the Sunday school on the same day we had 46 present, which was almost double the enrollment of last year. There have been no men in Sunday school until this year. Eight men were present Sunday. Mr. H. L. Baker, a noble layman, is the superintendent of this school, and he comes twelve miles in his automobile when the roads permit and when it is raining and muddy he drives in his buggy. A few days before the Rally Day service the Sunday school children entertained their parents and a few friends at the parsonage with a lunch, music, singing and a few short talks. Fifty-six were present and they promised to see that 100 attended the Rally Day service. At the night service, Nov. 22, there were 34 present, which was the largest congregation, with one exception, that I have had at this place either this or last year. These numbers may appear small to those who do not know the conditions in Donaldsonville. We have here only 21 church members. There are more than 4000 people in this town. Roman Catholicism has an awful hold and great influence here. The dry goods stores, grocery stores and saloons run wide open on Sunday. Sabbath desecration is practiced to its full extent. We have a good Sunday school at Vacherie, but our church membership is quite small. I received 3 members there this year. Our Sunday school at Platten-ville is small, but is a good one. My wife and I held a revival at Plattenville in October. We had a few professions of religion, and 5 Roman Catholics joined our Church, 4 of them being a man, his wife and their two twelve-year old daughters. The other was a girl thirteen years old who is the "middle" child of 13 children, and made the thirteenth member received at Plattenville this year. We are doing very little at Burton. We have only three members there. At the two last named places we have no church building. Altogether, we have had a good year. Finally, there is a bright future for our Church in Donaldsonville. If the mission board will help support us and the Bishop will return me to this field, we are willing to be sent back and labor on. This is missionary territory and should be regarded as such.—T. D. Lipscomb.

A NOTE FROM BROTHER J. A. STONE.

Dear Dr. Meek: I want to say a few words in regard to my year's work. In the beginning of the year having no work assigned to me by the Conference, I accepted an appointment at South Union, Lebanon and Old Field schoolhouse at the request of the people there. As I look back over the year's work I feel as if some lasting good has been accomplished at these places. We have been blessed with good health. On Thanksgiving we held a meeting which was opened by Miss Carry Ray, who was followed by many others telling of the things God had done for them. After many good talks I had the honor of preaching a Thanksgiving sermon and we had a great service. That night we were made to rejoice when the young people brought us many needful things as a token of their love and appreciation. Brother Rube Cooper came with them as their speaker, and came with them as their spokesman and he held prayer with us also. We much appreciate the kindness of these good people.

THE GRADED SUNDAY SCHOOL

By Rev. B. P. Lewis,
Chairman Sunday School Board
Mississippi Conference.

The Graded Sunday School has sprung almost full grown in a decade. It had its inspiration in the growing appreciation of what a Sunday school really is. When John Wesley called the Sunday school "The Nursery of the Church" he spoke of the Sunday school as it was in his time. But no well informed person would call a Sunday school "a nursery" to-day. The Sunday school of to-day is a school. It does school work. It is organized, graded, has its regular course of study, standard of excellence, promotes, and graduates from department to department. Its definition is: "The Church Studying the Bible." A Church that does not enroll in all the departments of its Sunday school at least as many students as there are members enrolled on the church register has an undeveloped field somewhere. The principles underlying Sunday school organization to-day are pedagogical and scientific. They are identical with those found in all secular schools from those of lowest grade to the highest university. The age of the child, its mental and physical development, the spiritual needs and aptitudes, are all taken into consideration. This is not only proper, but, permitting a very strong expression, it is imperatively necessary. The Sunday school of to-day is in strong competition with the day schools of to-day for a place in the thought, confidence, and life of our children. Unless we successfully compete with them, we will surely lose ground. Wherever a Sunday school has been organized and graded according to the accepted standards, and has introduced an adapted literature, the Sunday school has held its rightful place in the young life of the Church. Below is given in as brief form as is possible the outline of a graded Sunday school as is suggested by our General Sunday School Board. Some schools organize more completely than is outlined, while others do as effective work with less organization but following the same underlying principles.

The Graded Sunday School consists of three Divisions, viz.: The Elementary, The Secondary, and The Advanced Divisions. These three Divisions purpose taking a child at birth, and never losing sight or hold of him till he is translated. The Elementary Division takes him at birth and keeps him till he enters the teen age, when he is turned over to the Secondary Division. This Division holds him through the period of adolescence, when he is passed on to the Advanced Division, the organized class department; after which, during that period of infirmity incident to old age, the Home Department completes the work.

I. In the Elementary Division there are four departments: The Cradle Roll, The Beginners' Department, The Primary Department, and the Junior Department.

1. Cradle Roll. The Cradle Roll enrolls all children from birth to three years of age. Over this department, there is a superintendent who, with thoroughly adapted equipment, never for one moment loses sight of a child after its enrollment until it passes into the Beginners' Department.

2. The Beginners' Department takes in children of three, four, and five years of age. In this department there is a superintendent, a secretary, an organist, and at least two teachers: one for the three and four year old children, and one for the five year old children. The three and four year old children are in the same class—First Year Beginners; the three year old children remaining in the class two years, unless the class is large enough to employ two teachers, when the three year old children are in one class, and the four year old children in another, but both studying the same lesson. The superintendent of this department may be one of the teachers, and the secretary may be the organist if it is deemed best. If the school is held in a church with only one room, of course there can be no organ, and an organist will not be needed.

3. The Primary Department includes children six, seven and eight years of age. Over this department there is a superintendent, a secretary, an organist and three teachers. The six year old children being in one class, the seven year old children in another, and the eight year old children in another. This is the most important department in the Elementary Division. Here the children get their real start in Sunday school work. If this work is effectively done, slight deficiencies elsewhere will do but little harm. But if a school fails here, there will be more or less trouble throughout the entire graded departments. More depends upon this superintendent than upon any other superintendent. This is not said to under-value any department, but to lay emphasis where it is most needed.

4. The Junior Department includes children nine, ten, eleven, and twelve years of age. A superintendent, secretary, organist, and at least four teachers constitute the working force of this department. If at all possible, there should be six teachers in this department as it has been found advisable to separate the boys and girls at the age of eleven, and they never come together in the school again if it can be avoided. In this department begins the hand work, which not only increases interest in the Sunday school, but greatly aids in impressing the truths taught upon the minds of the scholars.

Thus it will be seen, in the Elementary Division, there is a Divisional Superintendent, four sub-superintendents, and at least fifteen officers and teachers. If the Junior Department be divided as above suggested, this number will be increased to seventeen, making a total of twenty-two workers in this Division alone.

II. The Secondary Division. In this Division there are two Departments, the Intermediate and the Senior. In the Intermediate Department there are four classes at least: One for the thirteen year old children, one for the fourteen, another for those fifteen, and still another for those sixteen years of age. If the Division suggested for the third year Junior be maintained, there will be eight classes and teachers instead of four. In the Senior Department we find the youths of seventeen, eighteen, nineteen, and twenty, each in a class, or classes with teachers, as above suggested. A superintendent over this Division will be helpful. Some schools have their officers and others do not. In this Division begins the Organized Class work, a special certificate having been prepared to be given by the Adult Bible Class Department of the Church.

III. The Advanced Division includes the organized classes of persons over twenty years of age. Teacher-training classes, and a Home Department.

It should be kept in mind that the outline of organization here given is for schools having a sufficiently large enrollment, room facilities, and competent teachers. In the little book entitled "A Superintendent's Manual for the Introduction and Use of the Graded Literature," will be found full directions for grading a small school with only six teachers doing all the work suggested in the above outline without the loss or elimination of a single essential in a thoroughly graded Sunday school.

RHEUMATISM AND INDIGESTION.

Practically all physicians and medical writers are agreed that there is a close relationship between Indigestion and Rheumatism. This view is substantiated by the fact that Shivar Spring Water, which is probably the best American mineral water for Dyspepsia and Indigestion, relieves Rheumatism and the Rheumatoid diseases such as Gout, Sciatica, Neuralgia and Nervous Headache. All of these diseases are probably related and all are probably due in whole or in part to imperfect digestion or to imperfect assimilation of food. Physicians who have studied this water and who have observed its effects in their practice believe that it relieves these maladies by rendering the digestion complete and perfect and thereby preventing the formation of those poisons which inflame the joints and irritate the nerves, and also by eliminating, through the kidneys, such poisons as have already been formed.

The following letters are interesting in this connection. Dr. Crosby, a South Carolina physician, writes: "I have tested your Spring Water in several cases of Rheumatism, Chronic Indigestion, Kidney and Bladder troubles and in Nervous and Sick Headaches and find that it has acted nicely in each case, and I believe that, if used continuously for a reasonable time, will produce a permanent cure. It will purify the blood, relieve debility, stimulate the action of the Liver, Kidneys and Bladder, aiding them in throwing off all poisonous matter."

Dr. Avant, of Savannah, writes: "I suffered for years with a most aggravating form of stomach disorder and consulted a number of our best local physicians, went to Baltimore and consulted specialists there and still I was not benefited. I had about despaired of living when I began to use Shivar Spring Water and in a short time was cured."

Mr. Rhodes, of Virginia, writes: "Please send me ten gallons Shivar Spring Water quickly. I want it for Rheumatism. I know of several who were cured of Rheumatism with this water."

Editor Cunningham writes: "The water has done more good than any medicine I have ever taken for Rheumatism. Am entirely free from pain."

Mr. McClam, of South Carolina, writes: "My wife has been a sufferer with Rheumatism and after drinking twenty gallons of your Mineral Water was entirely cured of the horrible disease."

Mr. Carter, of Virginia, writes: "Mrs. Carter has had enlarged joints upon her hands, caused by Rheumatism. Shivar Spring Water removed every trace of the enlargement. The water is simply excellent."

If you suffer with Rheumatism, or with any chronic disease, accept the guarantee offer below by signing your name. Clip and mail to the Shivar Spring.

THE POTASH SUPPLY.

To the Editor:

Judging by the numerous inquiries received, we believe that a statement of the Potash situation may be of interest to your readers.

At the outbreak of the war the shipping season for Potash from Germany was at its height, but since then the shipments have been made only in limited quantities. The prospect, however, is, that they will increase as time goes on. Potash is not contraband of war and none of the nations at war object to its movement in neutral ships. There is, however, great difficulty in securing railway and river equipment to move it from the mines and storehouses to the coast.

The mines are in good condition and enough workmen not subject to military service are available to keep them in operation.

The interruption of traffic has not made American soils or crops any less hungry for potash.

Most of the leading fertilizer manufacturers have agreed to utilize their present supplies of potash in the effort to supply fertilizers with at least 2 or 3 per cent of potash next spring and the supplies on hand at the outbreak of the war were said to be sufficient for this purpose. There is, therefore no reason why farmers should not secure some potash in their goods, although the usual 5 to 10 per cent must be obtained.

AFRICA RALLY DAY.

To the Fourth Vice-Presidents of the Epworth Leagues in the Mississippi Conference:

Sunday, Dec. 13, is another day set apart by the Board of Missions to emphasize the cause of missions—this time our new work in Africa.

December 13 should be a great day for Africa: 1, because the Epworth League and Mission Boards of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, have chosen it as the date of this year's Epworth League Africa Rally Day service; 2, because everywhere the thoughts of Epworth Leaguers will be directed to the Congo Mission, and their prayers will be ascending for the work in that field; 3, because the majority of Epworth League Chapters will make their pledges for the Africa Special at that time.

A program for Africa Rally Day has been arranged by the Educational Department of the Board of Missions and will appear in the December Era as the prayer meeting topic for December 13. As soon as the Era is received, preparations should be begun at once for the Rally. Valuable "helps" are mentioned for use in connection with the program. These helps can be had without cost by writing Dr. E. H. Rawlings, 810 Broadway, Nashville, Tenn. Let me urge every Fourth Vice-President to stress the importance of observing Africa Rally Day, and to see that the program for the Rally is carried out. If your League has already made its pledge to the Africa Special, this will be a good time for getting the money in hand. If your League has not made its pledge, this will be an excellent opportunity for making a pledge.

Every League in Southern Methodism ought to observe Africa Rally Day and ought to make a contribution to the Africa Special, be the contribution great or small. Our Mississippi Conference League has pledged $500 to the Africa Special. Has your League made a pledge? If not, let it be one of many to do its duty by making a pledge worthy of the cause, thus helping in the glorious work of Christianizing Africa by holding up the hands of our heroic young missionaries who have just gone out from our midst.

After carrying out the program, make a report of your League's pledge to Dr. Rawlings, so that he may have the amount of your pledge for his records. Send the amount of the pledge—not the money—and send the money raised at the close of your Rally to the Fourth Vice-President of the Mississippi Conference League, Hattiesburg, Miss., Station A. "Give as God hath prospered you."

Yours for Christian Africa,

HARRIET LEECH,
Fourth Vice President Mississippi Conference Epworth League.
Hattiesburg, Miss., Station A.

You can't take a short cut on a straight road.

EPWORTH MISSIONARY DAY.

To the Fourth Vice Presidents of the Epworth Leagues of the Mississippi Conference:

Sunday, Dec. 13 has been set apart as a day to be observed as Missionary Day by the Epworth Board.

I wish to call your attention to a letter in the Advocate from Miss Harriett Leech, Fourth Vice President of the Mississippi Conference Epworth League, which I trust you will read and arrange to observe this program, using the Epworth Era as a basis for your program and any additional number you may see fit to add, but make your meeting inspiring and helpful and if your League has already pledged a number of shares to the African Special, which is the work of the Epworth League this year, this will be the time to raise your pledge and forward to Miss Leech; if your League had not subscribed to any share, the price of which is Five Dollars each, I would suggest that you make your subscription and raise it at this time, notifying Miss Leech of your action in the matter.

I would suggest further, inasmuch as most of your pastors will be at Conference then that you use either the morning or evening hour for your Epworth League, adopting your program to suit the audience you might reasonably expect to attend. If for any reason you can not conveniently hold your missionary meeting at that time arrange for it at the earliest possible time thereafter.

For any further information you may want, apply to either Miss Leech or myself. Yours fraternally,

W. D. HAWKINS,
Pres. Miss. Conf. Epworth League.

MANY READERS OBTAIN NEW MEDICAL WORK.

Hundreds of readers of the New Orleans Christian Advocate have already taken advantage of the generous offer by which Dr. Miles' Medical Guide can be obtained entirely free of cost.

As has been stated before this offer is only for a limited time and all those who want to avail themselves of it should hasten to send in their names.

This book is filled with sound advice given in a clear, readable form. Read it over and over again until you know its contents thoroughly. Do not wait for the emergency to occur and then look up the necessary treatment, but in your leisure moments carefully read and absorb the knowledge contained therein.

Do not make the mistake that this book is just an advertisement for Dr. Miles' Restorative Remedies. It is true that in the particular cases where any of the Miles' Remedies are indicated their use is advised. This is because it is believed that they are the best remedies of their kind. But Dr. Miles' Medical Guide is an honest endeavor to give the general public a practical insight into household medicine and in all cases the treatment recommended is that which is considered to be the best.

If you wish to obtain one of these books without any cost to yourself send your name and address on a post card or in a letter addressed clearly to Family Medical Guide,

Dept. V-3, Miles Medical Co.,
Elkhart, Ind.

"Of all work that produces results, nine-tenths must be drudgery. There is no work from the highest to the lowest which can be done well by any man who is unwilling to make the sacrifice."

A SEVENFOLD RESULT.

The following are seven "results" of the Laymen's Missionary Movement, according to Doctor Reid, General Secretary of the Laymen's Movement of the Methodist Church, South:

"1. It has re-established in the church the Christ vision of the whole world.

"2. It has given definiteness to the task, divided and fixed responsibility, and defined the time for the evangelization of the world.

"3. It has changed the attitude of the secular press and of the business world toward Christian missions.

"4. It has developed leadership for the Church of God, by seeking out men for service of all kinds.

"5. It has given a great plan to the Church for service and for contributions.

"6. It has remarkably increased missionary information.

"7. It has greatly increased the total of missionary giving."

THE ANTIQUITY OF TOYS.

Up to the present nothing with which man has had to do in the progress and development of the human race has changed as little as toys.

Ages ago, infantile Egypt played with dolls, boats, balls, dishes, wagons, miniature horses and other animals. The little Greeks and Romans amused themselves with much the same playthings, except for the further possession of a rattle, which some wise Grecian gentleman very kindly invented for them.

We know this from the chance words of a few early writers, from the sculptures which have been saved of the different ancient nations which represent children in the act of playing—and also from the fact that many small toys, closely analogous to many toys of to-day, have been found in the tombs of the children of bygone ages—dolls, balls, boats, tops and tiny dishes, added to which there were small warlike implements for the boys, such as javelins and bows and arrows.

In the Metropolitan Museum of Art, in New York, there is a fascinating terracotta boat, complete to the smallest detail, says The Mother's Magazine. It was found in the tomb of an Egyptian boy of four thousand years ago.

Take the doll, one of the few of the very old toys which fit into the modern scheme of playthings that teach, as girls always have and always will play with dolls because they develop and foster the birthright of every woman, mother-love. The early Egyptians made dolls of earthenware, metal or stone. Sometimes arms and legs were made solid with the body, sometimes separate and attached by a string. The prehistoric Peruvians had pieces of bone wrapped in cloth, a male doll being identified by the blanket over his shoulders, the female by a petticoat.

Horace makes mention of the stick-horses of the Roman children. Missals of the Middle Ages picture little people still astride such makeshift steeds, and the ordinary riding horse of the ordinary child remained a stick with a horse head until late in the seventeenth century. One hundred years later we find horse forms with curtains around them, so that the child may run on his own legs beneath the sheltering drapery just as clowns in the circus do to-day. Early in the nineteenth century rocking-horses came into fashion, after which in 1847, horses were shown at the French Exposition covered with hair and very natural in form—the toy-horse, as we know him to-day.

MORTALITY IN WAR

Since the outbreak of war, Sir William Osler, Regius professor of medicine at Oxford University, has supervised the work of the army hospitals in England. Toward the close of October, he said to a correspondent of the New York Times, "I think this war will set a new record for low mortality among the wounded. Formerly, with the best first-aid and hospital work, a mortality record of five or six per cent of those who reached the base hospitals was considered creditable. Up to date, there has been only one fatality out of more than seven hundred wounded who have reached the base hospital at Oxford. That death was caused by tetanus. This result is owing partly to the self-sterilization of the modern high-velocity bullets, and partly to efficient field first aid. I have yet to see a wound inflicted by either a dum-dum or an explosive bullet. If the experience of the past counts for anything, the expeditionary force on the Continent has more to fear from the bacilli of typhoid fever than from bullets or bayonets. In the Boer War, bacilli accounted for fourteen thousand and of the twenty-two thousand lives lost. I have never seen a group of recruits marching to a depot without mentally asking what percentage will die legitimate and honorable deaths from wounds, and what percentage will perish miserably from the neglect of ordinary sanitary precautions."—The Youth's Companion.

A MESSAGE TO AUXILIARIES.

(Mrs. B. W. Lipscomb.)

Each season brings to the Woman's Missionary Society its own peculiar duties and responsibilities. The recognition and discharge of these as they come will insure growth and prosperity throughout our connection.

Just now we are confronted with that most important duty, the selection of the auxiliary leaders for the next year. Nothing will mean so much to the development of our organization as that we shall put into these places of leadership women who love the cause and are willing to give themselves to it in wholehearted, enthusiastic service.

Auxiliary members have a twofold duty in regard to the election of their officers. First, to prayerfully choose them, with due regard to their fitness for their respective lines of work, and, second, to give them loyal support and co-operation throughout the year. With the right women as leaders and a loyal membership there is no limit to be set to the work that may be done in any auxiliary.

Two dangers confront the women chosen for office. The first is timidity, resulting from a feeling of unfitness for the work. This can only be overcome by remembering that God, oftener than not has had to make his leaders out of just such as they. Dear sisters, who have this feeling of timidity and unfitness, be assured that God will use you if you will go faithfully forward. In his hands the weakest human instrument may become a power. The second danger lies in the fact that many of the women receiving offices at the hands of the auxiliary members fail to see in the office their high calling of God. If a great vision could come to the officers of just what it would mean to God's cause for them to give themselves devotedly to the work of their offices, they would with joy and reverence take up these duties as a part of God's plan for the world in which they are permitted to have a part. Dear sister, if the women of your auxiliaries have elected you to fill any office, take this election as a call to do God's work, and set yourself, under God, to learn the duties of the office. Your calling is an holy one. You are working for God and with God for the salvation of the world. Your powers are linked with eternal power for mighty achievement.

Now, I want to make a plea for the intelligent use of the literature prepared and sent out from headquarters for the instruction and inspiration of the societies. Do you receive your share of this literature? It is to be had in abundance on every phase of the work. It sets forth the duties of the officers and furnishes material for working out the programs. If the district secretaries, Conference vice presidents and superintendents are painstaking in their work of distribution, and if they have been notified to whom to send the literature for the various departments of the work in the auxiliaries, there can be no failure to receive it. The programs should be studied in advance by the presidents and program committee and the special lines of study carefully noted. When the literature for developing a program has not come to some officer several weeks in advance of the time for that program, application should be made to the district secretaries or to the Conference officers having this line of study in charge. Each auxiliary should be thoroughly familiar with the minutes of the Conference Society, so that they shall know to whom to apply.

The method of the distribution of the literature varies in the different Conferences, but it is an easy matter for any society to find out just how it is distributed in their Conference and to take the necessary steps to get it. I was greatly disappointed to find that many auxiliaries received no literature for the Week of Prayer. It was sent into every Conference before the first of October. Somebody failed, either in the distribution or in making the proper connection for it by failing to give accurate instructions as to whom to send it. Was the fault yours? Let's all work together to prevent this occurring again.

Let me make special mention of one matter that seems not to be thoroughly understood and which may throw light on the failure to receive literature. The Program for the last month in each quarter (March, June, September, and December) is given to the study of some phase of Social Service. During 1915 the subject for these studies will be the Adolescent Boy and Girl. The Conference Superintendent of Social Service will send each quarter the literature for this meeting to the auxiliary superintendents of Social Service who will direct its use at that meeting or see that it gets into the proper channel.

Let me emphasize, THERE IS LITERATURE. GET IT, and WHEN YOU GET IT, USE IT. Every sheet of it is prepared for a special purpose and if this purpose is not accomplished the time, work and money spent in its production has been wasted. Let no Conference or auxiliary officer nor any member of the missionary society be party to such sinful waste. The literature should be allowed to carry its message straight home to the women who come to the meetings by just as forceful and attractive presentation as can be given it, not read, but told by women who make its message their own. It should be carried with a persuasive word as to its contents to the shut-ins and women who do not come to the meetings. It has been prayerfully and carefully made, let it be prayerfully and carefully used.

Never was our work so well organized as now and never were there ready at hand such helpful tools with which to do it and such explicit instructions how to do it. The organization stands completely equipped. It awaits only the enthusiastic efforts of women who love the cause and are willing to give themselves to it both as leaders and members of the auxiliaries. So, let us sum up the message for the present situation: The successful issue of our work depends largely upon the election of suitable officers, the hearty co-operation throughout the year of the entire membership and the largest possible use of the literature. Rich results cannot fail to follow this policy.

OLD SORES VANISH

Get rid of them with Gray's Ointment—for ninety-four years an indispensable family remedy for all abrasions and eruptions of the skin. It speedily heals cuts, wounds, burns, bruises, boils, carbuncles, sores, poison oak, etc., and effectively prevents blood poison, which frequently rises from a neglected cut or sore. "I have used Gray's Ointment for ten years or more, and for boils, carbuncles, and sores, there is nothing equal to it," writes Mrs. G. A. Bolick, Conover, N. C. Only 25c a box, and it will save you many an ache and much trouble. Get it at druggists, or try a free sample by writing to W.F. Gray & Co., 806 Gray Bldg., Nashville, Tenn.

FOUR THOUSAND YEARS LOST.

Few persons have any idea how fast little things make big things when a considerable number of them are added together. For instance, the loss of a day's schooling by a child seems a very small matter in the educational work of the great State of New York, but the World figures out that 4000 years of education were lost in the aggregate by the pupils in our public schools on election day; and that, quite unnecessarily.

By closing the public schools of New York election day, 1,500,000 days of school time were wasted.

This needless sacrifice of 4000 years of human effort and improvement is only part of the vaster waste throughout the year. Because, years ago, the big boys of the district school were needed in haying, more than a million boys and girls who have no hay to cut get a long summer vacation, which only a small part of them can use advantageously. Because about the little red schoolhouse of our grandfathers there were farm chores to do and wood-piles to replenish, the city and town children who are three-quarters of the whole number, have a Saturday holiday, and many of them enjoy short school hours, devoting much time to games and social activities. The result is dawdling at education; insufficient preparation for political and business life for those who must leave school early; two years wasted on an average by the more favored youths who pursue college and professional studies.

Shops and other places of business are commonly open at least part of the first Tuesday after the first Monday of November. Most teachers and most students have no votes; the few who have them could easily vote out of hours or be excused for the purpose. A good beginning of educational reform would be to hold school sessions on election day.—Weekly Witness.

THE ROYAL WORD.

Zelia Margaret Walters.

A princess in exile lived quietly in a distant city. Sometimes she wished for the society of her kind. She wondered if the king would not invite her to court if he knew of her presence in the city. But she was too timid to make herself known.

Then, one day, when there was a crowd in the streets, she gave a handful of flowers to a weeping child, using, at the same time, the royal words that had been used at court with a gift:

"As I have received, I give to thee, freely, and gladly, little one."

A gracious woman in the crowd turned aside, and came to the princess.

"You are of a royal family, I see: I heard you speak the royal word but now. I am glad I found you. Tell me of your family, and your dwelling."

Then, when the princess had told the story, the gracious woman, who was also a princess, said: "The king shall know you are here, and you will be invited to court to dwell with others of the royal family."

Through the spoken royal word she had revealed herself to those that passed by.

So, too, shall you and I reveal ourselves by the spoken word, and find our own. If we belong in royal society, others of royal blood will hear in passing, and be drawn to us. If we belong among the mean and ignoble, they, too, will hear our words, and claim us. If we belong among the commonplace, they will know us, and hold us to them by the spoken word.

Only by revealing the royal in us, shall we find the royal in others. Hidden royalty there can not be forever, for "out of the abundance of the heart the mouth speaketh."—Christian Standard.

A THANKFUL HEART.

Dear Dr. Meek: Please allow me space to tell the people how thankful I feel. I am thankful for this beautiful world that contains so many nice things. When I look and see the handiwork of God I can truly say that he is good and plentiful in mercy and a present help in every time of need.

I am thankful for our beautiful little church at Rocky Mount. I want to thank the good people for putting so many serviceable objects in the church. Surely goodness and mercy will follow them, and I pray they may all live long. I am thankful for a good Christian husband to walk along with me hand in hand through all the trials and sorrows of this life. We feel that we will shake hands with many loved ones on that beautiful shore some day.

I am thankful for the Holy Spirit who fills my poor heart with joys unspeakable.

Then cheer, my brother, cheer; the battle will soon be over; the lifeboat soon is coming to gather the jewels home. Mrs. FANNIE E. MAYFIELD. Ringgold, La.

MEDICATED SMOKE DRIVES OUT CATARRH

A Simple, Pleasant, Reliable Way, and
It Costs Nothing to Try.

Dr. Blosser, who has devoted forty years to the treatment of Catarrh, is the originator of a certain combination of medical herbs, flowers and berries to be smoked in a pipe or ready prepared cigarette. The smoke-vapor reaches all the air passages of the head, nose and throat. As the disease is carried into these passages with the air you breathe, so the antiseptic, healing vapor of this Remedy is carried with the breath directly to the affected parts.

This simple, practical method applies the medicine where sprays, douches, ointments, etc., cannot possibly go. Its effect is soothing and healing, and is entirely harmless, containing no tobacco or habit forming drugs. It is pleasant to use, and not sickening to those who have never smoked. No matter how severe or long standing your case may be, we want to show you what our Remedy will do.

To prove the beneficial, pleasant effect, The Blosser Company, 50 Walton St., Atlanta, Ga., will mail absolutely free to any sufferer, a sample that will verify their claims by actual test. This free package contains a pipe, some of the Remedy for smoking and also some of our medical cigarettes. If you wish to continue the treatment, it will cost only one dollar for a month's supply for the pipe, or a box containing one hundred cigarettes. We pay postage.

If you are a sufferer from Catarrh, Asthma, Catarrhal Deafness, or if subject to frequent colds, send your name and address at once by postal card or letter for the free package, and a copy of our illustrated booklet.

STORY OF A HYMN.

In 1836 a young girl, Miss Charlotte Elliott, was preparing for a ball to be given in her native town. She started one day to her dressmaker to have a dress fitted for the occasion. In her way she met her pastor, an earnest, faithful man, and he learned her errand. He reasoned and pleaded with her to stay away from the ball. Greatly vexed, she answered: "I wish you would mind your own business!" and went on her wayward course.

In due time the ball came off, and this young girl was the gayest of the gay. She was flattered and caressed; but after dancing all night, laying her weary head on her pillow only with returning light, she was far from happy. In all the pleasures there had been a thorn, and now her conscience made her wretched. Her pastor had always been a loving, cherished friend, and her rudeness to him rankled in her breast. More than all, the truth of his words came to her heart and would give her no rest. After three days of misery, during which life became almost insupportable, she went to the minister with her trouble, saying: "For three days I have been the most wretched girl in the world, and now, oh, that I were a Christian! I want to be a Christian! What must I do?"

"Just give yourself, my child, to the Lamb of God just as you are."

"What! Just as I am?" she asked. "Do you know that I am one of the worst sinners in the world? How can God accept me just as I am?"

"That is exactly what you must believe," was the answer. "You must come to him just as you are."

The young girl knelt down and offered God her heart, guilty and vile as it was, to be cleansed and made fit for his own indwelling. As she knelt peace—full, overflowing—filled her soul. Inspired by the new and rapturous experience, she then and there wrote the hymn beginning:

"Just as I am, without one plea
But that thy blood was shed for me
And that thou bid'st me to come to thee,

O Lamb of God, I come."

Little did Charlotte Elliott think of fame, or of the immortality of the words she had written. It was simply putting her heart on paper; and therefore the hymn, born of a mysterious experience, appeals to other hearts needing the cleansing power of the blood of the Lamb.—The Evangelical.

HATTIESBURG, MISS.

Dear Dr. Meek: We moved to Hattiesburg twelve months ago on the last of October, and my family connected themselves with the Broad Street Church where Brother M. M. Black is pastor. Brother Black is one of the best preachers in the Mississippi Conference and one of the best pastors as well. He and his family have so brought up the church spiritually that we all expect a revival every Sunday. I never knew a church to grow so fast spiritually. Brother Black is a power for God in and out of the pulpit and would be of great help to any station in the Conference. We are loyal Methodists, but how we would like to have Brother Black returned to Broad Street Church again! Our Thanksgiving service was the best I ever was in. We were surprised on Wednesday evening when a box of clothing was sent to our home without the names of the donors, and later four ladies from the Main Street Church came in an automobile and brought us some more things; such as would make the heart of any poor preacher and his family rejoice. They said, "You have been working for God and now God is blessing you." They left us happy; and at 8 o'clock p.m. a crowd came from the Broad Street Church, Sister Black and others, who brought us such things as flour, rice, coffee, meat, sugar, and cans of fruit of different kinds. After all was stored away we had songs and prayers of thanksgiving. But this was not all, the next morning, good Brother K. T. Moore, a member of Broad Street Church, presented me with a Conference suit of clothes with these words: "We all love you and we furnish you with this suit and ask you to attend Conference." One good brother said he wanted to be represented in the gift and that he would pay my carfare to and from Conference. So, Doctor, I hope to meet my brethren again at another Conference. I feel so thankful to the good people of Hattiesburg. I am glad to say that Brothers Crisler and Galloway are both doing fine work here. My brethren pray for us that we may be able to do something worthy in return for the blessings the Father hath bestowed on us.—L. J. Jones.

DAY OF PRAYER.

Friday, January 8, 1915.

The Federation of Woman's Boards of Foreign Missions in the United States has appointed January 8, a day of united prayer for the woman's Foreign missionary work. An appropriate and helpful program has been prepared to be used in union meetings in every town and city of our land.

An invitation should be given through the Interdenominational Union of the town to all women's missionary societies to meet in some central place for prayer. If there is no Interdenominational Union in the city, it is urged that one be formed immediately, representing women of all the evangelical Churches.

Without intercessory prayer our work is in vain. Let every preparation be made earnestly and prayerfully. Notices should be sent widely and promptly. Women of faith and prayer should be secured for leaders. All possible information concerning the needs of foreign lands should be obtained.

Programs may be secured by applying at once to Mrs. J. B. Cobb, 2202 Elliston Place, Nashville. It is desired that names and addresses of the officers of Interdenominational Unions should be sent to Mrs. Cobb, Chairman Nashville Territorial Commission.

"PLAY ON!"

Once when Sir Michael Costa was conducting a rehearsal with a great number of performers, including hundreds of voices, as the mighty chorus rang out in union with the thunder of the organ and the roll of the drum and ringing horns and clashing cymbals, a man far away in one corner who played the piccolo said within himself: "In all this mighty volume of music it matters little whether I play or not. I will not be missed," and so he ceased to play. Immediately the great conductor stopped, flung up both hands, and all was still; and then he cried out: "Where is the piccolo?" His quick ear missed it, and to him there was a discord, because one little instrument ceased playing.

O humble, hidden one, play thou thy part! And play it well! There is an ear that hears! Bring no discord into the harmony of the divine oratorio! Play on! Many a worker, humble soul, has been cheered by the rhythm of your steady tread, and who knows how many in life's struggle have lost heart because one hidden soul has reasoned, "I will not be missed," and so broke ranks. O ye tempted ones, we must have your part of the divine chorus. In God's great organ there are no useless keys! So march on! Pray on! Play on! There are ears that hear! There are hearts that approve; and "standeth God within the shadow keeping watch above his own."

"No drop but serves the slowly lifting tide.

No dew but has an errand to some flower.

No smallest star but sheds some helpful ray.

And, man by man, each helping all the rest.

Makes the firm bulwark of the Church's power.

There is no better way."

Don't Merely "Stop" a Cough

Stop the Thing that Causes It and the Cough will Stop Itself

A cough is really one of our best friends. It warns us that there is inflammation or obstruction in a dangerous place. Therefore, when you get a bad cough don't proceed to dose yourself with a lot of drugs that merely "stop" the cough temporarily by deadening the throat nerves. Treat the cause—heat the inflamed membranes. Here is a home-made remedy that gets right at the cause and will make an obstinate cough vanish more quickly than you ever thought possible.

Put 2½ ounces of Pinex (50 cents worth) in a pint bottle and fill the bottle with plain granulated sugar syrup. This gives you a full pint of the most pleasant and effective cough remedy you ever used, at a cost of only 54 cents. No bother to prepare. Full directions with Pinex.

It heals the inflamed membranes so gently and promptly that you wonder how it does it. Also loosens a dry, hoarse or tight cough and stops the formation of phlegm in the throat and bronchial tubes, thus ending the persistent loose cough.

Pinex is a highly concentrated compound of Norway pine extract, rich in guaiacol, and is famous the world over for its healing effect on the membranes.

To avoid disappointment, ask your druggist for "2½ ounces of Pinex," and don't accept anything else. A guarantee of absolute satisfaction, or money promptly refunded, once with this preparation. The Pinex Co., 235 Main St., Ft. Wayne, Ind.

WHITEFIELD'S PLACE AMONG THE GREAT EVANGELISTS.

By H. C. Morrison, D.D.

From time to time, in the course of human history, God has given to the world great spiritual leaders. Perhaps there has never lived at the same time, in all the history of the Church a group of men more closely associated together, more genuinely permeated with faith in God and love for the human race than that group made up of John and Charles Wesley, Adam Clarke, John Fletcher and George Whitefield.

John Wesley was not only a great preacher, but he was also a great religious statesman. He looked into the future, organized and built for the centuries. In the providence of God his brother Charles wrote into poetry, and set to music, the great truths so forcibly preached by John Wesley. Adam Clarke, one of the most profound scholars of the time, in his Commentaries gave to the people one of the most lucid and helpful expositions and interpretations of the word of God. John Fletcher, the scholar and saint, was the embodiment—the incarnation—of the great Bible doctrine of holiness, or perfect love, so earnestly preached and so beautifully sung by Charles Wesley. George Whitefield was the inimitable and flaming evangelist of this mighty religious movement, to promote which God had raised up and bound together this remarkable group of men.

The remark is frequently made in drawing a contrast between the ministry of Wesley and Whitefield that Wesley's work has been far more effective and lasting because Wesley organized his work into permanent and durable form, while Whitefield, although he preached with great power and effectiveness, failed to organize.

We can hardly conceive that an all-wise God would raise up at the same time and in the same country, so closely associated with each other, two men to organize separate and distinct religious movements. It was undoubtedly the divine purpose that Whitefield should be a mighty mouth-piece, pouring forth a torrent of awakening gospel, a sort of voice in the wilderness, preparing the way for John Wesley, the great doctrinarian and organizer. No one will question but that the powerful preaching of Whitefield was a great factor in the religious awakening which made organized Methodism a possibility and a powerful religious force in the world. Whitefield was not sent to organize and administer Church government, but was sent of God, filled with Christ, and intoxicated by the Holy Spirit to preach the gospel. The world has never known a mightier declaimer of spiritual truths, a more fiery torrent of sacred eloquence than flowed from the burning heart and impassioned lips of the immortal Whitefield. He was a preacher who threw himself into the ministry of the Word with an enthusiasm and earnestness never surpassed and rarely equalled by any evangelist who has labored among men, either before or since his time.

In seeking to find Whitefield's place among the great evangelists, we would scarcely know where to locate him. He was entirely unlike Finney, Moody, Torrey, Jones, or Sunday. Along the mountain range of evangelistic history he stands a mighty peak, towering above, and differing from, them all. Whitefield possessed a most striking personality. When he appeared in the pulpit, or on a box, or raised platform, in an open field or park, he at once riveted the attention of the people. He looked like a man sent from God. He was on fire with earnestness and spiritual enthusiasm from head to foot. His graceful movements fell into harmony with his unhesitating and eloquent flow of splendid English. Whitefield, while he mightily moved the people, by no means confined himself to the realm of feelings. His sermons appealed to the intelligence of men. He selected great texts. He surrounded those texts with many questions from the inspired Scriptures which harmonized with his texts. His text became the commanding officer of a regiment of inspired statements from the prophets, Christ, and the Apostles. His reasoning put men to thinking. His arguments convinced them of the truth of his position. His illustrations flashed the divine light upon their consciences. His powerful appeal and exhortations moved them to decisions, repentance, and faith in Christ for salvation. With amazing power and rapidity he ran his fingers along the whole gamut of the human soul and touched every key in a man's life.

Whitefield's attractive personality, remarkable acquaintance with the Scriptures, deep insight into human nature, deep and fervent piety, his mastery of the English tongue, and matchless eloquence, won for him the admiration of men in every walk of life, from the nobility to the common working people. No building could hold the multitudes that flocked everywhere to hear him preach, and it is said that frequently as many as thirty thousand people stood spellbound under the sound of his eloquent voice as he reasoned of sin, righteousness, and judgment to come. At the conclusion of his sermons, the scene was something like that of a battlefield after a desperate charge of bayonets. The people lay prostrate upon the ground, overwhelmed with the sense of sin, they wept and prayed and cried mightily to God. Many of them were lifted up and carried away by their friends. Others would remain in the place, praying through the entire night, often greeting the morning dawn with shouts of glory and praise.

Some years ago the writer of these lines was preaching in Haverhill, Mass., and accepted an invitation from a friend to visit Newburyport, where Whitefield preached his last sermon one evening, went to bed at night, and awoke in heaven the next morning. In the vault of old South Church, at Newburyport, Mass., lies the remains of the immortal evangelist. We went in to the vault and looking through the glass lid of his coffin, gazed upon the bones of the immortal preacher. The skull is remarkably large and well proportioned, the teeth remain sound and mostly intact. We meditated as we gazed upon those bones how that when clothed with flesh, vital with life and divine power, that mouth had poured forth a fiery torrent of gospel eloquence never surpassed by any other evangelist in all the history of the Christian Church. The far-reaching effect and spiritual benefit of his ministry can never be estimated until that great day when God shall reckon up and declare the secrets of the ages.

PROCEEDINGS OF THE LOUISIANA ANNUAL CONFERENCE.

(Reported by Rev. C. A. Battle.)

First Day.

The city of Shreveport was the scene of the opening of the 69th session of the Louisiana Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, on Wednesday morning, Dec. 9, at 9 o'clock. The Conference was opened by Bishop Warren A. Candier, who called upon Rev. J. D. Harper to lead in prayer. Bishop Candier then gave a masterly exposition of the Parable of the Ten Virgins. Dr. F. S. Parker, of Nashville, Tenn., the secretary of the last Conference, called the roll. Two-thirds of the delegates answered when their names were read. Dr. Parker was elected secretary, and Rev. M. C. Hoyt, Rev. R. S. Walton and Rev. John F. Foster were elected assistant secretaries. Rev. Robert F. Vaughan was elected statistical secretary, with Rev. H. W. Cudd and Rev. R. H. Hooper as his assistants.

The Bishop called question 22: "Are all the preachers blameless in their life and official administration?" The presiding elders answered to their names. Rev. H. W. May, in reporting for the Alexandria District, stated that six churches had been built during the year, 750 names added to the church rolls, and that the financial condition was better than last year. Besides this, the district parsonage had been rebuilt, two church parsonages had been erected and the debts on four churches had been paid.

Rev. Wm. Schuhle, the presiding elder of the Monroe District, said that there had been 400 accessions to the Church during the year, that three new parsonages had been built and that the general financial condition was good.

Rev. H. W. Bowman, in his summary of conditions in the Baton Rouge District, stated that the preachers of the district had worked faithfully during the year, not even stopping for holidays. Three new churches had been built, four others were under way of construction, and two more were about to be erected. The financial interests of the district were somewhat in advance of last year. He also said that 500 names had been added to the rolls.

Rev. J. I. Hoffpauir, of the Lafayette District, reported 200 accessions in the French Mission territory, together with 400 in other parts of the district. Several churches were being repaired in the French Mission territory; in fact, the work in that section was showing remarkable development. Further, a new church building was being erected at Eunice. Financially, the district will make reports in excess of last year.

Dr. J. M. Henry stated that he was closing his quadrennium on the New Orleans District. A $22,000 church had been erected during the year by the Carrollton Avenue congregation. The financial condition was good, and there were more accessions to the Church than last year. He stated that the Italian work was very encouraging. Many Roman Catholics had joined the Methodist Church at St. Mark's Hall and the Second Church.

Rev. Briscoe Carter said that there had been 818 accessions to the Church this year in the Ruston District. Four churches and three parsonages had been built and the collections were at least on a par with those of last year.

Rev. W. H. Coleman, the efficient and earnest presiding elder of the Shreveport District, made an excellent report for his territory. He stated that progress along evangelical lines had been one of his ends in view throughout the year. About 900 accessions were reported from the district on profession of faith alone, and many names had been added to the church rolls by certificate. The Shreveport District will have two new stations in the coming year, making three new charges to be supplied with preachers. Further, the Noel Memorial Church building, magnificently appointed and valued at $75,000, will hereafter be counted as the property of the Church in the Shreveport District. This property came through the munificence of Mr. J. S. Noel.

In spite of the depression in the business world the work of the Methodist Church in Louisiana, as it appears from the presiding elders' reports, shows remarkable progress both spiritually and financially. The general sentiment of the Conference is most optimistic; very few complaints of depressed conditions are heard, notwithstanding the financial stringency under which the Church has been laboring.

The presiding elders made the following nominations for boards and committees, which were approved by the Conference:

Conference Relations—J. B. Williams, H. N. Brown, A. G. Shankie, W. D. Kleinschmidt, R. W. Tucker, J. G. Snelling, J. W. Lee.

Memoirs—R. H. Wynn, F. R. Hill, Sr. Public Worship—W. H. Coleman, G. S. Sexton, Dr. Jno. D. Scales, E. K. Means, B. F. Roberts.

District Conference Records—J. C. Rousseaux, L. C. Wilson, T. H. Morris.

Church Publications—F. R. Hill, Sr., C. A. Battle, John Sholars.

Sabbath Observance—F. R. Hill, Jr., P. H. Fontaine, J. W. Booth.

Temperance—S. H. Werlein, A. W. Turner, J. M. Alford, H. B. Carre, W. A. McKennon, J. R. Abels.

Board on Lay Activities—W. S. Holmes, T. W. Hollioman, J. R. Abels, H. G. Gilbert, R. O. Randle, R. T. McClendon, J. H. Thatcher, G. D. Shands.

The report of the Educational Commission appointed by the General Conference of the M. E. Church, South, was read before the body. This commission had authority from the General Conference to provide for the building of two new universities—one at Atlanta and the other at Dallas. The report showed that the work of the commission had been admirably prosecuted and that the two great institutions had been begun. Bishop Candier made a great address upon the subject of education. He stated that Christian education along evangelical lines is the need of the Church to-day. He remarked that the rationalism of Northern Europe was a failure and the ritualism of Southern Europe had also gone down to defeat; nothing but Evangelical Christianity had ever succeeded, and it will continue to be the bulwark of civilization in the ages to come.

The members of the Conference are being entertained in the homes of the Methodist people of the city and the entire aspect of the situation is such as to warrant the prospect of a pleasant and profitable Conference. The Conference is being held in the handsome new edifice of the First Church of Shreveport, and the manner of handling committee meetings in the classrooms of the Sunday school adjoining the main Sunday school room, with the facilities afforded to the delegates in the way of stenographic and typewriter rooms are meeting with the approval of all the attendants upon the Conference.

Second Day.

Bishop Candier called upon Rev. R. S. Isbell to lead the Conference in prayer at the beginning of the second day's session. The Bishop then read from the Scriptures a lesson depicting John the Baptist preaching in the wilderness, and spoke forcibly upon the necessity of preaching the fundamentals of Christian doctrine and life.

After the secretary had read the minutes of the preceding session and had called the roll of the members who were absent at that time, the report of the Board of Trustees of the Orphanage, was read before the Conference and was referred to the Conference Orphanage Board.

The following were advanced from the class of the second year to the class of the third year: W. B. Perritt, W. F. Roberts, W. A. Mangum, C. E. Fike, J. L. Cady, and Sherbert Frazier.

The Bishop announced the following transfers: T. I. Beck, from the Mississippi Conference; H. Thomason, from the West Oklahoma Conference, and Sherbert Frazier, from the Mississippi Conference.

Dr. J. R. Stewart, representing the Superannuate Endowment Fund, and Dr. Stonewall Anderson, the Secretary of Education, both addressed the Conference in the interest of their respective causes.

In lieu of an afternoon service the ministers were given the privilege of visiting Centenary College. Dr. Wynn made a short address before the Conference requesting that every one finding it possible to do so, take the car ride to the Centenary grounds and inspect the property of the Church there.

At 7:30 in the evening the anniversary of the Church Extension Board was held. The service was conducted by Rev. J. D. Harper, Chairman of the Board. He made the statement that the General Church Extension Board has over $4,000,000 invested in church buildings and parsonages; but still there are 2800 homeless congregations.

Third Day.

Bishop Candier said in his exposition of the Scriptures at the opening of the Conference that half the disciples came from the obscure little place of Bethesda, and on this account Bethesda became more important than Jerusalem. The aggregate population does not amount to much in spiritual matters. The spiritual power of the eighteenth century was not in London, but in the parsonage at Epworth. The ministry is not a lucrative profession, neither does it depend upon the intellectual sphere for power; it appeals to the human conscience. The disciples did not know much, but they had been with Jesus. We should not despise the intellectual sphere, but it is not the source of our power.

The following were admitted on trial: James Lambuth Evans, William Ransom McPherson, and Robert L. Gilmer.

The following committee on evangelism was nominated by the Board of Missions and duly confirmed by the Conference: J. G. Snelling, W. W. Drake, R. O. Randle, Van Carter, H. N. Brown.

S. W. B. Colvin was readmitted into the Conference, being recommended by the Monroe District Conference.

The following local preachers were elected deacons: W. A. Hoffpauir and William Frank Henderson, Jr.

Under Question 22—"Are all the preachers blameless in their life and official administration?" the characters of J. A. Alford, G. D. White and W. J. Newsom were passed and they were continued in the class of the fourth year.

The following were recommended by the Committee on Conference Relations for the superannuate relation: J. F. Wynn, F. G. Hocutt, M. G. Jenkins, J. L. P. Sheppard, H. Armstrong, R. S. Isbell, J. F. Patterson, J. A. Parker, T. O. Randle, J. H. Brown, R. A. Davis, J. T. Sawyer, S. L. Riggs, and F. N. Sweeney.

Bishop Candier represented the interests of Palme College to the Conference in an effective manner.

Dr. Smith, the pastor of the Presbyterian Church of Shreveport, was introduced to the Conference. Mrs. Abel Bliss, the president of the Woman's Missionary Society of Louisiana, addressed the body regarding the work of the W. H. Wynn, president of the American Bible Society, spoke at some length.

Dr. H. H. Harrison, secretary of the Educational Department of the Board of Missions, was introduced to the Conference.

The following were elected to receive elder's orders: R. M. Brown, George P. H. J. Embree, C. L. Tucker, J. J. Holladay.

At the close of the Centenary luncheon was given at Barker's Hall, presided over by Dr. R. H. Wynn. Devotional speeches in reference to Centenary College were made by Dr. P. N. Parker, Dr. H. H. Harrison, Dr. P. S. Parker, and Dr. Stanswell Anderson.

At 4:30 p. m. in the afternoon the Laymen's meeting was held. W. S. Holmes presided over the gathering. Dr. L. L. McKeith read the Scriptures and Rev. J. A. Parker offered the prayer. Dr. R. H. Wynn spoke on the purpose and scope of the Laymen's Movement. R. O. Randle presented and carried the law of the Church regarding the Laymen's Movement. Enthusiastic speeches were also made by Rev. W. W. Drake, Rev. S. D. Roberts, T. L. Fulton, Rev. C. V. Breitkamp, and Van Carter.

Evening Session.

At 7:30 p. m. the Conference convened in special session to hear the report of the Board of Education. As Bishop Candler could not be present, he requested Dr. J. M. Henry to preside. After the devotional exercises the secretary read the report of the board, which contained resolutions to the effect that the Conference raise $100 during February and March of 1915 for the maintenance of Centenary College, and further proposed the launching of a campaign to obtain cash and subscriptions to be paid in the next five years to the amount of $25,000. Of this amount, it was proposed that $10,000 be used for building purposes at Centenary, and $15,000 be an endowment fund for Centenary. Dr. F. S. Parker had been requested to speak upon matters concerning Centenary College, and he delivered an effective speech. Rev. P. M. Brown, Rev. C. C. Miller and Judge A. J. Mum also made speeches. The resolutions were unanimously adopted.

Fourth Day.

After the devotional exercises, Bishop Candler announced the transfer of J. L. Williams, an elder, from the Texas Conference to the Louisiana Conference.

H. W. Jamieson was elected to elder's orders.

The name of C. M. Thompson was referred to the Committee on Conference relations. This Committee retired and reported that Brother Thompson had been recommended for the superannuation relation; the recommendation was sustained by the Conference.

The Conference adopted resolutions making it obligatory for the presiding elders to read and correct the statistical reports of the preachers in their districts before the secretaries give the statistical reports, in the aggregate, to the Conference.

After an address by the Bishop, the following were received into full connection by the Conference: W. B. Perritt, W. A. Mangum, C. E. Fike, J. L. Cady, W. E. Roberts and Sherbert Frazier.

The report of the Orphanage Board was read and it recommended an assessment of $12,000 for the year 1915. But the Conference voted to adopt the report without the assessment recommended. The Orphanage during the coming year will collect its funds by voluntary contributions from the various churches.

The quadrennial boards, nominated by the presiding elders, and elected by the Conference, are as follows:

Board of Missions: (Clerical) R. H. Wynn, P. M. Brown, J. G. Snelling, H. N. Harrison, W. W. Holmes, A. I. Townsley, C. C. Miller; (Lay) Dr. J. L. Seale, P. K. Abel, S. H. Meyer, A. P. Holt, J. R. Abel, C. M. Noble, J. W. Tooke.

NORTH MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE PROCEEDINGS.

(Concluded from Last Week.)

Reported by Rev. Olin Ray.

Fifth Day.

The Conference was called to order by use of Hymn No. 19—"Come thou fount of every blessing," after which the devotional services were conducted by Rev. S. M. Thames. Dr. T. C. Wier leading the prayer.

The minutes of Saturday's session were read and approved.

An encouraging report from the Board of Missions was read by Rev. J. A. Hall which was followed by the treasurer's report read by Rev. W. L. Duren.

A report on the spiritual state of the Church was read by Rev. J. H. Smith.

A collection, amounting to $142.15, was taken and presented to Rev. S. M. Thames who had taken a superannuation relation.

Resolutions were passed (being presented by Rev. E. S. Lewis) by which a plan was inaugurated to secure more ample Sunday school and church facilities at Oxford, Miss., the seat of the State University.

The report of the committee on "Books and Periodicals" was read by Rev. H. G. Henderson. It commended highly service rendered to the Church by Dr. R. A. Meek as editor of the New Orleans Christian Advocate. Rev. W. W. Woolard, Rev. H. S. Spragins and J. D. Parbee were recommended as members of the publishing committee of the New Orleans Christian Advocate, and were elected with the adoption of the report.

Rev. T. H. Linscomb read the report of the Board of Education, in which our new University at Atlanta, Ga., was commended to our young ministers as a proper place to secure their theological training.

Bishop R. G. Waterhouse addressed the Conference in the interest of Paine College and a collection, amounting to more than $400, was taken for that institution.

The reports from the Epworth League Board, the Sunday School Board, the Church Extension Board and the Committees on the American Bible Society, Evangelism, Sabbath Observance and District Conference Records were read and adopted.

Mr. J. R. Bingham offered his resignation as a member of the Board of Church Extension, a trustee of Grenada College, a trustee of property at Junaluska, which was accepted.

Resolutions were read and passed by Conference expressing appreciation of the service rendered by Mr. Bingham in these responsible positions.

Resolutions were passed by the Conference requesting the Board of Supervisors to prevent the hanging, which was soon to take place in Starkville, from being public.

The Conference adjourned, with the benediction by Bishop Waterhouse, to convene at 2 o'clock p. m.

Afternoon Session.

The Conference was called to order at 2 o'clock with Rev. J. W. Dorman in the chair.

"A charge to keep I have" was sung, and prayer was offered by Rev. W. N. Duncan.

"How firm a foundation" was then sung.

The minutes of the morning session were read and approved.

New Albany was selected as the place for holding the next session of the Conference.

The Bishop took the chair.

Dr. Henderson read a resolution of thanks which embraced the following items:

(1) To Rev. T. H. Linscomb for his many kindnesses as host of the Conference.

(2) To the choir for its splendid music.

(3) To the other pastors in the town for the use of their houses of worship.

(4) To President G. R. Hightower for the pleasant afternoon at the College.

(5) To the Commercial Appeal, Times-Picayune, the New Orleans Christian Advocate, and the local papers for their reports of the Conference.

(6) To the railroads for their reduced rates.

(7) To the Cumberland Telephone Company for the free use of their lines.

(8) To the banks that handled the checks of the Conference.

(9) To the Secretary and helpers for their service, and to the kind people of Starkville, who entertained the Conference so royally.

Dr. W. T. Johnson, of Greenwood, was elected to fill the vacancy in the Board of Church Extension caused by the resignation of J. R. Bingham, and J. T. Thomas, of Grenada, was elected to fill the vacancy in the Board of Trust of Grenada College.

Mrs. T. W. Woodward addressed the Conference briefly in a happy manner. She spoke of what the Conference had meant to Starkville, and invited its members to hold the session of 1915 in that city.

Statistical Report.

Number of local preachers, 85; number of members, 56,768; number of infants baptized, 455; number of adults baptized, 2223; number of Epworth Leagues, 28; number of League members, 2447; number of Sunday schools, 522; number of Sunday school officers and teachers, 3257; number of Sunday school scholars, 36,471; collected for superannuates, $6747; collected for Foreign Missions, $8076; collected for Home Missions, $5707; collected for Church Extension, $4957; paid for the support of presiding elders, $16,044; paid for the support of pastors, $129,777; paid for the support of Bishops, $1942; number of societies, 624; number of houses of worship, 573; value of houses of worship, $1,211,152; indebtedness houses of worship, $55,114; number pastoral charges, 156; number of parsonages, 150; value of parsonages, $301,460; number of churches damaged, 4; amount of damage, $3375; insurance carried, $517,924; premiums paid, $3298; loss collected, $916.

Bishop Waterhouse read the 13th Chapter of First Corinthians, after which several voluntary prayers were offered, and the concluding prayer was made by Rev. J. C. Park.

The minutes of the afternoon session were read and approved.

The congregation joined in singing "Am I a soldier of the cross?"

After a few remarks to the preachers, the Bishop read the appointments.

"ADMIRABLE."

My Dear Dr. Meek: Writing under this caption in a recent number of your paper, I said: "And let it be noted that the French lead the world in scientific activities and discoveries." After my article appeared the Atlantic Monthly for December came to hand containing a luminous article from John Trowbridge on "An Estimate of German Scientific Culture," in which he asserts that England and France both lead Germany in these matters, concluding with this statement: "In scientific culture, exemplified by the use of the imagination; by mathematical knowledge, and by philosophical insight leading to the performance of crucial experiments, Great Britain stands first."

The statement which I made was based on general information, and my error was one of degree; but I do not wish to stand sponsor for any affirmation that is not strictly correct; therefore I hasten to clear the matter up.

The Atlantic introduces Mr. Trowbridge in these words: "A physicist of international reputation, now living in retirement after a long and distinguished career, is president of the American Academy of Arts and Sciences." His article will repay any who may read it.

THE MISSISSIPPI ANNUAL CONFERENCE.

(Reported by Rev. O. S. Lewis.)

First Day.

The one hundredth and first session of the Mississippi Annual Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, met in the Methodist Church in Columbia, Miss., at 9 o'clock a. m. Wednesday, Dec. 9, 1914, with Bishop Collins Denny presiding.

It was fitting indeed that this session of the Conference should be held at Columbia. Just 100 years ago at the old Ford homestead which still stands near Columbia, the second session of the Mississippi Conference was held. One of the most beautiful and commodious houses of worship in the Conference had just been completed, with ample facilities for all the work of the Conference. The hospitality of the good people of Columbia has long been recognized far and wide and fully met all expectations at this time. The Conference host, Rev. M. B. Sharbrough, was painstaking in his care for the comfort and needs of the brethren. The Methodist people of Columbia are fortunate in having him as their preacher and he is equally fortunate in having his lot cast in the midst of such a loyal and hospitable people.

This was Bishop Denny's first visit to the Mississippi Conference. He soon made a most favorable impression on all the brethren, and the Conference was not long in finding out the reason for the overwhelming vote he received for Bishop in 1910. With remarkable ease and dignity, he presided with the authority of one born to command.

Bishop Denny announced Hymn Number 499—"Talk with us, Lord, thy self reveal, while here on earth we rove," etc., and soon the spacious auditorium of the newly erected house of God was resounding with the melody of song that can only come from an Annual Conference of Methodist preachers. They heat the world for singing and preaching and sing their best at an Annual Conference. The jarring notes of discord that may have been heard at times during the year with all irritable feelings engendered, are lost and forgotten in the glad hallelujah bursts of song and praise.

The Bishop's prayer, following the song, lifted us still nearer to God, who spoke to our hearts and made us feel the kindling of his love. For the Scripture lesson the Bishop read the 4th Chapter of 1 John, and made a brief but a most lucid and suggestive talk on the first six verses—"The Trial of the Spirits." In the trial of the spirits the test is the recognition of the deity of Christ; the consensus of the Christian Church and Apostolic testimony, which is not to be lightly brushed aside; and the warfare against the evil one which culminates in victory by the overcoming power of Faith.

Most all the preachers and lay delegates answered present at roll call. Dr. A. F. Watkins was unanimously re-elected Secretary of the Conference, with G. S. Harmon and John A. Moore as assistant secretaries. J. L. Neil, G. P. McKeown and J. L. Decell were elected statistical secretaries.

Question 22 was called and the characters of the presiding elders were passed and they reported for their districts as follows:

R. Selby, of the Brookhaven District:

The district parsonage had been practically made new; an educational campaign, conducted in the early part of the year, proved satisfactory. A program for an every-member canvass was being prepared for the early part of next year; there had been 454 accessions on profession of faith and 558 otherwise; 214 adults and 111 infants had been baptized. The preachers and laymen had been loyal. The reports generally were better than last year.

Bishop Denny inquired particularly into the work of the Sunday schools and emphasized the great importance of the Sunday schools and training of the children.

G. H. Thompson, of the Hattiesburg District:

Twenty-five pastors working faithfully. W. D. Dominick had moved to California. J. S. Parker was confined to his bed in the S. Mississippi Infirmary. Eight hundred members received. One new church organized, and one taken over from the Methodist Protestants. Seven charges had reported in full. Missionary and Sunday school work good. New Church completed at Sumrall; several repaired. At this point Bishop Denny deplored the fact that fewer infants were being baptized than adults and stressed the need of dedicating the children to God in infancy.

P. D. Hardin, of the Jackson District:

Gracious revivals all over the district: between 800 and 1000 additions. Sunday school attendance increased. The pastors had been faithful. Seven charges had reported in full. A year of church-building and debt-paying, the district parsonage debt being paid among others. New parsonage bought by the Capitol Street Church and one built at Rankin Street (both of these charges are in Jackson). Galloway Memorial Church supporting one missionary, wife and child.

At the conclusion of Brother Hardin's report, the Bishop took up the subject of the mid-week prayer meeting and made suggestions as to how to increase the attendance and make this service a more powerful factor in the life of the Church.

J. T. Leggett, of the Meridian District:

Between 800 and 1000 conversions. Splendid revivals; 500 accessions on profession of faith and 300 otherwise. More adults than infants baptized. Sunday school enrollment three-fourths of church membership. Finances ahead of last year.

The Bishop inquired about the number of family altars and stressed the importance of pastors looking after this means of grace in the membership of the Church.

H. W. Featherston, of the Newton District:

Best year as presiding elder. Serves the largest district in the Conference. About 1000 conversions and reclamations; 700 accessions. Seven churches built. Epworth Leagues increased from 14 to 23. Woman's Missionary Societies increased from 11 to 28, due largely to a Missionary Institute. Sunday schools increased from 74 to 81. Choctaw membership increased and developed; 3 candidates for the foreign field; 16 men licensed; 11 recommended to this Conference and 2 to other Conferences.

T. W. Adams, of the Port Gibson District:

Six hundred gain in membership. This district comprises the sparsely settled part of the Conference. Many have moved away within the last few years. A gain of 300, however. More infants baptized and family altars erected than last year. Financially ahead of last year.

Bishop Denny asked what kind of books the people were reading and exhorted on the importance of good and wholesome literature.

W. H. Huntley, of the Sea Shore District:

This is the Piney Woods District. Population somewhat shifting, due to so many being employees of saw mills and other public works. Report equal to last year. Increase in baptism of infants. Sunday schools improving. Built and completed a number of churches, including Columbia, Moss Point, Gulfport, and Biloxi. Brother M. L. Burton's work especially commended as excellent in spite of affliction. Immigrants being provided for. Seaman's Bethel at Gulfport doing a great work.

Brother Sharbrough was recognized and in a very happy manner presented to Bishop Denny two gavels made from wood taken from the house of Rev. John Ford, where the second session of the Mississippi Conference was held one hundred years ago. One gavel is to be kept by the Bishop and the other is to be used during this Conference and kept in the archives of the Columbia Methodist Church. The Bishop responded in an appropriate manner.

The roll of superannuates was called and the following were present: Ira B. Robertson, W. W. Simmons, L. J. Jones, H. P. Lewis, Sr., G. W. Huff, G. A. Ellis, R. Bradley.

When the name of C. T. Noble was called, the presiding elder, G. H. Thompson, spoke of his affliction and of his efforts to pay the indebtedness on his home of a little more than one hundred dollars. On motion of Dr. I. W. Cooper, a collection was taken, amounting to $107.50.

The Secretary read a letter from J. J. Gollen, asking for re-instatement in the effective list and a transfer to the New Mexico Conference.

The name of T. B. Clifford was called and his credentials were presented and accepted by the Conference.

Rev. Mr. Bolling, pastor of the local Presbyterian Church, Dr. W. F. McMurry, Dr. Jno. M. Moore, Dr. J. M. Culbreth, Rev. G. W. Bachman, Dr. Wilson, Dr. W. G. Henry, and Mr. C. O. Chalmers, were each introduced to the Conference.

Announcements were made and after singing hymn No. 547 the benediction was pronounced by Bishop Denny.

Second Day—Thursday Morning.

The Conference opened promptly at 8:45, with the singing of the hymn, "How firm a foundation," etc. Rev. T. B. Holloman led in prayer. Bishop Denny again read the fourth chapter of the First Epistle of John, commenting on the part beginning with the 7th verse, which sets forth the Divinity of Love. The origin or fountain is God; the manifestation or source is found in the gift of God; the issue is the possibility in the perfection of God's love.

Religion must meet the emotional as well as the intellectual needs. Many speak of the golden days as being in the past. There never were any golden days. There are more opportunities, incentives and ability to follow the truth to-day than ever before. There were many false prophets in the days of the apostles and there are many to-day. Let us take care that we do not follow them.

The secretary read the minutes of the previous session and the roll was called of those absent the first day. In accordance with a standing rule of the Conference the roll of all the effective preachers was called and those who had banded in their reports answered "Yes."

F. L. Applewhite and M. L. Burton were referred to the committee on Conference Relations for the supernumerary relation. The brethren regret that the condition of Brother Burton's health is such that he had to give up his work and deeply sympathize with him in his affliction. Rev. J. S. Parker, W. D. Dominick, C. H. Ellis, E. H. Moulter, R. F. Witt, J. J. Golden were referred to the same committee for the superannuate relation.

A telegram bringing greetings to the Conference from Rev. D. Scarborough, of the Los Angeles Conference, formerly a member of this Conference, was read.

Mrs. Jno. D. Hammond was introduced to the Conference by Bishop Denny, and made a very touching appeal in behalf of the colored people, with special reference to the needs of Paine College, at Augusta, Ga. Subscriptions were made to the amount of $730, and a cash contribution of $43.80 given to Mrs. Hammond. Dr. Watkins spoke in behalf of a book written by Mrs. Hammond.

Dr. J. M. Culbreth, assistant secretary of the Epworth League, was introduced and spoke of the work of the Epworth League. We were glad to note the great forward movement of this work since the last General Conference. There should be a larger advance in the League work of the Mississippi Conference if the suggestions of Brother Culbreth are followed.

Rev. H. M. Ellis read the hospital report. The report of the Committee appointed at the previous session to make an equitable apportionment of all assessments to the various districts, was read and adopted. It was found that a satisfactory distribution of the Conference assessments have been made to all the districts with the exception of the Port Gibson District, which was thought to have been assessed a larger per cent proportionately than the others.

On motion of Dr. A. F. Watkins, the Educational Anniversary was postponed until Friday night.

Dr. J. M. Sullivan and Prof. Harrell, of Millsaps College, were introduced to the Conference.

Report Number One of the Board of Education was read and adopted.

Announcements were made, and the song "How glorious and majestic the home" was sung, and the benediction was pronounced by Bishop Denny. Friday, the Third Day.

The Conference opened by singing hymn No. 154, after which Rev. W. M. Saunders led in prayer. Bishop Denny read the first six verses of the fourth chapter of 1 John, and made a talk on how to distinguish between the genuine and false prophets. The morning talk, which was a feature of the Conference, proved to be an impressive and helpful, and with singing looked forward to by the brethren.

The minutes of the previous session were read and approved. A message was read stating that the crisis of Rev. E. E. Meigs had led the night before. The Conference voted to send a message of condolence.

Rev. P. D. Harrell presented the request of C. N. Gaze for a location, which was granted.

Rev. C. C. Gibson was granted a location at his own request that he might give more attention to the needs of his family.

L. E. Wynn was also granted a location.

The class of the first year was called and the following were passed in character and advanced to the class of the second year: K. A. Allums, R. E. Selby, C. H. Strait, E. H. Cooley, P. H. Grice, and W. G. Walters.

The class for admission was then called to the chapel, addressed by the Bishop, and, having answered the required disciplinary questions, were admitted into full connection. The following composed the class: A. S. Oliver, A. S. Byrd, A. W. O'Bryant, H. R. McKee, R. P. Harrell, H. M. Johnson, C. E. Downer, P. P. Daniel, S. E. Flurry, W. B. Alsworth, and T. A. Ferguson. The address of the Bishop to this class was one of the main features of the Conference. It was strong, clear and masterful, setting forth in a most impressive way the high and holy calling of one entering the Christian ministry.

The Third Year Class was called and the following were passed in character and advanced to the class of the fourth year: J. H. Moore, C. A. Schultz, E. L. Sutherland, William N. Thomas, W. B. Waldrop, and H. N. McKibben.

The Class of the fourth year was called and the following were passed in character and were elected to elder's orders: A. J. Davis, J. L. Decell, W. W. Nelson, J. L. Smith, H. K. McKee.

Question one was called—"Who are admitted on trial?" and the following were admitted: J. T. Weems, S. E. Stepp, H. C. Cassels, J. H. Jolly, R. H. Klegg, M. W. Porter, A. A. Sims, T. B. Winstead, W. D. Barrett. At this point quite a discussion arose on the advisability of admitting so many men on trial whose educational preparation was limited.

The need of a better trained and more efficient ministry is becoming more and more apparent as we face the tremendous issues of the present and future. The discussion was engaged in by a number of the brethren, some appealing to the sympathies of the brethren for those coming up for admission, and others making a plea to stand by our better judgment and to remember that the people need sympathy.

The hour for adjournment having long passed, the remainder of the 18 applying for admission had to wait another day to find what would be done with their applications.

Announcements were made, the hymn, "Am I a soldier of the cross," was sung, and the benediction pronounced by Bishop Denny.

Saturday Morning, the Fourth Day.

"How firm a foundation" was sung as the opening hymn. W. H. Saunders led in prayer. Bishop Denny continued the study in the first six verses of the 4th Chapter of 1 John, and made one of the best talks heard during the Conference.

The minutes of the previous session were read and approved. A communication from the Mississippi W. C. T. U. was referred to the Committee on Temperance.

On motion by Dr. H. W. Featherstun, the Conference voted that W. B. Williams be granted work as a supply.

Question One was resumed, and S. T. Moody and M. W. David, from the Seashore District, were admitted on trial.

Rev. Paul D. Harrell presented a request for the restoration of the credentials of H. M. Hunnicutt, and after some argument pro and con, it was granted by a vote of 74 to 49.

Rev. Chas. O. Miller, a local preacher, was elected to local elder's orders.

Prof. G. L. Harrell, of Millsaps College, was elected lay leader for the Conference.

Question 52 was called—"Where shall the next session of the Conference be held?" Laurel, being nominated, and ably represented by Dr. H. W. Featherstun and J. L. Neill, was selected.

Dr. J. R. Stewart, representing the Superannuate Endowment Fund, was introduced and addressed the Conference concerning the work and progress of this fund.

Report No. 1 of the Board of Missions was read and adopted, recommending W. M. Sullivan, C. W. Crisler, and M. M. Black, as a committee on evangelism.

A resolution was read and adopted thanking Mr. and Mrs. G. Chandler for the generous gift of $10,000 to our new university at Atlanta, Ga., and expressing the appreciation of the name, "Emory University."

Dr. E. B. Chappel, Sunday School Editor, was introduced to the Conference, and made a statement concerning our Sunday school work and literature. The National Board is most efficiently organized and our Sunday school literature is of the very highest order, meeting all the needs of a modern Sunday school.

The credentials of R. W. Thurman and R. B. Chisholm, having been furnished, were presented and accepted by the Conference.

N. B. Harmon spoke in behalf of the book containing the great addresses of the late Bishop Charles B. Galloway, and urged its circulation. The proceeds of the sale of said book will go to the Galloway Memorial Superannuate Fund. He declared this to be a great work by a great man and serving a great and worthy cause.

Dr. Henry Flowers read the report of the Hospital Committee, after which Rev. H. M. Ellis, the field secretary, spoke in behalf of that worthy cause. Fine progress has been made during the past year. The fourth Sunday in February was designated as Hospital Day and each Sunday school and congregation on every church will be expected to make a contribution to the hospital.

Dr. Brown, agent for the American Bible Society, was introduced and addressed the Conference in the interest of his work. Unprecedented progress is being made.

The report of the Publishing Committee was read by C. M. Chayman, and was adopted. The Methodist Quarterly Review was criticized for allowing certain statements contrary to our Methodist standards to be made within its columns without being combated.

A motion was made and carried to adjourn to meet in afternoon session. Announcements for Sunday's services were made as follows:

Methodist Church:

Love Feast at 9 a. m., conducted by Rev. W. W. Simmons.

Sermon at 11 a. m. by Bishop Denny, followed by ordination of deacons and elders.

Memorial session at 2:30 p. m.

Sermon by H. M. Ellis at 7:15 p. m.

Baptist Church:

11 a. m., Rev. W. H. LaPrade.

7:15 p. m., Rev. W. G. Henry.

Colored Baptist.

11 a. m., Rev. H. A. Gathin.

7:15 p. m., Rev. D. E. Kelly.

Laurel—Main St.

11 a. m., Rev. J. S. Purcell.

"All hail the power of Jesus' name" was sung and the benediction was pronounced by Bishop Denny.

Saturday—2:30 P. M.

No. 1 was sung as the opening hymn. Rev. W. H. Saunders conducted the devotional exercises. W. M. Sullivan led in prayer. The minutes of the previous session were read and approved.

A resolution changing the time for holding the Sacramental service during the Conference session was read and adopted.

Sunday school report No. 1 was read by B. F. Lewis and was adopted.

W. C. Terry read the report of the committee on Conference Relations, which was adopted.

Report of the Epworth League Board was read by B. W. Lewis, and was adopted.

W. B. Hogg read the report of the committee on the state of the Church, which was adopted.

The Committee on Lay Activities reported and the following Board was elected:

G. L. Harrell, Conference Lay Leader, Jackson; District Leaders: V. D. Youngblood, Brookhaven District; Wesson; D. R. Campbell, Hattiesburg District; Sumrall; J. M. Sullivan, Jackson District; Jackson; J. W. Beeson, Meridian District; Meridian; P. L. Blackwell, Newton District; Montrose; M. M. Satterfield, Port Gibson District; Port Gibson; J. C. Ross, Seashore District, Gulfport.

The report on temperance was read and adopted.

The report of the American Bible Society was read and adopted.

The report on Sabbath observance was read and adopted. Rev. M. B. Sharrbrough spoke to the report, deploring Sunday excursions.

The report of the Church Extension Board was read and adopted.

The secretary read the report on the Orphans' Home, after which Rev. W. M. Williams, the efficient manager of that institution, addressed the Conference relative to his work.

Cant. Ratliff, an honored layman of the Baptist Church, was introduced and given the privilege of the floor to speak in the interest of the Anti-Saloon League work.

Rev. G. H. Galloway introduced a resolution relative to the need of a training school for Christian workers, which recommended the appointment of a committee to investigate the possibilities of meeting this need. It was adopted.

A resolution by B. F. Jones relative to the endowment fund was adopted.

Rev. J. L. Peebles made his report as Conference evangelist. In spite of severe afflictions he did fine work.

The report of the Auditing Committee was read and adopted. On motion of W. B. Jones, W. T. Griffin and T. B. Cottrell were re-elected as members of this committee.

The committee on District Conference records made its report. It was adopted.

The report of the Galloway Memorial Fund was read and adopted.

J. S. Neill read the statistical report. Bishop Denny called attention to the vast difference between the Church membership and Sunday school membership, and urged the importance of securing a better Sunday school attendance.

Question 22 was resumed, "Are all the preachers blameless in their life and official administration?" By districts the roll of preachers was called, their characters passed, and their reports made in rapid order. Bishop Denny called the attention of the people to the significance of this question and of its uniqueness in Methodism.

In connection with the report of Dr. A. F. Watkins, the fact was brought out that 19 young men were in school at Millsaps College preparing for the ministry, and of that number only 6 were from the Mississippi Conference. A stirring appeal was made for better preparation for the ministry.

"Rock of Ages" was sung. Bishop Denny pronounced the benediction, and the Conference stood adjourned to meet in memorial session Sunday afternoon.

Sunday, the Fifth Day.

As usual, Sunday was the great day of the Conference. A very large number attended the Love Feast conducted by Rev. W. W. Simmons before the 11 o'clock service.

Promptly at 11 o'clock Bishop Denny announced the opening hymn, No. 577. The Bishop read, or rather recited, the 26th Chapter of Acts. Just preceding the sermon the congregation stood and sang "I love to tell the story." It was a thrilling sight to see and hear that great assembly of people, which filled the utmost capacity of the vast auditorium, singing that great hymn. While the congregation was still under the spell of the song that had just been sung, the Bishop announced his text, Rom. 1:14: "I am debtor both to the Greeks and to the Barbarians; both to the wise and the unwise." Words are inadequate to describe the sermon and its effect on the congregation, as for an hour and forty minutes the people listened with upturned and eager faces to the speaker. Taking up the life of St. Paul, the salient features of that life were presented in a setting of word painting and apt illustration unmatched for its eloquence.

The lessons of the life and labors of the great Apostle were brought out and applied in a vivid and impressive manner.

It was a great sermon from every standpoint. The character of St. Paul was made to shine out in true splendor and magnitude, as the full significance of his purpose to pay his debt wherever he went, regardless of persecution and suffering, was set forth. All his appointments were hard, but he never murmured or refused to go. There is no doubt about the sermon doing great good, and we all felt that we had not had such a hard time after all.

Touching indeed was the story of the preacher in Oklahoma who reported to Bishop Denny that his work only paid $120 during the year, and out of that he had to support a wife and six children. Unable to keep a horse, he had walked his circuit even when the weather was 30 degrees below zero, and in the face of a situation like that asked the Bishop to send him back to the same place, as he knew more about the people and could do them more good than anyone else. This was sublime heroism, and incidentally a refutation of the charge that preachers preach only for money.

Following the sermon, the ordination of deacons and elders took place in an impressive manner.

The following were ordained deacons: A. S. Oliver, H. R. McKee, H. M. Johnson, C. E. Downer, W. B. Alsworth, T. A. Ferguson, A. W. O'Bryant, A. H. Steele, W. H. Young.

Those ordained elders were: A. J. Davis, J. L. Decell, W. W. Nelson, J. L. Smith, H. K. McKee, C. O. Miller was ordained a local elder.

Memorial Service.

At 3:30 p. m. on Sunday, in the Methodist Church the memorial service was held. Rev. B. F. Jones presiding. The 21st question was asked, "What preachers have died during the year?" The name of R. D. Norsworthy was read. Rev. N. B. Harmon read the memoir of Brother Norsworthy. O. L. Peebles, P. H. Howse, T. B. Cottrell, Ira B. Robertson, T. B. Holloman, E. H. Mounger, H. B. Watkins, M. B. Sharrbrough, L. J. Jones, B. W. Lewis, and W. M. Williams each spoke in loving appreciation of the life and influence of Brother Norsworthy.

Monday, the Sixth Day.

The Conference convened promptly at 8:30 a. m. Rev. H. P. Lewis, Sr., conducted the devotional exercises. "A charge to keep I have" was sung, and Rev. G. H. Galloway led in prayer.

The minutes of the sessions of Saturday afternoon and Sunday afternoon were read and approved.

Bishop Denny announced the transfer of O. C. SeEVERS to the Florida Conference.

He then read the formal statement of his ordination of the deacons and elders on Sunday.

The report of the committee on the Washington City Church was read.

Report No. 2 of the Sunday School Board was read and adopted.

Rev. J. M. Morse announced that on Saturday it was found that $800 was lacking on the Conference Claimants assessments and that $600 was raised throughout the Conference among the laymen. He asked for the remaining $200 to be paid or pledged, which was done in a little while.

A resolution requesting the College of Bishops to hold the Annual Conference at an earlier date was read and adopted.

A resolution expressing an appreciation of the work of Rev. G. W. Bachman was read and adopted.

The report of the Board of Education was read and adopted.

The report of the Board of Missions was read and adopted.

A resolution of thanks to those contributing to the Conference Claimants' Fund was adopted.

The report of the Joint Board of Finance was read and adopted.

The report of Board of Lay Activities was read and adopted.

A resolution of thanks to the good people of Columbia for hospitality; to the Conference host, Rev. M. B. Sharbrough; to other Churches; to the railroads; to the banks; and to the press, for appreciated courtesies, was adopted.

Miss Emily O'Rourke, stenographer, was given a special vote of thanks.

The secretary read a report on the change of charges. There were an unusual number of changes.

Statistical Report.

The secretary read the nominations for the Quadrennial Boards and they were confirmed.

A recess of 10 minutes was taken to give a chance for the new boards to organize.

"Blest be the tie that binds" was then sung with great feeling, and Rev. M. L. Burton led in earnest prayer.

Bishop Denny expressed his appreciation of the brotherly treatment accorded him and to each other by the members of the Conference and made an appropriate talk prior to the reading of the appointments.

Question 53 was called and the appointments read.

The minutes of the morning session were read and approved.

After some announcements were made, the Doxology was sung and benediction pronounced by Bishop Denny.

MEETING OF MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE HISTORICAL SOCIETY.

This body met in the spacious auditorium of the Columbia Methodist Church on Tuesday evening, Dec. 8. Rev. T. B. Holloman presided. Rev. R. Bradley led in prayer. The object of the meeting was stated by Rev. T. B. Holloman. Dr. Robert Ford was then introduced and read a highly interesting paper on the History of the Methodist Church in Marion County during the past hundred years. We trust that this paper will be published in the Advocate.

Rev. W. M. Williams was introduced and gave an interesting account of his experiences in connection with his pastorate in Columbia a number of years ago. It was during his pastorate that the Columbia Church began to take on new life, until to-day it is one of the very best churches in the Mississippi Conference. The succeeding pastors have added greatly to the progress made.

Rev. H. P. Lewis was then called on to relate his experiences as pastors in Columbia 55 years ago. His interesting account was quite an enjoyable feature of the evening.

POSITION WANTED.

By man 42 years of age; has had 22 years steady employment in store as salesman, etc.; part of this time was in drug store (but not registered); at present employed in general store. Is a member of Methodist Church, having served as steward and general willing worker for years. Has a family, all members of Church. Would like to secure position in one of the following towns, or similar country, viz: Ruston, Homer, Minden, Mansfield, Many, Leesville, etc. Can furnish references from present or past employers; has never been discharged. Can make change on or before Jan. 1st. Address, W. M. Hunt, Mer Rouge, La.

DISEASE IN WAR.

It is well established that there has rarely been a conflict of any duration in which at least four men have not perished from disease to every one from bullets. It was left to Japan to demonstrate that a proper army sanitation system could so reduce the number destroyed by sickness, that the ratio of those who died from disease to those who died from battle casualties was as 1 to 3.5. Even so, out of 77,238 dead, 21,559 died from disease. The loss of life in the Russo-Japanese war, contrasting it with other wars, has been recently commented upon as follows:

"In the Russo-Turkish war, 80,000 men died from disease and 20,000 from wounds. It is asserted by eminent authority that in six months of the Crimean campaign, the allied forces lost 50,000 from disease, and only 20,000 from bullets. A man who remembered that campaign, an ex-president of the New York Academy of Music, told me that he had seen whole regiments die from disease, without ever reaching the firing line. In our war with Mexico, in the 1800's, the proportion of losses was about three from disease to one from bullets, and in our great Civil War, nearly the same proportion obtained. In round numbers, of the hundreds of thousands of fatalities in that conflict, nearly three-quarters of them resulted from disease. No lesson seems to have been learned from these frightful experiences, for later statistics show no improvement. In the French campaign in Madagascar, in 1894, 140,000 men were sent to the front, of whom 29 were killed in action, and 7200 perished from preventable disease. In the Boer war in South Africa, the English losses from disease were simply frightful, greater even than in our Civil War. But the crowning piece of imbecility was reserved for our war with Spain, when, in 1898, more than thirteen men were needlessly sacrificed to ignorance, and incompetency for every one who died from battle casualties, and that, too, in a war which really lasted but six weeks.—The Presbyterian.

GRENADA COLLEGE DAY.

The Methodists of North Mississippi have in Grenada College their only institution for the education of their young women. It was bought and paid for more than twenty years ago. Since that time no special collections have been taken for it, nor have its needs been especially pressed in any way. A year ago it became necessary to have more room. The Conference authorized the Board of Trustees to provide it.

On the north of the campus lay a splendid tract of two acres on which stood a modern cottage and a colonial-style mansion with room for 24 students. This had long been covered for the college, but had not been on the market. It having been in the hands of one family for more than 64 years. Last January, it was bought for $14,000, with the expectation of putting an agent into the field to collect the money. This could not be done. A note on the purchase for $4000 is due on Jan. 15, 1915. It must be met.

The recent Conference met upon Sunday, Jan. 19, 1915, as "Grenada College Day," and directed all the pastors to take collections on that day for the school. Now let everybody help. The need is urgent. The amount is not large. The money is not for running expenses. In the four years under the present management, more than $14,000 in cash have been expended for improvements and additions. Our girls are worthy of the very best. All that we are asking now is for room to shelter them, so that we may grow up unencumbered with debt. More girls registered this fall than could have been accommodated in all our buildings had not the financial panic prevented their coming. When it passes, all the room of all the schools in Mississippi will be in demand at once. Let the Methodists be ready for their share of this work. Cordially and fraternally,

J. R. COUNTISS.

A FORWARD MOVEMENT.

Dear Dr. Meek: The Evangelistic Committee, appointed at the last session of the North Mississippi Annual Conference, are anxious to see the spirit of evangelism revived among us this year, so as to make this the greatest year in our history in winning souls and building up the kingdom of Christ.

This should begin right in the beginning of the new year. This work demands haste. It should begin with the presiding elders and pastors and leading laymen of the Church and, if these catch the spirit of evangelism, the people will follow. They are needing it, expecting it, hoping and praying for it and we must have it or fail in the great work to which our Lord has called us.

Please allow me to suggest that the presiding elders arrange, in connection with the meeting of the district stewards, an evangelistic program for two full days, which every pastor and official layman shall be urged to attend and spend the time in preaching, praying and planning for a year of apostolic evangelism and power in his district; then give these men some special work during the year. Let him secure the names of all the pastors and laymen who will conduct revival service, and the time they are willing to give, and so distribute them as to reach every congregation in his district with a sweeping revival.

May I suggest also that the pastors who are in the stations be sent out into the interior to help the men in these places? They are needed.

If the presiding elder will give me the time and place of meeting, some member of this committee will be there to render any assistance for the furtherance of this important work.

W. S. LAGRONE.

CONFERENCE EVANGELISM.

By Rev. J. A. Baylor, D.D.

The General Conference of 1914 provided definitely for Conference evangelism by adding paragraph 412 in the Book of Discipline. This paragraph grew out of activities already begun in various parts of the Union. It is not therefore a mere theory, but is based upon experience.

There are no accidents and organized scheme of Conference Evangelism in the Holston Conference for four years. It has been from the beginning almost entirely in harmony with the legislation recently enacted. The essential features of the plan which have been a central committee with an executive officer designated Secretary of Evangelism to the Conference; a district committee in each district of which the presiding elder is chairman and the definite enrollment of the members through the lay leader of the Conference. The work of the central committee has been in general to magnify evangelism as the chief work of the Church. The greatest positive stress has been laid upon personal evangelism, making soul winning the proof of a divinely called ministry. Books calculated to inspire and instruct in revival work have been diligently circulated, such as Wesley's Journal, Pastoral and Personal Evangelism by Goodell, Finney's Annals, by and Lectures, and Revivals of Religion by Holbert. Observation has shown that in almost every case where a pastor reads the story of great revival success, he goes out to duplicate it in some degree. The work has been diligently reported in the Conference organ. It has been given great prominence in the various institutes of the Conference. Especially have the Annual Conference occasions been planned to magnify the revival work and promote it. Some Conferences in recent years have been visited with remarkable power.

What of the results? It is hard to state adequately all that is suggested by this question. One grand general result is a sustained and growing revival throughout the Conference. For the last four or five years, the number of conversions reported has never fallen below ten thousand, and has often been twelve thousand and above. The number ran above thirteen thousand this year. Accessions to the Church by profession of faith and certificate have averaged eight thousand for the past four years. Some may object that accessions by certificate should not be taken into account in estimating revival results. The objection is not sound, however, as experienced pastors know. Every genuine revival brings back a large number of persons who have church certificates hidden away, out of date, and who but for the revival would be lost for all time to the Church. No year in this period has passed without a good net increase, although for two or three years of careless reporting prevented it from showing correctly in the minutes. The net gain for this year is 4,955, and for the six years past 15,289. Some again may want to know why with so many reported conversions and accessions, there is not even a larger net gain. The answer is that Methodism is still doing evangelistic work for other churches. All the converts do not unite with our Church. It is also true that many who are already in the Church find in the time of revival that they have never been truly converted. The removal of doubts, the lighting up of gloomy saints, the giving of the new song, is one of the blessed fruits of the work. Those of us who are on the ground are firmly persuaded that it is of God, and not mere enthusiasm. Before any thoughtless criticism is made it would be well to scan the figures in the General Minutes and see how many Conferences can show such a sustained record as Holston in the matter of increasing membership. Our experience has shown that every good cause is promoted by the revival. Best of all, our pastors almost without exception show growing efficiency as evangelists. Every pastor has been free to employ an evangelist if he desired; but as a matter of fact, few independent evangelists have had part in the work. Our Conference Evangelists have been for the most part from among the traveling preachers appointed for a time to this special field. The larger part of the work has been performed by the pastors, singly or working together. Is there need for such a movement? I would answer this by calling attention to the General Minutes for 1914. A strikingly large number of our largest Conferences report a very small increase in membership. The Baltimore Conference only 133, Missouri Conference 134, Kentucky Conference 150, Louisville Conference 41, St. Louis Conference 53, Tennessee Conference 312, Central Texas Conference 412, West Oklahoma Conference 444, North Mississippi Conference 451, Mississippi Conference 111, Northwest Texas Conference 471, Arkansas Conference 533. Others report an actual decrease. Is it not time to sound the alarm? Is it not time to return to first principles? Whatever else we may do, unless we actually win men and women from the world, we are losing ground. We must not overlook in our intensive movements the supreme need for recruiting the army of the Lord. Wytheville, Va.

BACK TO THE BIBLE.

When the Pharisees attempted to check the testimony of the multitude to the Messiahship of Jesus, our Lord answered that, "These should hold their peace, the stones in the wall would cry out." If the religious journals of to-day sink away into silence and compromise and concession, then the secular journals will cry out, and they are crying out. The following, from "Collier's Weekly," is to the point:

"Certain of our wise men of to-day have shaded away sin till it becomes an expression of temperament. They tell us that we sin because our grandfather sinned, and because our home is situated in the wrong block. These are clever words of clever comforters, and surely they ought to wipe away forever the tears from our eyes. But they do not speak to human need. They leave the life blighted and the heart ashamed. They leave the sinner one to continue in despair. He does not ask that his sin shall be explained away. He wishes forgiveness and a fresh start. In the Book, which is not read as once it was, there are no soft words about sin. But the way out is shown. And not only is forgiveness offered in this Book, but man's need of comfort is met. There is comfort in plenty. These writers knew the human heart. They saw man broken by his toil and his grief. And for this, too, they had the answer. They told of a Being of love, hidden just back of this rude and temporary universe. This love, they said, is conscious of how the littlest child and the old man are sick at heart for one to come close to their loneliness. When again will any company of writers say the things they know in such telling words, such pictures of humble life:—the boy far away from the faces of his home and far gone in shame—such true stories of lowly devotion breaking through into beauty? Much is swept away between us and them, but not one accent of Naomi's voice is lost to us, and still the "Turn again, my daughters," is as wistful as when it breathed through the alien's corn. What richer consolation are we hungry for that we turn from Judea? Has the human heart changed under the wear of the centuries, so that sin no longer seeks forgiveness, and grief has no need of a comforter? Have our ships sailed so far that they have revealed to us a braver continent than the fields where pain once reigned? Is our science so acute that it has banished failure from man's life? Is man's heart at last self-sufficient and all-sufficient?"

We would change the above title, and make it "Advance to the Bible." The departure from the Bible is a recession to heathen philosophy. And a return to the Bible will be a forward, not backward, movement. The pressure is increasing. The Church has too much repressed her testimony, restrained her voice, and neglected or forsaken her mission, and the burden of life is crying for the old reality, the old comfort and the old faith, the old hope and the old love of the Bible. If the Church does not give, they will go by her and get it.—The Presbyterian.

THE WORLD.

"The world is wet," said the little frog.
 "What isn't water is mostly bog."
 "O, not at all," said the little fly.
 "It's full of spiders, and very dry."
 "The world is dark," said the moth so white,
 "With many windows, and arcs and light."
 "My poor young friend, you have much to learn.
 The world is green," said the swaying fern.
 "O, listen dears," said the little lark.
 "It's wet and dry, and it's green and dark.
 To think that's all would be very wrong;
 It's arched with blue, and it's filled with song."

HOW FAR A SMILE GOES.

The girl who brought the eggs sat down on the porch, silent and sulky-looking. Mother took the basket to carry the eggs in.

"Smile at the little girl, and talk to her," she whispered to Elsie, in passing.

Elsie had an interesting book, and she wasn't anxious to leave it just then. But she obeyed, putting the book down, and smiling at the strange child.

"Do you like to read?" she said. "I've got a lovely book here. It's 'Under the Lilacs.' It used to belong to mother, but she has given me all her Alcott books now, because I'm old enough to read them myself."

"I've read 'Under the Lilacs,' too," said the girl, with her face lighting. "They were my aunt's, and she sent them to me last Christmas—the Alcott books I mean. It's sort of lonesome on the farm in the winter, and it was such fun to read those books."

"Oh, do you live on a farm?" cried Elsie, and the books were forgotten while she asked eager questions about the farm.

When mother came back with the basket and money, Elsie could hardly let the girl go. "Be sure and stop here next time you come in with things to sell," she called after her.

"Why did you want me to talk with her?" asked Elsie. "Oh, I'm glad I did; she's ever so nice, but I wondered why you wanted me to when I might not see her again."

"Because smiles and pleasant words reach such a long way," said mother. "It's a pity to lose the chance of sending one out on its travels. I want you to learn to look for these opportunities. I think right here I will tell you a little story about a smile and a few pleasant words that took a wonderful journey."

"Years ago, a woman used to go into a bookstore in Columbus, Ohio. There was a poor young clerk there, who was shy, and not popular, but Mrs. Swayne always took time to speak to him pleasantly. She never forgot him when she came in, and the boy, with a few intimates, counted her a friend."

"Afterwards, Mrs. Swayne's son, General Wagner Swayne, became commissioner of the Freedmen's Bureau after the Civil War. It was a hard place to fill, for he had to plan for the care of many of the colored people who were just out of slavery. But General Swayne had one good friend in Washington. Mr. Stanton, the Secretary of War, would go out of his way to help him. Other people called the Secretary of War stern, unapproachable, unkind; but to General Swayne he was all that was kind and helpful. Once General Swayne stopped at Mr. Stanton's office when on his way to the White House for a conference with the President."

"I haven't time to see any one," Secretary Stanton said to his clerk, when informed that someone wanted to see him.

"But it is General Swayne—"

"Oh, I will see General Swayne."

"When General Swayne came in, he couldn't help asking the question in his mind. 'Mr. Stanton,' he said, 'I don't understand your favors to me.'"

"The Secretary of War smiled. 'When I was a poor, lonely, struggling clerk, in Columbus, your mother sought me out, and, with her kind smiles and encouraging words, put new hope and ambition in me. Do you understand now? I remember your mother's smile.'

"And so you see, Elsie, when we set a smile or a kind word adrift, we never know how far it is going to travel, nor whom it will bless. We can only be sure that it will travel, and bless in some degree."

"Thank you for the story, mother, and I'll try to be on the lookout for opportunities to send some out."—Zella Margaret Walters, in Christian Standard.

THE STORY OF TWO POPPIES.

Who that has lived among the golden poppies of California can ever forget them? Edwin Markham has covered his pages with their golden glow. He summons men to these lovely poppy fields:

"Men that in the cities grind,
 Come before the heart is blind.
 Here is gold to labor for;
 Here is pillage worth a war!"

A happy war it was by which Luther Burbank waved his hand, and turned the yellow poppy crimson. Never until Burbank had a wild crimson poppy been seen. But now you may look on one side of Luther Burbank's yard, and see banked a hundred thousand of the wild, yellow-gold poppies, and on the other, a hundred thousand of the crimson ones massed together. Some people have called this transformation a miracle. It sounds simple enough when one learns how it was done. The keen eye of the great gardener noticed a faint, narrow streak of crimson one day in a little yellow poppy. He tied a string around this poppy to identify it. He saw the possibility of transforming its entire color. When the petals fell away, he saved the seed. From the seed the following spring brought forth several hundred new plants, many of them with the same little crimson touch. Those having the largest and brightest crimson marks were saved, and this process continued until one day a poppy bloomed of solid crimson, without a trace of its original yellow-gold. By saving and separating it has already produced sufficient seed to sow two hundred acres of crimson poppies. It was a simple experiment. It illustrates the methods of Luther Burbank, by which he bred spines out of the cactus and produced the most prolific and profitable food-plant in the world, by which he thickens the skins of the prune to give it shipping endurance, by which he bettered the potato, and fattened the walnut, and performed numerous other like miracles.

Is it not a parable of the work of grace in the human heart? Jesus touches the sinful heart, and, lo, it is transformed with light and love—Jesus, the great Gardener, the Pilot of the Galilean Lake, the Savior of the world! "Thou shalt call his name Jesus, for he shall save his people from their sins." But, notice—this touch of Jesus calls every one to do something for himself in the transforming process. How shall we develop a new life, a changed character? Wherever we see springing up this new purpose, this new ideal, this new love, do what Burbank did—tie a string around it. That's for remembrance. That is what mother did—she tied a string around your finger that you might not forget the errand. That is exactly what Paul does for his little children at Philippi. He says to them: "Whatsoever things are true, whatsoever things are honest, whatsoever things are just, whatsoever things are pure, whatsoever things are lovely, whatsoever things are of good report, if there be any virtue, if there be any praise, think on these things." "Think on these things." "Bringing every thought into captivity unto Jesus Christ." "Transformed by the renewing of your mind." Thus you may cultivate the garden of your own heart. Trusting to the sunshine of his grace, by thinking on the things which are true and pure you will grow day by day more and more like your Father who is in heaven; and men will look upon your life, and call it a miracle. It is the miracle of grace.—Northwestern Christian Advocate.

"WHERE IS THEIR CONSCIENCE?"

Under this caption, the Wesleyan Christian Advocate of December 11 says:

"Every now and then we get an order from some one who has been getting and reading the Wesleyan fourth after month saying, 'Discontinue my paper.' But there is no word indicating their desire or determination to settle up for the back dues. The proper thing to do when you discontinue your paper is to look on your label and see when your time expired and if you will discontinue send the amount due. Have a conscience. You are under the same obligation to pay for your paper as you are to pay your grocer."

This is quite pertinent. We dare say that every paper in the Church is very frequently treated in the manner described by our esteemed contemporary. To read a paper for several months and then order it discontinued without paying what is due for it, is a course of procedure that is wholly indefensible. No high-minded man or woman is capable of doing such a thing. It is often the small acts of our life that take our moral measure and disclose our true characters. If the publishers of our church journals were to tell all that they know concerning the persons with whom they deal some rather startling revelations would follow. Mr. Wesley, in one of his sermons, sets down "honesty" as one of the virtues that even a respectable heathen should possess.

"GRENADA COLLEGE DAY."

As is stated by President Countiss elsewhere in this issue of the Advocate, Sunday, January 10, was named by the North Mississippi Conference as "Grenada College Day." There is a $4000 note due on January 15 as a part of the purchase money for the beautiful new property recently acquired by the College, and it must be met at that time. Let every pastor and Sunday school superintendent begin at once to prepare for the observance of this day and lay this cause impressively upon the hearts of the people, and give them a chance to make an offering for it. We believe that they will gladly contribute this amount, and more, if they are given an opportunity to do so. We hope to have the privilege of printing in the Advocate in January the names of the churches helping in this movement and the amounts that they have raised for it. Let the Methodists of North Mississippi act promptly, unitedly, and energetically in this matter, and thus provide for meeting this urgent obligation without delay. Grenada College is doing a great work, and there is every reason why they should rally to its support and carry it forward to yet larger things.

THE NEW PASTOR AND FLOCK.

Many churches in Mississippi and Louisiana have been given new pastors at the recent Annual Conference sessions, and these brethren will soon take up the work in their new fields of labor. In every instance these preachers should be given a hearty welcome and everything possible should be done to make them and the members of their families comfortable. Moving in the winter season is quite a hardship, and our congregations should endeavor to reduce to a minimum the unpleasantness of it. It may be that the minister assigned in some cases is not the one that the people would have chosen; but, on the other hand, if he had been given the privilege of selecting his pastorate perhaps he would have elected to go elsewhere.

The Methodist itinerancy is based upon a mutual surrender of rights in this respect upon the part of both the preacher and congregation, and there is a solemn obligation upon both to stand loyally by the system with which they have voluntarily connected themselves. What appear to be mistakes in the outset not infrequently turn out well when the situation is accepted in the right spirit, and it often comes to look later as if Providence had directed in the matter. The Lord has not yet abandoned his Church. St. John, in his wonderful vision of Patmos, saw the living Christ among the seven golden candlesticks. This teaches a lesson that we should not be slow to learn, and which we should never forget. The most glorious thing about the work of building up the Master's kingdom is that it does not have to be done alone. We have in carrying it forward an invisible Co-worker, who is far wiser than the greatest of men. So, let us as pastors and as flocks cheerfully adjust ourselves to the new conditions that exist and take up hopefully our appointed tasks. He who toils faithfully for Jesus anywhere never wastes his strength or labors in vain. And nothing could be more certain than the waiting reward.

"HE NEVER SAID, 'I TOLD YOU SO.'"

The British Weekly quotes Dr. Clifford, the distinguished English Baptist preacher, in paying a tribute to the late Lord Roberts, as having made the following utterance:

"Ten years ago Lord Roberts saw that there would be a war with Germany. He forecasted the situation, and understood what was being done in Germany. He saw that some day the suppressed volcano would break out in awful ruin. We paid little heed to him. Perhaps Lord Haldane and others may have done so, but the people as a whole paid no attention to his warnings. They said, 'The race is surely gaining in sense, and is not going in for a great destructive war.' Since the war broke out Lord Roberts never once said, 'I told you so,' or uttered a word of rebuke against the pacifists. Although he failed to get a hearing from the people, he has not condemned them, but in his quiet, restrained, magnanimous fashion, he exhibited the Christian spirit in the finest form."

If this is a correct representation of the great British soldier's course, he was indeed in more ways than one a remarkable man. We rather think, however, that great military men have usually been given to restraint in their speech. They appear, as a rule, to have had the good habit of thinking much and saying little. Perhaps in this has lain in a large measure the secret of their success.

REMEMBER OUR ORPHANAGES.

Rev. W. M. Williams, the Manager of the Mississippi Orphans' Home, at Jackson, requests us to urge the Methodists of Mississippi to remember that institution with gifts during the Christmas season. The stringent times now prevailing has appreciably affected its resources, so that the contributions coming in from "Work Day" and Thanksgiving Day have already been expended to meet outstanding obligations, and Brother Williams is without funds to provide for the 200 children in his charge. Let every community in the two Mississippi Conferences get up a nice box of useful articles and express it, with the charges prepaid, to Brother Williams; and let every pastor who conducts services on Christmas Day take an offering and forward it to him. Or, if there is to be no special Christmas service held, let our pastors take a collection for this cause next Sunday, or on Sunday, December 27. Money is scarce, but we cannot afford to let these children of the Church suffer. Why not sit down and send Brother Williams a check at once, without waiting for your pastor to ask for contributions? It would be much appreciated.

All that we have said above applies also with equal force to the Louisiana Orphanage, at Ruston, for which the Conference will no longer carry an assessment. The Methodists of Louisiana should not forget Brother Vaughan and his large family during the holidays. We have no more sacred obligation than that of making adequate provision for these needy and dependent orphans whom Providence has placed in the care of our denomination. To fall short of our duty in this respect would be to us an inexcusable reproach.

PERSONAL AND OTHER NOTES.

The Methodists of the city, as well as the general public, are pleased with the return of Dr. S. H. Werlein to the First Methodist Church of New Orleans for another year. He is an able preacher and an efficient worker.

The Parker Memorial Church, this city, is greatly pleased with the return of Rev. R. H. Harter for another year. Brother Harter is one of the growing young ministers of the Louisiana Conference and is deservedly popular with his flock.

Rev. W. W. Drake, who is to be the new pastor of the Carrollton Avenue congregation of this city, is well known in New Orleans and is a favorite preacher with many of the Methodists residing here. He will be given an enthusiastic welcome to his new field.

The Editor acknowledges himself indebted to Rev. C. A. Battle, Rev. O. S. Lewis, and Rev. John Ray for reporting the proceedings of our three patronizing Conferences for the Advocate. This exacting service was gratuitously performed, and we shall not soon forget the kindness of these brethren.

After four years of efficient service as presiding elder of the McKinney District, North Texas Conference, Rev. C. A. Sprague has been appointed by Bishop McCoy to Kavanagh Church, Greenville, Texas. This gifted young ex-Mississippian has made an enviable record in the Lone Star State.

The first offering for the new Atlanta University in the way of a public collection was made by the Alabama Conference at its recent session, and without any pressure it quickly went beyond the $5000 mark, in spite of the hard times. Bishop Candler made the address that called forth this generous contribution.

We are indebted to our esteemed friend, Brother J. H. Sherard, of Sherard, Miss., for a large sack of very choice pecans, sent us a few days since. No note accompanied them, so we do not know whether they were grown on Brother Sherard's plantation or not. We shall not soon forget the thoughtful kindness of this big-hearted layman; neither will the other inmates of our home.

The many friends of Dr. W. C. Black, formerly editor of the New Orleans Christian Advocate and for many years one of the leading ministers in the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, will regret to learn that he has for some weeks been seriously ill at his home in Meridian, Miss. Let the brethren remember this worthy veteran at the throne of grace. We earnestly hope that he will soon be much better.

Rev. A. C. McCorkle, who was recently transferred from the Memphis to the North Mississippi Conference, was stationed by Bishop Waterhouse at Tunica, Miss. He comes well recommended, and was heartily welcomed by the brethren at Starkville. There are some most excellent people in his new charge, whom he may count upon to hold up his hands as he seeks to carry forward the Master's work.

At the recent session of the Mississippi Conference Rev. Dan E. Kelly, one of the regularly appointed Conference evangelists, in his report to the Board of Missions summarized his work as follows: "I have preached 520 sermons, have witnessed over 2000 conversions and reclamations, and have seen 1021 people join the Methodist Church and 521 persons pledge themselves to maintain family altars." This is indeed a fine record.

The following item, contained in the Texas Christian Advocate of December 3, will doubtless prove of interest to many of our North Mississippi readers: "Rev. J. A. Whitehurst, after a term of useful service on the Waxahachie District, has been appointed to the Waco District. He is one of the leading men of his Conference (the Central Texas); big of brain and heart, he is popular with the preachers and people, and is a man full of the evangelical spirit. He always pushes his work to the front."

After resting for a year, Dr. Felix R. Hill has again entered the active work in the Louisiana Conference and has been assigned to the Felicity Street Church of New Orleans. He is well known and greatly beloved in this city, where he has done most effective work in the pastorate in the days ago, and an enthusiastic greeting awaits him at the hands of the Methodists of New Orleans. The Felicity congregation is to be congratulated upon having secured the services of this great and gifted pastor.

The many friends of Rev. W. W. Holmes in the Crescent City are delighted to know that he is to have charge of the New Orleans District as presiding elder. A large portion of Brother Holmes' ministry has been spent here, and Bishop Candler could not possibly have made a more popular appointment in naming a successor to Dr. J. M. Henry. He is young, energetic and resourceful, and we predict that the Methodism of New Orleans will go forward to larger things under his strong and progressive leadership.

Writing from Hot Springs, Ark., after filling his pulpit at Central Church in that city—his new appointment—last Sunday, Dr. Theodore Copeland says: "Large crowds greeted me here yesterday. This is an excellent appointment, and I am delighted with it." Dr. Copeland's new field is indeed an inviting one. His church is the strongest that we have in Hot Springs and is frequented by visitors from all over the nation, who go to that noted watering-place to rest and recuperate. Its pastor has a rare opportunity to make his influence felt for good.

Dr. and Mrs. T. L. Wilburn, of Kilmichael, Miss., have issued cards announcing the marriage of their daughter, Miss Anabel, to Mr. Joseph Hunter George, which took place on Monday, Nov. 16, 1914. Mr. and Mrs. George are at home at Crystal Springs, Miss. We have known the bride, who is a charming young lady, as well as her parents, for several years and number them among our most highly esteemed friends. The groom is stated to be a gentleman of sterling worth. We extend to the happy couple our felicitations and best wishes.

We are in receipt of a $5 check from Brother F. S. Jackson, the proprietor of the Hearon Hotel at Brooksville, Miss., with instructions to apply it to the Belgian or other European war sufferers, as we may think best. We will let it go to the Belgians, as we think they have been the worst sufferers in the awful conflict now raging and are perhaps now nearest the verge of starvation. Brother Jackson has given his money to a most worthy cause. We should be pleased to receive other remittances for this purpose, and will properly forward any other amounts that may be sent us.

Our First Church congregation of Baton Rouge, La., is to be heartily congratulated upon having been given Rev. C. A. Battle as its pastor. Personally, we shall regret very much to see Brother Battle leave New Orleans, as he had very kindly become our assistant editor, though he was not officially so designated. We shall greatly miss him, but we are happy to know that he will have a large and inviting field at the Capital of the State, where the State University is also located. He is a young minister of sound character and views and gives promise of great usefulness.

The New Orleans Times-Picayune has complimented the two Mississippi Annual Conferences this year by sending to report their proceedings one of its ablest staff correspondents in the person of Mr. H. H. Ahrens. Brother Ahrens' daily account of what took place at these gatherings was unusually full and accurate, and the service which he rendered was much appreciated. The Memphis Commercial Appeal was represented at Starkville, the seat of the North Mississippi Conference, by Rev. E. H. Cunningham, of Myrtle, Miss., whose work as a reporter measured up to a very high standard. He has unusual gifts as a newspaper man.

NORTH MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE NOTES.

By the Editor.

Three young men were appointed as students in the Atlanta Theological School: Rev. Olin Ray of Jonestown, Rev. J. D. Wroten of Tunica, and Rev. J. M. Guinn, of Crawford. Bishop Waterhouse stood strongly for conserving in their full integrity the educational interests of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South.

Millisaps College was effectively represented by President A. F. Watkins and Dr. J. M. Sullivan, each of whom made a stirring speech. After the address of the latter, a collection was taken for the furnishing of the new Main Building at Millisaps, which, together with the amount previously raised, was said to cover North Mississippi's part of this expense.

A pleasant visitor at the Conference was Miss Elizabeth Kilpatrick, of Corinth, Miss., whom we never saw looking better. Her reputation as a Sunday school worker continues to widen, and she wears her increasing honors with becoming modesty. She hurried away from Starkville on Saturday to teach her noted Bible Class at Corinth on the Sabbath day succeeding.

Rev. L. M. Lipscomb and Mr. J. D. Barbee were, at the suggestion of the Board of Education, named as a committee to consider the question as to what further can be done for the moral and intellectual improvement of the colored race in Mississippi. Bishop Waterhouse is expected to co-operate with this committee in studying the conditions and needs of the Negroes in the Magnolia State.

The Veteran Ministers' Association held an interesting and well attended session on Wednesday afternoon, when Dr. J. W. Price, of Clarksdale, Miss., delivered an able and informing semi-centennial sermon. This organization is doing much toward maintaining a spirit of good fellowship among the older members of the Conference and keeping the superannuates interested in the work of the Church.

Rev. J. W. Dorman, the capable presiding elder of the Sardis District, presided during a portion of one session of the Conference and did it well. His influence was strongly felt in the proceedings in more ways than one, and he is deservedly held in high esteem by the brethren. He is warm-hearted, clear-headed, and manly, and few men magnify the responsible office that he holds more than he does.

The lay representation at the recent Conference embraced a number of men who are widely known in Mississippi. Among these, we noted the following: Judge J. G. McGowan, of Water Valley; Judge E. V. Hughston, of Greenwood; Judge T. B. Lamb, of Eupora; Col. J. G. Hamilton, of Durant; Dr. J. Y. Murry, of Ripley; Prof. Dabney Lipscomb, of Columbus; Mr. J. H. Sherard, of Sherard, and Hon. W. W. Magruder, of Starkville.

The Missionary Anniversary on Wednesday evening, December 2, was an occasion of much interest. After some introductory remarks by Rev. W. L. Duren, President of the Conference Board of Missions, Dr. E. H. Rawlings was presented as the chief speaker. Taking as his theme "The Ideal Layman," Dr. Rawlings delivered a brilliant and impassioned address which held the rapt attention of the great audience that had assembled to hear him and made a profound impression. He has platform ability of a high order.

The Sunday School Board strongly commended the work of Rev. V. C. Curtis as Sunday School Field Secretary and re-elected him to that position, but for personal reasons he declined to serve. Rev. R. H. B. Gladney was then named for this important service. The brethren will give Brother Gladney a hearty welcome into their charges, and we hope to hear from him frequently in the columns of the Advocate. The Sunday school enrollment of the Conference is far from being a creditable one, and there is urgent need for increased activity in building up this department of our Church work.

The Conference unanimously signified its approval of the educational policy formulated by the last General Conference and R. A. Meek was elected a commissioner to co-operate in effecting the transfer of the rights of the Church in Vanderbilt University back to the eight original patronizing Conferences. The new Universities in Atlanta and Dallas were strongly endorsed, and hearty support was pledged to the former, the Conference being in its jurisdiction. A motion was adopted requesting the publication of the full text of the report bearing on Vanderbilt University and our new schools in the New Orleans Christian Advocate.

Among the connectional officers attending the Conference were Dr. E. B. Chappell, who was heard with delight on the occasion of the Sunday School Anniversary, as well as on the floor of the Conference; Dr. W. F. McMurtry who delivered a felicitous address on Saturday evening; Dr. Stonewall Anderson, who spoke briefly to the Conference of our educational work; Rev. J. R. Stewart, who ably represented the general Superannuate Endowment Fund, and Rev. J. M. Culbreth, who looked after the interests of the Epworth League and preached a suggestive and helpful sermon to the students of the A. and M. College on Sunday morning.

Rev. T. H. Lipscomb made an ideal host and the hospitality of Starkville was all that could be desired. We did not hear a syllable of complaint from any quarter concerning the entertainment furnished. President G. R. Hightower, of the A. and M. College, addressed the Conference and invited the body to visit that great institution on Friday afternoon, and his invitation was gladly accepted. Every possible courtesy was extended the visitors and the occasion was a most enjoyable one. There is no greater institution of the kind in the South than the Mississippi Agricultural and Mechanical College. It has at the present time nearly 1000 students.

Sunday, December 6, was a memorable day in Starkville. The Love Feast, which was conducted by Rev. S. M. Thames, was a season of high Christian fellowship and great spiritual power. Besides the great sermon preached by Bishop Waterhouse, other strong and impressive discourses were delivered. Dr. Stonewall Anderson preached at the Methodist Church at the evening hour; the pulpit of the Baptist Church was filled at 11 a. m. by Rev. W. S. Lagrone, and at 7:30 p. m. by Rev. L. M. Lipscomb, and that of the Presbyterian Church by Rev. J. A. Hall in the morning and Rev. H. S. Spragins in the evening. The other churches of the city also had preaching by visiting ministers.

The following Committee on Evangelism, which is an admirable one, was appointed: Rev. W. S. Lagrone, Rev. R. O. Brown, Rev. W. M. Young, Rev. T. H. Dorsey, and Rev. O. W. Bradley. It is to be hoped that these brethren will leave nothing undone to stir up a revival spirit in North Mississippi during the coming year. The celebration of the bi-centenary of the birth of the peerless evangelist, George Whitefield, who did so much to lead sinners into the Kingdom in England and the United States, ought to open the way for a vigorous and persistent revival campaign in every part of our widely extended Connection. We should be happy to see the North Mississippi Conference in the very forefront of this great movement.

The financial stringency was very generally reflected in the reports of the pastors. The charges that reported "in full" were mostly in the towns, and preachers who have had an almost unbroken record of success in bringing up the collections, were forced to come up with deficits. Much as this was to be regretted, it was not surprising. Perhaps no section of the South is more exclusively dependent upon cotton than the territory embraced in the North Mississippi Conference, and, as is well known, the cotton industry has been struck pretty nearly a knock-out blow by the European war. We believe that in most cases our preachers and people made a heroic effort to take care of the interests of the Church and were sincerely grieved at not being able to do so in the usual manner.

The chief address at the Educational Anniversary was made by Dr. H. C. Howard, Professor of Systematic Theology in the Biblical Department of the new Atlanta University, and a noble utterance it was in every respect. A stronger and more effective plea for Christian education we have scarcely ever listened to, and one of its greatest charms was that it seemed to be largely extemporaneous, being apparently born of the inspiration of the hour. If the other members of the faculty of the Atlanta Theological School can measure up to the intellectual and spiritual stature of Dr. Howard, great things may confidently be expected of that institution in the coming years. Following Dr. Howard's admirable speech, Rev. J. R. Countiss spoke forcefully for a few minutes in the interest of Grenada College, and a collection, amounting to something over $1400, was taken for that deserving school.

The retirement of Rev. S. M. Thames and Rev. G. W. Bachman from active service in the itinerant ministry to the honor roll of the Conference, was one of the impressive incidents of the recent session. Both of these veterans had worn the harness worthily for more than half a century and each of them has made a record that it would be difficult to surpass. A truer and worthier minister than Brother Bachman has never lived and wrought in North Mississippi and the seed that he has sown will long continue to bear fruit. He will reside at Winona. Unique in his personality, Brother Thames has perhaps contributed as much to the making of North Mississippi Methodism as any preacher who has ever labored within its bounds. Strictly loyal to the Church and possessing a large amount of common sense, he has been a tower of strength to the Master's cause. He will probably make Jackson his home.

The presidency of Bishop Waterhouse gave great satisfaction. He was at all times courteous, considerate, and impartial, and grew in the estimation of the brethren from the first day to the last. He is an able presiding officer and possesses a quaint wit which frequently enlivened the proceedings of the Conference. He is a man of clear insight and excellent judgment, and we doubt if any Bishop ever gave to the Methodists of North Mississippi a more satisfactory list of appointments. His sermon on Sunday at 11 o'clock was pronounced by competent judges to be a masterpiece, and he also preached eloquently to the students of the Mississippi A. and M. College at the evening hour. After having had an opportunity to observe his work, we do not hesitate to say that in our opinion the Church acted wisely in calling Bishop Waterhouse to the episcopacy, and we predict for him a career of large usefulness in that great office in the coming years.

The pastors' reports showed that 2223 adults were baptized, but notwithstanding this the membership in the Conference is placed at 56,769, against 56,919 last year, indicating a loss of 150. While we do not think that last year was generally a revival one in North Mississippi, we do not believe that an actual loss was sustained in the membership of the Church. The statistics of an Annual Conference are past understanding, and the perplexities that they present are not a few. How to develop a system of reporting that will obviate such errors is one of the things that is troubling nearly all our Annual Conferences. The Sunday school enrollment of the Conference increased from 32,390 to 36,471. This is encouraging, though the total Sunday school enrollment is still regrettably low. These figures should serve as a call to increased consecration and greater activity upon the part of both our pastors and congregations during the Conference year now beginning.

Obituaries.

Deaths entered the home of Sister J. J. Ball on Nov. 21, 1914, and took from the family circle a precious daughter, Miss MARY, who was born on July 21, 1846. She became a follower of the Measured Christ in girlhood and loved and trusted him implicitly until the glories of the New Jerusalem broke in splendor on her enraptured vision nevermore to be obscured. Sister Mary was a faithful member both of the Church and Sunday school. She was self-sacrificing, choosing always rather to serve than to be served. While our hearts are saddened by the sight of her vacant chair, and we long for the sound of her loved voice again, we have learned by faith to bow to our Redeemer's will. She is not dead, but sleepeth, and shall awake again to be forever with the Lord. May the sorrowing loved ones look to the God of all comfort for sustaining grace. Her pastor.

P. H. HOWSE.

Brother J. E. JONES passed from this life on Nov. 20, 1914, after a lingering illness. He was born in Perry County, Ala., on Nov. 12, 1831, moving with his parents to Kemper County, Miss., in 1845. Later, he moved to Rankin County, Miss., where he spent his remaining days on earth. He married Miss Sarah Massengale on Jan. 13, 1873, and to this happy couple were born six children, four of whom are living—three sons and one daughter. Brother Jones was converted while quite young and joined the M. E. Church, South, of which he remained a consistent member until death. His life was such as to command the confidence and respect of all who knew him. He gave assurance in the last hours of his illness of peace and of his acceptance with God. May the Lord bless and comfort his family and mourning loved ones. His Pastor, J. T. McVEY.

Rev. EMORY C. STERNS was born on Sept. 5, 1836, at Camden, Wilcox County, Ala.; was converted and joined the M. E. Church, South, in early life; was married to Miss Jane P. Holly, Aug. 11, 1863, and departed from this life on Dec. 2, 1914, at his home in Meridian, Miss., aged 78 years 2 months and 28 days. His remains were brought to his old home, Waynesboro, Miss., for burial. Rev. Hilary Westbrook conducting the funeral service in the presence of many weeping and grief-stricken relatives and friends. Brother Sterns was licensed to preach in 1876, and was a consistent member of the Church for over fifty-five years. He was the father of fifteen children, eight of them preceding him to the better world. His wife and seven children survive him to mourn their loss. He loved his Bible, which was his constant companion and guide. The sunset of his life was beautiful, his crossing was triumphant and his faith in God was steady in the dying hour. Truly, this good husband, father and friend has gone home to be with God and the loved ones who have gone on before. Dear ones, weep not as those who have no hope, but loving your Savior and obeying his teachings, you may look forward to meeting your loved one in the beautiful city of God. His friend, HILARY WESTBROOK.

WEEK OF SELF-DENIAL.

W. W. Pinson.

Last year the Board of Missions asked for a self-denial offering for the sending out of missionaries. The call was for twenty. We were able to send out ten. But for the self-denial offering we could not have done it without embarrassment. This offering was accompanied with great rejoicing. The best thing about it was not its size, but its glad spontaneity.

This year we are asking that the offering go to reinforcing our evangelistic work; that is, to strengthening the hands of our missionaries, enlarging the force of workers, and increasing the equipment of the native church. This is a crying need. It is also that feature of our work which suffers most. If there is need for economy or retrenchment, it falls here. The other expenses are to a great degree fixed. This fund on which the native church must rely is variable.

The amount we have been able in normal times to appropriate for these purposes is far below the most conservative estimate of need. This year, with an income reduced because of financial disturbances, it will be still less. While the Conferences in the cotton States have done better than we had hoped, they have fallen short of the amount contributed last year. To be compelled to reduce our meager appropriations without some relief would be a calamity. Hence the need of self-denial. If we may not send out more missionaries, let us encourage those we have and strengthen the struggling native church. If we cannot enter new territory, let us cultivate and equip more thoroughly that already occupied.

Besides the crying need from abroad, the Home Department, in addition to its usual demands, has new and unmet needs in the new Texas-Mexican just organized. This Mission was started with great enthusiasm and help now will mean much.

Donations may be directed to any field or department of work indicated in our printed list of specials for 1915, which will be sent on application. Otherwise the direction of the fund will be determined by the board in view of the greatest needs.

It is not much we ask. It is only that a free-will offering be made by our people at the end of a week of prayer and self-denial. The price of one picture show for every Southern Methodist would mean $100,000. The price of one cigar a day for those who smoke would mean $100,000. The price of theater tickets for the week—I dare not guess at the enormous sum. One cent a day for the week from every member of our Church would aggregate $140,000. Then what would be the result of one week of real self-denial? One week like all the weeks of His life, who "though he was rich yet for our sakes he became poor." We scarcely dare even mention the real spirit of self-denial which goes to the quick of ease and indulgence and is the mark of a true disciple. "He that will be my disciple let him deny himself." Shall we not at least enter the class of beginners for the term of one week?

When whole peoples are voting billions for war, when millions are facing death for a flag, and more millions facing starvation, homelessness, orphanage and widowhood for empire, shall we grudge the Lord of all a mere taste of self-denial to help him win a world?

We have prepared leaflets and envelopes for use in congregations and Sunday schools and by individuals. We shall be glad to furnish these free to any who may order them.

It would be a waste of words, if not an impertinence, to further urge the importance of this matter on our people at such an hour as we now face.

It is a great deal better to live a holy life than to talk about it. Light-houses don't ring bells and fire cannon to call attention to their shining. They just shine!—Moody.

Tidings From the Field

Bogalusa, La.

Dear Brother Meek: I have intended sending you a full account of the growth and progress of our Church in this place, but must content myself with a brief statement thereof. We began here three years ago with about 150 members. We have received into the Church by letter and on profession of faith over 300 during my pastorate here. From this you will see that we have trebled our membership. Among the said additions to our Church are a dozen or more Roman Catholics. We have also made great progress financially. We are giving now about four times as much for benevolences as was contributed four years ago. Several years ago Bogalusa was in some respects one of the most lawless communities in the State. Now we have one of the cleanest towns for its size, to be found in Louisiana. Our Church has been greatly used of God in bringing about this moral and civic regeneration. Three young men will go from this charge into the world's great harvest field, entering the Christian ministry. I do not believe that there is any Church in the connection in a better spiritual condition than this one. We have five weekly prayer-meetings on the charge, and fully 100 of our members pray in public. Hardly a Sunday passes without a conversion or an addition to the Church. "The Lord hath done great things for us, whereof we are glad."—Leon I. McCain.

Bryceland, La.

I have read with a great deal of pleasure the good reports coming from the Sunday school at Pollock, La., as I was for two years superintendent of that school, and I am glad to know that the work has been so prosperous there. I want to give an account of our work here at Bryceland. We have a small saw mill town, situated on the L. & N. W. Railroad in Bienville Parish, and our citizenship is composed of some as fine people as you will find anywhere in the State. We built during the year a nice little Methodist church, on a plan drawn up by our presiding elder, Brother Briscoe Carter, which is a comfortable house, and an ideal one for a country Sunday school. While our membership is small, we organized a Sunday school on Sept. 26, with a membership of 35. We now have an enrollment of 70 and an average attendance of 50 or 70 per cent of the enrollment. We have all the departments required to bring us up to the standard of efficiency, except the Home department and Teacher-training, both of which we will have later on. Our Primary department is equipped with the little red chairs and is in charge of a competent teacher. We have a Bible class composed of students over 18 years of age, most of them married men and women, and in charge of Prof. Eskridge. This is the best Bible class I have ever seen anywhere. On Work Day we raised $10.25 which was forwarded to the Orphanage, and on last Sunday we voted that $5 be sent to the distressed Belgians in Europe. We are planning for a Christmas tree together with the Baptist Sunday school. I have associated with me a corps of officers and teachers who are fine Christians and willing workers and we are doing all in our power to make this school a success. We also have a Cradle Roll with the names of 24 infants on it, and we expect to have a special Baby Day sometime early in January. We are sending a good report to Conference.

With best wishes for a Merry Christmas and Happy New Year to the Advocate readers, I am,

W. A. BROWN, Supt.

"LORD, WILT THOU AT THIS TIME."

There are, of course, a multitude of Christians who believe this present convulsion to be the veritable fulfillment of what is written in the twenty-fourth of Matthew and the twenty-first of Luke: "There shall be signs in sun and moon and stars, and upon the earth distress of nations in perplexity for the roaring of the sea and the billows; men fainting for fear and for expectation of the things which are coming upon the world."

To such what is now happening is, therefore, only the prophesied prelude of the quick return of the Lord in glory, and with that before their eyes nothing matters except that they themselves may be found worthy to be caught up to meet the Savior in the air.

And they may be right. A church which remembers its Master's command to watch ought to be ready for that mighty climax to-day or to-morrow, or any day whatsoever. And if such is God's will for an immediate day at hand, every Christian should gladly cry: "Even so come, Lord Jesus."

But no man is able to affirm this with certainty, or even with assurance. In the twentieth century, just as much as at the Lord's ascension, times and seasons "are set within the Father's" own authority; it is not for disciples to demand to know when they shall be.

As for these foretellings in Matthew and Luke, there was just as much a century ago to suppose that they applied to Napoleon's bloody career as to apply them to the present crisis.

In every age the Lord's blessed coming again is something for the Church to be ready for, but not to calculate upon. Work must never be suspended in expectation of it. In his own hour Christ will come, but in the very hour before he comes it will still be the Church's business to be praying and planning for new conquests to be achieved in the name of his Cross.—The Continent.

PRINCELY GIVING.

A Christian woman who is too poor to keep a servant, is yet so rich that she is supporting one home and two foreign missionaries. Through these trained workers she is doubtless multiplying her life many fold. A school teacher from her salary of $1000 sustains her substitute in China with $500. A widow in Boston, living in one room of a tenement house, gave $800 in the Foreign Mission collection. When her pastor called and asked her how she could give so much, she said: "Here I am comfortable and have enough, living upon $200 a year, and I do not know how I could go to meet my Lord if I lived upon the $800 and gave him only $200."

A stenographer, who works all day long in an office, began some years ago to save her small earnings and quietly to send them out to the foreign field, until to-day, through God's blessing on her gifts, more than a thousand souls in India can look up into the face of their heavenly Father and rejoice in the possession of eternal life.—Southern Churchmen.

LOUISIANA CONFERENCE PROCEEDINGS.

Fifth Day—Sunday.

Bishop Candler presided at 11 o'clock on the Divinity of Christ. After the sermon the Session was organized. In the afternoon at 3 o'clock, Dr. F. N. Parker presided and after the sermon Bishop Candler ordained the elders. An Epworth League Rally was held at 8 o'clock led by Dr. F. S. Parker. Rev. Briscoe Carter presided at 7:30. Following this a memorial service was held for the late R. J. Harp of the Louisiana Conference. Dr. R. H. Wynn read a memorial; Rev. S. J. Davies, Rev. W. W. Drake, and Rev. R. S. Walton paid tributes to the memory of Brother Harp.

Services were held at other churches of Shreveport where visiting ministers filled the pulpits.

Sixth Day.

Bishop Candler opened the Conference at 9 o'clock, and after the devotional service, the minutes of the preceding session were read and approved. The session was marked by the selecting of Mansfield as the place for the next Conference to meet, the reading of the reports of various boards and committees and the announcement of the appointments of the preachers for the coming year. The report of the Board of Missions contained the assessments upon the various districts for Home Missions for the next year and also announced the amount of financial aid that would be given certain charges during the next twelve months. The report of the Board of Education set forth the conditions pertaining to the educational interests of the Conference, especially those relating to Centenary and Mansfield Colleges. It endorsed the new universities at Atlanta and Dallas. The report of the Committee on Church Publications recommended the election of W. W. Drake, J. M. Henry, and Briscoe Carter as members for the Louisiana Conference of the Committee of Publication of the New Orleans Christian Advocate, and the recommendation was sustained by the Conference.

The report of the Committee on Publishing Interests highly commended the New Orleans Christian Advocate and its editorial policy; this report was unanimously adopted by the Louisiana Conference.

MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE NOTES.

By Rev. O. W. Lewis.

Columbia will always be remembered as one of the most delightful places in which the Mississippi Conference has been entertained. When Columbia calls we will come again.

The new Methodist Church in Columbia is the most complete and "down-to-date" church in the Mississippi Conference. Everybody was pleased with the arrangements of all facilities. All the speakers complimented the people upon their elegant building.

The parsonage is a thing of beauty and convenience and its size will more than accommodate even Brother Sharbrough's family. A large number of guests were entertained in this hospitable home.

Bishop Collins Denny was the guest of Mr. and Mrs. Roscoe W. Ford. Mr. Ford is one of the leading attorneys in Marion County and a son of Dr. Robt. Ford. Mrs. Ford is a daughter of that big-hearted and loyal layman, Mr. W. E. Lampton.

Of the wives of preachers who graced the Conference with their presence, we noted with pleasure the following: Mrs. E. H. Mounger, Mrs. R. P. Fikes, Mrs. W. W. Moore, Mrs. W. M. Williams, Mrs. J. G. Galloway, Mrs. J. C. Chambers, and Mrs. A. H. Steele.

We were glad to note the presence of Mr. and Mrs. Rawls, of Mount Olive, and Mr. and Mrs. W. F. S. Tatum, of Hattiesburg, at the Conference.

Rev. B. E. Meigs, of the Rankin Street Church, of Jackson, and Rev. C. T. Noble, of Sanford, have the sympathy and prayers of all the brethren in the great sorrows through which they have been called to pass. Death, resulting from scarlet fever, claimed the little girl of Brother and Sister Meigs on Thursday night. On Sunday morning Brother Noble received a telegram stating that one of his children had died suddenly. A collection amounting to $33 was taken for his benefit. May the God of all grace sustain them!

Rev. E. C. Gunn, of Long Beach, one of our successful young men, preached an able and helpful sermon on Wednesday afternoon, to the delight of the brethren.

Rev. J. R. Jones, our beloved pastor at Central Church, Meridian, preached on Thursday afternoon. It was not the pleasure of this scribe to hear him, but he heard from others expressions of the highest praise concerning the great sermon that Brother Jones preached.

Dr. R. P. Wilson, of the Publishing House, at Nashville, was present with a large assortment of books—among them being several sets of Wesley's Journal, which were easily sold, and orders for several more sets were taken.

Rev. G. W. Bachman was present and sold a large number of books. We understand that Brother Bachman is now a supernumary of the North Mississippi Conference and will not act as Colporteur any longer. He will be greatly missed by the brethren, who have learned to know and love him as one of our own members. He is 75 years of age and for 54 years has been a traveling preacher, as follows: 10 years in the Memphis Conference, 3 years in West Tennessee Conference, and the rest of the time in the North Mississippi Conference.

Wednesday night was given over to the Church

Extension Board. Dr. W. F. McMurry was the speaker for the evening, and made a wonderful address. Great progress is being made in Church Extension under the wise and efficient leadership of Dr. McMurry.

The sympathy of all the brethren goes out to Rev. J. L. Decell who was taken quite ill with tonsillitis, and has been confined to his room since Thursday. Bishop Denny ordained him elder in his room. Rev. J. C. Chambers took his place as one of the statistical secretaries. We hope and pray that Brother Decell may have a speedy and complete recovery.

It was gratifying indeed to note the unusually large and appreciative attendance of the people in and around Columbia upon the sessions of the Conference. Many were heard to say: "This is the greatest thing I ever saw, or that has ever come to Columbia." The brethren could well reciprocate by saying that Columbia was the greatest place to be found anywhere for holding an Annual Conference, all things considered.

Dr. John M. Moore, our Home Mission Secretary, preached a thrilling and inspiring sermon on Thursday night to a large congregation.

An Educational Rally was held on Friday evening. The speakers of the evening were Dr. I. W. Cooper, President of Whitworth College, and Dr. A. F. Watkins, President of Millsaps College. Their addresses were of a very high order, and fully sustained the reputation of these men as speakers.

The Sunday school Rally was held on Saturday evening. We were fortunate in having the Editor of our Sunday school literature, Dr. E. B. Chappell, with us as the speaker for the occasion. It was a stirring and timely address, dealing with the great issues facing the Sunday school at this time.

"THE FRUITFUL JOY OF GIVING THANKS."

By Ethel Colson.

Two women met after rather a long interval, and one looked with surprise and almost envy at the other's young and placid face. "What have you done to yourself, Mary?" she inquired. "You might be years younger than when we last met, and you have such a happy expression."

The second woman smiled joyously.

"I won't pretend not to know what you mean, dear," she said; "and I'm only too glad to share the secret. My improved health, happiness, and appearance are due to 'the fruitful joy of giving thanks.'"

"You know what a Martha I used to be, Jean—'careful and troubled about many things,' and, I'm afraid, given to making others careful and troubled also, although, of course, I had no such intentions. I think I was always earnest and conscientious, but I certainly had little joy in my spiritual life, and temporal life I took very hard. Then, one day, Providence brought me under the influence of a sermon that changed all my views.

"The preacher was an old man, and from the country. He was anything but eloquent, but O Jean, he was so wise, so loving, so rich in experience. And he took for his text, 'The fruitful joy of giving thanks.'"

"I am afraid I listened carelessly at first, being burdened with many cares and anxious to get home to look after them. But suddenly I caught something of that dear old saint's message, which was about the duty, the glory, and the 'fruitful joy of giving thanks.'"

"Most of us are sorry for our sins and failings," he said. "If we think at all, we can but realize our own shortcomings. Most of us pray more or less, but how many of us give thanks regularly? And yet, have we not always something, many things, over which to raise a psalm of praise?"

"He said more, of course, but that was the word that I carried away with me, and from that moment I began to try to be systematically thankful. I had never realized before how little thanksgiving I had done; how really, coldly thankless had been my spirit. So I resolved to give thanks, solemnly yet joyously, every day. And when I began to consider the matter—why, Jean, causes for thanksgiving are like God's mercy, new every morning, never ending, ever increasing, multiplied every day.

"My dear old saint explained that, given proper faith, we must be thankful for everything, since, everything being in God's hands and lovingly arranged for us, everything must be all right whether or not it has that appearance. And this thought helps a great deal. Of course I haven't yet reached the point where I can be thankful for all things alike, but there's something about everything for which to be thankful. I can't be thankful—yet—over the recent earthly loss of my dear father, but I can be, I am thankful that he was spared much suffering. I can't be thankful, perhaps, for the bad weather that spoils my cherished plans, but I can be—on serious thought, I cannot avoid being—thankful that I need not be exposed to it. I can't be thankful, naturally, over the sorrows, mistakes, or sins of those dear to me, but I can be, I am thankful, that they, as well as I, are safe in the Infinite Wisdom, have the infinite Love and Goodness on which to lean."

"And this has changed your life, your countenance?" thoughtfully questioned the listener, as the speaker finished.

"It has," was the enthusiastic answer; "it has more than changed, it has transformed life for me, and, I suppose, has had due reflective effect on my countenance. Being thankful for all things, you see, eliminates worry, engenders joy, makes the world a different place to live in. The thankful soul, we know, is saved from many temptations. For me—I wish I could scatter broadcast my new regenerative appreciation of the power, the hope, the glory of 'the fruitful joy of giving thanks!'"—The Continent.

"NEDDIE AND ME."

A preacher was once talking about the heathen, and telling how much they needed Bibles to teach them of Jesus, the Savior of men. In the congregation was one little boy who became greatly interested. He went home and told his mother that he must give something to help buy Bibles for the heathen. But he and his mother were very poor, and at first he was quite puzzled to know how to raise the money. Finally he hit upon the plan. The people of England, where he lived, used marble stones (or "door-stones," as they are called) for polishing their hearths and scouring their stone steps.

This little boy had a favorite donkey named Neddle. He harnessed him up, and loaded him with stones begged from the marble workers, and went round calling: "Do you want any door-stones?"

Before long he raised about fifteen dollars. So one day the minister heard a knock at his door; and opening it, there stood a little boy holding out a package, saying, "Please sir, send this to the heathen."

"My little friend, tell me your name," said the minister, "that we may know who gave the money."

"O, well then, sir, please put it down to Neddle and Me; that will do, won't it, sir?"—Sunday Hour.

A MESSAGE FROM THE MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE PRESIDENT.

My Dear Sisters: Six months ago the whole world seemed to be at peace, but now the spirit of conflict has enveloped the East. As Christian women, we should with united voices, praise our Heavenly Father for his goodness in preserving our Nation in peace and harmony.

If your auxiliary found it inconvenient to observe the Week of Prayer at the time appointed by the Council, it is not yet too late; in fact, it would be a blessing to each auxiliary to allow this prayer spirit to continue with us during this last quarter of the year, and if we live close to God our mission fields will not suffer from this dreadful war, and we will not forget our duty.

I want to ask that the women of our own Mississippi Conference be loyal to our Father, our great Church, and to our Conference. Please do not let a deficit appear against our name; let us pay up in full dues, Conference Expense Fund and pledges in both departments; let us prove our gratitude by giving liberally even to self-sacrifice.

The election of officers will soon be upon us; this is the time when we should be much in prayer for wisdom in selecting our leaders for next year.

It is with a feeling of joy and thanksgiving that we adopt the new Constitution and By-Laws.

First, Because in God's sight there is no Home and Foreign Department, but just one great Mission Field, which is "white unto the harvest."

Second, It will relieve our Council and Conference officers of so much unnecessary expense.

Third, It will greatly condense the reports and the number of reports.

I hope every auxiliary will very carefully study these new laws, then pray earnestly for God's blessing upon our whole Conference, that not one member may hesitate for a moment to comply with the laws which our leaders have given us after much seeking for divine guidance in the advancement of the cause and God's kingdom.

Our annual meeting will be held at Columbia on Feb. 5-9, and we shall expect a delegate from every auxiliary.

With best wishes to each member in the Conference. Sincerely,

Mrs. R. E. JOHNSON.
Gulfport, Miss.

MESSAGE FROM OUR COUNCIL CORRESPONDING SECRETARIES.

ATTENTION!

We cannot meet our obligations in this time of stress and storm without full payment of dues, pledges, and specials. Women in the auxiliaries, young people and children are urged to practice self-denial and pay in full by January 1.

Our Need.

Full collections from every Conference; full payment from every woman, young person and child in our missionary societies; extra gifts from those who would not see the missionaries recalled, nor the work suffer in this emergency.

Be prompt in sending the fourth quarter's collections.

Loyalty.

Just a few days to finish the harvest of this year. Missionaries and mission boards are hard pressed. Full collections are necessary if the work is maintained. Let the fourth quarter's report show your love and loyalty.

Give! Give! Give!

GOOD NEWS FROM NORTH MISSISSIPPI.

Mrs. Vic Thompson Hoyle, president of the North Mississippi Conference Society, writes: "I believe the women of our Conference will come very near meeting all of their obligations, although we have never yet quite met the pledge of the Foreign department, but have more than met it in the Home department. I believe our Thank-offering will be unusually large."

From Miss Mary Daniel, deaconess at the Corinth Co-operative Home, we have the following: "I've had such a lovely, restful visit to all the 'kinners,' am at the last stop (Liberty) before my return—my brother's, who married in June. I leave here Monday for Memphis and will reach Corinth on Tuesday evening, Dec. 1."

"Have kept in close touch with the girls during my month's vacation. One has left and one has entered since my leaving. I know you will be glad to hear that the factory work is much improved."

"One of the Rubels sent the girls a turkey for Thanksgiving, and my sister made me a jam cake for them, so I enjoyed my Thanksgiving all the more because of the knowledge that they were having a real Thanksgiving dinner."

Miss Daniel also writes that the Home is no longer in an experimental stage, but is becoming more firmly established each day.

FACTS THAT TELL.

The people of South America are people of great and brilliant possibilities. The leading man, perhaps, in the last Hague Conference was a Brazilian. Among the common people there are immense possibilities of undeveloped character and service. Where in the world will you find a more patriotic people? Where in the world will you find a people who have been as willing as the South American people have been for one hundred years to die for great ideals and for great causes and for great personal loyalties? They lie at our door to-day, these 40,000,000 people, awaiting at our hand the help that is to make of them great and powerful nations and enable them to discharge their duty of service to the world.—Epworth Era.

FORTUNATE FOR THE SOUTH.

Skin diseases seem most prevalent in the warmer climates, which makes it fortunate for the South that it has such an exceptionally fine remedy in Tetterine for Eczema, Tetter, Itch, Acne, Salt Rheum, etc. Every skin trouble from a simple chafe or insect bite to the worst case of Tetter is quickly relieved by Tetterine. Applied externally, harmless and fragrant. 50c at druggists or by mail from Shuptrine Co., Savannah, Ga.

NEW TESTAMENTS FOR SOLDIERS.

"A million nickels from a million Sunday school scholars for a million testaments for a million soldiers in the hospitals, camps, war prisons and battlefields of the great war." This is the present slogan of the American section of the World's Sunday School Association, in an appeal just sent out to Sunday schools of all denominations all over the United States. It is estimated that there are now at least a million men detained either in hospitals or in prison camps.

The sympathies of the American people have been drawn out by the sufferings of non-combatants in the war zone, and have found expression in multiplied agencies for relief by gifts of food and clothing. There would seem, however, to have been no wide popular appeal on behalf of the spiritual side of life under the terrible conditions prevailing in Europe. It was thought that an organization in a neutral country, non-sectarian and interdenominational, whose main purpose is a dissemination of knowledge of the Bible, should bring to the men who every day face death and eternity the message of the Prince of Peace.

It is doubly fitting that this should be done by the Sunday school scholars.—Author unknown.

REV. EUGENE JOHNSON COMMENDED.

Last Sunday morning Rev. J. H. Mitchell, presiding elder for this district, delivered an able and eloquent sermon at the Methodist Church. His mission here was to hold quarterly conference, which he did on Monday. Last Sunday was Rev. Johnson's last appointment for this Conference year and also of his four years in Ripley. It is the rule of the Methodist Conference that a preacher shall not remain longer than four years at any one place. At the conclusion of Rev. Mitchell's sermon, Mr. Thos. E. Pegram arose and made some remarks on behalf of the board of stewards, in which he commended Rev. Johnson in unstinted praise as a pastor of the Methodist congregation and introduced Capt. Spight, of the Baptist Church, who spoke of Brother Johnson as a preacher, a pastor and a man. The words of Capt. Spight were eloquently and feelingly spoken, and the praise he gave Rev. Johnson was the sentiment of every one present. He is held in the highest esteem and love by the people of the entire town, as well as his own congregation. The people of Ripley sincerely wish for him that he will be given a good work where everything will be pleasant and happy for him. It is a matter of universal regret that Mr. Johnson must leave Ripley.

Capt. Spight said in a joking way in his remarks that if Brother Johnson would take the water and would join the Baptists, that congregation would call him so he could remain in Ripley. And in reply, Brother Johnson said (jokingly, of course,) that but for his fear of the water he would accept the proposition.

After Capt. Spight had finished his remarks, Rev. Johnson responded very feelingly, and then a song was sung and all present went forward and took Mr. Johnson by the hand to tell him good by and wish him well in his new home, wherever that may be.—Southern Sentinel (Ripley, Miss.) of Nov. 26.

THE WAR IN THE AIR.

Man has fought on the land for no one knows how many centuries. He has fought on the sea for several thousand years, at least. Now in this stupendous war he is for the first time fighting in the air. The war came before aerial navigation was on a perfectly sound basis; but airships have nevertheless borne a considerable share in operations both offensive and defensive. It is therefore possible to speak with some knowledge of the changes they are making in the art of war.

Their most useful service is not that in which they appear with most spectacular effect. The newspapers have much to say of the frightful scenes that follow the dropping of explosive bombs in the heart of crowded cities like Paris and Antwerp, and picture the terrific destruction that a fleet of bomb-carrying Zeppelins could wreak on London; but such exploits, although they may destroy a great deal of valuable property, irreparably ruin famous works of art, and kill or maim a considerable number of harmless old men, women, and children, are unimportant in a military sense. Against the enemy's army, able to defend itself by gunfire and by its own corps of air craft, the bomb-dropping flyers are not so useful as pieces of heavy artillery. They are too unstable. They can be too readily put out of action, and their aim, if they are to fly high enough to be out of danger themselves, is too inaccurate. Indeed, their chief recommendation as weapons of offense is their extraordinary mobility.

But as a defensive weapon, the aeroplane bids fair to revolutionize warfare. For scouting, for spying out the enemy's movements, and preventing surprise, it is invaluable. Flying high above the earth, the observer can at a glance sweep mile after mile of the field of operations. He can see exactly where the enemy is placed, how strong his position is, and in what force he is concentrated. If the enemy tries to shift troops to another point on the firing line, in order to attack in force, the aviator finds it out at once, and carries the news to his own commander.

The surprise attack has been one of the chief weapons of the military strategist; now he finds it broken in his hand. It is hard to see how any army that is guarded by a strong and enterprising fleet of aerial scouts can ever be successfully surprised. As a means for making decisive victories harder than ever to win, the aeroplane is completely successful.—The Youth's Companion.

TETTERINE WHEN OTHERS FAIL

That's the great thing about Tetterine skin remedy. It does insist upon relieving the severest cases of Tetter, Ringworm, Eczema, Itch, Acne, Pimples, etc., when others fail down. Mrs. A. A. Hart, Cross Trails, Ala., says: "I used Tetterine for tetter which has been running for 5 years. Nothing gave relief until I used your remedy and one box made a final cure." See at druggist's or by mail from Shugrue Co., Savannah, Ga.

THE HIGHER EDUCATION OF WOMEN IN THE ORIENT.

If one could marshal all the girls from the mission schools seen in a hasty trip around the world, it would be a beautiful and wonderful exhibition.

From Turkey and Egypt and on through India, Burma, China, Korea and Japan, there would pass a great procession of girls, each bearing her own racial stamp and wearing her own graceful oriental dress, but differing from the other women of her country in her own outlook on life and her ambition to be true to the new ideals of Christian womanhood.

Girlhood is always lovely when it is protected and idealized. There are no lovelier girls in the western world than these, who, through the women of the west have been sheltered and taught and guided into possibilities of Christian womanhood. The task of giving the gospel of Jesus to the women of the east is well begun. Many of those who have profited by educational advantages are already engaged in passing on the blessings. Now all of the denominations are confronted with a great and growing need of workers of higher grade and fuller training. Turkey and Egypt under the Congregationalist, and United Presbyterians have taken the further step toward higher education and have established fine colleges for women in Constantinople and Cairo, but east of the Suez canal, we find not more than one institution of high grade qualified to grant college degrees and to train teachers for the highland normal schools.

There are fifteen boards doing educational work for girls in South India. There are six American boards in the near vicinity of Madras—Congregationalists, Dutch Reform, Baptists, Methodists, American Lutherans and Canadian Baptists. The fact that already in the Madras presidency there are 120 women who have attained the degree of B. A., or are studying for that degree, and that seventy-five of this number are Christians, indicates that there is a demand for advanced education for women. The government of India recognizes this and is prepared to offer generous grants for the support of a woman's college.

Already several of the boards in China have united in planning for a woman's college in Nanking. While there are schools of high grade, such as the woman's college in Peking and Foochow, the present needs of China demand at least one college of full grade qualified to grant degrees.

The great danger at present is that in the rapid development of China, woman will be overlooked. Men far outnumber women in the Chinese church. China cannot meet the need for woman's education alone.

While many have realized the great need for India and for China, possibly the situation in Japan has not seemed so critical. There are many excellent girls' schools in Tokio and other cities of Japan, some extending their branches beyond the high school grades, yet none of them has reached the grade of our woman's colleges in England and America. No one who has seen the rare type of women, the product of Christian education in Japan and the type of Japanese woman evolved through higher education in America, can doubt the great value of a woman's college in Japan.

But whatever may be the outcome of present efforts to meet this great and growing demand in the east, there is a striking and urgent demand for the need of training woman workers in the mission schools of the Orient.

IT IS ALWAYS SAFE TO PRAY.

A Christian man, who had had a number of serious problems to engage his thoughts and to distract his mind, and who, as he walked along a country road, weary with a strenuous period of exacting work, felt disturbed and distressed lest he make some false step, or unwise decision, found comfort in this line of reflection: "It is hard to know just what, in mental or emotional experience, is normal, and what is abnormal; it is difficult, many a time, to say what is reasonable and what is unreasonable; life is confusing and in its many phases bewildering. But of this I am sure—it is always safe to pray!"

Yes, there is help and there is security in prayer. Prayer is calming, prayer is comforting, prayer is inspiring, prayer is regulative, prayer is constructive of life's finest and most enduring values. The praying man may not be all-wise and perfect in action, but he cannot go far astray.

SEVERE RHEUMATIC PAINS DISAPPEAR

Rheumatism depends on an acid in the blood, which affects the muscles and joints, producing inflammation, stiffness and pain. This acid gets into the blood through some defect in the digestive process.

Hood's Sarsaparilla, the old-time blood tonic, is very successful in the treatment of rheumatism. It acts directly, with purifying effect, on the blood, and improves the digestion. Don't suffer. Get Hood's today.

God will never allow a soul that ardently aspires to his love, and that constantly trusts in his mercy, to wander far afield in the by-ways of doubt and indecision; or to be made a laughingstock through the buffetings of Satan. Many perils beset even the best of God's saints, but a peaceful refuge is always to be found at the foot of the mercy seat. Whatever be the difficulties that confront us, it is always safe to pray.—Zion's Herald.

ONE BILLION SIX HUNDRED MILLION.

There are 1,600,000,000 inhabitants on this planet. And consider this: All but about 300,000,000 are virtually related to this war. Europe, Asia, America, Africa, are all represented in the camps bristling with bayonets and deluged with the bloody bath. Battles are raging on the Pacific Ocean, in China, in Egypt, in South Africa, in Arabia, in Syria, as well as in Europe. All religions are in the whirlpool—Christian, Mohammedan, Buddhist. And each is learning the word hate—on plains dedicated to the Prince of Peace.—Central Christian Advocate.

The wealth of a man is the number of things he loves and blesses, which he is loved and blessed by.—Carlyle.

It is when I am told that God is love that I commit all judgment to him gladly. It is when I believe that some one loves me that I am never afraid to be myself.—G. H. Morrison.

"LIVING EPISTLES."

You may not be able to get people to read the gospel of Jesus, but you can compel them to see it every day. "Living epistles," the Book calls the followers of Christ. Does the world, every day, in your life and mine, read the love-letter of the Lord Jesus? It may when our hearts are emptied of self and are filled with the Holy Spirit. They shall see, and some, beholding his grace shining through us, shall fall in love with Christ.—Pittsburgh Christian Advocate.

THE FALLEN STONES.

Do we speak often of the fallen stones of the family altar? We are certain we speak none too often.

What can we conceive of more importance in the family life as individuals than the keeping alive of the coals on the family altar. Have we not found that it makes the whole day easier, purer, truer? Have we not found that it helps us bear the load, endure the sharp edges, show a more smiling face, do our work really better and easier?

And in this world and age of materialism what is so valuable a heritage for the youth growing by our sides as the memory of the parent reading the dear old Book, the whole family circle bowing in humble prayer before the God of heaven and earth? Precious memory, precious cable of security, precious treasure of the Christian home! How impoverished is that Christian home where the stones of the family altar are fallen in heaps, where the voice of common hymn and Book and prayer is never heard.—Central Christian Advocate.

METHODIST WAR RELIEF FUND GROWS.

In response to an appeal by the corresponding secretaries of the Methodist Episcopal board of foreign missions, contributions have been coming in for the relief of our Methodist work and workers affected by the European war. During the period, Nov. 1 to Nov. 14, the sum of $7,400.85 was received.

At the meeting of the general committee for foreign missions in Boston, Dr. George M. Fowles, treasurer of the board, reported the receipt of $24,261.11 previous to Nov. 1. This makes a total, up to Nov. 15 of about $32,000.

HOW A SNAKE TRAVELS.

A snake moves along the ground by contracting the ribs on one side of his body, and separating those on the other side. This forms one curve. Another contraction takes place at the end of the expanded side, and bends the body in the opposite direction. Thus, there is a series of alternate constrictions and spreadings of the numerous ribs throughout the length of the reptile as it lies on the ground.

When the snake is in motion, some part of the body must secure itself against a rough or projecting surface, from which the forward part can be impelled. Then the forward part takes hold, and the hinder length is dragged to a new position. The row of shields along the snake's belly is very quick in seizing upon the slightest projection, so that any rough surface affords a good track.

In climbing a tree, the snake uses the same process. It must find points of vantage for its curves. It cannot possibly wind itself spirally round a tree.—The Youth's Companion.

—Mrs. Browning.

The more room we give in our hearts to our fellow creatures, the more room there is left for God.—Fowler.

Christmas is again at hand, and we pray that it may be a season of blessing and happiness to all our readers. Surely, every Christian heart should rejoice and overflow with gratitude as we are brought to contemplate anew the great "unspeakable gift" of God to humanity in sending to earth, to be its redeemer, his only begotten Son. None who possess heirship in Christ are without abundant cause for hopefulness and thanksgiving; and none are really getting on well in life who have neglected to secure this glorious heritage. No matter to what heights it may rise, an unchristian career cannot satisfy the deep longings of the immortal soul and it must at last leave it bankrupt and wrecked. The future is bright only for those who by faith in Jesus have become true sons and daughters of the Lord Almighty.

The birth of Christ is easily the most outstanding event in human history. It marked the beginning of the incarnation, which gave to the world, both its best knowledge and its mightiest lifting power. And it grows in importance with the passing years. It has long been the reckoning point in time of the foremost nations of the earth, and the benighted lands of heathendom are giving it enlarging recognition. That was a wonderful prophecy made by John the Baptist when, in witnessing to his Lord, he said: "He must increase," and its fulfillment is still going on before our eyes in this day. Already among the children of men Jesus has "a name which is above every name," and his pre-eminence in human thought and affairs is steadily becoming more complete. Therefore, we do well to celebrate the nativity of Him who brought to earth its richest blessings, who, without seeking aught for himself, has become the most commanding figure of all time, and about whom are clustered the highest hopes of the race.

A DIFFERENT WORLD SINCE HE CAME.

Christmas comes this year in the midst of unusual circumstances. Half the world is engaged in a colossal war, and the other half is in the dark shadow of the terrible conflict. So depressing indeed is the situation that some have ventured to suggest that it might be well to skip over for the present the celebration of the birth of the Prince of Peace. We do not, however, at all concur in this view. It is true that the spectacle of a majority of the so-called Christian nations of the earth grappling in deadly strife, with their mammoth armies killing each other by the tens and hundreds of thousands, is a distressing and heartrending one; and we would not minify to the slightest extent its awful significance. It is a terrific indictment of both the civilization and the religion of our time, and it speaks in tones of admonition which we think should be taken to heart and properly heeded. We are not unmindful of the fact that it is possible for a few people in influential positions in a nation to plunge it into war and that patriotism and race ties may array good and true men against each other in the storm of battle; but after all due allowance has been made for influences of that kind, the fact stares us in the face that the type of Christianity prevailing in Europe did not have sufficient strength to stay the arm of violence and avert the most calamitous and murderous struggle of the ages.

The great outstanding lesson to be learned from what is going on is that, while there is a vast amount of nominal Christianity on earth, there is far too little of that which is truly spiritual and genuine. Our Churches are busying themselves far too much with pomp, parade, and show, and are too much out of touch with the life-giving powers from above, which alone can enable them to regenerate the hearts and transform the lives of men. Like a trumpet blast ringing loud and clear above the clash of sounding arms, the present unhappy strife among the most enlightened peoples of the Old World should serve as a call to the Christian Church to break away from the things that are superficial and valueless and concern herself again wholly with the great essential principles and forces of Apostolic Christianity.

But let it not be thought because of the foregoing statements that we should be written down as a pessimist. We are by no means discouraged or in despair. It does not follow because there is not as much true Christianity on earth to-day as some have claimed, that there is none at all. Christ has made a mighty impress upon human civilization. This is a vastly different world from that into which our Lord came nineteen hundred years ago. The redemptive forces that he set to work have helped it in innumerable ways and have lifted it far upward toward the light. Let us briefly enumerate some of the particulars in which it has been changed for the better:

1. It has been made incomparably wiser. The human mind has explored new and incalculably larger realms, and education has been democratized and is a thousand times more generally diffused among the people. The manual laborer of to-day knows more than most of the kings prior to the coming of the Babe of Bethlehem.

2. The earth has been made far more comfortable as a dwelling place for the millions of mankind. Steam, electricity, and other forces of nature have been harnessed and pressed into service to minister to the needs and pleasures of man. People who are comparatively poor enjoy conveniences now that were unknown to the wealthiest aristocrats before the Gospel of Christ was spread abroad and opened the way for humanity's upward march.

3. The present world is immensely more moral than that in which Christ and his Apostles lived and moved. True, our cities are reeking with sin and corruption, but they are not as bad as were Rome, Corinth, and the other leading municipalities of the heathen world. The people of that time were even without a sense of shame; vice did not secrete itself. It hung its brazen sign upon the streets in that age, as is shown in the ruins of Pompeii, in a manner that would not be tolerated in any city in Christendom to-day. Practices prevailed then that would not be permitted anywhere now. There were then no charities of consequence, no eleemosynary institutions of any kind; no spirit of reform to deliver men and women from the terrible evils that were preying upon them and destroying them. Even their ideals were depraved and low.

4. There is vastly more Christianity on earth to-day than there was when Jesus walked in bodily form amongst men. We do not claim that that now existing is of a purer or better type, but that it is more deeply rooted and much more widely extended. In the Master's time his religion had little standing among the more cultivated people. A great historian called it "a detestable superstition;" distinguished philosophers made sport of it, and poets ridiculed it in verse. But to-day Christ has more followers than any other religious teacher that the world has ever known; and those who worship him stand in the very forefront of human enlightenment and civilization. Christianity has never at any time before exercised so commanding an influence in human affairs as it does in this year of grace, 1914.

5. The spirit of peace is more abroad in the world to-day than in any period of its history prior to the Christian era. We dare to say this notwithstanding the cataclysmal war now raging. Before the coming of the Son of Man war was the occupation of the nations—it was then the rule, and peace was the exception. The temple of Janus in Rome, as was the case when war existed, stood open for six hundred years. Now peace generally prevails and a resort to arms is unusual. England and the United States are about to celebrate the passing of an entire century of unbroken concord between the two nations. When the cannons shall have ceased to roar in Europe, the foundations of Christianity will be found to be undisturbed. They are too deep-seated for anything ever to overturn them. Christ will finally conquer on this planet, and we shall have a "new earth wherein dwelleth righteousness." But the triumph of our Lord will come in his own good time, and perhaps not in our brief day. The promise is that he shall put all enemies under his feet, and there is no occasion for us to cease to celebrate his wonderful incarnation. That marked the beginning of a better day for humanity—a day that shall grow brighter, though overcast, it may be, by occasional clouds and storms, until the Millennial splendors shall burst upon us.

WHEN HE CAME.

When the fulness of the times was come, God sent forth His Son made of a woman. Gal. IV:4.

Earth was waiting spent and restless,
With a mingled hope and fear;
And the faithful few were sighing
"Surely, Lord, the day is near:
The Desire of all the nations,
It is time he should appear."

Still the gods were in the temples,
But the ancient faith had fled;
And the priests stood by their altars,
Only for a piece of bread;
And the oracles were silent,
And the prophets all were dead.

In the sacred courts of Zion,
Where the Lord had his abode,
There the money-changers trafficked
And the sheep and oxen trod;
And the world, because of wisdom,
Knew not either Lord or God.

Then the Spirit of the Highest
On a Virgin meek came down,
And he burdened her with blessing,
And he pained her with renown;
For she bare the Lord's anointed
For his cross and for his crown.

Earth for him had groaned and travailed
Since the ages first began;
For in him was hid the secret
That through all the ages ran—
Son of Mary, Son of David, Son of God, and Son of Man.

—Walter Chalmers Smith.

A CHRISTMAS RELIGION.

The expression of the Christian religion is not alone in public prayer, public testimony, Bible reading or church attendance. To add to the merriment of children on Christmas Day, to make some one glad and sweet and comfortable, to perform some service in His name at this season of the year which speaks of His birth, may in itself be a noble form of Christian expression and of religious experience. Blessed are they who hold His birth in deed as well as in word. Blessed are they who make glad the hearts of little children. Blessed are they who make good will among men a reality in daily living. And blessed is the church which becomes a house of human ministration to the community.

Make some one glad on Christmas Day,
And you will be glad for many a day,
Make Christ more real on any day,
And your reward will be for aye.

—New York Christian Advocate.

HOW TO ENJOY CHRISTMAS.

If thou wouldst truly enjoy Christmas, find some needy ones and out of thy own purse make them feel and know that Christ came not in vain. Those that are sad, comfort; those that are burdened, relieve; those in darkness, lighten; and the weak strengthen, and the hopeless cheer. Then should an hour of trial overtake you, memory will be thy handmaid and bring back the fragrance of other days, and sweetly say, "More blessed is he that giveth, than he that receiveth." So said the Christ of the manger, the Babe of Bethlehem.—George Lusty.

CHARLES WESLEY'S GREAT CHRISTMAS HYMN.

The most popular of all Christmas hymns probably is "Hark! the herald-angels sing." This famous hymn was first published by Charles Wesley in 1739, when it began "Hark! how all the welkin rings." From that date it has appeared in various hymnals with alterations by various editors. In one version, indeed, the opening stanza contained but a single word to be found in the original, that word being the exclamatory "Hark." As first published this hymn consisted of ten stanzas of four lines each, but was subsequently reduced to eight, then six, and, finally, to three extended stanzas of eight lines each, with the refrain—

"Hark! the herald-angels sing Glory to the new-born King."

Apparently no manuscript of this hymn exists, though Mr. Kelly, the Book Steward at the Wesleyan Conference Office, thinks otherwise. One day he hopes to make a systematic search among the many hundreds of Charles Wesley's manuscripts now under his care, when he feels confident the original of "Hark! the herald-angels sing" will come to light.

It is rather curious that these hymnal manuscripts of Charles Wesley have only been discovered within comparatively recent years. The story of how they were found is an interesting one. It appears that soon after Mr. Kelly was appointed Book Steward he was going on a tour of inspection through the cellars of No. 2, Castle Street, when he came to a small underground room which was boarded up. On having the barricade removed it was discovered that the compartment contained many things of interest connected with the Wesleys, not the least important being some fourteen volumes of manuscript hymns in the handwritings of Charles, John, and Samuel Wesley. Together with these volumes were numerous loose sheets of paper on which the celebrated hymnists had written the first drafts of their compositions before copying them "fair" into the bound volumes. These loose sheets are extremely interesting, as they contain numerous corrections which convey some idea of what the first impressions of the hymnists really were.

Charles Wesley composed his hymns at all times of the day and night, never knowing when a fine line or verse would strike him. In order that these ideas should not be lost he was in the habit of carrying about with him a set of tablets on which many of his hymns were written. He would then copy out these rough notes on a sheet of quarto paper, correct and finally copy "fair" into a manuscript book. Charles wrote a beautifully clear hand, bold, and, as was his character, fearless and straightforward.

"Hark! the herald-angels sing" is said to be found in more hymnals than any other of Charles Wesley's compositions, not even excepting "Jesus, Lover of my Soul."—Current Anecdotes.

SOME UTTERANCES BY DISTINGUISHED MEN.

The God whom men know outside of Jesus Christ is a poor, nebulous thing; an idea, not a reality; he, or rather it, is a film of cloud shaped into a vague form, through which you can see the stars.—Alexander MacLaren.

To make us the sons of God, possessors of all that is strong and beautiful in the visible creation, heirs of all that is bright and glorious in the hopes of Immortality and Heaven, God sent his Son.—Farrar: "The Witness of History to Christ."

The assertion that Christ cannot be very God of very God in a sense infinitely beyond what may be truthfully said of all other human beings, is sheer intellectual presumption, is indeed dogmatism of the worst kind.—Gordon: "Christ of To-day."

The result of all criticism, the final verdict of all common sense, is that Christ is historical. He is such a person as men could not have imagined if they would, and would not have imagined if they could. He is neither Greek myth, nor Hebrew legend. A non-existent Christianity did not spring out of the air and create a Christ.—Van Dyke: "The Gospel for an Age of Doubt."

The humanity of Jesus was not the veiling but the unveiling of the divine glory. The limitations, temptations, and sufferings of manhood were the conditions under which alone Christ accomplished the greatest work of the Deity—the redemption of a sinful race. The seat of the divine revelation and the center of the divine atonement was and is the human life of God.—"The Gospel for an Age of Doubt."

Beyond the teaching of Jesus thought cannot go. A God better than the Father of Christ is for man inconceivable. A diviner interpretation of human existence than that of Christ is unimaginable. Anything better than the Gospel is simply inconceivable. A higher or greater spirit than Jesus Christ is unthinkable. Christ is the highest word and the best act of God to man. Christ is the best conceivably that man can be; the best that God can do in man. He is, therefore, at once the highest revelation of God, and the sovereign example for man.—Gordon: "Ultimate Conceptions of Faith. From 'Side-Lights' in Service."

BLAMING THE CHURCH.

One of the strange developments of many persons with a zeal for reforms is their disposition to lay all blame for decadent morals upon the Church. "Whenever any grave wrong is pointed out," says the Editor of the Christian Guardian, "it is the custom to lay the blame for these things upon the Church, and to insist that if the Church had only done her duty, the abuses referred to could not have sprung into being."

The same editor, discussing this strange mania, says:

"And it sometimes happens that the pulpit echoes these sentiments until the man in the pew begins to wonder, as he listens to the vigorous condemnation of the Church and its members, whether there is any real religion save that which exists outside the Church of God. We think this presentation of the case, this blaming the Church and its membership for every evil which exists under the sun, is being a trifle overdone."

The Church does not seek to avoid facing the facts, no matter of what kind they may be, nor does it seek to evade its full share of responsibility for the evils which exist in society, but it has a right to ask that the presentation of facts be fair and just. In spite of all her failures and defects it remains true that the Church of God is to-day the most dreaded foe of evil and the strongest champion of righteousness and justice which the world possesses.

One of the bulletins issued last November by the Federated Churches of America gives the following facts in regard to social reform workers:—"Ninety-two per cent of those engaged in associated charity work, eighty-eight per cent of those engaged in social settlement work, and seventy-one per cent of those engaged in general social work are church members."

Commenting upon these facts, Dr. Graham Taylor says: "Across the frontier in the rear, as well as in the vanguards of our civic and social progress, those who constitute the rank and file doing the remedial, constructive work in philanthropy and for social justice, as well as those who lead them, are largely recruited from those who are either members of the Churches or have been inspired and partly trained by them."

It must be borne in mind that in no state of society, especially where humanity is crowded together as it is in our large cities, will it ever be possible wholly to eliminate ignorance, selfishness and vice with all their fearful train of attendant miseries. Even the Church can do but little for those who reject its teachings and refuse its counsels.

"READJUSTMENT IN MEXICO."

Mr. Editor: Let it be said once for all that nobody has even remotely dreamed of ignoring or usurping the authority of the General Conference. We all know that in the matter of boundaries that body has not delegated its authority to any other body. This was recognized both by the Laredo Conference and by the Board in matters that were by them referred to the last General Conference. On this point language could hardly be clearer or stronger than that contained in the Board's action on Readjustment in Mexico, as follows:

"We recommend that in the location of mission stations, of institutions, and in other matters not transgressing either the Discipline or the rights of missionaries or members we so administer our mission in Mexico as to promote the proposed readjustment and co-operation until such time as the General Conference action can be secured.

"In taking this action we intend only to indorse the general principle of territorial distribution. Only the General Conference has authority to change the boundaries of our Annual Conferences or to surrender the territory now occupied by our Board." (Pages 7 and 8, printed report).

I cannot discover anything dangerously revolutionary, lawless or even reckless in this. Under this provision the Bishops in charge of the field from time to time are to be the judges and administrators of the law.

The reason this matter of readjustment was not taken to the General Conference was that nothing definite had been reached that required its action. The questions involved were interdenominational in character and were in the hands of the Latin-American Committee, which did not take final action until July 1.

This whole matter was presented to the Board in annual meeting on April 22 (See Annual Report, page 40). This report was referred to a committee which reported on April 24 as follows (See page 243 of Annual Report):

"We have had under consideration the recommendations of the Conference of Board secretaries on co-operation and unity in Mexico which were approved by our missionaries in Mexico, assembled at Laredo, Tex., February 10 and 11, 1914, a statement of which we attach to this report, and we recommend that the Board of Missions approve the principles of co-operation, leaving it to the missionaries on the field to work out the details."

This report was adopted without amendment. That was a fine opportunity to have raised objections or moved to refer to the General Conference. The minutes do not indicate that any objection was raised to it.

The precedents are against the Bishop's contention. It has been the rule for the Board and Bishops in charge of mission fields to assume that the General Conference had already given them authority to make "great and serious changes in the administration of our mission work," without specific action in the case. The opening of the new missions is by no means a light matter. It is certainly more momentous than adjustments after they have been entered. Yet the Brazil, Japan, Korea and Cuba missions were opened without direct authorization or endorsement by the General Conference. The much-lauded and exceedingly beneficial territorial adjustments in Korea, similar to those now proposed in Mexico, involving no inconsiderable changes both in territory and membership, were neither authorized nor approved by the General Conference. What was right then cannot be wrong now. Anyhow we are all in the same boat, the boat our fathers sailed before us. Let us sit steady. For my part, I think it still seaworthy, and in the main on the right track.

The Laredo meeting was not "spontaneous." In this Bishop Hoss is right. It was called by Bishop Morrison, then in charge, and was not "gotten up by the secretaries," as the correspondence clearly shows. In a letter to the writer, under date of January 7, 1914, Bishop Morrison suggests a meeting of missionaries and secretaries to be held at Laredo, and asks the judgment of the secretaries "as to the propriety of calling such a meeting." This appears to be the first mention of such a meeting shown by our records. This meeting was called "for the purpose of considering the best things to do under present conditions and especially to discuss some changes in the Conference lines at the coming General Conference." I was not present. The missionaries acted on committees and had all the privilege of speech and ballot. There were only two secretaries present. I naturally supposed in the absence of other evidence that the reports signed by missionaries and the unanimous vote of the missionaries were sufficient warrant for the statement that they "had the honor of leading in this great movement." If they did not, then who did, since this was the first denominational meeting to take action? The ten topics on which they acted were the same as the first ten topics suggested by the Latin-American Committee and afterwards acted on by the Board, excepting the item referring to girls' schools.

The Cincinnati Conference was not a Methodist body. It was interdenominational. It was called by the Latin-American Committee. We had no notice that such a meeting was to be held until after the General Conference had met and adjourned. It was not a delegated body. Its actions could not be final. The call was for "a conference of missionaries and secretaries of boards at work in Mexico, to come together to talk over the present situation and the wisest plans for the resumption of missionary work when Mexico is opened again." The two Methodisms were represented by their respective Bishops in charge in Mexico. The average number of men representing each Board was four. We had our full share of representatives, who were there by the same authority that provides for negotiations or discussions with all similar interdenominational meetings, and in keeping with the action of the Laredo Conference and of the Board in its annual meeting. There were no doubt others whose counsel would have been very valuable, but we tried to furnish a fair representation within the terms of the call.

It is intimated that the secretaries had not given sufficient notice to members of the Board as to the gravity and importance of the proposed readjustment. The facts are these: This matter had been before the Church in one way and another for eight months. It had been considered in its general phases by the Board in annual meeting, the Bishops being present, and favorably passed upon. It had been in the papers' time and again. The notice which called the meeting of the Board, sent out September 5, more than three weeks before the meeting was held, gave chief emphasis to the proposed readjustment in Mexico, and referred to two enclosures. One of these was the booklet of 23 pages containing a detailed statement of the findings and recommendations of the Cincinnati Conference. The other was a circular letter setting forth some of the salient features and forecasts of that Conference. These went to all Board members and to the missionaries to Mexico. I am at a loss to know what more could have been expected. As a matter of fact, we had many letters indicating that it was understood, and none that it was not.

I agree with Bishop Hoss that no one should attempt to "whistle questions down the wind." Whether the Church wants to know the facts or not, it is entitled to know them. By all means let us have them. A calm, candid, and good-humored canvassing of the facts ought to be a great blessing. Nothing else is worth while.

Fortunately, we are all agreed on one thing. Some sort of readjustment is needed. Nobody has yet had the temerity to deny that. Then two things only need concern us:

1. What should be the nature and extent of this readjustment? A definite plan has been proposed. If those who oppose this plan can suggest something better, by all means let us have it, with the facts to back it up. With the light I now have I am persuaded that the Church will not only overwhelmingly approve some such plan of readjustment, but will demand it, when they know the facts. I am open to conviction, am in no hurry, and am ready to face the facts seriously and honestly before the Church and will cheerfully abide by the results.

2. I am convinced that the Board and its representatives have acted in good faith and have followed the precedents as they understood them. They have not acted with precipitation, nor under cover. Making due allowance for the mistakes commonly attached to human affairs, their motives and methods have been those of fair-minded, loyal, intelligent Christian men and women.

On these subjects I have convictions that seem to me worth maintaining, with undiminished respect and love for all who may differ with me.

THE SUPERIORITY OF CHRISTIANITY.

By Rev. T. W. Jeffrey, D.D.

From the first the Christian Church was recognized as a great institution for teaching and enforcing a pure morality, whereas the ancient religion took small account of conduct save in matters ceremonial. Therefore, Christianity has lifted the whole conception of life to a far higher level than it occupied under the old systems. Mr. Lecky says: "Christianity has produced more heroic actions, and formed more upright men than any other creed. The great characteristic of Christianity is that it has been the main source of the moral development of Europe and that it has discharged this office by the assimilating and attractive influence of a perfect ideal. The moral progress of mankind can never cease to be distinctly and intensely Christian as long as it consists of a gradual approximation to the character of the Christian Founder. Mr. Renan, who wrote a criticism of Christ, said: "The true miracle of nascent Christianity was the spirit of Jesus grafted into his Disciples."

Christianity is no more responsible for the wrongs and follies which have been committed in its name or are now being committed in its name than the medical profession is responsible for deaths by poison. It has fostered material prosperity and out of this prosperity vices have grown, but we cannot hold it responsible for them. These evils have occurred not because men were Christians, but because they were not Christians in any real sense. We must not confuse Christianity with acts of men and parliaments which are nominally Christian.

The sacredness of infancy dates from the time when the Babe of Bethlehem lay in his obscure cradle among the Judean hills. Womanhood owes everything to Christianity. Aristotle regarded woman as "being of an intermediate order between freemen and slaves." Plato suggested a community of wives for political purposes.

While Christ laid down no precept against war the spirit of his entire teaching is to disarm the hatred of men and lead to universal peace. If peace ever comes, it will come in Christ's name. If Milton's majestic vision is ever fulfilled, his Christian commonwealth will rest on Christian foundations.—Central Christian Advocate.

Church News

Dr. G. A. Lott, of Nashville, Tenn., one of the best known Baptist ministers in the South, died on December 18, at the age of 74.

Sixty-five churches of West Side, Chicago, have invited Rev. Billy Sunday to conduct a revival meeting in that section of the great Western Metropolis.

Rev. J. B. Culpepper, the well-known evangelist, has lately conducted a successful meeting at Bronson, Fla. The singing during the services was led by his son, J. B. Culpepper, Jr.

Dr. J. E. Wray, pastor of our church at Orlando, Fla., recently had a sermon published in the Christian World Pulpit, of London, England. Dr. Wray is well known and much appreciated in New Orleans.

Dr. Van Dyke, United States Minister to the Netherlands, is at home for a brief season on a leave of absence. Dr. Van Dyke's pulpit and poetic messages have been considerably missed since he became a Government official.

Dr. Richard Wilkinson has been cordially welcomed as pastor of our Washington Street Church of Petersburg, Va.—his new charge—and his first sermons made a fine impression upon the large congregations that heard them.

Pope Benedict's movement to secure a truce between the warring nations of Europe during the Christmas season has proven a complete failure. It is claimed that Turkey and Russia are principally responsible for this result.

Dr. S. A. Steel has been continued in charge of the Washington Street Church of Columbia, S. C., for another year, and Dr. H. M. DuBose has been re-assigned to the First M. E. Church, South, of Atlanta, Ga. Both of these congregations are fortunate.

Bishop R. G. Waterhouse expects to return to California in time to spend the Christmas holidays with his family in Los Angeles. The Bishop has well earned a season of rest by the fine service which he has lately rendered in his episcopal district in the East.

Rev. W. C. Kirkland has been chosen editor of the Southern Christian Advocate, to succeed Rev. S. A. Nettles. Mr. Kirkland was graduated from Wofford College in 1894, and it is stated that if he is at all related to Dr. W. D. Kirkland and Chancellor James H. Kirkland, "it is distantly."

At the recent session of the South Carolina Conference it was divided in accordance with the previous action of that body. One of the Conferences thus formed retains the old name, and the other is to be called the Upper South Carolina Conference. Each of these Conferences has six presiding elders' districts.

Miss Ruth Ivey, the accomplished daughter of Dr. T. N. Ivey, Editor of the Nashville Christian Advocate, was married to the Hon. M. Leslie Davis, of Beaufort, N. C., on December 1, the ceremony taking place in Raleigh, N. C. Though a little belated, the Advocate extends congratulations and best wishes to the happy young couple.

It is claimed that an investigation in New York shows that the Roman Catholic races there have an average birth rate of 49.50 per thousand, and those adhering to the Orthodox Greek Church of 46.78 per thousand, as against 14.05 per thousand for the Protestant peoples. This does not look reassuring for the future of the Protestant Churches in the Empire State.

Bishop E. E. Hoss has lately spent several days at Claremore, Oklahoma, taking a course of hot baths for rheumatism and eczema. He was expected to attend a meeting of the Federal Council of Methodism in Atlanta last week and immediately thereafter to visit his daughter in Philadelphia. It is his purpose to spend the remaining months of the winter at Muskogee, Oklahoma.

Dr. J. L. Johnson, formerly Professor of English at the University of Mississippi, and perhaps the most scholarly Baptist minister in that State, is reported to be in a very feeble and precarious state of health. This will be unpleasant news to many of Dr. Johnson's old pupils in the South, among whom the Editor of the Advocate gratefully numbers himself. We hope to hear soon that this worthy preacher and teacher is much improved physically.

We infer from the following statement taken from the North Carolina Christian Advocate of December 17, that Bishop Atkins has returned from the Far East: "We are glad to welcome home Bishop Atkins and Mrs. Atkins, who have been absent for several months in China and Japan, where the Bishop has been holding our Mission Conferences in the Orient." Through the columns of the Nashville Christian Advocate, Bishop Atkins gave the Church a number of very interesting letters while he was abroad.

In a letter written a few weeks ago to Evangelist J. B. Culpepper, his son in the gospel, Bishop J. S. Key, among other things, said: "Eighty-five years are beginning to tell on me. My eyes have well-nigh failed me. I write largely by guess, and when I have finished my letter I cannot read it; so if you find any mistakes charge them to blindness. I can read only the largest print, and my reading is done for me by others. Otherwise my health is as good as it has ever been, and I am a cheerful and happy old man, facing the approaching end without disturbance, and confident of a home in heaven. Hallelujah!"

THE DEATH OF MR. C. S. THAMES.

From the Vicksburg Herald of December 15, 1914, we take the following:

"The community was shocked yesterday morning at the announcement of the sudden and unexpected death of Attorney Charles S. Thames, brother of District Attorney James D. Thames and one of the most popular younger members of the Warren County Bar Association. Mr. Thames had been ill during the night at his residence on Harrison Street, but rallied, and was deemed much improved by the attending physician, until a sudden change for the worse came early yesterday morning, and death, which was due to heart disease, resulted about 6 o'clock.

"Mr. Thames was a native of Crawford, Lowndes County, Mississippi, and was in the thirty-fifth year of his age. He was a son of Rev. S. M. Thames, who now resides at Hernando, Miss. His father and mother, his wife, who was Miss Vernie Anderson of Issaquena County, Hon. J. D. Thames, his brother, and a sister, Mrs. Connie Lloyd, survive, and have the sympathy of their large circle of friends in their great bereavement.

"Mr. Thames came to make Vicksburg his home in 1904 and engaged in the practice of law with Judge W. K. McLaurin and they were law partners at the time of his death. Mr. Thames was actively engaged in cases at the recent term of court, and at the recent meeting of the Board of Supervisors, giving legal advice in his position of County Attorney for the Board. He was a devoted husband and had many friends, by whom his death is keenly felt.

"The funeral will take place this afternoon at 2:30 o'clock from the residence on Harrison Street, and from the Crawford Street Methodist Church at 3 o'clock, Rev. Dr. T. B. Holloman officiating."

A brief note from Dr. T. B. Holloman, pastor of the Crawford Street M. E. Church, South, of Vicksburg, states that Brother and Sister S. M. Thames were present at the obsequies of their son, and that they were submissive to the Divine will, but deeply grieved. Our heart goes out to them and all the other sorrowing ones in profound sympathy in this trying hour. Let the brethren remember them at the throne of grace.

CENTENARY COLLEGE COMPLIMENTED.

Senator W. R. Webb, of Bell County, Tenn., the famous Southern educator of boys, made a visit to Centenary College recently and delivered a most helpful and inspiring address.

The following words of appreciation were written by him:

"I congratulate the patrons of Centenary College. It is one of the few institutions not overcrowded. The opportunity of students for personal touch with the faculty is fine. In my own school and college life the thing I prized most was the personal influence and inspiration that came from contact with great personalities—a thing impossible in institutions where there is such large concentration of students. Our educational institutions in consequence of such concentration are being organized into huge machines, where there are a large number of less-bearers and very few teachers.

"I would esteem it a great privilege to have my own sons, if they were of college age, in Centenary, because of the inestimable privilege of personal touch with members of this splendid faculty."

REV. J. S. PARKER CALLED HOME.

Dear Dr. Meek: Rev. J. S. Parker died in this city this morning, Dec. 18, 1914, at 3 o'clock after three months confinement to his room. He was granted a superannuate relation at the recent session of the Mississippi Conference. His last message to the members of the Conference was: "Tell my brethren that I will probably not meet with them again, but that it is alright with me."

A fuller account of his life and labors will be sent you later. GEO. H. THOMPSON.

Hattiesburg, Miss.

Editorial Note.—It deeply pains us to give out to the public this announcement. Brother Parker was a true and faithful minister and his departure will be sincerely mourned by many. He had been a member of the Mississippi Conference since 1879. May the Heavenly Father have the bereaved loved ones in his tender care!

Secular News and Comment

The growing of cauliflower is an increasing industry in Louisiana.

The French and English armies have given orders in Indiana for 3000 sleighs, which they purpose to use this winter.

The Belgian Government is reported to be displeased with the efforts of Americans to induce Belgian farmers to emigrate to this country.

As a precaution against fighting air crafts, the lights in the streets of London have been ordered to be dispensed with as far as is possible.

The Allies in the European war are preparing re-enforcements to the number of 4,000,000 men, with which they hope to strike the Germans a crushing blow in the spring.

United States war vessels have been sent to the Panama Canal Zone to assist, if necessary, in maintaining the neutrality of the great waterway. This was done at the request of Col. Goethals.

Only one person in 1000 in Denmark is unable to read and write, as compared with seven out of every 1000 in the United States. Of 260,000 Danish children of school age only 370 failed to attend school during the year 1911.

At a recent meeting of the Board of Administrators of Tulane University, all the privileges of the medical department of that institution were granted to female students. The women have been working for this concession for a number of years.

The Russian Government which has recently forbidden the sale of vodka in that great Empire, received as revenue from the traffic the sum of $500,000,000 annually. This was not counted too much to give up in order to secure a sober army and citizenship.

The Navy Department at Washington opened on December 15 bids for the construction of eight new submarine war vessels. These vessels will be required to have a speed of 21 knots on the surface of the sea, and of 16 knots under water. Their engines will burn oil, and they must have a cruising capacity sufficient to enable them to accompany a fleet around the world.

The American birth rate is said to be steadily decreasing. It is claimed that in portions of New England the native population is not even maintaining itself, and that Boston has ceased to be an American city. The birth rate in Berlin is given as 40 per thousand, while in New York it is said to be 20 per thousand, which is less even than that of Paris, where it is 25 per thousand.

Dr. Charles W. Eliot, President Emeritus of Harvard University, recently declared that Mr. John D. Rockefeller is the best business man that the United States has ever produced, and that the building up of the Standard Oil Company is "one of the most beneficent works ever done." We do not believe that either of the affirmations contained in this statement is true. Dr. Eliot has rather distinguished himself for making reckless statements since his superannuation.

Gov. Cole L. Blaise, of South Carolina, pardoned 101 convicts on last Thanksgiving day, and it is rather expected that he will duplicate that record on Christmas day. He has pardoned 1435 persons since he has been governor, and it is stated that there are now only 160 convicts in the State penitentiary. His term of office will expire on January 15, when he will be succeeded by the Hon. Richard I. Manning. What is the use of States spending money to convict violators of the law if their chief executives are to set them free upon almost any sort of a pretext?

On December 15 a squadron of swift German cruisers unexpectedly appeared off the northeast coast of the British Isles and bombarded the three important towns of Hartlepool, Whitby, and Scarborough. Several people were killed and a number injured by the bombardment. The day was a foggy one and the attacking vessels escaped in the mist. This feat was a daring one and it appears to have caused much excitement in England, which had not been so directly attacked by an enemy in centuries. The outcome of the event, however, is likely to prove helpful to Great Britain, by causing a larger enlistment in the army and making the people more determined to prosecute the war vigorously until their aggressive foe is conquered.

In 124 years, ending July 1, 1914, the United States Government paid out in pensions $4,729,957,370, of which amount $4,457,974,496 was paid to the Civil War pensioners. The number of such pensioners in 1885 was 345,000, but in 1905 they had increased to 1,000,000. The largest amount ever paid them in a single year was in 1913, when the aggregate amount that went to them was $174,171,660. The list of Civil War soldiers is now rapidly dwindling, 33,639 names having been stricken from it last year. Of the 785,000 persons on the pension rolls last July, only 429,354 were actual participants in the war of the sixties, the others being widows and dependents, for whom the Government makes provision. The Civil War while it was being fought is estimated to have cost approximately $4,000,000,000; so it will be seen that it has cost more since it has ended than it did while it was in progress.

LOUISIANA CONFERENCE TEMPERANCE REPORT.

(The following report, prepared by the Committee on Temperance, was unanimously adopted by the Louisiana Conference in its recent session at Shreveport.)

The Church of God, which has been pressing the fight against strong drink in this country for a century and more, has reason to be profoundly thankful for the advance made by the prohibition forces during the past twelve months. We do not know of any other period of like duration within the past one hundred years in which so much progress in this reform has been made. Among the notable events of the past year we would mention the following:

1. The successful launching of the campaign for nation-wide prohibition, accompanied by an unprecedented unification of the prohibition forces and the concentration of their efforts upon the attainment of this end.
2. The banishment of alcoholic liquors from the United States Navy by order of Secretary Daniels.
3. Out of seven States voting on State-wide prohibition during this period, five voted dry, while the other two, namely, Ohio and California, voted dry if the vote of the chief city in each State, namely, Cincinnati and San Francisco, be eliminated. We have now fourteen dry States, with the prospect of there being added to this number two or three within the near future.
4. The first conference of Roman Catholics to consider the question of prohibition met at Niagara Falls last August, resulting in the organization of the Catholic Prohibition League of America.
5. The introduction of the Sheppard-Hobson bill in Congress providing for an amendment to the national Constitution, which would prohibit the manufacture, sale, transportation, exportation and importation of alcoholic liquors for beverage purposes.
6. The curtailment, and, in some cases, the absolute prohibition of the use of alcoholic liquors by the leading countries of Europe.

Sentiment is Growing.

Coming to the consideration of conditions in Louisiana, we are pleased to report that prohibition sentiment in the Louisiana Legislature is stronger than it has been in previous years. We are very much in need of a law to prohibit the sale of all malt liquors, whether intoxicating or not, in dry territory, and also of measures to prohibit the shipment of liquor into dry territory. It is with pleasure that we record the fact that during Brother Turner's superintendency of the Louisiana Anti-Saloon League, not one foot of dry territory has been lost, while a considerable amount of wet territory has been gained. We have not lost a single local fight in which the Anti-Saloon League has been engaged. There are now thirty-four dry parishes in Louisiana.

We are advised by Superintendent Turner that the pastors of our Conference have co-operated with him in his important work, and we would repeat the recommendation of your committee of last year that "as far as possible, practical co-operation be given to the Anti-Saloon League by opening our pulpits as often as once a year to the superintendent and that each pastor and Sunday school superintendent, on the Temperance Sunday or some other Sunday in April, be requested to direct the offering of the day to the Anti-Saloon League."

We recommend the observance of Temperance Day in our Sunday schools and would urge hearty co-operation on the part of our people with the Anti-Saloon League and the W. C. T. U. in their efforts to secure total abstinence pledges.

We are pleased to see that the announced program of the Louisiana Anti-Saloon League for January includes a tour of the State by a number of strong prohibition speakers, notably Dr. Louis Albert Banks, ex-Gov. M. R. Patterson, and others, and we urge our pastors to co-operate with Superintendent Turner in dating these men in the State.

We are glad to be able to indorse the policy and methods of Superintendent A. W. Turner and recommend his re-appointment as State Superintendent of the Louisiana Anti-Saloon League. S. H. WERLEIN, Chairman, HENRY BEACH CARRE, Secretary.

BEGINNING A BETTER LIFE.

Every day is a "first day." Every day may be and ought to be a "holy day." Therefore, it is a good plan to get a new start for the new year by pronouncing a benediction on the last day of the old year; to talk with the Heavenly Father about it and to make a covenant with him at once.

One of the very best ways for beginning a better life is to begin immediately to do some good to somebody, to speak a kind word, to smile a look of greeting, to shake hands with a little gentle pressure in the shake, to ask a question and then respond to the answer by another question and develop a conversation, ingeniously drawing through it the golden thread of a generous spirit; leading people out, leaving a pleasant memory with them when you leave, and softly and silently as you go breathing for them a prayer to the ever-present and loving God.—Bishop Vincent.

LOVE AND SERVICE.

A spirit of loving service should fill the heart of every Christian. Those to whom we give kindness and love will return the same with fidelity and service rendered in like spirit. We are usually paid in returns like our own gifts. Love invites its own response; service inspires to service; and the memory of a kindness done may prove to us a welcome shelter and a defense in time of need. It may be thou dost not love thy neighbor; it may be thou thinkest only how to get from him, how to gain by him. How lonely, then, must thou be! how shut up in thy poverty-stricken room, with the bare walls of thy selfishness and the hard couch of thy unsatisfaction.—George MacDonald.

"What is your life? It is even a vapor. Steam is a vapor, but, harnessed, it moves the world."

THE WAR IN METHODISM.

Dr. Jay Bowen Hamilton in the Bible Champion.

Thomas Paine in his "American Crisis" said: "These are the times that try men's souls." His modern followers are busy trying the souls of World-Wide Methodism. The warfare they are now engaged in suggests to all other Christian denominations that it will be well to get ready. Their time is coming. With some, it is already here.

The usual plan of campaign as outlined in the West Nor., page 27, is being followed everywhere. In England, the third or last form of assault is disfranchisement. They have given with seeming earnestness, pledges of loyalty to denominational standards, after obtaining places of power and influence, turn about and seek to overthrow the foundations which they took oath to maintain.

As Teachers in Denominational Schools, as Pastors of Industrial Churches, as Editors of Religious Periodicals, or as Authors of Pamphlets and Books, they advocate doctrines antagonistic to those of their own denomination. When arraigned for their treachery, they loftily claim freedom of thought and speech and point to their deep religious experience and holy, spiritual living. The denomination desirous of avoiding strife and controversy, pelters with the traitors and allows them without protest or rebuke to continue their evil seed-sowing. When the loyal members protest and appeal, they are bidden, for peace's sake, to discontinue their agitation.

Last year the issue came before the English Conference. Professor Jackson, author of "The Preacher and Modern Mind," an instructor in a school of training for young ministers, was to be re-elected. The loyal Methodists protested, and after a long debate were defeated, the main issue not being decided. The majority, for peace's sake, permitted the young ministers to sit for another year at the feet of their instructor in sacred things. Those who read our review of his book in the Champion, November, 1913, know that if Ingersoll were to return from whichever world he now is in, and were merely to discontinue his blasphemy and vulgarity, but teach the same doctrines he did so eloquently, when in the flesh, at 50 cents per student, Professor Jackson would have in him no mean rival. Both would accomplish the same result and with almost identical arguments.

The defeated Methodists attempted to make an appeal to Methodism, but the denominational press was closed to them. They issued a circular letter, organized the Wesley Bible Union, and in January, 1914, issued the first number of a small quarterly magazine.

This year the issue was again up for discussion. The president-elect, Rev. Dinsdale T. Young, in his address to the Conference declared his faith "in the Bible as being from Genesis to Revelations a book inspired of God, and rightly interpreted, our unfailing guide in all matters of faith and practice." The most effective point in his splendid address, which made a deep impression, was "his charge that on some lips, 'Back to Christ' meant the snubbing of all the Apostles on the way back."

According to the trust deed, Methodist Church property can be used only for the propagation of the established doctrines of the denomination. There is a last resort, which cannot fail, when the loyal membership have tried all others. An appeal to the courts would undoubtedly enforce the conditions of the deed of trust. A number of cases in other denominations are a matter of record. In every case the decision has been for the rigid interpretations of the provisions of the trust deed.

In the Pastoral Session of the Conference this year, on four occasions the great issue was raised. A protest was made that The Methodist Times had favorably reviewed a "volume of such a character that it is nothing short of an outrage that its circulation should be aided by the Ministerial Editor of the paper. It does not pretend to find any authority in the Scriptures, but operates in the realm of religion with the idea of divine immanence." It denies that any of the commands of our Lord are binding upon us for anything like literal obedience, and asserts that to say our Lord is the only Savior, is to keep some souls away from God." The reply to this protest was noise. "From the first introduction of the matter, noisy Modernists had endeavored to shout the speaker down. In that they did not succeed, but the tumult was intolerable, and these solemn judicial functions were exercised, or rather the exercise of them was denied amid a scene of excitement which was quite unworthy of the occasion or the assembly. Next day every serious-minded Methodist man, in the Conference was deplored the fact that Methodist constitutional usage had been thus trodden under foot." The Journal sums up the result: "Undoubtedly great good was done. An ex-President said, 'You lost the vote, but you won your case,' and a chairman of a district said, 'It is many a year before you will have such cause of complaint against the Methodist press.' We thank God for all ground gained, and bid all our helpers take fresh courage."

THE APPROPRIATION OF THE BIRTH OF CHRIST.

A Grecian legend is told of a prize contest for the best statue of one of the goddesses. Many and rare were the statues presented. The poorest one of all was the work of a country youth. He lacked the artistic gift. He had entered the competition solely out of his devotion to the goddess. He had worked with clumsy hand, but with a loving heart. When the day of award came, so runs the story, the goddess, knowing the honest lad's great love for her, entered herself into the crude stone. Then it glowed with a beauty far surpassing all the others, and brought the country boy the eagerly sought prize.

Christmas is full of things all the world's a-seeking. Yet the poorest boy may have the greatest of Christmas guerdons, the birth of Christ himself, which Paul spoke of as "Christ within you, the hope of glory," and of which Phillips Brooks so beautifully sang:

O holy Child of Bethlehem,
Descend to us, we pray;
Cast out our sin, and enter in,
Be born in us to-day.

—New York Christian Advocate.

THE ANGELS AND THE SHEPHERDS.

Luke 2:11.

Nothing more ethereal, nothing purer, nothing more beautiful can be conceived than this whole angelic appearance and annunciation. Yet it was made to rude shepherds. It was made to the few and not to the many. It seems as though it was an overflow of heavenly joy meant for their own enjoying, rather than as a composite message sent by the hands of many angels to the earth. The shepherd heard what was going on above. It was going on there for higher spectators, and for souls rejoicing among the blest; but as it were, it broke forth, and some of the strains fell on the earth, not like an anthem or chorus; but as here and there music is heard on a summer night, afar off, snatches being wafted to us, and then being hushed again by intervening noises or winds, so there seem to have been snatches of this celestial music—the annunciation. These snatches did not constitute the whole song of heavenly joy, but were a part of it.

The shepherds passed away. Nothing more is known of them. Their ministry was to be spectators and announcers; and having fulfilled their mission they sank out of view.—H. W. Beecher.

IS PROHIBITION A SUCCESS OR FAILURE?

Those opposing prohibition say that prohibition does not prohibit, that taxes are increased, and prohibition is wrong in principle and utterly undesirable. If this is true, why is it that States like Maine, which has been dry for fifty years, remain dry?

Why is it that the Governors of all prohibition States endorse prohibition?

Is not the continuation of State-wide prohibition in those States by which it has been adopted the best evidence that state-wide prohibition is for the best?

Read what the Governors of such States say:

The Pioneer Prohibition State of Maine: "For the last fifty years every Governor of Maine, with three exceptions, has declared in effect that prohibition has largely contributed to the moral, the social, and the economic welfare of the State."

Governor Stubbs, Kansas: "If the prohibitory law had not given Kansas a better civilization and a higher type of manhood and womanhood, it would have been repealed years ago."

Governor Burke, North Dakota: "Under prohibition the people of this State are better fed, better clothed and are better citizens."

Governor Cruce, Oklahoma: "Since the closing of saloons the banks have more money, the stores are selling more goods, real estate is worth more, and the whole State is more prosperous."

Governor Brewer, Mississippi: "I am a red-hot, uncompromising prohibitionist, in favor of statutory prohibition, and of every species and form of State prohibition and National prohibition."

Governor Kitchin, North Carolina: "Under prohibition there has been a marked diminution in crimes, business has increased and politics and government have been relieved of one of their most corrupting influences."

Governor Hooper, Tennessee: "The consumption of liquor in this State has greatly diminished, and the crimes resulting from the traffic have decreased in number."—Central Methodist Advocate.

CHILDREN AND CHRISTMAS.

You who have children are the blessed ones; you who open sleepy eyes in the gray dawn of Christmas morning to see a small face round with excitement peering through the bedroom door and hear from the next room treble shouts of "Merry Christmas" and the scampering of little feet. You are the happy ones about whose Christmas tree the gifts are mostly toys. There are so many who have no children. So many homeless people in city boarding houses, in village cottages, in mines, in camps, in offices; so many lonely women whom a cruel fate and a chaotic world have robbed of their heritage; so many barren in body or in spirit, to whom home is but a dwelling place and the future only a dream. You about whose skirts little hands are clinging are the ones to whom a Christmas really comes. When in the dusk of Christmas Day the curtains are drawn over the holly wreaths, and the fire throws a soft light among the Yuletide evergreens, flickering on the shining tree around which the gifts lie scattered, when a little head rests wearily against the father's knee with the utter trust of childhood, and a soft, tired body snuggles up against the mother's breast, then is life justified. The memory of a hard and lonely past may bring unnoticed tears, the fear of an uncertain future may sober the smile, but this moment at least is a perfect one. The world may roll on with its wars and wickedness and misery, kingdoms may go and governments may come, philosophies and religions may wax and wane, but to you at least is this life worth living and to you is immortality assured.—Arthur H. Gleason, in Collier's.

THE STAR.

By Florence L. Patterson.

When the birds and bees and flowers
All have gone to bed,
Did you ever see a star
Shining overhead?

Many, many years ago
In a land afar,
Wise men followed all the night
Such a little star.

And it led them to a barn,
Where among the hay
Safe within his mother's arms,
Christ, a Baby lay.

—The Churchman.

CHRISTMAS UNDER THE SNOW.

By Rev. Henry E. Wing.

This little boy lived, more than sixty years ago, among the hills in northwestern Connecticut. He had a nice grandmother whose home was four miles from his. Christmas was coming, and he was to spend the day with her. But three or four days before Christmas it began to snow. It snowed and snowed all that day and that night, and the next day and night, and so on, day and night, until Christmas Eve. Then it cleared off cold, and a thick, hard crust formed on the clean, white counterpane.

So the sun rose bright on Christmas morning, and after a warm, hearty breakfast the boy started afoot for his grandmother's. He was dressed in his Sunday-go-to-meeting clothes, with long, loose pantaloons—though he was quite a little boy—and a heavy woolen jacket, and knit, worsted mittens, and a thick cloth cap with broad ear-tabs. His pantaloons were folded at the ankles and tied about his boot tops. Then his mother wound a striped tippet six or eight times about his head and neck. Thus, when finally rigged out for his trip, there was not much chance for old Jack Frost to get a nip at him.

In his pockets were some nice Christmas gifts for his grandmother: A funny little embroidered night-cap, from his mother; a fine linen handkerchief, hemstitched by hand, from his sister, and a few others, that he now "disremembers." But his own gift was the handsomest of all. It was a splendid shawl pin, with a head the size of a piece of chalk and about the same shape. He had made this himself by rolling the blunt end of a darning needle in a spoonful of melted red wax, and any one can see that it must have been very beautiful.

Well, he was a pretty self-satisfied boy as he "went on his journey." The whole landscape was clothed in white. No fences were in sight, except the tallest stakes; no hedges; no shrubs. The big trees had their rumpled heads wrapped up in great white mufflers and the scattered barns and houses had huge banks of snow hanging over their eaves like shaggy gray eyebrows. The scene was enlivened by groups of men and oxen breaking the roads and once in a while a scared dog, skating around on the slippery crust and a forlorn family of crows, shivering in the top of an old hemlock down by the pond.

The boy kept on his way, sometimes running to keep his feet warm, and sometimes creeping on his hands and knees up the smooth hillsides. At last he came, rather warm and a little tired and pretty hungry, to the spot where he thought his grandmother lived. Then, what was his surprise not to see her in the doorway watching for him, or any door for her to stand in, or any house, even—only, where her house had stood, a great big snow-bank! But presently he detected a little wavering wreath of bluish-gray smoke, curling up out of the top of the mound. He scrambled up the snow bank, and there he discovered the chimney sticking up through the white blanket and a strip of the ridge of the roof and a corner of the gable down to the top of the garret window of his grandmother's one-story cottage.

It did not take the boy long to work the window loose and crawl in. Then he crept softly down the dark, steep, crooked stairs. At the foot of the stairs was a door opening right into the sitting room. He was rather nervous. That whiff of smoke from the chimney had given him some encouragement, yet he might find his dear grandmother starved or smothered in that dark room. He lifted the iron latch without a click and pushed the door. There was his grandmother, sitting with her back toward him. She had a lighted candle on the table by her side and her face was bent over the big Bible as she read the story of the coming of the child Jesus.

Near the door where the boy stood was an old-fashioned open fire-place, and at the side of it, by the brick oven, hung a long slender white stocking—his grandmother's stocking, just as it had hung on Christmas mornings for over seventy years, but now, for the first time on a Christmas morning, empty. It was not empty long. He hastily dropped into it the gifts from his pockets, discreetly putting his own at the bottom, so she would get the best one last. Then he turned around and said, not very loud, "Ahem." The surprised creature looked up, first at the door, then at the windows, all blocked with snow. Just as she turned about the boy shouted, "Merry Christmas, grandmother!" The dear old lady lifted both hands. "Well! well!" she exclaimed, "If here is not Henry, and he has come like the real Santa Claus, right down the chimney."

If ever a boy got a warm welcome on Christmas morning, that boy did. He got squeezed and kissed, and then he got fed. Then she drew the things out of the stocking. When she found that magnificent shawl pin, she was so delighted that she had to take it over to the light, perhaps to see if the head was real wax, and, as she bent her face down to examine and admire it he thought he heard a sly little giggle, but she came back in a minute and kissed him again. Then, turning her bright face to the open fire, she laid her slender hand upon his shoulder and said in a low, tender tone, "Well, indeed, a child can bring a good deal of the Christ into a Christmas." —New York Christian Advocate.

WOLFGANG MOZART'S PRAYER.

Many years ago in Salzburg, Austria, two little children lived in a cottage surrounded by vines, near a pleasant river. They both loved music, and when only six years of age Frederica could play well on the harpsichord. But her little brother produced such strains of melody as were never before heard from so young a child. Their father was a teacher of music, and his own children were his best pupils.

There came times so hard that these children had scarcely enough to eat; but they loved each other, and were happy in the simple enjoyment that fell to their lot.

One pleasant day they said: "Let us take a walk in the woods. How sweetly the birds sing, and the sound of the river as it flows is like music!"

So they went. As they were sitting in a shadow of a tree the boy said: "Sister, what a beautiful place this would be to pray!"

Frederica asked, wonderingly: "What shall we pray for?"

"Why, for papa and mamma," said her brother. "You see how sad they look. Poor mamma hardly ever smiles now, and I know it must be because she has not always bread enough for us. Let us ask God to help us."

"Yes," said Frederica, "we will."

So these two children knelt down and prayed, asking the heavenly Father to bless their parents, and make them a help to them.

"But how can we help papa and mamma?" asked Frederica.

"Why, don't you know?" replied Wolfgang. "By and by I shall play before great people, and they will give me plenty of money, and I will give it to our parents, and we'll live in a fine house, and be happy."

At this a loud laugh astonished the boy, who did not know that any one was near them. Turning, he saw a fine gentleman on horseback. The stranger made inquiries, which the little girl answered, telling him: "Wolfgang means to be a great musician; he thinks he can earn money, so we shall no longer be poor."

"He may do that when he has learned to play well enough," replied the stranger.

Frederica answered: "He is only six years old, but plays beautifully, and can compose pieces."

"That can not be," replied the gentleman.

"Come to see us," said the boy, "and I will play for you."

"I will go this evening," answered the stranger.

The children went home, and told their story to their parents, who were much pleased and astonished.

Soon a loud knock was heard at the door, and on opening it the little family was surprised to see men bringing in baskets of food in variety and abundance. They had an ample feast that evening.

Thus God answered the children's prayer. Soon after, while Wolfgang was playing a sonata which he had composed, the stranger entered, and stood astonished at the wondrous melody. The father recognized in his guest Emperor Francis I of Austria.

Not long after the family was invited by the Emperor to Vienna, where Wolfgang astonished the royal family by his wonderful powers.—Pittsburgh Christian Advocate.

The reason that so many of God's children worry is that they cannot trust God, or rather they do not trust him.—Rev. L. T. Wilds.

A WORD TO OUR SUBSCRIBERS.

The Advocate is face to face with serious conditions, and we feel called upon to make you a plain and candid statement. Advertisements under the existing situation can no longer be had as usual and we must depend almost wholly upon our subscriptions to maintain the paper. On this account, it is essential that every subscriber, clerical and lay, shall at once pay his subscription a year in advance. This is necessary to keep the paper going; we cannot run it on the credit plan for subscriptions, as we have been largely doing heretofore. So, unless your subscription is promptly paid up, in the interest of strict economy we shall have to discontinue it. It takes money to buy paper, ink, and to mail every copy of the Advocate that we send out, and self-preservation demands that we shall now reduce our expenses to a minimum. This appeal is to you, brother pastor and brother layman, and if you disregard it, please do not blame us if you soon find your paper cut off. We are not merely crying "wolf!" when there is no wolf. We are not exaggerating the situation. One of our prominent Conference organs has already been forced to reduce its size from 16 to 3 pages and others are in sore distress; and nothing but the best business methods, the most rigid economy, and the energetic assistance of our pastors and other friends can enable us to weather the storm. So please, dear reader, remit for your subscription without further delay. DO IT NOW!

GOD'S HAND IN IT.

Referring to the death and resurrection of Christ in his memorable address before Festus and Agrippa, St. Paul said: "This thing was not done in a corner." And, to be sure, it was not. His crucifixion took place at the time of the Jewish Passover when the Jews had assembled in Jerusalem from every land into which they had wandered to observe the great feast; the city could not contain the multitudes. The several trials of Jesus must have found entry upon the various public records, and thousands must have seen him hanging upon the cross. His enemies placed a guard about his tomb that there might be no deception concerning his resurrection, thus contributing to the evidence upon which that great event so securely rests. In like manner, Providence seems to have so directed as to make indisputable the important facts concerning his birth. Prophets had foretold it and there was a general feeling of expectancy among the Jews. The census ordered by Caesar Augustus tended to give definiteness to the time; and, as Bishop Ryle says, "It took place at an inn, and an inn crowded with strangers from all parts. Imposition was thus rendered impossible. The event was patent to many witnesses and could never be denied. The Son of God was really incarnate, and was literally and really born of a woman, like any of ourselves. Had the birth taken place quietly at Nazareth, or in some private house at Bethlehem, in thirty years' time the whole event would probably have been denied."

WORTH ALL IT COSTS.

The following brief editorial, which appeared in a recent issue of the New York Christian Advocate, so well expresses a truth worth knowing that we take pleasure in reproducing it:

"Whoever stands for something, and will not yield at the bid of others, must expect assault. What, then? Is it better to secure favor by surrendering convictions?"

Who has no enemies shall know no friends.
A real good chap, men say, and there it ends.

"Woe unto you, when all men shall speak well of you! for so did their fathers to the false prophets," said Jesus.

THE SPECIFICATIONS IN ORDER.

In the Grenada (Miss.) Sentinel of December 15, Mr. O. F. Lawrence, the Editor, made the following utterance:

"From what we have heard from several sources, Bishop Waterhouse, who presided over the recent Methodist Conference at Starkville, was at times almost coarse in his arrogance. If this be true, the distinguished divine needs to see himself as others see him, to get down from his stilted eminence and shed a little plumage. Being of the Methodist faith, we are risking this statement which some may term 'lese-majeste,' but if it is, let it be made the most of."

We have known Brother Lawrence for some years and have esteemed him as a very worthy and useful layman, and we confess that we are very much surprised to see such a statement as this emanating from him. And we are utterly at a loss to know to what he has reference in his depreciation of Bishop Waterhouse. It was our pleasure to attend the recent session of the North Mississippi Conference and we were in the Church most of the time while the proceedings were in progress, and we did not see the least manifestation of "arrogance," or "stilted eminence," or any parade of "plumage" upon the part of the Bishop. On the contrary, so far as our observation extended, he was uniformly courteous, considerate, and brotherly, and deporting himself in a manner highly exemplary. And knowing Bishop Waterhouse as we do, we should have been astounded if his conduct had been otherwise. He is a modest, plain, unaffected Christian gentleman, and as far removed from "coarseness" as any man that we have ever known.

To show that we are not alone in this view of Bishop Waterhouse's bearing and spirit at Starkville, we quote the following reference to him by Rev. I. D. Borders, our pastor at Aberdeen, Miss., taken from a letter written by Brother Borders to the Nashville Christian Advocate concerning the late session of the Conference: "Bishop Waterhouse presided to the general satisfaction of all, commending himself warmly to every one by his considerate courtesy, affability, dignity, and diligence in business. . . . The presiding elders spoke in complimentary terms of his patience and kindness in the cabinet sessions, and for the most part the appointments gave unusual satisfaction."

We cannot believe that Brother Lawrence would intentionally misrepresent and place in a wrong light a worthy Christian minister, in whom the Church has shown her confidence by naming him as one of her chief pastors; and we are inclined to the view that he has been misinformed and misled by the "several sources" from which his information came. Who are these persons, standing in the background, that are responsible for this attack? As a good Methodist and as a Christian man, Brother Lawrence owes it to himself and to the cause of justice and truth to lift the curtain and let the responsibility in this matter be placed where it properly belongs.

He has allowed himself to be led into making a general charge against a Bishop in his Church whose deportment has never before been called in question. We, therefore, now respectfully ask him to furnish the specifications and to give the names of the witnesses upon whose statements he has based his arraignment. We make this request not because we think it is lese-majeste to criticize a high official in the Church who deserves it; but because we feel that the humblest preacher or layman in the land who is publicly assailed is entitled to know definitely the grounds of the assault and to be informed as to who has inspired it. And since this is a question which concerns the entire North Mississippi Conference, as well as one of our General Superintendents, whose character and good name is a matter of importance to the entire Connection, we cordially invite Brother Lawrence to publish the desired fuller statement, which surely he will not hesitate to make, in the New Orleans Christian Advocate.

DEATH OF DR. R. W. JONES.

The following press dispatch sent out from Laurel, Miss., on December 20, will touch with sorrow many hearts and homes in Mississippi and other sections of the South:

"Dr. Richard Watson Jones, first president of the Industrial Institute and College at Columbus, and for twenty-five years professor of chemistry at the University of Mississippi, died at his home in this city Saturday night, aged 77 years."

A native of Greenville County, Virginia, Dr. Jones attended Randolph-Macon College, graduating with first honors at eighteen, and receiving the M. A. degree at the University of Virginia two years later.

At the outbreak of the Civil War he entered the Confederate service as captain and was later promoted to major. He was married in 1864 to Miss Bettie Sue Spratley, who survives him. Their fiftieth wedding anniversary was celebrated in January of this year, and was attended by five sons and one daughter, together with numerous grandchildren.

Though long since retired from active work, Dr. Jones maintained until his death a deep interest in educational work, and still maintained the title of professor-emeritus of the University of Mississippi and was a member of the Mississippi Historical Society, which he served many years as its president. He was an active member of the Methodist Church and a leader in every movement calculated to advance the moral and material interests of Mississippi.

"The body will be carried to Portsmouth, Va., for interment."

Dr. Jones deserved all that is said concerning him in the statement made above, and much more. He was a really great educator—scholarly, accomplished, and gifted in the work of teaching and training young men and women. In his noble profession, he is entitled to be ranked with the foremost of that remarkable group of men who gave type to the educational institutions of the South in the first two or three decades following the Civil War—a group that included such men as Landon C. Garland, John N. Waddell, A. B. Longstreet, and James H. Carlisle.

Dr. Jones was a man of splendid Christian character, and until the impairment of his health forbade, he was one of the most active and useful laymen in the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. He enjoyed the complete confidence of all who knew him and served his denomination in various capacities of trust and honor, from official place in the local congregation to a seat in the General Conference. He was for many years the Sunday school superintendent of our Church at Oxford, Miss., a position for which he was pre-eminently qualified and which he filled with a high degree of efficiency. He served faithfully and well his day and generation, and has doubtless passed to a rich reward.

We trust that some one who has in hand the data to do so will furnish the Advocate a fuller sketch of the life and services of this distinguished and influential layman at an early date. We extend sympathy to the sorrowing widow and other members of the bereaved family, and pray that Divine grace may comfort and sustain them.

THE LOUISIANA PROHIBITION CAMPAIGN.

Rev. A. W. Turner is preparing to conduct a whirlwind prohibition campaign in Louisiana, beginning in New Orleans on Sunday, January 24, and ending in Shreveport, Sunday, January 31.

He has engaged to assist in this campaign the following speakers, who rank among the foremost advocates of the prohibition cause in the United States: Ex-Governor M. R. Patterson, of Tennessee; Rev. Louis Albert Banks, of Delaware, Ohio; Rev. A. J. Barton, a distinguished Baptist minister of Dallas, Texas; Rev. G. W. Morrow, of Detroit, Mich.; Rev. Howard H. Russell, founder of the Anti-Saloon League; Rev. A. C. Bane, of San Francisco; Rev. G. W. Young, of Louisville, Ky., and Rev. P. A. Baker, National Superintendent of the Anti-Saloon League. Among the towns that will be reached by some one of these speakers are Alexandria, Baton Rouge, Lake Charles, Lafayette, Crowley, Monroe, Ruston, Minden, Amite City, Bogalusa, Slidell, and Covington. This is not a complete list, however, and addresses will also be made at a number of other points. Ex-Governor Patterson is scheduled to speak at a mass meeting to be held in the Atheneum at 3 o'clock p. m. on Sunday, January 24.

Our pastors and the friends of the temperance cause in the various towns to which speakers have been assigned are urged to accept the dates designated and seek to secure large audiences for them. The schedule of appointments has been worked out with great care and cannot now be altered without much confusion. This is a great opportunity for the prohibitionists of Louisiana, and we should eagerly seize it and make of it the utmost possible.

PERSONAL AND OTHER NOTES.

Mr. and Mrs. J. D. Barbee, of Greenville, Miss., are spending the Christmas holidays with relatives in Memphis, Tenn.

The people of Clarksdale, Miss., were greatly pleased to have Rev. W. S. Lagrone returned to them as pastor for another year. They are indeed fortunate.

The address of Rev. W. Harrison Long will hereafter be Washington, La. Let persons desiring to communicate with him note this and govern themselves accordingly.

Rev. W. W. Drake occupied the pulpit of the Carrollton Avenue Church of this city—his new charge—last Sunday, and made a fine impression. Five members were received.

Drop us a postal card, giving us the church news in your community. We are anxious to keep our readers informed as to what is going on in church circles in our territory.

Pastors who have been moved to new charges should write a card to the office, ordering the addresses on their Advocates changed. In such cases, both the old and new post offices should be given.

Rev. T. H. Lipscomb reports that the work of the Conference year has opened well at Starkville, Miss., and that the outlook is highly encouraging. When he wrote last week, Christmas turkeys were already gobbling in the parsonage coop.

The Methodists of Memphis, Tenn., recently gave Bishop and Mrs. Murrah and the new presiding elder of the Memphis District, Rev. A. J. Meaders, and his wife a delightful public reception. Bishop Murrah's address on that occasion was a most felicitous and suggestive one.

Some of the Conference organs will not bring out a paper this week, and others will appear in half their usual size; but the New Orleans Christian Advocate has never suspended publication or lessened the number of its pages on account of the holidays. It is not a "vacation-taker."

Rev. J. B. Randolph writes that he and his family are domiciled in the parsonage at Kosciusko, Miss., and that many kindnesses have been shown them by their new parishioners. Brother Randolph's new flock is a choice one, and it is their habit to look well after their pastors.

We are indebted to Rev. J. T. McCafferty, of Eupora, Miss., and Rev. A. P. George, of Mangham, La., for some subscriptions sent in within the past few days. Work done for the Advocate is especially appreciated in a time like this. Let others follow the good example of these brethren.

After two years as pastor at Crawford Street, Vicksburg, Rev. C. F. Emery has been placed in charge of the Newton District, which is said to be the largest in the Mississippi Conference. We predict that he will soon win unwithering laurels in the presiding eldership. We are grateful to him for a promise to press the interests of the Advocate in his rounds.

We are indebted to Mr. J. D. Hamilton, of Nashville, Tenn., Treasurer of our Board of Missions, for a folder giving the program of exercises at McKendree Church, of that city, last Sunday, when a memorial stone was placed in the vestibule of the church in honor of Bishop McKendree. The principal speaker on that interesting occasion was Bishop E. E. Hoss.

After reading the article entitled, "The War in Methodism," which appears in this issue of the Advocate, save your paper. There is more to follow and it will be worth your while to re-read the whole discussion at one time after it has all been published. Dr. Jay Benson Hamilton is connected with the Trinity Methodist Episcopal Church of New York City and is the founder and editor of "The Bible Champion."

Dr. T. B. Holloman has arrived at Vicksburg, Miss., where he will again serve the Crawford Street Church of that city. He has many friends there, who have given him an enthusiastic greeting. We are grateful to Dr. Holloman for a kindly invitation to come up and look over the great National Park at that place, and may avail ourselves of it during the year 1915, if a kindly Providence shall permit us to do so.

Rev. F. N. Sweeney was in New Orleans last week and paid the Advocate office a brief but appreciated visit. At the recent session of the Louisiana Conference Brother Sweeney took a superannuate relation, but since the adjournment of that body, he has consented to serve as pastor of the Franklinton Circuit. He is a true and faithful itinerant, and we are glad to know that he will keep on the harness a while longer.

The Lexington (Miss.) Advertiser, in a recent issue, thus refers to the two years' pastorate of Dr. H. G. Henderson at that place, which was terminated by his transfer to Sardis at the late session of the North Mississippi Conference: "Dr. H. G. Henderson has left a golden record in the vineyard here, where his loyalty to all good works is a memorial that cannot pass away. In the new pathways at Sardis there is wished for him and his loved ones as wide a circle of friends and admirers as he has left in his old home."

Rev. A. W. Turner, of Shreveport, La., has been in New Orleans this week in the interest of the Anti-Saloon work. As the leader of the temperance forces in Louisiana, Brother Turner has given a good account of himself and has demonstrated that he is the right man in the right place. He expects to carry on the warfare against the liquor traffic with increased energy during the coming year, and he should have the hearty cooperation of all the brethren in the execution of his plans.

We clip the following from Concordia's Sentinel, published at Vidalia, La.: "The citizens of Vidalia, irrespective of denominational differences, were delighted to learn that at the Methodist Conference recently held in Shreveport, Rev. W. T. Woodward was again assigned to the Sicily Island Circuit, which embraces this place and Ferriday." The Natchez (Miss.) Evening News also makes mention of Brother Woodward's return, and says: "He is an able minister and his labors in Concordia Parish have accomplished much good."

From Eros, La., under date of Dec. 19, Rev. R. H. Bamberg writes as follows: "We have reached our new field and the people have received us very kindly. We arrived here on December 16, and a large boy put in his appearance the next day, December 17. We have named him William Schuhle and are going to call him Schuhle. Both the mother and babe are doing finely. It seems that the lines have fallen to us in pleasant places, and I am planning to do the greatest year's work of my life. I ask the readers of the Advocate to pray for us."

A recent dispatch from Jackson, Miss., to the Memphis Commercial Appeal reads in part as follows: "The early departure from this city, where he has made his home for four busy years, of Rev. J. M. Morse, pastor of the Capitol Street Methodist Church, is a cause of genuine regret by our people generally. This feeling is not confined to his late flock or to Methodist circles exclusively, as Mr. Morse is an all-round helpful and useful citizen, and has been a power for good in all circles." Brother Morse filled his new pulpit in Brookhaven last Sunday, where he was greeted by large congregations.

Sister T. B. Clifford, formerly of McComb City, Miss., who is the First Vice-President of the Woman's Missionary Society of the Mississippi Conference, writes as follows: "Please state to the First Vice-Presidents of the Woman's Auxiliaries in the Mississippi Conference that my address has been changed from McComb City to 1227 Dryades Street, New Orleans, La. I will continue to look after my work with the children until the next meeting of the Woman's Missionary Conference." We are pleased to know that Sister Clifford will continue to lead the juvenile missionary workers of South Mississippi. She is a noble Christian woman, and for many years has accomplished great good by her labors to extend the Master's kingdom.

THE CHURCH PAPER.

Rev. Gerard B. F. Hallock, D.D., says: "Let me urge all to include in their reading good religious periodicals. They are the trade journals of the kingdom. The religious newspaper is both a medium of communication and a herald of Christian achievement. It is an absolute necessity if one would keep informed of the progress of Christ's kingdom in the world. A good religious periodical tends to expand the intellect, open the heart, incite to more diligent study of the Bible, lead to greater interest in Sunday school, church and mission work, and widen the whole mental, moral and spiritual outlook, thus proving a powerful stimulus to spiritual growth. Every young convert taking such a publication would find it confirming his faith, widening his horizon, and strongly promoting his growth in grace. Every Christian young man or young woman alone in a great city would find it bringing welcome and helpful companionship, and a fine source of intellectual and spiritual uplift. No young married couple, next to the Bible and family altar, can afford to do without a thing so desirable as a good Christian periodical."

NO ROOM AT THE INN.

Edith M'Kay, in Pittsburgh Christian Advocate.

No room at the inn! "Oh," we say,
"I wish I had been there that day—
I'd have given Mary my place of rest
If only I might have been there—a guest."

Ah, but listen, my heart, my heart:
Here and now is thy humble part—
"Inasmuch as ye have done it," said he,
"To the least of these, ye have done it to me."

"I have learned at last to be patient with hindrances, for things that seemed contrary to my success and happiness have always proved to be really helps."

The happy man is not one who has possessions but the one who has himself in possession. Self-control is a very important lesson to learn."

"There is a power in the peace God giveth of which the men who are rushing along the broad and dusty highway can form no idea. The meadows on which the soul refreshes itself are ever green."

RESOLUTIONS.

During the year just coming to a close it has pleased Almighty God in his infinite wisdom to remove from our midst to that haven above three of the beloved members of this Quarterly Conference.

The first to answer the roll call was Dr. J. N. Tucker, who for a number of years had been a member of the Mississippi Conference, was for several years a local preacher and a member of our Quarterly Conference.

The next summons was to Brother C. R. McQueen, no more faithful member and co-worker ever filled a position in this conference than Brother McQueen; always at his post of duty and tireless in his efforts to further the interests of the Church he loved so well.

The last call was to Brother Robert Brown; one loved by each member of this conference; an unwavering Christian gentleman, ever ready to answer any call for his Master.

Could we speak to them to-night we could but say, "We miss you, and our hearts go out to the loved ones left behind, and God grant that we may all so live that we shall meet again where there will be no more parting." It seems a blow to us that the Church and community should lose such men, but God in his infinite wisdom knows best, therefore be it resolved,

1. That in the death of these members the Methodist Church has lost three of its best members, and the community some of its best citizens, whose going is most deeply felt and many share with this conference in its great loss.

2. That we bow submissively to His will, who doeth all things well, and we thank him for the companionship we have enjoyed; and, while we grieve for them, there is a consolation in the thought that they are at home with their Father, and that our loss is their eternal gain.

Passed by the Fourth Quarterly Conference of the Central Methodist Church in session at Meridian, Miss., on Friday, Dec. 4, 1914.

BISHOP ROBERT MCINTYRE.

By Bishop Hughes.

A Scotchman by birth; an American by training and conviction; a bricklayer by trade; a preacher by God's call; a poet by instinct; an orator by temperament; a brilliant lecturer, he charmed the multitudes by the gift of an imagination which would make his hearers see darkness or hear silence, and could make the fruits of the earth glad with the love of a providing God. He poured himself into speech until his hair turned white before the time. Not a parliamentarian, or a lawyer, or an administrator, he loved his way through the tangles of debate, and lifted upon his brethren the face of a saint that stilled tumults and estopped criticism. His last word on earth was "lovely." It was doubtless his first word in heaven. Could God send him back to us, with the memory of that Holy City, no tongue would be more nearly equal to describing pearly gates, jasper walls, streets of gold, and the light never seen on sea or land. At first admired as an orator, he died beloved as a brother, and left to his Church and his colleagues the gracious memory of simple and unaffected fellowship.

The finer the nature, the more flaws will it show through the clearness of it. The best things are seldomest seen in their best form. The wild grass grows well and strongly one year with another; but the wheat is, by reason of its greater nobleness, liable to a bitter blight.—Ruskin.

PRAYER AND SELF-DENIAL

W. W. PINSON.

The Universal Week of Prayer, January 3 to 10, 1915, which will be observed throughout the Christian world, will be observed in our own Church as a time of prayer and self-denial for the evangelistic reinforcement of our mission fields. There never was a time that called more insistently upon the Church for the exercise of these fundamental duties of the Christian life. It is being said that Christianity is on trial. It is not so much our Christianity as ourselves that is being tested. Our sincerity and consistency are being scrutinized as never before. Men are demanding that we show what our Christianity has made of us. Are we a praying people? Have we faith? Do we believe in an omnipotent God? Have we a grip on the eternal verities? Do we live in fellowship with the unseen, or are we materialists, who live only by what we see and seek only what our hands can grasp?

Not only are men testing us, but God by his providence is trying us in the fires of this awful hour. The story of the world's spiritual poverty is being written in blood and tears. The world is being turned into a new Gethsemane, parliaments into judgment halls and kings into modern Pilates, and after two thousand years Christ is rejected, mocked and crucified afresh. Can we not hear him say again as he stretches out his hands to the Church in America, "Will ye also go away?"

What shall be our answer? What shall be the tokens to a world whose hopes are shattered? To the Christless millions who cry to us for light? Shall it be our monuments of greed, of luxury and of selfishness? Shall we point to our industrial altars, red with the blood of groaning sacrifices? Shall we proudly show the suffering Christ our automobiles, our mansions, our jewels and the pomp of purple and fine linen, as our answer to the sorrow of Gethsemane and the keen agony of Calvary? Is it enough that we bring him a few pennies for a world's redemption, toss them grudgingly at his feet and, with hearts ungrateful and unloving, turn away to lives of ease and acquisition and self-indulgence?

This is not a call for money. It is more, far more. It is a call for thought, for heart-searching, for penitence, for prayer. It is a call to stop short, and take our bearings. It is a call to examine our lives in the light of a great world's needs and sorrows, and our conduct and consecration in the light of what Christ is and what he expects of us. If we can turn on such a searchlight for one week or even for a small part of a week; if we will not flinch from it, nor count the cost of such a rigid testing, we shall begin a new life.

Why may not the whole Church unite on this week of prayer? Why may not every leader sound the call, till the entire membership hears and heeds and bows and confesses? The results who can tell!

Last year the observance of this Week of Prayer rang a new note of joy through many a church. It kindled revival fires. It quickened the consciences of multitudes and brought to them new power and conviction. We are praying and hoping for larger and more glorious results this year. The conditions call more loudly. The heart of the Church is ready and the times are ripe.

May we not urge that everyone who reads this will begin now to pray that this first week in January may witness the widest, deepest, and most genuine conviction of duty and turning to God our Church has ever known?

TO THE PREACHERS OF THE NORTH MISSISSIPPI CON- FERENCE.

Dear Brethren: Many of your people are coming to the Memphis hospitals and when they reach here are strangers in the city. Consequently they have a very lonesome time and not infrequently they very much desire the services of a preacher, but do not know where to get such. If pastors, when their people are being sent to the hospitals here, will write to the undersigned he will see that some Methodist preacher sees them as soon as they are allowed to have company, and they are given the same pastoral care that would be given them if they were sick at home.

Your brother,

T. G. LOWRY.

TO THE UNDER-GRADUATES OF THE NORTH MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

Dear Brethren: Without posing as a "Daniel Come to Judgment," but wholly in the spirit of humility and brotherly love, I hereby make a few suggestions that I hope will aid those, who have not had the good fortune of learning how to do systematic study, in accomplishing the task of mastering their year's course. Of course, some need no suggestion because they always bring up their work. Others fail, not because they do not realize the importance of doing the work, but because they just do not know how to do systematic studying. It is for the benefit of the last class that I write. And if but one, even, of that class shall profit by these suggestions I shall be more than repaid for the time and trouble of writing this article.

Here is the plan I used when I was passing the courses:

1. I determined to use the major part of six months in a close study of the year's course.

2. I selected January, February, and March to study, and September, October, and November to review the course of study.

3. I determined to use five days out of every week during which to study the books of the course of study. That gave me sixty days for study during the three months.

4. Realizing that I would necessarily lose some of those days, I reduced the number of days for study to fifty.

5. I then divided the number of pages of each book in the course of study by fifty, that I might get the number of pages to be gone over in one day's time. I then went through each book and marked off the work for each day. If I found that by taking from, or adding to, the number of pages I could complete a subject, or some phase of a subject, of course I made the addition or subtraction, whichever was necessary.

There was another member of the North Mississippi Conference whose eyes "went bad" on him during the early part of the year. That young man got a young lawyer friend to read his course of study to him that he might regularly pass his year's course. He passed without trouble.

Hoping that these suggestions may be of benefit to some one, I am fraternally,
J. TILLERY LEWIS.

Greenville, Miss.

MISSIONARY BRIEFS.

In 1873 there was not in the whole empire of Japan a single preaching place. The one church of a dozen members met on the premises of a missionary under the protection of the United States Flag.

Dr. D. L. Mumpower of Wembo-Niama, Africa, reports that during the first quarter of the year, 300 medical and 75 dental cases were treated.

There are 1,342,000 Italians in the United States. More Italians live in New York City than in Rome, Italy. One out of every five returns to his native land after a few years' residence in the United States. Evangelize him and he returns a missionary.

Dr. Ed F. Cook, writing from Japan, says: "At Kwansei Gakuin, the Hiroshima Girls' School and Palmore Institute, one is astonished at the large patronage and high class of work that is being done. The reports show enrollments in these three schools as follows: Kwansei, 710; Hiroshima Girls' School, 717; Palmore Institute, 725. The opportunity for further enlargement and for the indefinite extension of the influence of these institutions is limited only by our ability to furnish buildings and money for equipment. One is thrilled through and through by the greatness and urgency of our opportunity in Japan."

You will be glad to know that within the last ten days five persons have accepted Christ and offered themselves for church membership.—W. G. Borchers, Santa Rita, Brazil.

Last year the enrollment in the Huchow Middle School at Huchow, China, was 102, the largest number ever received. This term the enrollment has reached 124.

The size of our Mission grant in the Congo is 1185 feet by 800 feet. Included in the grant is a path leading from the Mission ground 1167 feet by 47 feet. The total area is 22½ acres. The distance from the village of Wembo-Niama is one-half mile.

"Half the world has never yet heard of Christ. That is the half that is poor to-day. The average income through India, China, and the poorer nations of Asia, is not over ten cents a day per capita. Half the world is without any medical knowledge worthy of the name. About half the world to-day is without education and cannot read or write in any language. Half the world is without the social rights of manhood, womanhood, or childhood. Compare your life with the life of this other half."

BROOKHAVEN DISTRICT.

District Stewards Meeting,
Dec. 29, 1914.

The district stewards of the Brookhaven district are called to meet at the Methodist Church, Brookhaven, Miss., at 9:30 o'clock, a.m., on the 29th day of December, 1914.

The charge leaders are requested to meet with the stewards at this time for the purpose of arranging for the "Every Member Canvass" to be taken up the first of the new year. It is important that we have a full attendance of these brethren. Please let me know if you cannot be present. Entertainment will be provided for you while in Brookhaven.

GRADING THE SUNDAY SCHOOL

By Rev. B. P. Levin

In grading a Sunday school, at least five things are essential to be kept in mind:

First—The person attempting to grade the school should have a definite idea of what is meant by grading, and of what is involved. It is useless to go at this work blindly. The effort will prove a failure, and result in discouragement. The mere classification of students is not grading. There must be a basis of classification. This basis has been carefully worked out for us by skilled Sunday school workers, and it should be understood at least with some definiteness. If the grading be confined to the Beginners' and Primary departments, the age limit is sufficient. In fact there can hardly be any other. But in the higher departments, the Junior and Intermediate, the intellectual development, the spiritual, physical and social status must all be taken account of. (By social status is merely meant companionship.) The standing of a student in the public school often enters as a factor to be reckoned with. In a certain school, some time since, a student whose age placed him in the first year Junior—age 9 years—was discovered to be two years ahead of all the other first-year Juniors in his public school course. As soon as this fact was brought to the attention of the superintendent he very wisely placed this student in the third-year Junior, among the 11-year-old boys.

Again, in grading a school, there should be a standard of excellence adapted to the students in the several departments. This will differ in some degree from the standard of the school proper, which necessarily must be general in character, suited to the school as a whole. Towards this standard, each student should be stimulated to strive.

Further, Promotion Day must by no means be left out of the reckoning. Without this day properly observed, with the entire school held strictly to it, the whole scheme will fall through. Promotion Day is the last Sabbath in September. The students advance from class to class and department to department. The teachers do not advance, but teach the same grade year by year.

Second—A second essential is Teacher Co-operation. Unless the teachers co-operate with the superintendent, he will have a hard fight of it. Hence it is well to call a teachers' meeting, go over all the details carefully, and enlist the co-operation of all the teachers, especially those involved. The objection usually offered by teachers at first is that they dislike giving up their pupils whom they have taught for several years. But when it is pointed out that it is for the best interest of school and pupils there will scarcely be serious objection on their part.

Third—If the school is to be organized on the departmental plan, and that is far better, great care should be exercised in the selection of departmental superintendents. This is far more vital than the selection of well-equipped teachers. Under these departmental superintendents all teachers in the graded departments work and to them the superintendent of the school looks for the carrying out of all his plans. If they fail the system is ineffective. Every successful teacher does not make a good departmental superintendent.

Fourth—The superintendent should not be daunted because of difficulties and objections. They are to be found everywhere, and sometimes seem to strewn the way. They will come sometimes from parents who do not understand; from teachers who are slow to learn; from students who have been pampered; and sometimes from the chronic objector who objects because he does not know how to do anything else but object. But a superintendent who knows his business and goes ahead will overcome them all and soon have all on his side. The really important question is: Shall the school be brought down to the level of those who do not understand, or shall they be brought up to the level of the school standard?

Fifth—Take time. This work cannot be done in a day. Not long since a certain Sunday school worker entered a Sunday school on a Sunday morning and announced that in ten minutes he could grade any school, and proceeded to throw the whole school into confusion by rearranging the classes. This is not grading. This is confusing. If no previous effort has been made to grade the school it is far better to begin with the Beginners' Department and go as far as possible, class by class, but hardly higher than the second-year Junior in one year; then advance one class a year till the school is graded. This programme prevents friction, injects the grading spirit into the whole school, which works like leaven, and in time readjustments begin making themselves. After two years of this kind of work a skilled superintendent can make almost any changes he wishes in the school without dissent.

THE LAYMEN'S MISSIONARY MOVEMENT IN LOUISIANA.

During the months of January and February Dr. D. Clay Lilly, Field Secretary of the Laymen's Missionary Movement, will conduct conferences of the United Missionary Campaign in the following places in Louisiana: Baton Rouge, Jan. 3-4; Crowley, Jan. 5-6; Lake Charles, Jan. 7-8.

He will be assisted in these conferences by Dr. John N. Mills of Chicago, Dr. C. P. Reid of Nashville, General Secretary of the Laymen's Missionary Movement of the Southern Methodist Church, and Dr. J. T. Henderson of Chattanooga, General Secretary of the Laymen's Missionary Movement of the Southern Baptist Convention.

They will deal largely with the modern methods of missionary education and finance and study home and foreign mission subjects in the light of present-day conditions in the fields.

These conferences were held in about 500 cities of America last year, from September to April, and there will be a large number of them held this season. They are Interdenominational and are under the auspices of all the mission boards of America. They are accomplishing a great work in securing the adoption of better methods for the benevolent and missionary work of the Church and in standardizing the Church's methods of missionary propaganda. They employ existing agencies in this work and create no new organizations or machinery in the Church.

These series of conferences in more than a score of cities should prove highly profitable to the great number of churches which are to take part in them.

AN INTERESTING OCCASION

A very happy gathering took place at the beautiful home of Brother J. S. Otis of our city. The party was planned by the splendid daughters as a pleasant surprise to their parents. The occasion was the 30th anniversary of the marriage of James Sidney Otis and Miss Mamie Carre. There were present a large number of friends, and refreshments were served with refinement and delicate taste. Congratulations, good wishes and expressions of sincere friendship were heard, evincing the esteem and confidence in which these two splendid Christians are held in the community. Brother Otis has been Superintendent of the Methodist Sunday school here for thirty consecutive years and Sister Otis has regularly taught some one of the classes.

In this Christian home there are two refined, cultured and lovely young ladies and three manly young men of bright promise. All are loyal members of our Church. The members of this family are the pastor's friends and many a token of kindness finds its way to the parsonage from them. May the blessing of heaven continue to abide upon them.

Logtown, Miss. H. MELLARD.

NOTABLE CONVERSIONS IN JAPAN:

"The national evangelical campaign, so enthusiastically planned for Japan, is going forward with great success. Every meeting gathers a large, attractive audience," writes Bishop M. C. Harris from Tokio.

"Conspicuous among the results already achieved," says the Bishop, "is the conversion of Mr. Morimura, a man of great wealth and influence."

"Although in his seventy-eighth year he is still mentally alert. Much careful study of the Bible and serious reflection preceded his definite stand for Christ. He has recently given $100,000 to be used for the improvement of moral conditions in Japan. Traveling up and down the land he addresses large audiences, stressing his conviction that in Christianity alone is the hope of moral and spiritual uplift of the empire."

"Another prominent Japanese, equally interested in the evangelistic campaign, is Mrs. Hiraoka, a member of the famous Mitsui family, one of the wealthiest and most aristocratic in all Japan.

"Converted but four years ago, when over 60 years old, she has become a zealous Christian and is a public speaker of unusual power."

SUNDAY SCHOOL IN CHINA.

There are 100,000,000 children under 10 years of age in China. In the near future they may be taught almost entirely under the government system of education and will be less accessible to the Christian day school. The Sunday school must give them religious education.

The Chinese Christian churches generally lack young men and maidens. Congregations are 90 per cent adults, and many little children, but have few youths between the ages of 15 and 25. There must be won and held for Christ.

A church which gives itself mainly to winning new converts, as the church in China naturally does, is in constant danger of neglecting them when they have been won. The Bible school has a necessary place in the continued nurture after they have entered into full membership in the churches. This is a phase of Sunday school work as yet largely undeveloped.

The youth of the boarding schools and colleges needs to be trained in voluntary Christian service. The training of leaders from among the promising young people for the work of the local church falls naturally to the Sunday school.

THE WHOLE ROUND YEAR.

We ought to pray that we might be able to show Christmas generosity and Christmas good cheer on this good day, but above all we ought to pray for grace to cultivate and use these very Christian gifts throughout the whole circle of the year. The glow and warmth of the festive season ought to start something like a steady fire in our heart, and the gratefulness that we feel to-day should live throughout three hundred and sixty-four other days, an abiding sense of thankfulness and obligation to our fellows and to our God. There can be little value or worth in a Christmas generosity that is made an excuse for niggardiness through long and hungry months. We will keep good Christmas only as we try to keep its spirit through the year.—Christian Guardian.

It was not God's weakness, but his will that made you simply what you are.—Edward King.

Little faith, little prayer, little self-discipline: these are the things which spell failure in spiritual work.—James Denny.

WHAT GRANDMOTHER USED.

Ninety-four years' use will certainly prove whether or not a remedy is what it is claimed to be. That is the test that Gray's Ointment has stood—successfully. The old folks all found it the most effective cure for sores, cuts, wounds, burns, boils, carbuncles and all eruptions and abrasions of the skin. "Please send me by return mail one box of the old Gray's Ointment," writes N. B. Hoofman, Stewart, Miss. "My father used it in his family 50 years ago, and for the purpose you recommend it there is nothing in the world equal to it." Keep a box in the house. It will save you many an ache and prevent serious blood troubles. 25c a box at druggists. Get free a sample by writing W. F. Gray & Co., 806 Gray Bldg., Nashville, Tenn.

FROM STARLIGHT TO SUNLIGHT.

A Hindu was brought to forsake idolatry through a leaf of the Bible that came into his possession, upon which was the fifty-first Psalm, the prayer of David for cleansing. This was his gospel for twenty years. Then he met a missionary who gave him a Testament, when he exclaimed, "Twenty years I have walked by star light now I see the sun."—Bible Champion.

A MERRY CHRISTMAS TO YOU!

To-morrow will be the dear Lord's birthday—a time of rejoicing.

All nations of the earth should bow in his presence on this day, and sing "On earth peace, good will toward men," but will it be so? Think of the nations that are engaged in one of the bloodiest conflicts the world has ever known, and then lift your hearts to God in mighty prayer that the dove of peace may soon spread its wings over them.

As your home and nation is safe, oh, give gifts unto the children of men which will show that your love is akin to the heavenly love.

LAFAYETTE DISTRICT MEETING.

The following report has just reached our desk; the delay is due to Mrs. Crow Girard's continued illness.

The Lafayette District Meeting of the Woman's Missionary Society was held in Rayne, Oct. 24-27. Our State president, Mrs. Abel Bliss, presided over the deliberations in a very helpful and pleasing manner.

Miss Eliza Iles, our consecrated deaconess in the French Mission field at Houma, gave inspiring Bible talks and a vivid description of her special work, which made us long to help and to spread the news of the need to others.

The friends were filled with sadness because of the serious illness of the president of the Rayne auxiliary, Mrs. B. C. Holt, and the secretary of the district, Mrs. Crow Girard.

Mrs. A. P. Holt took charge of the Secretary's duties very creditably and furnished many items of interest and counsel.

Miss Iles had charge of the Junior's Rally on Monday afternoon. The children must surely be more interested in missions since meeting her and listening to her words. At night, Miss Iles made an address concerning her work in the French Mission.

Mrs. Bliss made a very touching address on mission work in the Orient, in which she traced the careers of two Chinese girls who were educated in America and went back to accomplish much among their own people. She fully explained the changes which will take place at the beginning of next year.

Seven auxiliaries were represented and made reports.

The Rayne ladies were cordial in their welcome to the visiting ladies, who enjoyed their hospitality. Lake Arthur was chosen as the next place of meeting, and we hope to have a good delegation.

Mrs. H. N. BROWN.

NOTICE!

The new books for district secretaries, also auxiliary corresponding secretaries and treasurers, are now ready for distribution. Send your orders right away to Mrs. B. W. Lipscomb, 810 Broadway, Nashville, Tenn. By sending early you will be ready to start your new year's work promptly.

WORLD'S DAY OF PRAYER AND FASTING FOR WOMAN'S WORK, JAN. 8.

January 3-10 has been set aside by our Mission Board as the Annual Week of Prayer and Self-Denial. Last year the Board asked for funds to send out missionaries; and the offerings from this season of prayer and self-denial enabled them to send out eight new missionaries, who are still on the field. This year they want to give native helpers to these men, also furnish them with the equipment to make their work permanent. As the men plan and pray, so do their sisters; and we have set aside January 3 as our day of Fasting and Prayer for the extension of our work. A fine program and leaflets have been prepared for the observance of this day. Same can be obtained by applying to Mrs. J. B. Cobb, 2202 Elliston Place, Nashville, Tenn. Don't let any auxiliary fail to observe this special day. It will surely prove a season of blessing, which if entered into in the right spirit will carry its blessing throughout the year.

PLEDGE CARDS.

The pledge cards prepared for last January were so satisfactory that the same form with only the changes made necessary by the new Constitution and By-Laws, will be used for 1915.

They are ready for distribution now, and can be obtained by sending to your Conference Corresponding Secretary who has them in sufficient numbers to supply every member of every auxiliary. You are urged to use these pledge cards at your first meeting of the new year, and it is most earnestly desired that you make a canvass of every member of your auxiliary. Let every one, at least, have the opportunity to make a pledge. Fifty thousand of these cards were used last year. Can we not double the number in 1915?

A FINAL APPEAL TO THE LOUISIANA WOMEN.

Mrs. Holt and Mrs. Cunningham, corresponding secretaries of the Louisiana Conference Missionary Society, have mailed a circular letter to each auxiliary in the State showing just what each has paid on dues, specials, Conference expense fund, pledge and mite box offerings for the three quarters of the year already passed, in both Home and Foreign Departments, and then that there may be no failure to bring up the balance due during the remaining days of this fourth quarter they add the following message:

"Your pledges need immediate and urgent attention. Shall we, who are the favored women of God's people, a nation at peace with all nations, and where women know not the suffering and privations incident to war; shall we not give of our bounty that the work of saving souls may not be hindered? European mission boards are crippled in their operations. Our duty before God is doubled. We must bear one another's burdens. Our offerings of money, of time and prayer must not be just that of last year—the crisis was not on then—we must be willing even to enter into the sufferings of Christ Jesus, our Lord, as he gave himself for all men. We should joy even in a sacrifice of self for the spread of the Gospel of Peace—even as thousands are giving themselves in Europe for love of country and the spread of national life. Will you answer this plea for enlarged offerings upon your knees? God help you.

May the riches of Christ Jesus be yours in abundance as the rays of the star of Bethlehem shine into your peaceful homes. May he give you of his pure love for humanity in such measure as that there shall not be a woman in fair Louisiana who shall fail to bring unto our Christ that white gift that his hand is outstretched to receive."

ATTENTION, MISSIONARY SOCIETIES:

We are asking the women of the auxiliaries to have read at the January meeting the instructions regarding funds. This material can be found in "Helps" or can be obtained in leaflet form from the Home Base Secretary.

PASTOR'S SON RELIEVED FROM EPILEPSY.

Epilepsy has long been a bugaboo among American mothers.

There are two forms of this disease, one which is accompanied by unconsciousness and falling fits, and the other where the spasm is so fleeting that it is hardly recognizable. Both of these forms will yield to persistent treatment with Dr. Miles' Nervine.

The Rev. J. A. Schuler of Severy, Kan., had a little boy who suffered from epilepsy. After three years of fruitless treatment it was decided to give Dr. Miles' Nervine a fair trial and the result was this letter:

"I want to thank you for the inestimable benefit Dr. Miles' Nervine has been to my son who was afflicted with epilepsy. He had suffered for three years prior to taking treatment with this remedy. He has never had an attack since the first dose he took of Dr. Miles' Nervine. He has so improved in general appearance and looks that you would not know he was the same boy. The medicine is everything that it is claimed to be. We had tried everything else we could think of but failed to benefit my son until we used Dr. Miles' Nervine."

Parents who have children who suffer from epilepsy, St. Vitus' Dance and other like ailments should avail themselves of this remedy which has been successful before the public for the past thirty years.

If the first bottle does not prove the remedy up to your expectation your druggist will refund your money. MILES MEDICAL CO., Elkhart, Ind.

BIBLE STUDY IN COLLEGES.

Out of 69,296 members of the Young Men's Christian Association in the colleges and secondary schools of the United States, that organization reports that 12,523 are engaged in a daily study of the Bible; 12,665 are enrolled in mission-study classes; 48,295 are in Bible classes; 6037 are engaged in some form of community service, while of the Greek Letter Fraternity men among them 5160 are studying the Bible in 260 local chapters.

BETTER THAN BURDEN-LIFTING.

What helpless creatures we should all make of ourselves if we could persuade God to do for us as we ask! Our first cry, when a heavy burden strikes us, and our continued cry while the burden remains, is that God will take it away. Fortunately God is not so cruel as to do us the harm that we ask for. When our children beg us to let them omit certain school lessons, or give up school entirely, we love them too much to yield to their entreaty. How much better was this petition in a pastor's public prayer: "If any are here with special burdens, if thou dost not lift the load, give them strength to bear it." The power to bear burdens makes richer life than a weakening freedom from burdens.—Sunday School Times.

An Old, Family Cough Remedy, Home-Made

Easily Prepared—Costs Very Little, but is Prompt, Sure and Effective

By making this pint of old-time cough syrup at home you not only save about $2, as compared with the ready-made kind, but you will also have a much more prompt and positive remedy in every way. It overcomes the usual coughs, throat and chest colds in 24 hours—relieves even whooping cough quickly—and is excellent, too, for bronchitis, bronchial asthma, hoarseness and spasmodic croup.

Get from any drug store 2½ ounces of Pinex (50 cents worth), pour it into a pint bottle and fill the bottle with plain granulated sugar syrup. Full directions with Pinex. Keeps perfectly and tastes good.

You can feel this take hold of a cough or cold in a way that means business. It quickly loosens the dry, hoarse or painful cough and heals the inflamed membranes. It also has a remarkable effect in overcoming the persistent loose cough by stopping the formation of phlegm in the throat and bronchial tubes.

The effect of Pine on the membranes is known by almost every one. Pinex is a most valuable concentrated compound of genuine Norway pine extract combined with gualiacol and other natural healing pine elements.

There are many worthless imitations of this famous mixture. To avoid disappointment, ask your druggist for "2½ ounces of Pinex," and do not accept anything else.

A guarantee of absolute satisfaction, or money promptly refunded, goes with this preparation. The Pinex Co., Ft. Wayne, Ind., 235 Main St.

MANSFIELD FEMALE COLLEGE

MANSFIELD, LOUISIANA

NOT an object of charity; not a veneering plant; not a place to cram; not a short-cut affair; no place for triflers or ne'er-do-wells; not a reformatory.

An institution run on business principles; expects and demands honest effort and strict obedience; offers courses in variety under splendidly equipped, trained, experienced and Christian teachers from the best Colleges, Universities and Conservatories. Graduates are among the elect women of the country. Normal graduates "make good."

Income nearly doubled in two years. More than Four Thousand Dollars spent in improvements and accommodations in the past two years. Has a right by every token to demand the earnest consideration of every Louisiana Methodist (we do not poach on the territory of any other Conference). Scores of friends and patrons of other faiths.

We want ten more earnest, ambitious girls at the beginning of the next year—Jan. 4, 1915.

Mansfield is on the map. Suppose you look it up. It is best to come and see.

JUDGE J. B. ECKLES.

His many friends and admirers in this and other sections of the State bowed their heads in inconsolable sorrow and personal affliction when the sad news was flashed over the wires on Sept. 2, that Judge John Brooks Eckles had suddenly passed from toil to reward. Accompanied by his devoted wife, he had gone to a Memphis hospital only six days before for what was deemed a simple and easy operation. He passed this ordeal with apparently no serious indications whatever, but with high promise of a speedy return to health and strength. But alas, alas, for human hopes! Within three brief days ominous complications set up and almost as quickly as the clock marks the hour, his feet had reached the end of the path of all living, and he was "crossing the bar." The mists of the last cloud gathered rapidly over his honored and stalwart form, and he entered with the "boatman, cold and pale," and passed so quickly beyond the tear-dimmed vision and yearning love of heart-stricken ones left weeping beside the river. But bravely and calmly as he had lived and met the trying responsibilities of life, he met the last enemy, "wrapped the drapery of his couch about him" and peacefully embarked for the final voyage, in the same unswerving confidence which had made his life a success. His hand was in his Savior's grasp, and his faith in the all-powerful issues of his wisdom and love. On the 6th of September, 1868, near Pleasant Grove, Panola County, Miss., Judge Eckles was born of the best blood and sinew of the country, his father and mother being the Rev. W. H. and Jane Carter Eckles, who came in an earlier day from Virginia. His father is one of the strongest and best beloved local preachers the Southern Methodist Church has ever had in this section. So Judge Eckles was well born and reared in an atmosphere of piety, love, intellectual and moral purity. Among the first sounds, no doubt, to greet his infantile ears, and which was still potential in molding his mind and character as he grew up, was the sound of song and prayer in family worship. By the setting of his life, he was inspired to noble ideals, fundamental convictions, just moral judgments and intellectual and civic integrity.

He was put to school at an early age at Pleasant Grove, and later became a student at the State University, from which he graduated in academic studies and later, in law, in 1889. Thus, he was admitted to the bar before he attained his majority. After his return from his alma mater he opened a law office in Sardis and resided here until the end of his life. His mental acumen, public spiritedness, character and integrity marked him, from the beginning, for public life, and when only 22 years of age he was elected to serve his county in the State Legislature. A few years later he was appointed Superintendent of Education of his county. This office he filled with such signal fidelity and public approval that he was called to succeed himself for a number of terms. Subsequently he was appointed District Attorney by Gov. Noel to succeed Hon. H. D. Stephens, elected to Congress. At the expiration of this appointment he was elected to a full four years' term. This important position he was filling with credit and honor, when he was appointed by Gov. Brewer in the spring of 1914, Judge of the 17th Judicial District, to succeed Judge A. N. Taylor, whose term of office had expired. Within a few months after his elevation to this high position, so great was his popular favor and his reputation for probity and honor, that he was enthusiastically called by the people in the first primary of August, to succeed himself, and this against three of the best and most popular lawyers in the District, who contested every inch of the ground. This election, occurring in the District in which he was born and reared, in which he had been prosecuting attorney and judge successively, attested his firm hold upon the confidence of the people as a man, an able prosecutor and jurist. His untimely death is an irreparable loss to our people, to his county, Church and State.

Judge Eckles was converted and joined the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, in early life, and lived a consistent, upright and clean life all his days. He grew to strong, wholesome manhood and usefulness amid the splendid moral entities and simple activities of the rural community. The inspiration of a godly home, the teaching and example of worthy parentage, the discipline of the farm and the iron of the hills were in him. The fine texture of his mind and soul were broad, pure ideals of honesty, rectitude, uprightness and self-mastery—all those potent virtues that count in the fashioning of a life and judicial temperament.

Judge Eckles was happily married to Miss Corinne Pepper, of Sardis, in October, 1907, who, with her two children, William Gilbert and Mary Emily, mourn the loss of a kind, affectionate husband, and a loving, devoted father. Besides these, his honored father and mother in age and feebleness, and four brothers and five sisters and hosts of warm friends, are sorely grieved by his taking away. He was for many years, and up to the day of his death, an honored and esteemed member of the official board of his church. We shall miss his counsel, his wise suggestions, his inspiring presence.

His life was an open book, and now that he is gone it gives us untold joy that there were no shadows or vices or malign follies that marked his visage with frowns or poisoned the generous fountain of his manly virtues.

The news of his sudden and unexpected demise spread far and wide and elicited profound sorrow and sympathy in many circles. Warm personal friends from many quarters flocked in to attend his obsequies and mingle their tears and grief with those of his heart-broken family. Beautiful and loving tributes were paid his memory by members of the bar, including District Attorney Dinkins, Judge J. G. McGowan, Judge

Taylor, L. L. Pearson, and Rev. H. M. Perkins, both of the latter at one time his partners in law. The floral offerings were rich, varied and beautiful, betokening the unwithering esteem in which he will ever be held. Now he is gone, but his life is an undying memorial to his name, an imperishable tabernacle of honor, virtue and renown.

THE BUSINESS OF THE CHURCH.

(From the Review and Herald.)

The Church of Christ has been organized on earth for missionary purposes, and it is of the highest importance that every individual member of the Church should be a sincere laborer together with God, filled with the Spirit, having the mind of Christ, perfected in sympathy with Christ, and therefore bending every energy, according to his entrusted ability, to the saving of souls. Christ requires that every one who would be called by his name should make his work the first and highest consideration, and disinterestedly co-operate with heavenly intelligences in saving the perishing, for whom Christ has died.

Christ came into the world for a specific purpose, to seek and save that which was lost. When he ascended to heaven he gave this work of seeking and saving into the hands of his followers, to be their business in the world until he should return to declare it finished. "As thou hast sent me into the world even so have I also sent them into the world," said Jesus in his intercessory prayer for his disciples the last night he spent with them on earth before his crucifixion.—John 17:18.

Life is not a punishment. Material things are not the work of evil, from which we shall finally be set free. Life is not a nuisance and a bore to be got through somehow. But this world is God's world, beautiful and good.—Barry.

Don't wait until you are hurt by a habit before giving it up, but find out its ordinary tendency and act accordingly.—Munger.

Editorial

"Is the work difficult?
Jesus directs thee;
Is the path dangerous?
Jesus protects thee.
Fear not and falter not;
Let the Word cheer thee;
All through the coming year
He will be near thee."

Like an unopened volume, clean and unsoiled, the New Year lies out before us. Shall we blot and stain its white pages, or fill them with a worthy record of holy living and loving deeds? We ought to live a higher, better life with every passing day—thus "going on to perfection."

The Nashville Banner says: "Italy is in a condition of belligerent neutrality." This has been the attitude of some of the pro-Kirkland preachers in the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, in the great fight for the control of the Vanderbilt University. Fortunately, however, the true position of those essaying to play this role is coming to be more generally understood.

It is not more nominal, but real Christianity that the world needs. He who seeks to extend the Kingdom of Christ by compromising its principles may make a great show; but in reality he does not help, but hurts the cause. Such compromises have from the beginning been one of the gravest perils of our holy religion. The whole Gospel, with all the mighty agencies of which it is the vehicle, is needed to save the world.

Resolve to do your full part as a member of the Church to which you belong, and then see that you keep that good resolution. The noblest service possible on earth is that of leading souls to Christ and building them up in him, and the opportunity for such work is wide open to all. The preachers have no monopoly of it. Laymen and a large share in such activities in the beginning of the Christian era, and this is the "laymen's movement" that is most needed in this day.

An immoral young woman in an evil resort in New Orleans sought to commit suicide last week by taking poison. The city papers in giving an account of the occurrence stated that she was incited to this act by the approach of Christmas and the memories of mother and home. Ah, what a part memory will play in the punishment of the finally impenitent and lost! In that awful picture of eternity drawn by the Master, it was one of the things that was most disturbing Dives in the dreadful place into which he had passed. It was Tennyson, the Philosopher-poet, who wrote: "Sorrow's crown of sorrow is the remembrance of happier things." On the other hand, one of the unfailing benedictions of the man who has lived a godly life will be the pleasing recollections of a well-spent past. The truth is, every soul as the years go by stores up within itself the elements that must very largely constitute its own future happiness or misery. Milton recognized this truth when he represented Satan as saying: "Myself am hell."

THE NEW YEAR'S OPPORTUNITIES.

One of the most brilliant of our Southern poets, writing of the dying year, said: "'Tis a time for memory and for tears." So it is, for every year has its defeats and sorrows, and as its end approaches, the mind is disposed to retrospect its vanished days and to dwell upon the occurrences that took place while they were passing. Life, rightly viewed, is a tremendously solemn thing, and the revolving seasons tend to impress upon us the sobering fact of its brevity and to fasten upon us, at least for a little while, the thought of its awful significance. Such moods are helpful and are calculated to stir up the best that is within us. They bring us to realize that the speeding weeks and months are making our records, are fashioning our characters, and are bearing us swiftly to the tomb and to eternity. Thus they arouse the energies of the soul, fire it with nobler aspirations, and lead it to form good resolutions concerning the future. To be sure, all of the high purposes born on such occasions will not be realized, but let us not on this account depreciate the value of such new hopes and desires. It is often by persistent struggling to do better, after repeated failures, that exalted character is attained and lofty achievements are performed. What, for instance, would have become of the Apostle Peter if there had been no second chance? Far truer than the sentiment that "Opportunity" never comes but once is that expressed by Judge Walter Malone, of Memphis, in the following lines:

"They do me wrong who say I come no more
When once I knock and fail to find you in;
For every day I stand outside your door,
And bld you wake to rise and fight and win."

Of one thing we may be certain, if we shall live through it, the coming year will set before us many open doors for advancement. Each of us should strive to develop more fully his own spiritual life. He who does not "grow in grace and in the knowledge of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ" as the time passes, is not fulfilling the Divine Will concerning himself. And the progress that we shall make toward the goal of sainthood will depend very largely upon the constancy and earnestness of our own exertions. Holiness, like regeneration, is obtained only by him who seeks it with the whole heart. Therefore, we should make much of the quiet hour and all the other means of grace. To possess the mind that was in Christ Jesus should be the supreme passion of the soul. Self and the world must be crucified and all must be laid upon the Lord's altar. Such lives have ever been the glory of the Church and they are its greatest need to-day.

But our own religious development is not the only task to which we need to address ourselves with greater diligence and zeal during the year now beginning. As the Master's representatives, we are commissioned to seek and save the lost—to minister in every possible way to our fellow-men. This work cannot be successfully done in a careless, half-hearted manner; the whole soul must be put into it if the full measure of our obligation is to be met. There are thousands of persons who must be saved during the year 1915 if they are ever to be saved at all; and this is equally true of the work of enriching their lives spiritually and all other forms of service. And what harvests we may reap for the Master in the white fields about us if we will but be up and doing! Shall we not make this the greatest year that has yet come to ourselves and many others in spiritual things? We can do so if we will. Whatever may have been the failures of the past, let us go forth with a real faith in Christ and in the strength of the Holy Spirit, resolved to make during the next twelve months a record that we shall not fear to meet in the searching light of the judgment. We may not accomplish all that we shall undertake, but if we will do our best, gracious results will not be lacking.

"Let none hear you idly saying,
"There is nothing I can do,"
While the souls of men are dying,
And the Master calls for you."

JUSTIFIABLE COMPLAINT.

A layman dropped into our office last week who gave every token of being a deeply spiritual man. He is a drummer, and in speaking of his travels, he related several instances of being in towns of considerable size, with resident Methodist pastors, on Wednesday nights and of finding his way to the church to attend the mid-week prayer service, only to be informed that because of the indifference of the people no such service was kept up. Our visitor was disposed to find fault with the ministers living at these places for abandoning their prayer meetings for such a reason, and candor compels us to say that we think his criticism was well-founded. A Methodist pastor ought to have prayer meeting at the church in the town in which he lives if none but his own family will go to it. Such a service as a mere object lesson is worth much. But if a pastor keeps pegging away on such occasions and visits and tactfully exhorts his people to come out, as he ought to do, he is pretty certain to have other worshipers. We have had experience in this matter and know whereof we speak. Some preachers give up much too easily in the Lord's work.

"GRENADA COLLEGE DAY."

Remember that Sunday, January 10, is "Grenada College Day" by special order of the North Mississippi Conference, and that every pastor in the Conference is expected to take an offering for the College on that day. In places where there is no preaching on that Sabbath, it is to be hoped that Superintendents will make brief speeches and take a collection for this cause in their Sunday schools. Here is a great opportunity for the many fine Adult Bible Classes in North Mississippi to make their influence felt for good. We must have $4000 to meet an outstanding note by January 15; so let everybody lend a helping hand and give generously. The education of our young women is a work that we cannot afford to neglect.

A HYMN FOR THE NEW YEAR.

Frances Ridley Havergal.

From glory unto glory: Be this our joyous song,
As on the King's own highway, we bravely march along.
From glory unto glory: O word of stirring cheer,
As dawns the solemn brightness of another glad New Year.
From glory unto glory: What great things He hath done,
What wonders He hath shown us, what triumphs He hath won.
From glory unto glory: What mighty blessings crown
The lives for which our Lord hath laid His own so freely down.
The fulness of His blessing encompasseth our way,
The fulness of His promises crowns every brightening day.
The fulness of His glory is beaming from above,
While more and more we learn to know the fulness of His love.
And closer yet and closer the golden bonds shall be,
Uniting all who love our Lord in pure sincerity:
And wider yet and wider shall the circling glory glow,
As more and more are taught of God that mighty love to know.
Now onward, ever onward, from strength to strength we go,
While grace for grace abundantly shall from His fulness flow.
To glory's full fruition, from glory's foretaste here,
Until His very presence crown our happiest New Year.

WHAT IS WORTH KEEPING.

The end of the year is a good time to give yourself a sort of moral overhauling. Just as a careful housekeeper will go through closets and attic from time to time and throw away useless rubbish, we all need, on occasion, to throw away certain possessions that life is lumbered up with. There are multitudes of things in our minds and hearts that are not worth keeping. Throw them away and start new.

A good memory is a blessing, but a good forgettery is equally as important. There are some things that it isn't needful to remember. We should strive to forget "the things that are behind" when those memories weaken or discourage us. We do ourselves great injury when we insist on holding depressing images before the mind. Throw out on the scrap heap whatever has no use in making life better and stronger.

It is not worth while to retain our hatreds. The heaviest burden a man can carry is a grudge. It will break the strongest back in time. You, yourself, are the one hurt most when you cherish the thought of wrongs, insults, injuries that some one has done you. It is a pretty good plan to forget these things as soon as we can and go about our proper business with "malice toward none, with charity for all." We shall live happier and work better if we refuse to keep enmities.

It is not worth while to retain remorse for our failures. It is important simply to try to learn the lessons they have to teach. We should strive to know what infirmity of training or purpose or practise is responsible for them and then to forget them. No man need condemn himself, because he made a failure once upon a time, to go about forever with a moral ball and chain about his ankles. A mistake may serve to rob one of all courage, or it may be like a guide post on the way of life showing one where to go. When you have looked at the guide post once, leave it behind. There is no need of carrying the heavy thing with you.

Sorrows even should not forever be borne in mind. If we cannot forget them we can at least try to abandon the bitterness of spirit with which they are associated. Like the psalmist, we may remember our sorrows in the night. We should think of the consolations we possess, on the sympathy our friends have bestowed, on the deep and abiding values that our afflictions have revealed. Effort for some worthy cause is a better mark of respect for a friend who has left us than to go mourning all our days.

If life is encumbered with a lot of useless baggage, lighten up before the new year begins. Cling to what is worth while—faith, hope, love, the great abiding spiritual realities. Let the rest go. You are then fit for the new duties that shall confront you. Your ship will sail better when you have jettisoned some of the cargo. As Lamer sings:

"Old past, let go, and drop it the sea,
Till fathomless waters cover thee!
For I am living, but thou art dead:
Thou drawest back, I strive ahead
The day to find
Thy shells unbind! Night comes behind.
I needs must hurry with the wind,
And trim me best for sailing."

THE MINISTER AND HIS READING.

The minister is a man of books. Probably no other class of men read so much or so diversely. The publishers look to them to buy many of their best books. In any community the best private library is apt to be in the parsonage. The preacher probably spends on books a larger share of his income than he can afford. But he must read. For who can continually create without receiving? and who can give forth strength without eating bread?

The minister reads, as we all do, for the mere joy of being transported into other worlds. One value of a great romance lies here, not in its faithfulness to this world, but in its transcendence to it. It carries us into new worlds where the forces that here seem unrelated issue in order. It lifts us out of monotony up to planes of dramatic incident, throbbing passion, heroic endeavor, and the clash of circumstances. There is no completer rest than a great romance. If it be great enough, it widens and expands the whole being with a sense of kinship with the universal. One feels after reading "The Cloister and the Hearth" that he has been a real part of the Europe that just preceded the life of Erasmus. It also quickens the imagination. Many a minister has put down a story by Dickens to write his best sermon. A well-known extemporaneous preacher used to read Scott for an hour Sunday morning simply to kindle his imagination with a fervor or glow.

This enjoyment for books, which the minister occasionally shares with all other men, he allows himself for a purpose. In the nature of things he must devote most of his reading to direct and definite objects. He has to create practically three sermons a week, sometimes more. These sermons are oftenest directly associated with the exposition of the Bible. A great part of his ministry is the seeking of its riches and imparting them to men. He has to do much technical reading. Above all, he has to read the great Book itself and many expositions of it. Now, most ministers read the Bible itself far too little and books about it far too much. The Bible is a great library of life and power. Its treasures do not reveal themselves so much through minute and textual study as through loving and intimate companionship. The best way to get the message of the Bible is to live in it day by day and year by year. This is the secret of the success of so many of the great English preachers. Few books of textual interpretation have much real value for the working preacher. He must select those which get right down into the heart of the Book and give its great abiding message. The same thing should be borne in mind in reading theology. The only great works of theology, those which are based on a universal observation of God's revelation of himself in history and experience, have real worth.—The Congregationalist.

"Sin is man's creation by his misuse of God's gifts, which are good when they are used aright."

Work is not done in vain by any laborer, however humble or unskilled, whose aim and end are the honor and glory of God.—Richard Dehan.

THE WAR IN METHODISM.

Dr. Jay Benson Hamilton, in the Bible Champion.

II.

The Methodist Episcopal Church in America has reached the second stage of the war. The Graded Lessons which the Presbyterian Church discontinued largely because they were un-Biblical and taught dangerous doctrines, are published by a syndicate, two of the members of which are the Methodist Episcopal and the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. The former is the publisher. In addition to it, or a part of it, are books by such authors as Professor Kent, of Yale University. His book we have reviewed in the Champion. It is filled with the most deadly error and is unmistakably antagonistic to Methodist doctrine. We have reviewed or noticed books of the same character by authors who are professors in the Wesleyan, North Western, and Boston Universities. We review in this number a book by the president of the H. F. School of Theology, Denver, a denominational school. Some of these books are published by the Methodist Book Concern. A long article in the Methodist Review, by the late Professor Terry, informed us that Balaam's ass was dead again. A number of pages were filled with what seemed to be a quotation from the documents of which the Pentateuch was composed. We asked one of the great scholars of the world where we could find the quotation. He replied, in The Oxford Hexateuch. Fortunately, each verse was numbered. All we had to do was to cut out the verses and paste them together in their order numerically to have the original story of the Pentateuch. What made the article sad and pathetic beyond words was the fact that the same author, in the same magazine many years before, had written an article on Balaam. It was scholarly, convincing, and in harmony with the teaching of Evangelical Christianity from the beginning.

The General Conference, unlike the English Conference, met the issue squarely. It ordered that the standards of Methodism and of Evangelical Christianity should be regarded. If it was demanded by honest teaching to mention any of the disputed statements, the word "tentative" should be affixed, so no one could possibly be deceived. It will probably be necessary for some one to explain why, in the face of this authoritative and unequivocal prohibition, literature antagonistic to both Methodist and Evangelical standards should be published and pushed by the denominational publishing house. An Old Testament History and a New Testament History are to be issued, and the writers selected are scholars well known to be not in harmony with denominational standards. So far, all this deluge of Counterfeit Critical literature has been poured forth without a protest from the official press. If it had been Russellism instead of Counterfeit Criticism, not an Advocate would have failed to be recorded as a defender of the faith of the Church. No thoughtful person will fail to see how much more dangerous the latter is than the former. The latter wins earnest consideration by the very statement that it is the assured result of the universal scholarship of the world. The former affronts every sensible person by the absurdity of the appeals to credulity and ignorance.

III.

The Methodist Episcopal Church, South, is in the first stage of the war. We said in an Appeal published in the denominational press: "The Bible League of North America most earnestly appeals for your co-operation because you are so orthodox. You are known to be nearer primitive Methodism than any other branch of the family." The Bishops in their address to the General Conference, May, 1914, said: "While we would not put forward any such claim for ourselves, we cannot overlook the fact that we have been preserved against some perils which have beset others; and in gratitude to God for his mercy to us we should render peculiar service in our place. In a day when all sorts of unverified theories concerning matters political, social, and religious are heralded as final philosophies because they affirm what no balanced mind in any former generation ever accepted, and deny what the wisest and most devout of all the ages have most assuredly believed, our Church has a mission of the most sacred character to fulfill."

The cloud, no larger than a man's hand, may be seen in the horizon. Of course, as always, elsewhere, so here, we greet one of our old friends, the three Bible characters which we have named. The Texas Advocate contains a short article by J. P. Chambers calling attention to a book review in the Methodist Review by a professor of Vanderbilt University. The review began thus: "According to the author—and he has most scholars in agreement with him—the book of Jonah is not a record of actual happenings. * * * More significant, perhaps, is the attempt to show that a man can live for a time within a whale." The article, while short, is treacherous and merciless. He cites other wonders as incredible as the whale episode: Elijah bringing fire down by prayer, Daniel delivered from the lions, the Hebrews delivered from the fiery furnace, the miracles of Christ—raising Lazarus, and others. He names the greatest miracle of all, Christ's sinless life, and adds, "Why not eliminate the resurrection of Christ?"

A stinging paragraph appears in black-faced type, which we copy:

"A few more things I cannot understand: If we, as a religious denomination accept all the Bible, why is such stuff permitted to be published in our periodicals? Are any of these 'most scholars' in the employ of our Church? If so, why are they not discharged, and that immediately?"

Six months later another book review by the same Vanderbilt professor appeared in the Methodist Review. A correspondent of the New Orleans Christian Advocate characterized it as containing "statements which were so in accord with modern infidelity and so subversive of faith in the Word of God, and so repugnant to the Second and Sixth Articles of our Christian Faith, that I felt it was my duty to call attention to this method of inveighing against our doctrine."

No notice being taken of his protest, he calls attention to the October number, which is bristling with its pointed thrusts at the inerrancy of the Scriptures. Another author is allowed to say: "The Theology of Revelation faltering on the now hollow ground of Scripture infallibility was more broadly based upon a new historical interpretation of the Bible, of dogma, of the world and the soul."

"May I also direct your attention to some clauses, heartily endorsed by Dr. James Mudge (Malden, Mass.):

"But this high estimate of the practical revelative value of the Bible is not tantamount to affirming any of the theories of the Bible, which set it over against all other books as 'infallible' or 'inerrant,' nor does it justify any language which provides an absolute distinction between the nature of the record and all other records. The Bible is not a record of a now discontinued revelation."

The article is bold, clear, faithful, and has this significant paragraph in conclusion:

"I should dislike very much to have to carry this matter to the Book Committee and the Annual Conference, but I feel that the Church and our young ministers must be protected at all hazards; and I wish to state that I am by no means alone in this feeling. There are quite a number of ministers who share fully with me my views in regard to this matter and who are willing to stand with me in bringing it to the attention of the Church."

That has the right ring. Heresy hunting has become a jest and a by-word of scoffing. But it does not take a bank long to oust a director who betrays it; it does not take a stock exchange long to expel a broker who dishonors it by robbing his customers; it does not take a lawyers' Association long to get rid of a shyster who violates every vow of honor and integrity and brings the fraternity into disrepute; even in politics we learn the standard of honor is so high that the politician who violates his pledge is as guilty as if he had stolen trust funds committed to him. So Secretary of State Bryan informed the Legislature of Pennsylvania in an address not long since.

When Christian men, ministers and laymen, demand that the highly paid servant who debauches those whom he influences and strikes a deadly blow at the life of the denomination, shall step down and out, the Church can then dare compare herself with the worldly organizations named above. All fair-minded men will approve whatever may be necessary in righteousness to keep the Church as scrupulous of her honor as the world does in every business and professional relation.

BISHOP HOSS AT McKENDREE, NASHVILLE.

A large congregation heard Bishop E. E. Hoss at McKendree Church Sunday morning, December 20, when he told of the life and work of Bishop William McKendree, the great pioneer Methodist, whose influence was so broadly felt in the shaping of the destinies of Tennessee in its early history. Bishop Hoss was scheduled to read the paper on the life of Bishop McKendree during the celebration of the one-hundredth anniversary of Methodist organization in Tennessee, when the Tennessee Annual Conference met in this city two years ago, but was prevented from doing so on account of illness.

Bishop Hoss' discourse was a masterly one, and he paid an eloquent tribute to the life and work of one of the Church's greatest men, dwelling at length on the part Bishop McKendree played in shaping the affairs of Tennessee when the State was young. He also made a touching reference to the last sermon which Bishop McKendree delivered, the date being November 23, 1834. Of the wonderful spirit of Bishop McKendree, both as man and minister, and his determination to preach the gospel to the early settlers, despite hardships and difficulties, Bishop Hoss spoke most impressively.

In closing he said:

"Buried in 1855 at the side of his venerable father, Bishop McKendree's remains were forty years later taken up, and with those of Joshua Soule, reinterred on the campus of Vanderbilt University, thus 'hallowing the ground,' as the trustees of that day said. At later dates Bishop and Mrs. Holland N. McTyiere, without whom Nashville would have had no Vanderbilt University, and Chancellor Landon C. Garland, a sage in learning and wisdom, and a fervent Methodist of the ancient pattern, were all laid away in the same God's acre. It is a goodly company. There let them lie, those five Methodists, and may no hand ever have the audacity to disturb their rest!"

"Let the simple stones above them be for a sign and a witness in the day of the restitution of all things. The granite pulpit and the open Bible lying on it are a better revelation of the mind and purpose of the founders and fathers of that great university than any judicial decision. And if that is not enough, it gets ample reinforcement from the words above the head of Mrs. McTyiere, taken from the last will and testament of Bishop McTyiere himself:

"She was a silent but golden link in the chain that bound this university to Methodism."—The Nashville Banner.

GRENADA COLLEGE.

Dear Dr. Meek: The North Mississippi Conference did a wise thing when it voted to give greater publicity to the magnificent work and unquestioned claims of our Grenada College.

You will pardon a reminiscent mood—as I write memory bridges yesterday and now. A flood tide of tenderness sweeps over me as I think of former associations with co-workers and my dear pupils. For twenty-two years I gave to this institution the best service of which I was capable, and I have loved and sacrificed, have hoped and feared, watching with solicitude every agency that hampered and every step that marked progress.

Grenada College was founded in the palmy days of pride and plenty, "before the war," and was awakened to new life under the inspiration of Rev. T. J. Newell, who in devotion to duty never counted the cost to himself. He laid the foundation, and others have built upon it with credit to themselves and profit to the Church and society.

The College has had a struggle for its existence, but the management of brave men at its head and of wise, self-sacrificing men in its councils has broadened and strengthened its environments, till it can claim to be the equal of the best educational institutions in our State in curriculum, in government, and in the building of Christian character.

The election of Rev. J. R. Countiss as president was no accident. A man of the highest ideals, who can preach like Whitefield or Bascom and direct material affairs like Woodrow Wilson, he commands the confidence of all. He has expanded and beautified the campus, enlarged the capacity of the dormitory, and planned for a "Greater Grenada College." But he cannot execute his plans without the assistance of the pen and pulpit.

Brother Countiss has secured a strong, loyal faculty and has filled the halls of the College with a splendid student body of happy, industrious young women. Perhaps no one wields a more potent influence there than the President's wife, who ministers tenderly to all who need her services.

Surely the essentials of a model Christian school are met in Grenada College. It invites the closest inspection, and it merits generous support and liberal financial aid.

Grenada, Miss.

MRS. ED. PAYNE.

TRUE BENEVOLENCE.

Laura F. Montgomery.

"Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself." Matt. 12, 39.

I do not wish to injure any noble organization, or to hurt the feelings of anyone who is following in the steps of Him "who went about doing good," who "came not to be ministered unto, but to minister." It is some flagrant wrongs that ought to be righted, to which I allude. For instance, if strangers hunting work were to come to some of our cities, they would be fortunate if they escaped arrest as vagrants; and if others came who were not physically able to work, their home, in all probability, would be the poor house; and if they died, their last resting-place would be the pauper burying-ground. The strangers whom thou preservest—the poor whom the King of kings is not ashamed to claim, and to pronounce a blessing on! Truly, He does not give as the world giveth!

Our sainted Brother Ransom Jones, when he was ripening fast for heaven, spoke in a sermon, I believe, of people saying that no poor ever came to them, and he gave as the reason that "God did not send the poor to be insulted."

"Vainly we offer each ample oblation,

Vainly with gifts would his favor secure:

Richer by far is the heart's adoration,

Dearer to God are the prayers of the poor!"

Some individuals who put themselves on a pedestal, and speak of their charities, have a contempt for the objects of their benevolence. They do not realize that true giving is simply sharing, and forget that "the gift without the giver is bare." What a contrast they are to the great hero, one of the noblest of the noble, who when he was dying on the battlefield, and was offered a last precious drink of water, that he must have longed for with every drop of blood in his veins, refused it, and said to his wounded companion: "Friend, thy need is greater than mine."

Church News

The episcopal address to the General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, which will convene in May, 1915, will be written by Bishop Hamilton.

Bishop Morrison is now a resident of Dallas, Texas. He has moved there from San Antonio, that he may be in closer touch with the work of the Southern Methodist University.

Bishop McCoy has wound up his round of Conferences in Texas in great favor with the preachers and people of that State. He is one of our most popular and useful chief pastors.

Dr. J. Edgar Wilson has been re-elected Editor of the Florida Christian Advocate. Dr. Wilson is making an interesting and serviceable paper, and his brethren have done well to keep him on the tripod.

Rev. Gross W. Alexander, a son of Dr. Gross Alexander, editor of the Methodist Review Quarterly, was admitted on trial at the recent session of the Los Angeles Conference, and was stationed at Redlands, Calif.

Hendrix College at Conway, Ark., has a brass band with 20 members, which is said to be the best organization of the kind in Arkansas. Some of our colleges in this day seem able to produce pretty nearly everything except scholars.

At the recent session of the Florida Conference, Dr. J. E. Wray was changed from Orlando to First Church, Lakeland; Rev. J. B. Mitchell was re-appointed to Hyde Park and West Hyde Park, Tampa, and Dr. W. E. Thompson was re-assigned to First Church, Tampa.

"The World Outlook" is the name of a new missionary monthly that the Methodist Episcopal Church has begun to issue at 150 Fifth Avenue, New York City. It is pictorial and quite a striking periodical. The price is $1.50 per annum. We are much pleased with the first number.

In the Methodist Episcopal Church the work of the Methodist Brotherhood has been merged with that of the Adult Bible Classes in the Sunday schools. Good! Fewer organizations and less machinery would, in our opinion, help most of the Churches in this day. Concentration upon the essential things is what we need.

Dr. Thomas S. Potts, who for the past five years has been General Superintendent of the Baptist Hospital in Memphis, has resigned that position and will devote his time to evangelistic work. At his suggestion the office of superintendent was abolished, and the affairs of the institution will hereafter be directed by a supervisory board.

The Menace affirms that by his recent article arraigning President Wilson and Mr. Bryan for their Mexican policy, ex-President Roosevelt has constituted himself "Rome's Advocate Extraordinary." Candor compels us to admit that Mr. Roosevelt's article did read as if its chief purpose was to secure for himself the favor of the Roman Catholics in the United States.

The Methodist Training School at Nashville, Tenn., has a "Convocation Hour" once a month, at which a lecture on some important subject is delivered by a specially invited speaker. Bishop W. R. Lambuth, Dr. E. H. Rawlings, and Rev. T. C. Ragsdale have already been pressed into service for this purpose, and Dr. W. W. Pinson is expected to deliver a similar lecture in the near future.

Our new Atlanta school will be named "Emory University," and Emory College will be a part of it. We have no particular objection to this name, and it may be that it was wise to adopt it to conserve the history of the past, but it would have pleased us very much to have seen the institution named for Bishop Asbury, or Bishop Soule, who perhaps contributed more to the making of American Methodism than any other two men.

It is stated that the revival meetings, which resulted in 4000 professions of faith, were held by the professors and students of the Southwestern Baptist Theological Seminary, in Texas, last year. It strikes us that this is a far better way to train young men for the work of the ministry than to have them browsing in the barren fields of "higher criticism." Is not this statement a flashlight showing in part at least, why the Southern Baptist Church is growing at such a phenomenal rate? We rather think so.

Dr. W. W. Royal, in writing of the Virginia Conference, thus refers to Bishop Kilgo's discourse: "Bishop Kilgo preached a sermon on Sunday morning that will go down in the traditions of this Conference along with Marvin's great sermon on 'Do we make void the law through faith?' For nearly two hours he held a vast audience completely under the spell of his tremendous logic and profound feeling. There was as nearly an old-fashioned camp meeting season as has been seen among us for a half century. It was a great deliverance and was calculated to raise the spiritual tone of the whole body. Thank God for such preaching!"

Mr. Ivey L. Lee, a son of Dr. J. W. Lee, presiding elder of the St. Louis District, has been chosen by Mr. John D. Rockefeller as one of the four directors of his philanthropic work. His associates in this work will be Mr. Starr Jocelyn Murphy, Mr. Rockefeller's personal counsel; Mr. Jerome Davis Greene, Secretary of the Rockefeller Foundation, and Mr. John D. Rockefeller, Jr. The St. Louis Republic states that it is believed that Mr. Lee's salary in his new position will not be less than $30,000 per annum. Prior to his acceptance of this position, Mr. Lee was the executive assistant of President Samuel Rea, the official head of the Pennsylvania Railroad.

Referring to the late session of the Florida Conference, the Florida Christian Advocate says: "Bishop Morrison came to the Conference looking older than he did last year, mainly by reason of his patriarchal beard; but he was apparently in excellent health and fine spirits, in spite of his long round recently completed in the West. His presidency was marked by courtesy, firmness, and the prompt dispatch of business. His address to the class for admission was a wise and wholesome utterance . . . and his preaching was highly praised." Perhaps in letting his beard have the right of way Bishop Morrison desires to keep up with the style. We recently saw it stated that in England whiskers are again beginning to be worn by many clergymen.

OUR CROPS.

This year's principal farm crops are worth $4,945,825,000, the Bureau of Crop Estimates, Department of Agriculture, announced on December 15 in its final estimates of the size and value of the nation's harvests. This may be compared with $4,940,301,000, their value last year; $4,757,342,000 their value in 1912, and $4,589,529,000 their value in 1911. These values are based on the farm prices of the crops on Dec. 1 of each of these years.

The following is a somewhat more detailed statement:

Corn—Production, 2,572,804,000 bushels against 2,446,938,000 last year. Acre yield, 25.8 bushels; against 23.1 last year. Dec. 1 farm price, 63.7 cents per bushel, against 69.1 last year.

Wheat—Production, 891,017,000 bushels, against 763,380,000 last year. Acre yield, 16.6 bushels, against 15.2 last year. Price, 98.6 cents, against 79.9 last year.

Rice—Production, 23,649,000 bushels, against 25,744,000 last year. Acre yield, 34.1 bushels, against 31.1 last year. Price, 21.4 cents, against 20.8 last year.

Cotton—Production 15,500,000 bales of 500 pounds gross, excluding linters, against 15,077,000 last year. Acre yield, 207.3 pounds, against 191.9 last year. Price, 6.1 cents a pound, against 1.2 last year. Value for 1914 crop, $319,000,000. Obviously the increase in the value of this year's crop over that of last year is not due to more received for cotton, but to the larger value of other products. The cotton industry has been struck nearly a knock-out blow by the European war.

BISHOP MURRAH'S MESSAGE TO MEMPHIANS.

The following is a brief extract from Bishop Murrah's speech on the occasion of a public reception recently given to him and Mrs. Murrah at the First Methodist Church of Memphis.

"In responding to the welcome extended by James L. McRee on behalf of the Methodists of Memphis, Bishop Murrah spoke of the work of the Church, its wonderful system, and what was before it. 'If we want to do anything for the Church,' he said, 'we must stand positively for something. So far as doctrine and system are concerned, we have a cordial welcome everywhere. We must stand for loyalty to our wonderful system and to those things which characterize us essentially as an aggressive Church. When the Church ceases to be aggressive, then it dies. I care nothing for expansion as a political slogan, but it is a vital element of Christianity. We must especially stand for spirituality. It is a very serious matter that there is now a tendency to commercialize and secularize everything. We must stand against the tendency to measure our prosperity in terms of material quantity. I am getting tired of the old, platitudinous talk about the Church in politics. Of course, I do not mean partisan politics. But the Church has a vast work to do in fostering and encouraging policies which uplift the world. One of the old heresies is that religion is a thing apart from your life.' Bishop Murrah thought that an exceptional opportunity was offered in the building of the Methodist Hospital here. He commended the work. 'The lockers of the Church must be opened,' he said, 'to meet the demand which human want exacts of Christian beneficence.'

Gov. Hall is calling for additional funds for the Louisiana exhibit at the Panama-Pacific Exposition in San Francisco. The State Legislature appropriated $10,000, but the Governor calls attention to the fact that this amount is inadequate, and that Mississippi by the sale of medals has secured $25,000 for her exhibit.

The lower House of Congress voted last week to make an appropriation of $220,000 toward enabling the Federal health authorities to continue their anti-rat campaign in New Orleans. The National Public Health Service made the following expenditures during the year 1914 in safeguarding the United States from the plague: New Orleans $159,179; California, $33,311; Seattle, $46,25; Porto Rico, $1025.

The New York Sun is authority for the statement that within the last sixteen years $1,645,000,186 has been spent upon the American Navy, against $1,237,915,960 upon that of Germany, which is said to be superior to ours in all respects. In the light of this claim, it is not surprising that our distinguished contemporary desires to know what has been done with the money that Congress has been appropriating year after year for our Navy.

King Christian of Denmark, King Gustaf of Sweden, and King Haakon, of Norway, together with their Foreign Ministers, held a conference in Malmo, Sweden, on December 18 and 19, and reached terms of agreement concerning the maintenance of neutrality and other important matters of mutual interest during the continuance of the present European war. It was the general belief that this consultation would produce happy results for all three of the countries represented in it.

There are 2000 students at the University of Wisconsin who are non-residents of the State, and it is charged that these young gentlemen are the greatest spenders of money and promoters of extravagant habits to be found there. A recent survey of conditions existing at that institution recommends that the expenditures of such students be limited to $600 each, and that until arrangements can be made for the enforcement of this regulation, patronage from without the State be discouraged.

It is claimed that the officers of the next National House of Representatives have been agreed upon: that Mr. Champ Clark will be re-elected as Speaker, and that Representative Kitchin, of North Carolina, will succeed Mr. Underwood as the Democratic floor leader. If it be true, as has been stated in the secular papers, that Mr. Clark recently appeared on the lecture platform in Detroit, Michigan, so intoxicated that he made a spectacle of himself and had to be taken off the stage, he does not deserve to be continued in his present high office.

Herman Frasch, the chief chemist of the Standard Oil Company, died a short time since, leaving an estate valued at $5,500,000. He is credited with having earned more dividends for the company with which he was connected through the discovery of economical processes and new products than John D. Rockefeller himself. Commenting upon this claim, the New York World says: "Chemistry indeed has become not merely the handmaid of industry, but its very genius. It has probably done more for the development of manufacture than any other single influence."

The New York World in a recent issue compliments the Scandinavian nations in the following manner: "Their people furnish the smallest percentage of illiteracy among all our immigrants; and we received last year 32,000 of them against 32,000 Germans. And nowhere else has greater progress been made in temperance. Denmark consumes far less alcohol per capita than France; Sweden than Germany or England; Norway than the United States. Scandinavian commerce is $38 per capita; ours $54. In some respects Denmark has led even the United States in agricultural advance. Norway's merchant flag is known the world over."

FROM DR. SAWYER.

Having no special charge, I have decided to do evangelistic work during 1915. I will therefore be ready and glad to help in their meetings any pastors who may wish me to do so. I desire to do revival work within the bounds of the Louisiana, Mississippi and North Mississippi Conferences; and also in Texas, or elsewhere, should opportunity offer. Having had, under God, good success in the saving of souls in the meetings heretofore held by me, I have faith to believe that God will bless my similar labors during the coming year. So, brethren, when you fix upon a time for holding your next meeting, write me to come to you and get your people to pray the prayers of faith, that God may send the Spirit in mighty power, using us both for his glory in the saving of blood-bought souls. My Address is 5655 Hawthorne Avenue, New Orleans, La.

TO PRESIDING ELDERS, PASTORS, AND DISTRICT STEWARDS.

As we have no field agent and have no Orphanage Board to plan for the support of the Orphanage, we request that you in your district stewards' meetings plan for a district agent in each district and a monthly contribution from each charge, beginning with the month of January.

Let every district assume $100 for each month. If you will give all the people a chance each district will raise more than that amount. If we are going to run this institution to the honor and glory of God, we must do it sensibly and systematically. Every other cause of the Church is provided for and is represented by the law of the Church, through boards and field agents. Shall we not see that the orphan children in our care have an equal chance with the other interests of the Church? This is all we ask.

We are already a month behind in our finances. If we wait a month to start we will possibly be three months behind by the end of the year. We can not visit all the district stewards' meetings, for they nearly all come on the same day. Let all the district agents meet with the district stewards.

WEEK OF PRAYER.

Neither prayer nor self-denial can be substituted the one for the other. They should go hand in hand. Both should be emphasized during the week of prayer, January 3-10. The free-will offering for missions should not be the only thing nor even the chief thing. It should be the spontaneous expression of the quickened prayer-life and the deepening of the spirit of self-denial.

The occasion is both an appeal and a test. It is an appeal for the putting of the missionary cause into the red currents of the Church's life; the taking of it out of the category of the occasional and incidental and setting it in the steady light of our altar fires and in the quivering depths of our self-denying devotion. It is also a test of the tone and spirit of the Church. A great Church on its knees and a worthy voluntary offering for the world's evangelization would be a convincing answer to the oft repeated charge of insincerity and formalism.

Let the week be observed by all our people. Let the whole Church in this hour of gloom and confusion send out a note of cheer and hope. Let our hard-pressed missionaries feel the pulse-beat of a praying Church. Let the struggling native Church realize our sense of unity with them and find in us the spirit of sacrifice that we teach and expect in them. Let the entire Church be heartened and invigorated by the mutual discovery and practice of the essential spirit of Christianity.

Many pastors are ordering literature. Many more will be content to use the envelopes already sent them. Still others will doubtless prefer to observe the week and take the offering without programs or envelopes. At any rate, let every church be called to prayer and be given a chance to express itself in a free-will offering.

NOTICE TO PREACHERS.

SOME HISTORICAL REMINISCENCES.

During the recent session of the Mississippi Conference at Columbia, the following interesting paper was read by Dr. T. B. Ford, a descendant of the Rev. John Ford, at whose home near that place the second annual session of that body was held one hundred years ago. This paper is printed by special request of the Conference.—Editor's note.

The history of the Methodist Church in this County for the last one hundred years to be accurate and complete, would require time and access to the official records of the church. As the records are lacking and my time was limited to two or three days in which to prepare this paper, I shall only attempt to give recollections of events for fifty years past, supplemented by facts which were handed down and orally conveyed to me of events connected with the church for the preceding forty years. That our Civil War should have had a profound effect upon many of our country churches was to be expected. The freedom of the slaves meant the abandonment of the old plantations. In many instances families and neighbors sought new homes, but whenever families and neighbors have migrated in considerable numbers, they have invariably taken their religion with them, leaving behind them perhaps a deserted church. This melancholy result has followed in the case of the old church where my mother and father worshipped when I was a child. The old church is gone, the old families that clustered around it have moved away; many of their descendants live in this town and are members of this church and are in this congregation to-night. This has been the case since earliest history, and is an evidence of virility and strength when a family or tribe can successfully carry their faith into new homes.

Generalities and statistics are dry; my personal recollections I hope will not be devoid of interest. In the year of 1867 my mother and three children, almost grown, moved to this town. Columbia was then as now the county seat of Marion County. The population was about one hundred souls. There were two stores, one bar-room, a court-house and jail, and an old Masonic Hall. There was no church and no schoolhouse; no religion and only one good man—old Judge Smith, and no increase in the number of good men after our arrival. The men were all Democrats and it was the most harmonious town it was ever my pleasure to know. All being Democrats and having no religion, there was nothing to divide the people into factions. No reflection is intended to be cast upon the men of that day—no more kindhearted, generous or honest men could be found, but they were passive on the subject of religion. About this time a Mr. Lewis came to Columbia and preached. His given name or initials I do not remember. There have been so many Lewis preachers, it doesn't matter. On the occasion referred to, Preacher Lewis had a small congregation and there was not much enthusiasm. Services were then held in the old Masonic Hall. The preacher felt bad and afterwards confided to some one that Columbia was a hell hole. Things drifted along for several years very much as Brother Lewis left us. People fished, hunted, played checkers, poker, drank whiskey and had a good time. All lived like one family. The Masonic lodge died a natural death and the old hall was used for a ball room and for preaching alternately. We received mail once a week and then came changes—the mail came twice a week and our largest merchant moved away. About this time the Rev. N. B. Young, pastor on this circuit, preached in the old Masonic Hall. People seemed a little interested, so he preached the following night and continued to hold night services for a week, with the result that about twenty people joined the Church. Then my mother, Mrs. Juliet A. Ford, with the help of Mrs. Nancy Ball and Mrs. Annette Barnes, organized a Sunday school, which has lived and grown until now the Sunday schools of this town have nearly or quite a thousand regular attendants. That these Sunday schools have had a far-reaching effect in shaping the lives of the people living in this town, there can be no doubt, and with the Methodist Sunday school the names of two men will forever be associated—one living and the other dead. From the organization of the first Sunday school in this town about forty years ago, there has been a very marked and steady increase in religious sentiment. A few years after the organization of the Sunday school the first Methodist church was built, and likewise a good school building was erected. Shortly after this the saloons were closed and have remained closed to this day. After the building of the schoolhouse the town began to grow and in a few years the Baptist church was built. This was long before the railroad came, and Columbia was a prosperous and growing town. Of those who took part in the regeneration of the old town, alas! many are dead, but their memories are enshrined in the hearts of our people.

The meeting of the Conference in this town marks an epoch. One hundred years ago the second Annual Conference of the Methodist Church of this State was held in this county, but not in this town. The Conference of one hundred years ago was held in the home of Rev. Jno. Ford, 15 miles south of here and on the west side of Pearl River, and this old home is standing as it did one hundred years ago. The lightning has passed it by, fire has not consumed it, the fierce storms of the tropics have passed over it, but the old home stands as it did when John Ford, with generous heart entertained the Conference. It is said the house was built in the year 1792. The old records on file in the Chancery Clerk's office show that John and Joseph Ford, brothers, entered a tract of land around this old home in the year of 1811. The lands in this section of the State were surveyed by the Government in 1810, and it was the year succeeding before title could be acquired. The Rev. Jno. Ford moved to or near Shreveport, Louisiana, where he died.

Around this old home are clustered many memories. General Andrew Jackson, returning with his victorious army after the battle of New Orleans, passed in front of the house and Jackson and his staff graciously stopped and accepted the hospitality of the family by drinking coffee with them. Mrs. Mary Ann Rankin, a great niece of the Rev. John Ford, still lives in the old home and her gentle, loving hands have soothed many dying relatives and friends. Some years before Bishop Galloway died, when on a visit to this place, he took a carriage and drove down to the old homestead of Rev. John Ford. On his return he spoke feelingly of the old preacher. I was not aware at the time that the Bishop's wife is a lineal descendant of the old minister. It is with a feeling of sadness I have penned these lines, for it brings to my recollection friends who died in the years that have vanished. To the members of this Conference, walking in the footsteps of their brothers of one hundred years ago, must come a feeling of joy when they think that in the dim and distant future and in a fairer land than this, that little band of brothers will meet again and know each other.

THE ARKANSAS TRAVELER.

By Theodore Copeland.

In celebrating the Feast of Tabernacles the Jews are required to make their booths sufficiently frail for the stars to be seen through them. Travelers and explorers tell us that, in Chili, where the ground is subject to frequent shocks of earthquake, the houses are built low in height and of unenduring structure; it is unwise to dig deep foundations and erect high walls where the very earth is unstable, and the whole edifice may collapse in a week. These and other occult facts bring forcibly to our minds the pathetic language of David the King, as he brings his last offerings for building the temple: "We are strangers before Thee, and sojourners, as were all our fathers; our days on earth are as a shadow, and there is none abiding." Their deepest significance, however, appeals to Itinerant preachers, inasmuch as they can fully appreciate the truth that here we have no continuing city.

Eight years ago I left New Orleans for St. Louis, having been assigned to St. Paul's Church in that city. Mrs. Copeland and our two boys were with me, and our destination carried us through Birmingham and Athens, our ancestral homes in Alabama. Reaching St. Louis in the afternoon, we went to the old Southern Hotel. Mr. Fred W. Goessling, chairman of the official board came to see us and assured us that St. Paul's was prepared to give us a cordial welcome, which we found to be quite true. We spent four happy years with those delightful people. That is a great church, and I shall always thank Bishop Key for sending me to serve them. At the end of my pastorate there Rev. M. F. Haw took charge of the church, remaining four years and doing faithful service. Dr. A. F. Smith, the present pastor, is the right man in the right place. From this charge Bishop Denny sent me to Cabbane Church, St. Louis, which stands along with the great churches of Methodism. Refined and cultured people worship there, among them Governor Lon V. Stephens and his good wife, loyal always to their pastors and to their church. There I remained four years.

The memory of these eight years in St. Louis will linger in my heart like a benediction, through all the future days. There I became acquainted with thousands of people in almost every walk of life. I knew nearly all the preachers of all denominations in the city. I knew the Governors, the lawyers, the eminent physicians and surgeons, the merchants, small and great, the editors and the officials of the city, and the hotel people. These all showed me much kindness. During these years I heard the celebrities of the world, great preachers, great missionaries from the distant firing line, great diplomats and statesmen. I preached nearly all over the city and through the State, held meetings in twelve Conferences, and preached several Commencement sermons. Dr. John Matthews and Dr. W. M. Palmore died during this time, and I was honored with a place among the pall bearers at their funerals.

An itinerant's wife has written a volume whose suggestive title is, "My Moving Tent." Upon the advice of Bishop Denny I folded my tent in St. Louis, prepared for marching orders, and was transferred to the Mississippi Conference. Afterward it was decided that I should go to Hot Springs, Arkansas. Last Sunday we held our first services in our new field; large, intelligent congregations greeted the preacher. A vast army of sick and impotent people are here, attracted by the healing waters of these modern pools of Bethesda. A great opportunity confronts and challenges the pastor and members of this church. Our new building will be completed about the first of July next, and it will be a monument to the enterprise and devotion of this progressive congregation. Here as elsewhere the forces of evil are strongly entrenched. The fight is on in the rural districts, the hamlets, the towns and the great cities of our nation, but the final outcome is not in doubt.

The ancient legend which told how on many a well-fought field, the ranks of Rome saw through the battle dust the gleaming weapons and the white steeds of the Great Twin Brethren far in front of the solid legions, is true in a loftier sense in the conflict which calls us to arms. We may still see the vision which the leader of Israel saw of old, the man with a drawn sword, and hear his majestic words, "As captain of the Lord's Host am I come."

A CHANGE OF HEART.

Mary F. Butts.

"I care for nobody,
And nobody cares for me,"
Sang Tommy at play, in the sweet new hay.
Where nobody could see.

So his mother made the fire,
And searched for the old hen's nest,
While the sun from its place high overhead
Went sliding into the West.

She filled the water pail
And picked the berries for tea,
And wondered down in her tender heart
Where her little boy could be.

Alone in the dim old barn,
Tommy grew tired of play,
When the cows came home and the shadows fell
Over the new mown hay.

So into the kitchen he ran,
With a noisy hi! yi! yi!
His mother had made him a frosted cake;
She had made him a saucer pie.

So he gave her a loving hug!
"I will help next time," said he.
"I care for somebody,
And somebody cares for me."

"YE HAVE DONE IT UNTO ME." A NEW YEAR'S STORY.

Edith Wray.

The little clock ticked away busily in the Junior League room, while without tiny snowflakes played hide-and-seek against the window panes. The shadows deepened, but still Mercedes Slater sat at the little desk in the corner. It was the very last day of the old year. To-morrow life would start all over again, with a renewed impetus, so there seemed but little time left for idle reflection or dreaming. Yes, the year was slipping away, but it had not been altogether a failure. "Something accomplished, something won," thought Mercedes, for by great effort and much work she had made some of the children interested at least.

This last meeting of the year had been a trial to her, however. The holiday festivities had been in full sway in Clifton, and Mercedes had not been absent from many of the social gatherings. Now that the busy season was drawing to a close, she felt tired and—yes, we must say it, careless toward her duty. "Such a stupid time for a League meeting," she reasoned; "I know none of the children will want to leave their new dolls and woolly lambs to come, but I suppose I must go." So with rather an impatient step she had tramped out from her warm fireside into the snowy street.

When she reached the church she found no one there. Of course they wouldn't come, but she would sit down at the desk, anyway, and wait a few minutes. She reached into her coat pocket and drew out a little Testament—the Christmas remembrance from one of her dear old neighbors. She opened it idly and toyed through the pages. Suddenly her eye fell upon the passage, "Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these my brethren, ye have done it unto Me." Mercedes considered a moment, then shut the Book as two little tots came in and took their places. She walked over to the door and, to her surprise, a half dozen or more fur-clad, snow-covered youngsters trooped in. Mercedes began the service with a brightening smile, and soon she was entering into the true spirit of the meeting and actually felt glad that she had left her warm fireside.

During the last song Teddy Cain, followed by his mother, entered the room tightly clasping his woolly lamb. He appeared to be very much excited and made straight for Mercedes. "O, Miss Mercie, I knows the dreadfullest sing—muvver went to see a poor, sick lady's afternoon—an' I went too, an' I saw the poorest little boy, all crippled, an' he never got no woolly lamb for Christmas, an' muver said I could take him some—fing—an' I'm doin' to take him my lamb—an' Miss Mercie, tan't all of us take him somefing too? He tant walk at all—please let's doe to-night, so he'll have a Happy New Year. Teddy's wistful look seemed contagious—for soon all the children were offering contributions for the poor little crippled boy's New Year.

Mrs. Cain offered a suggestion. "It is already late afternoon," she said, "and soon will be dark. Now all of you go home, get your contributions ready, and I'll come around in a little while in my old carryall. If Mercedes can get her carriage too, we can all go and make this the brightest New Year's eve poor little Vincent Payne has ever known."

While Mrs. Cain was talking, Mercedes thought again and again of her verse—"Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these," etc. So it seemed the most natural thing in the world to add: "O, Mrs. Cain, it is a beautiful plan, and the best way we can end the old year. Do you all want to, children?"

For answer she received a deafening chorus of assent, so as a result before many minutes the children were hurrying away, happy to share their good cheer with one of God's unfortunates.

About six o'clock that New Year's eve residents of Clifton were surprised to see Mercedes Slater with one carriage load of children and toys, and Mrs. Cain with Teddy and another, driving down St. Paul Street, out to one of the poorer sections of the city. But these people would have been more surprised could they have seen the merry crowd stop before Vincent Paine's humble cottage and step into the poor little living-room. How little Vincent's eyes shone as the children, one by one, gave him their gifts! And how Mrs. Paine wept for joy to see her baby so happy! And how Teddy Cain jumped for joy when he handed over the precious woolly lamb!

Mercedes stood by watching with humble thankfulness, and when no one was looking she slipped the ten-dollar bill, her Christmas gift from her father, into Vincent's little savings bank. Then she gathered the children together and started towards the door. Mrs. Paine touched her arm. "You know, my dear," she said, "I believe the Lord sent you here to-day with these children—bless their hearts; you've not only made Vincent and me happy, but I know the Lord is happy too. Now a Happy New Year to all of you!" —Western Christian Advocate.

HOW LUCILE HELPED.

The schoolroom was very noisy. The children were moving their feet, turning the leaves noisily in their books, and some were whispering. Poor little teacher was so tired, she was almost ready to give up in despair! It seemed that none of the children loved her to-day, for, if they did, surely they would obey.

"O, if three o'clock would only come!" she sighed to herself, "so that I might let them all go to their homes and I might have a rest!"

She started down the aisle between the rows of seats to try once more to get the children quiet. Her heart was very heavy and tears were near to her eyes. As she passed one seat occupied by two girls, a little hand thrust itself out into the aisle and crowded a piece of crumpled paper into the teacher's hand. The teacher went back to her desk, unfolded the piece of paper, and read:

"Dear Teacher—I love you very much—Lucile."

When teacher looked up there were two bright tears in her eyes, but they were glad tears. When she spoke there was a new ring in her voice.

"Children," she said, and her voice was soft and low, "put away your books and let's sing a merry song."

And as the children sang, all of the trouble seemed to leave the room. Soon they went back to work, and all was sweet peace and quiet.

And as the children were leaving the school that day, the teacher looked into a pair of blue eyes and smiled. "I love you very much, Lucile," she said.—Child's Gem.

A SWEET VOICE.

"O father, I wish I could sing! It is so nice to give pleasure to people." Florence sang at the club to-day, and we all enjoyed it so much. She sings every night to her father, too. I'd give anything if I could, but there's no use wishing. There isn't any music in me."

"Is that so?" asked the father, taking her wistful face between his hands. "Well, perhaps you can't sing. But don't tell me your voice has no music in it. To me it is full of music."

"Why, father, how can you say so?"

"Almost every evening," answered the father, "when I come home, the first thing I hear is a merry laugh, and it rests me, no matter how tired I am. Yesterday I heard that voice saying, 'Don't cry, Buddie, sister'll mend it for you.' Sometimes I hear it reading to grandmother. Last week I heard it telling Mary: 'I'm sorry your head aches, I'll do the dishes to-night.' That is the kind of music I like best. Don't tell me my little daughter hasn't a sweet voice." —Herald and Presbyterian.

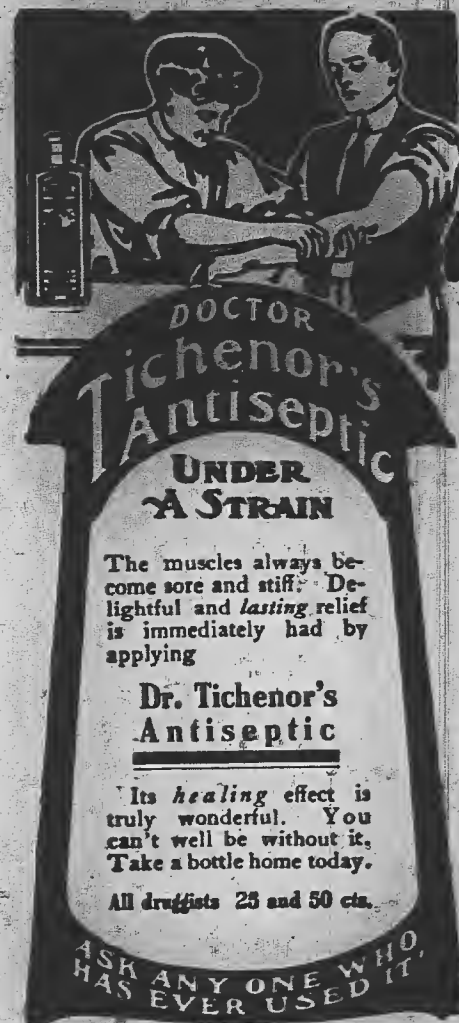

The Protestant Alliance of England has published a vigorous protest against the appointment by the British Government of Sir Henry Howard as a special minister to the Vatican, in Rome. It is pointed out in this deliverance that it has been 400 years since such an appointment has been made, and its immediate revocation is urged on the ground that "it cannot but give grave offense to a vast majority of Englishmen." This opposition to having the Court of St. James renew diplomatic relation with the Pope is, we think, fully justified.

APPROACHING A CRISIS.

The Federal Council of Methodism, which is composed of an equal number of representatives of the Northern and Southern Methodist Churches and which had been declared officially to be competent to adjudicate matters at issue between congregations of the two denominations operating in the same territory when brought before it, met in Atlanta, Ga., on December 16, and deliberated for two days. Its sessions were executive and anything like a full account of the proceedings has not been given to the public. The most interesting question that was expected to come before the Council was that relating to the construction by the Northern Methodists of a large and expensive house of worship in Atlanta in close proximity to one of our leading churches, which is said to be fully meeting the needs of that section of the city. Though this issue had been formally brought before the body by the quarterly conference of the Southern church in question, St. Mark's, it was finally decided by our representatives to withdraw the complaint, as this question had already been prejudged by the press of the Methodist Episcopal Church, and only a few weeks before, after the appeal had been made to the Council, its Board of Church Extension and Home Missions had, without waiting for a decision, appropriated $5000 to this enterprise.

According to the Wesleyan Christian Advocate, before it adjourned the Council adopted a resolution to the effect that it will be called to meet again "only after the Bishops and Boards shall agree to abide by its findings." This action, taken together with the recent utterance of Bishop Cranston in the New York Christian Advocate and the reply of Bishop Hoss in the Nashville Advocate of December 25 (two of the leading members of the Council), would seem to indicate that the movement looking to closer relations between the two Episcopal Methodisms in the United States has reached a crisis. Bishop Cranston's attitude seems rather to foreshadow the abandonment by his Church of all in the way of an agreement that has been worked out by the accredited representatives of the two denominations and an attempt to strike out on new lines by the election at the approaching session of their General Conference of "a specially authorized Commission to confer with other Churches." In commenting upon this clearly implied course in his logical and able statement concerning this matter, Bishop Hoss does not hesitate to declare that, in his opinion, the Southern Methodist Church is not likely to be in favor of wiping out all that has been done for the past four years, toward the accomplishment of which the Commissioners of the Methodist Episcopal Church have contributed their full share, and of beginning over again. We believe that in expressing this conviction Bishop Hoss has voiced what will prove to be the sentiment of an overwhelming majority of Southern Methodists. As we see it, we have gone to the very limit of what our self-respect will allow to effect a closer union with our Sister Church, whose course in regard to the pending negotiations has been far from consistent.

We have had not much hope of seeing this movement culminate in anything of large consequence since the Northern General Conference completely sidestepped the Report of the Joint Commission in 1913 and proceeded to devise plans for a more aggressive invasion of the South which embraced the stationing of Bishops in a number of its leading cities. Surely, we have had enough of evasion and dilly-dallying, concerning union and federation between the two denominations, and the time has come for them to be outspoken and perfectly straightforward in dealing with each other.

For our part, we thoroughly approve of everything that was done by our representatives in the meeting of the Federal Council in Atlanta except the agreement to abandon our work in Seattle. In view of the spirit and attitude of the Northern Church, we do not think that this is any time to be sounding a retreat in the North-west or anywhere else for that matter. The need of the hour is for us to be thoroughly loyal to our own denomination, which is conceded to be more nearly in accord with the principles of primitive Methodism than any other branch of Wesleyanism in the world, and to set up its banners in every field into which a favoring Providence may open the way. In our judgment, by so doing we shall most honor our Lord and best promote the interests of his kingdom.

THE NATIONAL PROHIBITION AMENDMENT, DEFEATED.

After a spirited debate of several hours' duration, the lower House of Congress voted on December 22 on the Hobson Resolution providing for the submission to the Legislatures of the States of a prohibition amendment to the Federal Constitution, and the count showed 197 for and 189 against the measure. As a two-thirds vote was required to pass it, the proposal to submit the amendment was defeated. The opponents of the Resolution made an exceedingly weak attempt to justify their course by parading the old platitude of stripping the Nation of its revenues and the time-worn bugaboo of paving the way for the Federal Government to trample upon the rights of the dear people. These pleas were positively puerile, since the proposed amendment could never be written in the Constitution except by the consent of the Legislatures of three-fourths of the States, and since, as everybody who is informed, at all knows, the heaviest expenses that the American people have to bear are those which result from the liquor traffic. Senator George of Mississippi, who was a great statesman and financier and who was far from being "a fanatical prohibitionist," said a few years before his death that the dearest revenue that ever came to any city or State was that derived from licensing saloons. Over against the eracular affirmations of the Hon. Oscar Underwood and Representative Mann on this point, we place this utterance of this really great Southerner, whose towering ability made him for many years one of the foremost figures in the United States Senate.

On this great issue the Congressmen from the Advocate's patronizing territory voted as follows: Mississippi—for the resolution: Candler, Stephens, Humphreys, Sisson, Quinn, and Collier. Against the resolution: S. A. Witherspoon. Congressman B. P. Harrison, who represents the Gulf-coast district, was absent.

Louisiana—for the resolution: Watkins. Against the resolution: Dupre, Morgan, Aswell, Estopinal, Broussard, and Lazarro. Representative Elder was absent.

There is no reason for the prohibitionists of the country to be discouraged by this outcome. On the contrary, they have every reason to be pleased with the showing made. To have had this issue to the front in Congress and to have commanded for it a majority vote is a tremendous advance from the situation of a few years ago, when for decades the Speakers of the House had kept, and were still keeping, the Temperance Committee of that body well packed with liquor men. This is but the first skirmish in the great battle, which will go on steadily until the blighting rum traffic is forced to loose its grip upon the vitals of this great Nation and is forever destroyed.

On the day that the vote was taken in Congress, December 22, Dr. P. A. Baker, General Superintendent of the National Anti-Saloon League, and other representatives of that organization, who had been active leaders in the fight to pass the Hobson Resolution, issued the following address to the public:

"The temperance forces of the country have reason to be deeply gratified by the results of this day. It is the first time in the history of the Republic that the question of national prohibition has gotten upon the floor of either branch of Congress. The fact that the first effort should show a clear majority of eight exclusive of pairs, with both floor leaders, the Chairman of the Rules Committee and the presiding officer of the President, and the Secretary of State invoked against us, and in view of the further consideration that no member of the present Congress was elected on this issue, is exceedingly gratifying. A record has been made. The friends of the measure will no longer be fighting in the dark. For the first time the battle line is fairly and clearly drawn. Our appeal is now to the people. The longer it takes to secure submission, the shorter will be the time required to secure its ratification. The next immediate step is to obtain a favorable report from the Judiciary Committee of the Senate."

SHOULD NOT HAVE BEEN IGNORED.

We have noted one or two suggestions to the effect that it might have been better for the New Orleans Advocate to have ignored Mr. O. F. Lawrence's unfortunate utterance in his paper, the Grenada Sentinel, in which, though he had not attended the late session of the North Mississippi Conference, he ventured to criticize severely Bishop Waterhouse. We are sometimes quite dubious as to the wisdom of our course when we are forced to meet an issue, but in this case we have no doubt at all that it was proper to give prompt and emphatic denial to this charge against one of our most faithful and worthy Chief Pastors. The leading county papers in a State exchange with one another, and when one of them makes a deliverance it is liable to be reproduced in many others. Already we have noted the reproduction of Mr. Lawrence's utterance in another county paper, far away from Grenada, under a very objectionable headline.

In this connection, it may not be out of place to quote Dr. H. G. Henderson's appreciation of Bishop Waterhouse in his charming "write-up" of the late session of the North Mississippi Conference in the Nashville Christian Advocate of December 25. He said: "Bishop R. G. Waterhouse presided with eminent satisfaction. He is brotherly, alert, witty, magnetic. His sermon on Sunday morning was a great deliverance. Chaste in diction, strong in conception, eloquent in delivery, it ranks as one of the few really great sermons that one hears in a lifetime. * * * Bishop Waterhouse won the hearts of the brethren."

Obviously Dr. Henderson did not see any "coarseness" or "arrogance" or "stilted eminence."

MANSFIELD COLLEGE.

We are pleased to know that this excellent institution is having in every way a prosperous session and that the outlook for it is very bright. Read what President Bobbitt says in his advertisement in this issue of the Advocate. We also have in hand a printed statement which Brother Bobbitt has been sending out, from which we take the following: "We have spent more than $4000 for improvements within the past two years. The Art and Music Departments have won especial commendation. We court investigation. Ten girls from each presiding elder's district would fill every room. One girl from each pastoral charge in the Louisiana Conference would place us where more room would be a necessity." Let our pastors be alert and energetically strive to help Brother Bobbitt in this great work. Why not speak a few words commendatory of Mansfield College from your pulpit next Sunday? The Methodist parents of the State will make no mistake in sending their daughters to this growing institution.

PERSONAL AND OTHER NOTES.

Brother S. M. Thames and Sister Thames are visiting the latter's brother, Mr. Thomas H. DeLoach, at Demopolis, Ala., where they will likely remain for two or three weeks.

Rev. J. I. Hoffpauir, presiding elder of the Lafayette (La.) District, was in New Orleans last Tuesday and kindly looked in on us in our sanctum. He seemed to be in fine health and spirits.

We regret to be informed that Dr. J. J. Stevens, a prominent Methodist at Hattiesburg, Miss., and one of the leading citizens of that city, has lately been critically ill; but we are pleased to know that he is now improving and that it is thought he will recover.

Bishop W. B. Murrah was in New Orleans last Tuesday, having come direct from Memphis over the Y. & M. V. Railroad. He left in the afternoon for Jackson, Miss. We never saw the Bishop when he was looking better or was in a more genial frame of mind.

The address of Rev. T. W. Adams, presiding elder of the Port Gibson District, will hereafter be Fayette, Miss., to which place all communications to him should be directed. We congratulate the people of that interesting little city upon having secured Brother Adams as a citizen.

We acknowledge the reception of a Christmas card in the form of a "bale of sunshine and good cheer," from the Young Men's Bible Class of Corinth, Miss., of which Miss Elizabeth Kilpatrick is the brilliant teacher. This Class may always be counted on to keep abreast of the times.

We are indebted to Dr. L. W. Cooper for a beautiful calendar, adorned with pictures of the two new buildings lately erected at Whitworth College—the Mary Jane Lampton auditorium and the Cooper building. The friends of Whitworth may well take pride in these two splendid structures.

Rev. K. W. Dodson, our worthy pastor at Lake Charles, La., says: "Things seem to be starting off well here as I enter upon my third year; indeed, the outlook is very encouraging. The Board of Stewards gave me as a Christmas present a beautiful gold watch, which I appreciate very much."

We have in hand an excellent sketch of the life of the late Dr. R. W. Jones, of Laurel, Miss., from the pen of Rev. J. L. Neill, our pastor at that place. It reached us too late for us to get it in type for this issue of the Advocate, hindered as we have been by the holidays; but it will appear next week.

Brother W. A. Watts, of Rockport, Miss., a layman of the Monticello charge, was in New Orleans a few days since, and like a good Methodist dropped into our office to pay his respects to the Advocate force and renew his subscription. He spoke in terms of high appreciation of his pastor, Rev. J. V. Bennett.

As will be seen in a note from Rev. Robert Selby, Rev. J. V. Bennett, of Monticello, Miss., was painfully wounded while hunting a few days since. We deeply regret this unfortunate occurrence, but are happy to know that it is thought Brother Bennett will soon recover. Let the brethren remember him at the throne of grace.

Referring to his reception by the people of Lexington, Miss.—his new charge—Rev. V. C. Curtis says: "Nothing has been lacking that would add to our material comfort. A cozy home, a well-filled pantry, a Christmas turkey, and best of all, warm hearts and smiling faces were awaiting us. The prospects for a great year are most favorable."

Mr. W. L. Tucker, of Tucker, La., who represents the Miller Drug Sundry Company, of Baltimore, Md., was in New Orleans last week and paid the Advocate office an appreciated call. He left with the Publisher $1.50, with instructions to have our paper to continue to come to him. He cheered us not a little by his kindly and hopeful conversation.

After two successful years on the Newton District, Dr. H. W. Featherstun has been stationed at Port Gibson, one of the college towns of the Mississippi Conference. Dr. Featherstun is a student and a man of scholarly acquirements, and doubtless he will find the atmosphere in his new charge delightfully congenial. He is a strong and suggestive preacher.

Rev. O. S. Lewis and family have been spending the Christmas holidays with relatives at Hattiesburg, Miss. Brother Lewis was assigned by Bishop Denny to Shubuta, one of the choice charges of the Mississippi Conference. He had wrought nobly during his quadrennium at Brandon, and deserved the good treatment accorded him by the appointing power.

Dr. J. T. Sawyer preached at the Carrollton Avenue Church, this city, last Sunday at 11 a. m. and at the Second Methodist Church at the evening hour. He reports that the congregations were good and that his messages were given excellent attention. Rev. C. A. Battle preached at Carrollton at night, delivering a sermon that elicited much favorable comment.

Dr. E. H. Moulner, who took the superannuate relation at the recent session of the Mississippi Conference, will make his home for the present at Hattiesburg. Dr. Moulner is one of the ablest Methodist ministers in the Magnolia State, and his record in the itinerancy has been characterized by a high degree of efficiency. He is held in high esteem by his brethren.

The funeral of the late Rev. J. S. Parker was conducted in the Court Street M. E. Church, South, of Hattiesburg, Miss., on Sunday afternoon, Dec. 20. The service was in charge of Rev. G. H. Thompson, presiding elder of the Hattiesburg District, who was assisted by Dr. E. H. Moulner, Rev. C. W. Crisler, Rev. L. J. Jones, Rev. D. E. Kelly, and Rev. O. S. Lewis.

Writing from Amite, La., on December 25, Rev. J. F. Foster says: "My welcome back to Amite was most cordial and quite gratifying, and will help me in my work for another year. I have one trouble to-day, in that I cannot be in but one place at a time and eat but one Christmas dinner." Manifestly, the Methodists of Amite are wise enough to know when they are well off.

Mr. H. S. Stevens, who is one of the foremost lawyers of South Mississippi, is now the superintendent of the Sunday school of our Main Street Church at Hattiesburg, of which Rev. C. W. Crisler is pastor. Scarcely anywhere can one find an opportunity for larger usefulness than that furnished by such a position, and it always rejoices us to see a capable man turning his attention to such work.

How about the label on your paper? If you are in arrears, it is time to renew. And remember that we have to pay for the collection of all checks, and if you are remitting a small amount, either add ten cents to cover that expense, or send money order or 2-cent postage stamps. Doubtless in most towns the local banks would give for the asking New Orleans or New York exchange, which we can collect without expense.

Rev. J. G. Snelling left for his new home at Homer, La., this week. We are informed that Mrs. Snelling and the children will probably remain in New Orleans until the close of the first term of the city schools. Brother Snelling did a magnificent work during the four years that he served the Carrollton Avenue Church, of New Orleans, and the people of Homer should count themselves fortunate in having secured his services.

From the Union Advertiser, published at Myrtle, Miss., we take the following: "The people are much pleased that Rev. E. H. Cunningham was returned to this charge at the recent session of the North Mississippi Conference, and they are anticipating increased activity and growth in the churches under his care during the coming year." Brother Cunningham has done a fine work in his present field, and we dare say that his parishioners will not be disappointed in their expectations.

Rev. Wm. Schuhle, presiding elder of the Monroe District, and Mrs. S. S. Keener, were married at Crowley, La., on December 23. The ceremony was performed by Dr. R. H. Wynn, and Rev. W. W. Drake served as "best man." Brother Schuhle is one of the most worthy and scholarly members of the Louisiana Conference, and Mrs. Schuhle is widely known for her accomplishments and good works. They will reside at Monroe. The Advocate extends to them congratulations and all good wishes.

We are grateful to Rev. A. L. Davis, of Jackson, Miss., a local preacher and the father-in-law of Rev. W. G. Henry, the pastor of the Galloway Memorial Church of that city, for some subscriptions sent in a few days since, which he expects to follow soon with others. Brother Davis is 82 years of age, but is yet able to get about and make himself useful in many ways. He has kindly promised us some notes concerning the work of the church which Brother Henry is serving at an early date.

Rev. J. H. Ingram has reached Ruleville, Miss., and reports as follows: "I am well pleased with the outlook at this place. Much has been done to make me feel that I am welcome. I find the people here to be among the best that I have ever met." We are grateful to Brother Ingram for the promise to take care of the interests of the Advocate in his field. We know from association with him that what he says may be depended upon. We trust that he will have a happy and fruitful year in his new charge.

We respectfully request our friends not to send checks in making remittances to the Advocate for small amounts, as it costs us ten cents to collect every such check. We do not mind paying exchange on checks for $3 or over. Of course, the loss on a single check does not amount to much, but when it comes to handling scores of them the loss quickly foots up quite a sum. If your remittance is small, send a money order, or add ten cents to cover the cost of collection. The price of a single subscription may be sent in 2-cent postage stamps. Please keep this request in mind.

Read elsewhere in this issue of the Advocate the schedule of the "Flying squadron of the Anti-Saloon League of America," which will soon be hombarding the liquor traffic in Louisiana, under the direction of Rev. A. W. Turner, our State temperance leader. All these speakers will be heard in New Orleans on Sunday, January 24, except Dr. Banks and Dr. Russell. Let the temperance people get busy in all the towns that are to be visited and see that every campaigner secures a large hearing. This is a time when every friend of prohibition needs to be up and doing.

Writing under date of December 25, Rev. J. L. Neill, of Laurel, Miss., says: "Brothers Fikes and Baggett, my associate pastors in this city, are both in place and have been given a cordial reception. During the past year we have had rather an unusual relation existing among the three pastors in Laurel and our honored superannuate residing here, Brother Joe Nicholson: all were born and reared in the same county—Jasper, which adjoins this county—Jones. And in the assignments as they were made this year the same thing is true, with the exception of Brother Baggett."

From the Mississippi Orphans' Home at Jackson, Miss., Rev. W. M. Williams writes: "Our workers and 218 children have had a delightful Christmas. We had a sumptuous Christmas dinner, which was furnished by the Galloway Memorial Church. Santa Claus brought all the children and helpers an abundance of nice presents. We are all well and happy. We will have another turkey dinner on Wednesday, Dec. 30. This will be the 34th anniversary of Mrs. Williams' and my marriage." We wish Brother and Sister Williams all good things as they enter upon the 35th year of their married life.

In sending in his first round of appointments, Rev. J. I. Hoffpauir, the capable presiding elder of the Lafayette (La.) District, says: "All things considered, we closed the Conference year well in the Lafayette District. I have heard from a number of the preachers associated with me in the Master's work, and they are well pleased with their fields of labor. Very few of them were changed. The new year starts out with a hopeful ring, and all seem to be determined to work more aggressively along evangelistic lines. May God graciously bless our efforts and give us a great and genuine revival!"

Through the courtesy of Rev. J. H. Rogers, formerly of North Mississippi, but who is now stationed at Roff, Oklahoma, we have received a copy of the Journal of the East Oklahoma Conference for the year 1914. It is quite a neat pamphlet, and is well arranged and helpful of interesting information. Brother Rogers' present charge is a new one, with two churches, which are valued at $9000. It has 264 members, and assessed for the pastor last year $1115, and paid $1043. Rev. J. W. Rogers was changed from the Madill to the Vinita District, a much stronger one, which assessed for the presiding elder last year $2337, and paid $2046.

We have received from Rev. W. Fred Long and Mrs. Long, of Jackson, Miss., an attractive Christmas post-card, with their pictures printed upon it, and conveying the following message: "For the children of Mississippi and of the world we crave an interest in your prayers and ask your sympathy and co-operation, that our Sunday school work shall be more efficient, humanity uplifted, souls saved, and Jesus magnified by all our lives throughout the year. God bless you!" Brother Long is the capable and energetic Secretary of the Interdenominational Sunday School work in Mississippi, and Sister Long is his faithful helper. May the Heavenly Father continue to bless and largely use them!

Rev. J. W. Faulk, of Sibley, La., writes: "My people have given me a most hearty welcome back for the third year. They remembered us with many Christmas presents, and among them were two fine turkeys. We had last year 93 accessions to the Church, and this year we hope to see the two new churches that were organized built up and strongly established and twice as many conversions as we had during 1914. I had quite a time last night trying to unite two happy hearts. They were to come to the parsonage and started, but all the streams were up and it was still raining. They phoned to me and I crossed the stream on a train and married them. I always want to accommodate the young people who are in that mood and feel that I am appreciated for it. May we all be able to go forward!"

SOME LOUISIANA NOTES.

By Rev. P. O. Lowrey.

The Sunday school of the First M. E. Church South of Shreveport has the following system of grading the teachers, each item counting 20 per cent: (1) On time in the Spirit; (2) the lesson prayerfully prepared; (3) is touch with absentees; (4) new pupils welcomed; (5) teachers' meeting attended. If forced to be absent a prepared substitute will entitle to perfect. Any excuse for failure that can be given to God in prayer entitles to perfect. The records are made on cards with prepared blanks, as the teachers enter the Sunday school room.

The Young Men's Bible Class of Corinth, Miss., of which Miss Elizabeth Kilpatrick is the teacher, and Mr. John Blakemore the president, is sending out a Christmas card with a bale of cotton as its artistic design, and on the front of which is written: "Christmas time again; the Young Men's Bible Class of Corinth, Miss., sends you, our friend, this bale of Southern sunshine and good cheer."

The lay members of the Sunday School Board of the Louisiana Conference are as follows: T. W. Holloman of Alexandria, O. H. Cline of Baton Rouge, J. H. Carter of New Orleans, H. N. Pharr of New Iberia, W. A. McKennon of Shreveport, Prof. Dudley of Ruston, and R. W. Germany of Monroe, all being superintendents of their respective Sunday schools and zealous and practical Sunday school workers. The clerical members are H. N. Brown of Lake Arthur, L. C. Wilson of Mer Rouge, J. A. Alford of Vivian, H. W. Ledbetter of West Monroe, J. B. Fulton of St. Francisville, T. D. Lipscomb of Donaldsonville, and J. A. McCormack of Franklinton. These pastors are likewise practical and energetic Sunday school workers, and no doubt this will make a fine board, when they get their work in hand. The board organized with Rev. H. N. Brown as the temporary chairman, and W. A. McKennon as treasurer.

In comparing the records at Kentwood for the past year with that of the year previous, the following progress is noted:

The first Sunday after Conference a year ago, according to the secretary's record, on a clear day, there were present at Sunday school 119; this year there were present, on a drizzly, slushy day, in the main school 130, and in the two mission schools organized this year, 70 and 35 respectively, totalling 235 in attendance, or an increase of 116—nearly 100 per cent in one year. But of more significance is the fact that two splendid superintendents were found and developed, as well as one primary superintendent, 16 teachers, 1 home department superintendent, 1 cradle roll superintendent, and various other officers. A good primary department was organized and developed during the year, and a hall bought and equipped for its housing; the school was graded and the graded literature introduced into the primary and junior departments, and a system of grading and the recognition of scholars introduced; a workers' council, a teacher-training class, and missionary, temperance, and birthday departments were established, and several classes organized. Besides this development in the Sunday school, there was organized and developed one of the best Junior Epworth Leagues in the Conference, and there was more than a 10 per cent increase in the membership of the church on profession of faith with an increase of more than 20 per cent in the church's finances. Three good members of the new board of stewards were enlisted; one layman was licensed to preach, and for a part of the year a deaconess was employed. Important land was added to the church property, and necessary improvements were made on the parsonage.

After careful discussion, the laymen present at the last session of the Louisiana Conference adopted the following as the policy for the Louisiana churches for 1915:

(1) A lay leader for every church; (2) a lay leader for every pastoral charge; (3) a monthly distribution of missionary literature; (4) a missionary committee for every church; (5) a religious service in every church each Sunday in addition to the Sunday school, using local and lay preachers; (6) the adoption of the duplex envelope system of collections, and making the every-member canvass in each congregation not later than March 1. This policy was also brought before the Conference and the entire body, including the pastors, adopted it without a dissenting vote.

GREETINGS FROM CALIFORNIA.

The Southern Methodists of California send greetings to their brethren and friends in other states, and wish them, one and all, a very Happy New Year.

We (the Southern Methodists of California, for whom the undersigned speaks) are fully persuaded that you (our friends in other states) will realize this wish most fully, while contributing very largely to our happiness by meeting us at the Panama-Pacific Exposition in San Francisco.

Yes, the Exposition is to be held and is to open on schedule time, February 20th, notwithstanding the European war. And it bids fair to be the greatest Exposition the world has ever known. The Exposition buildings proper, of magnificent proportions and architecture, on ideal grounds, have about all been finished, while most of the state and foreign buildings are well under way.

"Are the nations at war included? That they are: at any rate most of them. France has just cabled her building plans at a cost of $3,000 for the message, and ordered the work to proceed. Japan's building and display will be unsurpassed by any. And so on. The exhibits are already arriving and being installed, from every quarter of the globe.

The grounds have been the show place of the city for some time. An admission of 25 cents is charged. During September there were 290,000 admissions. Last Sunday (there was nothing special on) 9,890 entered the gates. Christmas is to be celebrated on the grounds with appropriate exercises and an immense tree, especially for the poor, though all children are to share it. The admissions during the Exposition, it is estimated, will range from 15,000,000 to 20,000,000. Nearly every national and international convention, as well as state meetings to be held during the year, are scheduled to meet in San Francisco. These alone will bring a great multitude of people.

Arrangements are being made to provide headquarters for our Church, where our people can come and go, meet one another, etc. This will be a suite of rooms, most likely in the Pacific Building, which is one of the largest office buildings in the city, in the center of the retail district. All loyal Southern Methodists will be expected to report. Definite information as to location will be given in due time.

Come prepared to stay as long as possible. We want you not only to see the Exposition, San Francisco and the bay cities, meanwhile enjoying our wonderful climate, but to see as much as possible of our great State and its many attractions. Those of you who have been in the habit of spending your vacations in Europe, we are sure will not regret, having come this time to California, the combined Switzerland, Italy and France of your own country.

ZWOLLE, LA.

Dear Advocate: Will you bear a report, and also best Christmas greetings to all, from the Zwolle people?

I was returned to this work for the fourth year, and hope to stay till Conference. The people have given me a hearty welcome back and braved bad weather the past Sunday to give me two good congregations. At the fourth quarterly conference of last year Zwolle asked for full time and the return of their pastor. The salary was all in sight and the brethren were working on a minimum basis of $920—$800 for the pastor and $120 for the presiding elder. At the first meeting of the official board there was no objection offered to making the assessment $900 for the pastor and $135 for the presiding elder. Zwolle is a fine town and is going to make a nice little station. We have more than doubled our membership at this place during my past three years here. The Zwolle Church paid for all purposes last year about $1400. They paid their part of the salary in full and 90 per cent of the benevolences that were paid.

The town has quite a future before it. We have a large section of the finest farming land in the State, and two saw-mills, one of which will be here about twelve years. We have about $1000 in sight, easily, and $122 in the bank, toward building a new church, which we hope to erect in the next year or so. We have one of the best average-sized Sunday schools in the Conference, with all the departments organized. The Sunday school paid last year for the Congo Mission, $55. I have not found a better superintendent anywhere than S. H. Porter. We have a fine board of stewards. The church has adopted the duplex envelope system, and will pay the salary monthly. We have both societies organized for the women—the two combined in one. They raised last year about $300. We have an active Senior League, and intend to organize the Juniors soon, as well as reorganize the Boy Scouts, which for lack of time died when Zwolle was on a circuit. Our prayer meeting is well attended by the faithful members.

We were busy all day yesterday distributing Christmas things secured by the Morris Bible Class at a cost of about $35. These things were food and clothing for the needy. Pray that we may have a great year.

DATES FOR PROHIBITION SPEAKERS.

Before returning to Shreveport on the occasion of his recent visit to New Orleans, Rev. A. W. Turner, Superintendent of the Louisiana Anti-Saloon League, announced the speaking dates for the seven national speakers who will canvass Louisiana for one week, beginning January 24, and ending January 31, in a whirlwind campaign against liquor.

Mr. Turner met a committee composed of Reverends George Summey, W. H. Brengle and S. H. Werlein, representing the Protestant Ministers' Alliance, and arranged for the addresses in New Orleans, Sunday, January 24, where all the noted speakers, except Dr. Banks, will appear, some speaking three times that day.

After appearing here, they will cover the state as follows:

Ex-Governor M. R. Patterson, of Memphis: Baton Rouge, January 25; Lafayette, January 26; Crowley, January 27; Lake Charles, January 28; Alexandria, January 29; Monroe, January 30; Shreveport, January 31.

Rev. J. W. Young, of Louisville: Ponchatoula, January 24; Kentwood, January 25; Covington, January 26; Slidell, January 27; Welsh, January 28; DeRidder, January 29; Shreveport, January 31.

Rev. Louis Albert Banks, of New York City: Minden and Ruston, January 24; Winnfield, January 25; Jena, January 26; Good Pine, January 27; Oakdale, January 28; Carson, January 29; Shreveport, January 31.

Rev. G. W. Morrow, of Detroit: Plaquemine, January 25; Opelousas, January 26; Eunice, January 27; Sulphur, January 28; Zwolle, January 29; Vivian, January 31; Mooringsport, January 31.

Rev. Sam Small, of Atlanta: Morgan City, January 25; New Iberia, January 26; Jennings, January 27; Leesville, January 28; Mansfield, January 29; Shreveport and Homer, January 31.

Rev. A. J. Barton, of Dallas, Texas: Amite City, January 24; Hammond, January 25; Bogalusa, January 26; Bunkie, January 27; Cheneyville, January 28; Pineville, January 29; Shreveport, January 31.

Rev. Howard H. Russell, founder of the National Anti-Saloon League, of Westerville, Ohio: Rayville, January 24; Oak Ridge, January 24; Bastrop, January 25; Mer Rouge, January 26; Winnsboro, January 27; Delhi, January 28; Gibsland, January 29; Shreveport, January 31.

LOVE'S OPPORTUNITY.

Every day of this New Year will furnish occasion to the God of all our mercies to shower his blessings upon us. There will be no day or hour of its long stretch that will not be marked by tokens of his love and care and goodness. There ought not to be any day or hour or moment of it that would not see some response on our part, some upward turning of a grateful face to him, some outward going of sympathy toward those with whom we should share the good he gives. The year will give us much, but the greatest opportunity of all that it will bring to us will be the opportunity of giving back in gratitude and in brotherhood the good that has come to us.—Christian Guardian.

The reason that so many of God's children worry is that they cannot trust God, or rather they do not trust him.—Rev. L. T. Wilds.

FROM BROTHER NORSWORTHY.

Dear Dr. Meek: The Methodist Church is still doing business in Yazoo City, Miss. Notwithstanding the very unexpected change of pastors here, the work has been uninterrupted. Brother Harmon left us on the morning of the 23rd and Brother Sullivan, his successor, arrived at 5:40 p. m. on the same day. Not a single service had to be pretermitted on account of the change. What other Church can so conduct its affairs?

The removal of Brother Harmon from us was universally regretted. He was most highly regarded by all denominations. His last service, on the night of Dec. 20, was attended by members of all the Protestant congregations in the city, and the pastors of the Baptist and Presbyterian Churches participated in it making most beautiful remarks regretting the departure of Brother Harmon.

But Brother Sullivan has captured the fort and made a most happy beginning of his work here. The services of yesterday were well attended and his sermons well received. He will do a fine work for this congregation.

We are off to-day, Mr. Editor, for Nashville, Tenn., to attend the convention of evangelists, held under the auspices of our Board of Missions. We will return about the first of the year and will then be ready for work.

My address will be, as heretofore, Yazoo City, Miss.

Yours faithfully,

THOS. J. NORSWORTHY.

Dec. 28, 1914.

BIBLE LOVERS AND CHRISTIAN WORKERS.

Bible lovers and Christian workers will be interested in the six weeks' course to be given at the Methodist Training School on February 4 to March 20, 1915.

Object: To present principles and methods of study in Bible, missions, sociology, Sunday school and League work, story telling and practical service.

For Whom: For all Bible students and Christian workers who feel that they cannot take a full course but who desire a short course for self-culture and increased efficiency. Pastors, Sunday school teachers, League officers, workers in Woman's Missionary Societies will find the course very helpful.

Special lectures on pertinent subjects will be delivered by men eminent in our church life. The great Bible Conference will bring to us during this period such leaders as Jowett, Coburn, S. D. Gordon and others.

Cost: Thirty-six dollars will cover all the expenses for board, laundry, lights and Bible Conference.

THE FAITH OF AN AFRICAN COURIER.

In a letter received yesterday from Mr. Bedinger, of Lusambo, he told of questioning one of our couriers as to whether he carried arms, and was told that he did not. On being asked if he was not afraid of the leopards or robbers (for all of our money is carried by these men), he replied that he was not, for "God is near." This man is not a member of the church, and has never made a public confession of his faith, but can you find anyone who shows a truer faith in God than that? They seem so ready to accept the truth, and yet some so-called Christian people sit back and say that the heathen are happy in their present condition, and that it is foolish to try to give them the Gospel. If they could see the change that comes over people when they hear the message, they would change their attitude and leave off their worship of the "almighty dollar" long enough to give the "least of these my brethren," a chance.—J. A. Stockwell, Wembo-Niama, Africa.

Old-Fashioned Complexions

Were Said to Be Due to the Excellent Care Taken of the Blood. Stuart's Calcium Wafers Banish All Skin Troubles.

During the reign of Louis XVI, when Marie Antoinette was surrounded by such a galaxy of beauties and such famously handsome men, the French court was known for the exquisite beauty of complexions seen there.

Anyone can use Stuart's Calcium Wafers and restore complexion in an easy manner.

The secret of those complexions in that age no doubt was entirely due to the care taken to keep the blood always pure. In this rapid-fire age of hustle and bustle most people pay no attention to this important feature of life and so they are given to pimples, liver spots, blackheads, eczema, etc.

Stuart's Calcium Wafers are composed of Calcium Sulphide in connection with other properties and this ingredient is the greatest blood purifier known to science.

Stuart's Calcium Wafers will clear the most obstinate complexion, because they go right into the blood and remove the cause of the trouble. The blood is cleansed of all impurities and foreign substances and these are quickly eliminated from the system. You'll notice a wonderful change in a few days—you will hardly know yourself in a week.

And Stuart's Calcium Wafers are absolutely harmless to anyone. Their ingredients are just what a physician prescribes in most cases of skin eruptions and poor blood. These wafers are put up in a concentrated form, which makes them act quickly and thoroughly.

You can get Stuart's Calcium Wafers at any drug store at 50 cents a box. Begin taking them to-day and then look at yourself in the mirror in a few days, and find all those awful pimples, blackheads, acne, boils, liver spots, rash, eczema and that muddy complexion rapidly disappearing and your face cleared like the petal of a flower. A small sample package mailed free by addressing F. A. Stuart Co., 175 Stuart Bldg., Marshall, Mich.

DO YOU SUFFER FROM BACKACHE?

When your kidneys are weak and torpid they do not properly perform their functions; your back aches and you do not feel like doing much of anything. You are likely to be despondent and to borrow trouble, just as if you hadn't enough already. Don't be a victim any longer. The old reliable medicine, Hood's Sarsaparilla, gives strength and tone to the kidneys and builds up the whole system. Get it today.

For Neuralgia, nothing is better than

Dr. Miles' Anti-Pain Pills

Used by thousands for a generation

Those who have suffered from neuralgic pains need not be told how necessary it is to secure relief. The easiest way out of neuralgia is to use Dr. Miles' Anti-Pain Pills. They have relieved sufferers for so many years that they have become a household necessity.

"I have taken Dr. Miles' Anti-Pain Pills for five years and they are the only thing that does me any good. They have relieved neuralgia in my head in fifteen minutes. I have also taken them for rheumatism, headache, pains in the breast, toothache, earache and pains in the bowels and limbs. I have found nothing to equal them and they are all that is claimed for them."

MANSFIELD FEMALE COLLEGE

MANSFIELD, LOUISIANA

NOT an object of charity; not a veneering plant; not a place to cram; not a short-cut affair; no place for triflers or ne'er-do-wells; not a reformatory.

An institution run on business principles; expects and demands honest effort and strict obedience; offers courses in variety under splendidly equipped, trained, experienced and Christian teachers from the best Colleges, Universities and Conservatories. Graduates are among the elect women of the country. Normal graduates "make good."

Income nearly doubled in two years. More than Four Thousand Dollars spent in improvements and accommodations in the past two years. Has a right by every token to demand the earnest consideration of every Louisiana Methodist (we do not poach on the territory of any other Conference). Scores of friends and patrons of other faiths.

We want ten more earnest, ambitious girls at the beginning of the next year—Jan. 4, 1915.

Mansfield is on the map. Suppose you look it up. It is best to come and see.

R. E. BOBBITT, President

A STATEMENT.

The Advocate is face to face with serious conditions, and we feel called upon to make a plain and candid statement. Advertisements under the existing situation can no longer be had as usual and we must depend almost wholly upon our subscriptions to maintain the paper. On this account, it is essential that every subscriber, clerical and lay, shall at once pay his subscription a year in advance. This is necessary to keep the paper going; we cannot run it on the credit plan for subscriptions, as we have been largely doing heretofore. So, unless your subscription is promptly paid up, in the interest of strict economy we shall have to discontinue it. It takes money to buy paper, ink, and to mail every copy of the Advocate that we send out, and self-preservation demands that we shall now reduce our expenses to a minimum. This appeal is to you, brother pastor and brother layman, and if you disregard it, please do not blame us if you soon find your paper cut off. We are not merely crying "wolf" when there is no wolf. We are not exaggerating the situation. One of our prominent Conference organs has already been forced to reduce its size from 14 to 8 pages and others are in sore distress, and nothing but the best business methods, the most rigid economy, and the energetic assistance of our pastors and other friends can enable us to weather the storm. So please, dear reader, remit for your subscription without further delay. DO IT NOW!

A REGRETTABLE ACCIDENT.

Dear Doctor Meek: I am writing to say that our pastor at Mansfield, Rev. J. V. Bennett, was out hunting on the morning of the 24th in company with several friends when the gun of Mr. Byrnes was in some unaccountable way discharged, and about two hundred shot lodged in the muscles of Brother Bennett's back. In the afternoon of the same day he was brought to the King's Daughters Hospital, Brookhaven, and while his wound was exceedingly painful, it was discovered that it was not serious. A heavy belt that he wore protected him from a more serious accident. I have been with him this morning, and was glad to find him resting comfortably, and the doctor assures him that he will be able to return to his home in a few days.

I am sure that all his brethren will sympathize with him in the suffering resulting from this very unfortunate accident. Fraternally yours,

ROBT. SELBY.

EIGHT SORT OF ATHLETICS.

Push, which is often as vast as it is vain, has started a propaganda to alter the present standard of college education and re-establish this branch of learning on a foundation where it will benefit the body of the students rather than a few picked men who make up the teams. It thinks that the enormous sums spent to make highly efficient machines of the few picked for their unusual physical development should be expended so that they will develop all of the students, more especially those of the weaker type who most need physical development. Here is the outline of its proposed plan:

"Considering the matter in its larger aspects, what would you think of a 'university army,' a specially organized, regularly drilled body consisting of the entire student body of our universities? The many advantages to the individual students of such regular exercise and congenial surroundings would be but one phase of the 'university army.' A larger and more important side is the tremendous beneficial advantage to our government in having at its disposal in time of need thousands of educated men with trained heads and hands, ready to cope intelligently and systematically with any situation. Would not such an army of students, drilling with bayonets fixed, indulging on regular days in sports and athletics in which all could participate—target practice and marksmanship even if you will be a more inspiring sight than the present football stadium?"

This opens up a field of speculation out of which many diverse opinions will come. There are some, perhaps, who will deny that some plan should be devised to attract all the students of our higher schools of education to a love of wholesome athletics, but whether they should be trained in the arts of war or of peace is the rock on which opinions will split. The European war and its impending danger to this country have set many to thinking that the United States should be prepared for any emergency, and that we need not only an immense navy but an efficient and highly trained citizen soldiery, in which every able-bodied man is to be a unit. Because of their educational advancement and attainments, it has been proposed that the students in the colleges be trained for official positions, the need of officers in the European armies being the one present outstanding lack.

College athletics is on the wrong basis, but it has become so firmly rooted in its present system that many persons believe it cannot be uprooted. This is particularly true of the great colleges and universities, and the average student is lured to this one or that one by the prowess of its athletic teams. Of the small colleges and particularly of the small denominational colleges, this is not true. The latter have a standard of scholarship rather than a standard of athletics and many of them do not permit intercollegiate athletics. Their power for good on the whole community is so much more apparent and so much more extensive than that of the bigger schools, that conservative thinkers believe that the hope of our higher educational system lies in them rather than in the great schools.

What we need in this country is something akin to the Swedish form of education, which builds up every man to the highest stage of efficiency that he is capable of reaching. The Registrar is not yet prepared to say that we need to convert our colleges into army schools. We do need to superimpose some practical or knowledge education, which are the most demanding factor in college life for at least four of the five scholastic months. Our colleges will never do their part in our domestic economy until they depend most of their energies on training the minds of the men who need them. This is what they are established for—Washburnian Register.

SUBSCRIPTION RATES.

The following are the rates of subscription to the New Orleans Christian Advocate for the year 1915:

To preachers	$2.00
Widows of preachers	1.00
Single subscriptions	1.00
Eight months	.80
In clubs of five or more	.65

It costs us 10 cents to cash each out-of-town check that we receive. Please avoid sending us checks where possible. If personal check is sent, please add 10 cents to cover cost of exchange when check is for $5 or under. Please do not send us a check for $1 as it will only be credited as 40 cents.

All money orders or drafts should be made payable to the New Orleans Christian Advocate so as to save trouble.

A press dispatch sent out on December 10 stated that Mrs. Kirbypatrick of Jonesboro, Tenn., widow of the late Judge S. J. Kirbypatrick, and a sister of Bishop E. E. Ross, was fatally burned during the preceding night and died that morning. Her clothing, according to the report, caught fire while she was standing before a grate. Bishop Ross and the other southern relatives will have the sympathy and prayers of a host of friends throughout the Church in their great sorrow.

We respectfully request our friends not to send checks in making remittances to the Advocate for small amounts, as it costs us ten cents to collect every such check. We do not mind paying exchange on checks for $5 or over. Of course, the less on a single check does not amount to much, but when it comes to handling scores of them the loss quickly adds up quite a sum. If your remittance is small, send a money order or add ten cents to cover the cost of collection. The price of a single subscription may be sent in 1-cent postage stamps. Please keep this request in mind.

Reach us as far as you can, and God will reach down all the rest of the way.—John H. Vincent.
